Alarmed by the report of the rifle, Atkins and his sons proceeded with torches to the spot, followed by Abigail, who, unconscious of the extent of the calamity, was yet sufficiently convinced that something dreadful had occurred. When the full horrors of the scene were presented to the sight of the terror-stricken group, their grief burst forth in tears and lamentations. Atkins alone retained his presence of mind. Dragging the panther from the mangled remains of the unfortunate Mrs. Steel, he beckoned to one of his sons, and suggested to him the propriety of instantly burying the disfigured and mutilated body before the feelings of her husband and children were agonized by the sight.

First removing the insensible husband to his own dwelling, Atkins and his sons returned to the fatal spot, and conveying the body to the edge of the prairie, they selected a quite lovely spot beneath the wide-spreading boughs of a magnificent chesnut tree, and wrapping all that remained of the wife of Richard Steel in a sheet, they committed it to the earth in solemn silence; nor were prayers or tears wanting in that lonely hour to consecrate the nameless grave where the English mother slept.

Annie and Richard recovered to mourn their irreparable loss—to feel that their mother's life had been sacrificed to her maternal love. Time, as it ever does, softened the deep anguish of the bereaved husband. During the ensuing summer, their little colony was joined by a hardy band of British and American pioneers. The little settlement grew a populous village, and Richard Steel died a wealthy man, and was buried by the side of his wife, in the centre of the village churchyard—that spot having been chosen for the first temple in which the emigrants met to worship in His own house the God of their fathers.

MATRIMONY—MODERN EXTRAVAGANCE.

A correspondent who has "long been in search of a wife," complains sadly of the extravagance of modern times, and says that he has "more than once been on the point of offering his heart and hand, but has been deterred by the prospect of an exchange for worse, and not for the better." This is an old story, and one that we have commented on again and again. The complaint, however, is well founded, and the extravagance which characterizes the modern modes of living in reputable society has doubtless been the means of making, not only many old bachelors, but many old maids. The fever is up just now, and every one seems anxious to outstrip his neighbor. The prudent and the timid look on, not only with caution, but with apprehension. They are unwilling to take the plunge, to submit themselves to the responsibility. They become acquainted with the young and the fair, are charmed with their society, and would readily take them "for better or for worse," but they know the actual position of their pecuniary affairs, they are aware of the uncertainties of trade, and they listen with surprise to the extravagant views that are expressed in relation to matrimonial establishments, according to the claims and pretensions of a large portion of the gentler sex of the present day.

Nothing will suit them but an abundant fortune on the part of those who aspire to become their protectors for life. And in this doctrine, too often, they are trained, as it were, by their parents. They are taught to dress extravagantly, to speak extravagantly, and to boast extravagantly. In brief, the object seems to be, to elevate themselves, not only in a pecuniary, but a social point of view, above ordinary mortals; and to speak of the rest of mankind sneeringly and as inferior beings. In most cases these pretenders having nothing in particular to boast of, are empty, inflated and arrogant, and merely assume to themselves positions to which they are not entitled. The effect, however, is pernicious, not only upon their own fortunes and feelings, but upon those of their friends and admirers. They seem anxious to marry an establishment, rather than us a matter of heart, feeling and reciprocity. And while they are fitted to flutter and bask in the smiles of prosperity, they are utterly disqualified for the frowns of adversity. They may do well enough as companions in the hour of sunshine, but not so in the day of trial and of storm. We can conceive of no more important matter than a proper manner of beginning life, or starting out in the world. The moment that an individual enters into the condition of matrimony, and thus becomes responsible for the minutenance of at least one other, he should govern himself accordingly, and with reference not only to the present moment, but to future probabilities and contingencies. In order to do this, however, and to live economically and within his means, he must be assisted by his better half; otherwise penury will soon come into the household, and with it discord and unhappiness. The parties should consider all the facts and chances beforehand. They should determine to live for themselves rather than for the out-door world, with a view to their continued and permanent happiness, rather than to the gratification and indulgence of a silly and a false pride.

Matrimony should not be considered as a mere condition of bargain and sale. Higher and holier principles and purposes should be associated with it. It is sometimes necessary that sacrifices should be made; but these, when the subject is rightly understood, are more than compensated for by reciprocity of feeling, mutual confidence and sympathy, and the interchange of affection. But the bride should not expect all the sacrifices to be on one side. She may be called upon to yield something also—something in dress, in gay society, in many attentions and in frequent intercourse with the out-door world. She may have been brought up indulgently and extravagantly, and her contemplated husband, however devoted and generous, may not possess the means to keep up the system to the same extent. She should see and realize this fact, and make up her mind and her conduct accordingly. Then the two will commence life, understanding and relying upon each other, and constantly anxious to promote their mutual fortunes and happiness. Let another and opposite course be pursued, and the consequences cannot but be disastrous. Let the young wife, forgetful of the true position of her husband, waste his substance, neglect her household, and appear more anxious to attract attention in the fashionable promenades than to form the presiding spirit at the domestic circle, and the dream of fidelity, truth, confidence, and connubial bliss, will soon vanish, never to return. Our correspondent, however, who is evidently sincere, must not be too faint-hearted. The giddiest belle sometimes makes the most devoted wife. Women often talk wildly and extravagantly, without meaning much. They either intend to frighten the timid, or to test their courage and sincerity. The first great study is to touch the heart; that once accomplished, and all the rest will be comparatively easy.

A woman, who truly loves her husband, will seldom trifle with his prosperity, or disregard his counsels. But, alas! for the deluded victim who marries a model of extravagance, a sparkling coquette, or a giddy fashionable, and who neither secures her respect nor affections. He binds himself for life to the careless, the indifferent, the proud and unfeeling, and thus makes his home, not a constant resource and perpetual retreat, but a spot to be shunned and avoided. Misgivings, misunderstandings, recriminations, will take place daily and hourly, and the matrimonial cup, which was looked to as the source of unmingled bliss, will be realized as full of bitterness and disappointment. And yet, "it is not good to be alone." Women, too, in the great majority of cases, are yielding and tractable, and the vast multitude may be won by affection, kindness, confidence and truth. [Philadelphia Inquirer.

BIG BRINDLE.

In Nashville, many years ago, there resided a gentleman of great hospitality, large fortune, and, though uneducated, possessed of a hard, knotty sense. Colonel W. had been elected to the Legislature, and had been also Judge of the County Court.

His elevation, however, had made him somewhat pompous, and he became very fond of using big words. On his farm he had a very large and mischievous ox, called "Big Brindle," which frequently broke down his neighbors' fences; and committed other depredations, much to the Colonel's annoyance.

One morning after breakfast, in presence of some gentlemen who had staid with him over night, and who were now on their way to town, he called to his overseer, and said to him:

"Mr. Allen, I desire you to impound Big Brindle, in order that I may hear me more animadversions on his eternal depredations."

Allen bowed and walked off, sorely puzzled to know what the Colonel meant. So after the Colonel left for town, he went to his wife and asked her what Colonel W. meant by telling him to "impound the ox."

"Why," said she, "the Colonel meant to tell you to put him in a pen."

Allen left to perform the task, for it was no inconsiderable one, as the animal was very wild and vicious, and after a great deal of trouble and vexation he succeeded.

"Well," said he, wiping the perspiration from his brow, and soliloquizing, "this is impounding, is it? Now I am dead sure the Colonel will ask if I impounded Big Brindle, and I bet I'll puzzle him as bad as he did me."

The next day the Colonel gave a dinner party, and as he was not aristocratic, Allen, the overseer, sat down with the company. After the second or third glass was discussed, the Colonel turned toward the overseer, and said:

"Eh, Mr. Allen, did you impound Big Brindle, sir?"

"Yes, I did, sir, but old Brindle transcended the ingenuity of the impound and scatterlophisticated all over the equanimity of the forest!"

The company burst into an immoderate fit of laughter, while the Colonel's face reddened with discomfiture.

"What do you mean by that, sir?" said he.

"Why, I mean, Colonel," said Allen, "that Big Brindle being prognosticated with an idea of the cholera, ripped and tared, snorted and pawed dirt, jumped the fence, took to the woods, and would not be impounded, no how."

This was too much, the company roared again, in which the Colonel was forced to join, and in the midst of the laughter Allen left the table, saying to himself as he went, "I reckon the Colonel won't ask me to impound any more oxen."

CONSCIENCE.—Judge Howe, of Milwaukee, in his charge to the jury in the "Anu Wheeler case," speculates as follows in regard to conscience:

Somewhere amidst the delicate mechanism of our moral natures the Great Contriver has placed a self-adjusting regulator, usually called conscience, that principle which informs the intelligent being this is right and that is wrong. Man, as we generally find him, discovers both good and bad faculties or propensities. Moral philosophers and theologians account for this condition of humanity, I believe, on different hypotheses. The law takes no part in this controversy. It is adjusted to the condition of men as he exists in society. He is found with good and bad propensities, and it offers rewards to one, and denounces penalties against the other. And I think its penalties are imposed according as conscience performs its office in restraining those bad propensities, or neglects it and let propensities run riot to the detriment of society. It does not punish the miser, whose eager thirst for property prompts to deny himself every luxury, and many comforts, but whose conscience withholds his hand from appropriating what does not lawfully belong to him, or cannot lawfully be secured. It does punish the thief, though the propensity to acquire be not half so strong within him, because his conscience suffers him to lay felonious hands upon the goods of his neighbors. The theory advanced during the progress of this trial by a witness, is, that in a thief the propensity to steal grows stronger by exercise, and the power of resistance less, until the propensity becomes irresistible, and he supposes moral accountability to be diminished as the propensity is increased. The law reasons otherwise, and by express enactment it imposes for many offences a heavier penalty upon a second conviction than upon a first. The offence of the confirmed criminal is a victory of some bad propensity over an admonishing conscience which told him the act was wrong, but did not withhold him from committing it. The last offence committed, while conscience still remains, from the dictates of the same propensity, strengthened ever so much by indulgence, seems to be but a repetition of the same victory. The first offence it is assumed can safely be punished upon the supposition that though conscience did not conquer, yet it might have done so. The last offence, it is assumed, cannot be punished upon the supposition that although conscience still lives, yet it has been so often crippled by permitted victories that it had no longer the power to control successfully. And yet it is avowed that no man can distinguish the point where conscience can't control from that at which it won't control.

SYMPTOMS.—When you meet a friend, about dinner time, near his own house, and he stands gossipping with you on the door step, without any demonstrations to enter, you may take it as a symptom that your company to dinner is not particularly desirable.

When you drop in for a half hour's chat at a friend's house, in the evening; and after you have been there three mortal hours, your friend yawns and looks at his watch, and his wife packs up her needle-work and says, in a pointed soliloquy, "Well, I believe it is about time to give over for to-night," you may take it as an infallible symptom that you are a bore, and the sooner you depart the better.

When in a deliberative assembly you see a member rise, and preface his remarks by an emphatic declaration that he intends to occupy the attention of his hearers but "one single moment"—or that he has "only one word" to say relative to the subject under debate, you may regard it as an unerring symptom of an unusually long and perhaps tedious and prosy harangue, covering the whole subject under discussion, and many things beside.

A FISH STORY.—The Yonkere Herald tells of a wonderful nondescript fish which was caught near Spuyten Duyvel, in the Hudson River, in the shad lykes of a fisherman named Kniffin. It measured about four feet from the nose to the tip of the tail, and in shape resembled a toad fish. The mouth, when distended, would take in a peck measure, was filled with teeth, indicating a most voracious disposition. After dissecting him, his stomach was found to contain five full grown shad, two hard shell crabs, and a moderate sized puppy dog of the terrier breed. But what was most singular of all, was his being supplied with two hands, just about that part of the breast where the Simneso twins are connected, each hand having four distinct fingers, and a thumb about the size of a four year old child. He was also provided with fins similar to those of a green turtle, and, upon the whole, was a most fiendish, ill-looking customer.

FEELING IN A SOLDIER.—A soldier in war was one day told by his officer to take aim when he fired, and make sure of his man.

"I cannot do it sir," he replied; "I fire into their ranks, and that does as well; but to single out one of them, and mark him for death, would lie upon my mind afterwards."

JOHN WROE—Christian Israelites.—A large audience assembled in the Melodeon, Tremont Temple, Sunday evening, to hear and see John Wroe, the founder and leader of a sect called the Christian Israelites. After singing, and without further introduction, a venerable looking individual (John Wroe,) with long gray hair parted in the middle, full beard and moustache, also gray, with spectacles, about middling size and of slender make, with coat and vest profusely ornamented with brass buttons, arose, put on a white low-crowned hat, and throwing his arms over the desk gave out a text and commenced in very unintelligible English a sermon. Before he had half finished, the larger part of the audience had retired.

As this sect is but little known here, we took some pains to learn their history, and after considerable trouble obtained the following outline of their rise and progress:

Thirty-one years ago in England, one John Wroe, a native of that country, pretended to have trances and visions, prophesied, and under the comprehensive name of John, the Branch of Jesus, the Messenger, Son of Man, Watchman of the House of Israel, dictated a small book of "revelations," which is held sacred among his followers as part and parcel of the Bible—which they believe in, both the Old and New Testament. They practice circumcision, though not generally Jews; our Saturday is their Sabbath, though they work on that day for the present; and believe that God is gathering the ten tribes from among the Gentiles, preparatory to the restoration of the twelve tribes and the conversion of the world—events which, in their belief, are right upon us.

This Wroe's "revelations" are a mixture of Scripture and Wroeism. Here is an extract from the "Sacred Record": "Prophesy against foreign nations. Say, Thus saith the Lord, I have seen in America and they shall come forth by fifties, hundreds, and thousands. Prophesy concerning Botany Bay; I have a number there that shall come forth by fifties, hundreds, and thousands."

He has, it is said, quite a large number of followers in England, South Australia, and some in Botany Bay. Mr. Wroe came over in the Atlantic, is to stay in Boston a short time, and then sails for Australia. The curious can learn full particulars, and hear very good preaching besides, almost any pleasant Sabbath, by meeting around the Custom-house steps, where Mr. Moses holds forth. [Boston Trav.

THE ORIGIN OF BRANDY.—It is probable that, in 1632, brandy was not in fashion in Wales; yet, the nurse in Shakspeare's play of "Romeo and Juliet," calls for it unmix under the name of aqua vitæ. "Some aqua vitæ, ho! my lord! my lady!" It appears to have been chiefly used in these days for medicinal purposes. It was said to be invented by Raymundus Lullius, the famous alchymist, who died in the year 1315. Charles, the Bad, King of Navarre, came to a most horrible end, says the French historian, Mezeray, who, to restore his strength, weakened by debauchery, was wrapped in sheets steeped in eau de vie. His attendant by accident set fire to them. After the third day, he died in the most dreadful tortures, and it is to be hoped, thus expiated the crimes of his most execrable life.

NUPTIAL MARRIAGES.—The Liberty (Md.) News states that Mr. John Clempson, Dr. G. R. Sappington and Mr. Stephen D. Lawrence, all respectable citizens, have within a month been re-married to their wives according to the Catholic formula. The first couple were first married some thirty years ago, and each of the others quite a number of years. The cause of the re-performance of the ceremony is the late union of one of each of the couples to the Catholic Church.

NOSEGAY.—A men's knowledge consists in what he knows; but who knows as much about noses as the genius who wrote the following knows:

"Knows he that never took a pinch;
Nosey, the pleasure thence which flows
Knows he the titilating joy
Which my nose knows?
Oh, nose! I am as proud of thee
As any mountain of its snows;
I gaze on thee and feel the joy
A Roman knows."

Yankee girls are dimonds and gold, wherever they go. It is quite a common thing for them to be transmogrified into foreign countesses. The latest marriage of the kind has just taken place at Geneva—Florense, daughter of E. V. Childe, of Boston, having been united to Count Henry Soltyk, of Cracow, Poland. [Boston Bee.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig)
THE NORTH-BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews ..10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months for board..... $200 00
Lodging, washing, and English tuition..... "
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French Language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jet1 1y

A NEW MEDICINE.

EPPING'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

THIS excellent extract is a concentrated preparation of Buchu, with other vegetable diuretics. It is, as medical men will see, designed for that class of diseases which affect the urinary organs. For diseases and directions, see the label on each bottle. It is also a very fine alterative medicine. Dyspepsties, laboring under hepatic derangement, find great relief from the use of this remedy. It is on sale at the store of E. WRIGHT & CO., 151 Chartres street, and the store of J. MACPHERSON, 29 Camp st.

It comports best with my feelings to offer this article to Physicians, Druggists and Hospitals, upon my medical knowledge and Christian reputation, without the accustomed puffing. DR. L. PIERCE.
my21 Columbus, Georgia.

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 60 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.

☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19, 1853: 6mo.

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. F. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 6

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled him to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing to them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonious and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.
ANDREW MENELY'S SONS.
West Troy, Albany county, N. Y., 1851.
CLARK, DAY & STAUFFER,
ap10 Agents in New Orleans.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.

S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 60 Gravier street, New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery, etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety; Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Singe, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Gil, Varnish; India Rubber and Patent Stretched Leather Glu and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks; Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags; Valises, etc.
mh8 '52—1y

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

☞ The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an anticeptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers. (see certificates Nos 3 and 4;) and as a preventive to Yellow, Bilious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an anticeptic. (see certificate No. 5.) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecess

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. D. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DURKMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 21. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 125.

A legend of St. Augustine, (the celebrated Bishop of Hippo,) referring to him in the early period of his life, before his conversion from the perverted learning and too daring researches of the Manichean heresy, in which he was entangled from A. D. 373 to 384, when struck, probably, by some such thought as is suggested in the following legend, he went to Milan, to hear the preaching of St. Ambrose, by which he was converted. It was at the baptism of his great convert, that St. Ambrose is said to have sung that sublime hymn, commonly styled the Te Deum. The legend has been clad by Aloysius Schreiber in a poetic garb, from which we translate:—

"SAINT AUGUSTINE.

'Along the shore of summer sea
Walk'd St. Augustine thoughtfully:
Too deeply did he seek to scan
The nature of the Lord of man.
Nor was the task abstruse, he thought
His mind with Scripture texts was fraught;
He deem'd to his presumption given
To learn the mysteries of Heaven.
Then, suddenly descried he there—
A boy of aspect wondrous fair,
Who, bending forward, o'er the strand,
Scoop'd out a hollow in the sand,
And fill'd it, with a limpet shell,
From out the ocean's briny well.

'Augustine spake—'My pretty boy.
What is thy play; or thy employ?'
'Look, sir! within this little hole,
The sea with all the waves that roll,
For sport I'll put.' Augustine smiled—
'Thy sport is all for naught, my child:
My utmost labor is in vain
Thine aim thou never canst attain.'
'Let him to whom such power's denied,
Content in his own path abide;
Much to the loving heart is dear,
That to this brain doth dark appear,'
So spake the boy: then to the light
His wings display'd, of glistning white,
And, like an eagle, soar'd away,
Lost in the sun's resplendent ray.

'Long after him Augustine gazed,
And said, with heart and eyes upraised—
'The truth he spake: the human mind
Is still to time and space confined,
And cannot pass beyond; but he
Who lives in faith and righteously,
So much of God shall he discern
As needeth man on earth to learn.'"

[From the National Magazine]

THE CHRISTIANITY REQUIRED BY THE TIMES.

REFORM IN CHRISTIAN BENEFICENCE.

We have thus far shown that beneficence should be regarded by the Christian as a duty, and should be pursued methodically. But what method do we recommend? It would of course be impossible to prescribe any rule which would be applicable to every case. Nor is this a matter of much importance; once make charity a matter of conscientious duty, and it will not be difficult for the conscientious man to form his own plan. The following, however, seems to be the correct outline of a just course viz.:

1. Define well what is requisite for the comfortable support and education of your family, and the proper increase of your business—determining not to go beyond a certain point in the latter respect.

2. While advancing toward the maximum of your capital, give away annually a certain percentage of your increase.

3. When you reach the maximum, give away all your increase, except what is requisite for the temperate expense of your family.

This plan has been followed by numbers of persons whose examples have been recorded. The case of N. R. Cobb, Esq., a Baptist merchant of Boston, is well known. He resolved to give from the beginning one-fourth of his net profits; to give one-half when his capital reached twenty thousand dollars; and all the profits when it amounted to fifty thousand dollars. He retained his generous resolution till his death, when he had already reached the maximum, and had scattered the blessings of his liberality in every direction.*

John Wesley remarked in early life that he had known but four men who had not declined in religion by becoming wealthy; later in life he corrected the remark, and made no exception. He himself guarded scrupulously against the danger. When his income was but £30 a year, he gave away £5; when it was sixty, he still confined his expenses to £28, and gave away £32; when it reached £120, he kept himself to his old allowance, and gave away £92. Besides giving himself wholly to the public good, and laboring as devoutly as any other man of modern times for the moral welfare of the poor, he gave away, it is computed, more than a hundred thousand dollars, the proceeds of his publications, &c. The last insertion in his private journal, written with a trembling hand, reads thus: "For upwards of eighty-six years I have kept my accounts exactly. I will not attempt it any longer, being satisfied with the continual conviction that I have all I can, and give all I can, that is all I have." John Wesley, July 16, 1790.

Dr. Watts gave away one-fifth of his income; Baxter, Doddridge, Dr. Hammond, and Lord Chief Justice Hale, one tenth.

Such liberal and methodical contributions are usually returned by increased prosperity, to the donors, in accordance with the divine assurance, that "he that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

A Prize Essay on Scriptural Benevolence, which now lies before us, says:

"An anonymous writer says of himself, that he commenced business and prosecuted it in the usual way, till he lost $900, which was all he was worth, and found himself in debt $1100. Being led by his trials, through God's grace, to trust, as he hoped, in Christ, in the age of forty, determined to take God's word for his guide in his business, and consecrated his earnings to the Lord. The first year he gave $12. For eighteen years the amount was increased above twenty-five per cent., and the last year he gave $850; and he says he did it easier than, during the first year, he paid the $12. Besides, though with nothing but his hands to depend on when he began this course, he paid the whole debt of $1100, with interest, though it took him nine years to do it. Jacob went out from his father's home with his staff, a poor man; but at Bethel he vowed to give God the tenth of all that God should bestow on him. Commencing thus, God blessed him; and in twenty years he returned with great riches."

Such facts from real life are worth many arguments. We cannot forbear adding another, from the experience of an intelligent merchant, who says:

"In consecrating my life anew to God, aware of the insnaring influence of riches and the necessity of deciding on a plan of charity before wealth should bias my judgment, I adopted the following system: I decided to balance my accounts, as nearly as I could, every month; and reserving such portion of profits as might appear adequate to cover probable losses, to lay aside, by entry on a benevolent account, one-tenth of the remaining profits, great or small, as a fund for benevolent expenditure, supporting myself and family on the remaining nine-tenths. I further determined, that if at any time my net profits, that is, profits from which clerk-hire and store expenses had been deducted, should exceed $500 in a month, I would give twelve and a half per cent.; if over $700, fifteen per cent.; if over $900, seventeen and a half per cent.; if over $1100, twenty per cent.; if over $1300, twenty-two and a half per cent.; thus increasing the proportion of the whole, as God should prosper, until, at $1500, I should give twenty-five per cent., or $375 a month. As capital was of the utmost importance to my success in business, I decided not to increase the foregoing scale until I had acquired a certain capital, after which I would give one-quarter of all net profits, great or small; and on the acquisition of another certain amount of capital, I decided to give half; and on acquiring what I determined would be a sufficiency of capital, then to give the whole of my net profits.' It is now several years since I adopted this plan, and under it I have acquired a handsome capital, and have been prospered beyond my most sanguine expectations. Although constantly giving, I have never yet touched the bottom of my fund, and have repeatedly been surprised to find what large drafts it would bear. True, during some months I have encountered a salutary trial of faith, when this rule has led me to lay by the tenth, while the remainder proved inadequate to my support; but the tide has soon turned, and with gratitude I have recognized a heavenly hand more than making good all my past deficiencies. This system has been of great advantage to me, enabling me to feel that my life is directly employed for God. It has afforded happiness, in enabling me to portion out the Lord's money, and has enlisted my mind more in the progress of Christ's cause. Happy privilege, which the humblest may enjoy, of thus associating the common labors of life with the grateful service of the Saviour, and of making that which naturally leads the heart from God, subserve the highest spiritual good. This system has saved me from commercial dangers, by leading me to simplify business and avoid extensive credits. It has made me a better merchant: for the monthly pecuniary observations which I have been wont to take, though often quite laborious, have brought me to a better knowledge of the state of my affairs, and led me to be more cautious and prudent than I otherwise should have been. I believe this system tends to enlarge the Christian's views, increase his disinterestedness, and lead him to shun the tricks of trade. My own observation also confirms the belief, that even warm-hearted Christians must determine beforehand on the system they will adopt, if they would secure the benefits of the gospel plan to themselves, under the grace and providence of God, or its happy results to the cause of Christ."

What has been thus practicable to these few men is practicable, in some modified yet definite and effective form, to all Christian business-men. What would be the result if these examples were extended into a universal habit of the Church? We may attempt to answer this question hereafter.

* The following is Mr. Cobb's record of his resolution:

"By the grace of God, I will never be worth more than $50,000:

"By the grace of God, I will give one-fourth of the profits of my business to charitable and religious uses.

"If ever I am worth $20,000, I will give one-half of my net profits; and if I am ever worth $30,000, I will give three-fourths; and the whole, after $50,000. So help me God, or give to a more faithful steward, and set me aside.

"N. R. Cobb."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

THE TALMUD.

It was not part of my original plan to include an account of the Talmud in the present series, as it does not come under the head of Jewish ceremonies; and because the Theological Dictionaries and Encyclopædias generally all contain a short history of it. But finding that I could not proceed a single step without referring to it, I thought it advisable to give an epitome of its origin and history, as well as of the nature of the work itself. If your more learned readers should think this superfluous, they will please remember that all their brethren are not so fortunately circumstanced, and the following facts may not prove unacceptable to many of them.

The careful reader of the New Testament will remember how often the apostles allude to "the Traditions of the Fathers." There is, perhaps, no system of any kind, boasting antiquity, be it religious, scientific, or political, that has not its traditions, which obtain more or less credence, in proportion to the degree of enlightenment among its votaries; and it may be safely asserted that no people ever had more of these traditions than the later Hebrews—no religion more "oral laws," than the present remains of the Mosaic. There is not a single precept in the Law of Moses that has not a volume of interpretations and minute directions attached to it. More than this, they also embrace the private history of the Patriarchs, from Adam to Moses, and the secret annals of the Jewish commonwealth from Moses to the Maccabees. We have glimpses of these in the veracious record of Flavius Josephus' History of Jewish Antiquities.

The more enlightened portion of modern Jews do indeed believe these traditions to a certain extent, but account for them on the more rational principle, that Adam may have imparted his knowledge of the history of creation to Methuselah, he to Shem, the latter to Abraham, and so on. But the Rabbins claim the same divine authority for the "Oral Law," which we and they do for the Written Law: for they say, that when Moses was on Mount Sinai for forty days and forty nights, God gave him the whole of the law, with explications and rules, providing for very possible contingency. "But," you will object, "if Moses received the oral as well as the written law from God, why did he not write down the former also?" "Because," answer they "God was jealous lest the Gentiles should also inherit eternal life by doing the works of the law;" which catastrophe could not happen from merely reading the five books of Moses, without having the more minute directions relating to the observance of the laws contained in them.

During the captivity of Babylon, and more especially after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, it was to be feared that these traditions would be consigned to oblivion; to prevent which dire calamity, the Sanhedrim (or ecclesiastical government) established several schools, among which that of Tiberias became the most renowned. Here the great Doctors of the Nation discussed the various interpretations of the Written Law. Of other languages or sciences they knew nothing; and the introduction of profane learning of any kind into these seminaries would have been viewed with no more friendly an eye than the promulgation of a new heresy.

Among the Jews, Rabbi Jehudah Hannasee is considered to have been the most learned, and therefore, (by a Hebrew consequence,) the most pious of their Doctors. He collected many of these interpretations and traditions, and published them in the beginning of the third century, under the name of MISHNAH, (or Duplicate—the oral being the duplicate of the written law.) The style in which it is composed is very concise and obscure; and all the disputations talent of the Jewish lawyers was now transferred to the Mishnah. They only referred to the Bible when they needed some garbled passage to support a whim, social theory, or interpretation of the Mishnah.

Although the Hebrew lawyer was ignorant of either the Justinian Code, or the Code Napoleon, and was but little versed in Coke upon Lyttleton or Blackstone, he had his hands full enough with the law of Moses alone. The Rabbins count 613 commandments in the Pentateuch; and some of them say that each of these commandments is susceptible of 613 interpretations!!!

These hairsplittings, ycleped commentaries, or GEMARAH, were collected and published at different times in two separate works, viz; the Babylonian and the Jerusalem Talmud, (the latter not before the sixth century.) The Gemarah (final explanation or completion,) belies its name, for it is more obscure than the Mishnah, and needs a very copious commentary to make it intelligible. The whole Talmud comprises 360 treatises, whence it is called Shass, (the Hebrew numerals for that number.) It usually forms twelve huge folios, each as thick as Webster's "Unabridged," and printed in a type no larger than that of the first page of the Advocate.

The Mishnah—an English translation of which may be obtained at any good bookstore—is divided into six sections, with numerous subdivisions. The first treats on trees, plants and seeds; the second on feasts; the third on women, their duties, etc.; the fourth relates to buying and selling, contracts of all kinds, and the various business transactions of life; the fifth, sacrifices and holy things; the sixth, purifications, etc.

The Gemarah has never been wholly translated into any modern language; though I believe we are soon to have a version of it by a learned German Professor. It enlarges on all the foregoing topics, and gives the opinion of the various schools and Rabbies, with tales and apologues, illustrative of their respective doctrines. The whole forms a complete system of the learning, ceremonies, civil and canon laws of the Jews. I may as well state here, en passant, that Rabbi Gamaliel—at whose feet St. Paul sat, and who was so kindly disposed to the followers of Christ—figures very prominently in these debates.

The Talmud is now gradually losing ground, and falling into disrepute. An almost incredible change has passed over the Jewish system of education in Europe during the last quarter of a century. The best Talmudical schools of the present day are in Prague, and Fürth (in Bavaria.) It is more studied, however, in Poland, Galicia, and Lithuania, than in Germany or France. In England or America very little of it is known except by the Rabbies, who receive their education on the Continent. Even the study of Hebrew grammar was proscribed in the rigid regulations of these schools as late as twenty years ago. And here I am reminded of an anecdote I read not long since, which is germane to this matter. One of the most distinguished of modern Jewish Litterateurs received a strict Talmudical education in his youth—excluding necessarily every useful branch of knowledge. He once chanced to be present at a lecture on Grammar, in Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and was very much struck with the [to him] high-sounding words, Nominations, Dations, etc. "Oh!" he exclaimed, "that I understood the meaning of these beautiful words!" and he there and then resolved to break the chains of Rabbinism, and —— study grammar.

A close insight into Jewish academic life may be had from Samuel's Life of Moses Mendolsohn, London, 1825; or even from a short biography of Dr. Nordheimer, by Dr. Edward Robinson, and published some years ago in the "Biblical Repository."

When I began the present article I designed giving some specimens of Talmudical Literature; but since it is already too long, I must defer doing so till next week.

JOSEPHUS.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

THE FEMALE INVALID FROM HOME.

Some time last year I was sent for to visit a stranger, and I immediately went to the residence where the stranger was said to be staying. On entering a room I was introduced to a female lying in bed. She appeared to be a young lady unmarried. She was exceedingly delicate in form; had a fine eye, which sparkled with intelligence. Her manners indicated more than ordinary cultivation. She was laboring under consumption. I learned that she had come from a North-western State in search of a more genial climate, with the view of improving her health. She had an inclination to visit Florida, but finding her strength so rapidly wasting, she was forced to abandon the trip. She had with her a brother, who kindly ministered to her wants, and spoke words of affection to her heart. Having been sent for by her, I concluded that her object was to hold with me a religious conversation. So I took my chair and sat down by her bedside, and after some preliminary remarks about her health, inquired after the interests of her soul; whether or not she had been converted. She entered upon the subject introduced with great composure, but as she proceeded, became more and more moved, until her pale cheeks reddened and her dark eyes swam in tears. She informed me that her parents were religious, and were at that time living; that they had endeavored to impart to her mind religious instruction, but she had never embraced religion, or realized the pardon of her sins. But now she had come to feel the necessity of it, and she had been praying to God to afford her his grace, to enable her to repent and to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. She expressed a very strong desire to put her trust in God, and to know that she was accepted of God. I had strong encouragement to believe that she would obtain the object of her desire. There was in her conversation something which bespoke an earnestness and sincerity of heart. Her soul panted after God as the wounded hart panteth for the cooling water brooks. "Oh, show me where and how I may find him, for he alone can save me and cleanse me." It was good to have such an one to instruct—one ready to follow you any way, so you would but take them to Christ. I read some portions of God's word suited to her state of mind, and then prayed with her. The work of repentence seemed to be increasing, and with it there was united a little faith, but not enough to take savingly hold upon the atonement of Christ. She felt too unworthy to come to him; too unworthy to look for his welcome. Just at this point many who are seeking salvation are baffled by the tempter. He throws across their minds a perplexing sense of their unfitness to claim the mercy of God; when, indeed, this is not to be thought of as a barrier to his mercy, but rather as a reason why we should seek it. We do not go to God because we are worthy, but because we are unworthy. We must not come to him like the Pharisee, to tell him how good we are; but we must approach him like the Publican, to deplore our sins and to intreat him to be merciful unto us. "If we confess our sins God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." The Scriptures teach us that Jesus came to "seek and to save that which was lost;" that he "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." I tried to show the penitent before me that she had nothing to do in striving to obtain the pardon of her sins, but to rest her soul in humble trust upon the merits of the Saviour; to look in confidence to him who as the (sacrificial) "Lamb of God taketh away the sin of the world." After encouraging her to perseverance in seeking the face of God, I left the room and returned home, not without strong hope of her success.

After a short time I paid her a second visit, to pray with her and to read the Scriptures to her. If I remember correctly, it was during this visit she asked me if I thought we would recognize each other in eternity. I replied in the affirmative, and gave her my reasons, which I drew from the word of God. The conversation upon this point seemed to interest her. She spoke as if she had some hope of being saved, in case she should die, and that there was a probability of her dying, she appeared to realize. I came away with increased confidence in the ultimate success which promised to crown her efforts in seeking the salvation of her soul. The Lord himself was leading her on to know the truth. He had smitten and he would heal. He had given her days and weeks to examine her heart and to feel her need of a Saviour.

It was on Sabbath morning, while engaged in preparing for the sanctuary, that a servant entered my house and requested me to visit the consumptive lady. I promptly complied with the request, and on passing into her room, found her smiling. She held out her hand to me, saying she had found peace and pardon through the Lord Jesus Christ; that she had no fears of death now, for she felt that she would be saved. It was to me and to others a precious season to see the emaciated stranger happy in the Lord. Though away from the parental home, yet claiming God for her father and waiting anxiously for him to call her to his mansions in the skies. And it was not long she had to wait; within a few hours of this time she died, and her joyous spirit barried its flight to the region of light and rest. I attended her funeral, and saw her laid away in the grave—not her, but her body. She was in heaven, for thither she said she would go.

Now, that she is gone, I may say there are some sad things connected with her history. Just before she died she said there was one person in the city of —— she would be glad to see. Who was that person? Her mother? Her father? A relative? No. Her husband. Poor woman; God had pardoned her, and she wished to see that husband to pardon him, although he had wronged her cruelly. And what was that wrong? He had married her and taken her away from her home, while he had another wife. When she discovered this fact, her sense of honor would not allow her to remain with him, and she fled from his presence to wander among strangers, and among strangers she died. A telegraphic dispatch informed him of her approaching end, and he reached her in time to see her die, and receive her Christian pardon. What has become of him I know not. It is to be feared that he will not seek pardon of God for his great sin; but that he will content himself by asking absolution at the hands of the priest, for his profession leads him that way.

PHILANDER.

Alabama.

PRESBYTERIAN ABOLITIONISM.

The N. S. General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, at its session in Buffalo, has been greatly agitated by this abominable ism that makes every thing desolate that it comes in contact with. A committee on the subject of slavery, after a preamble, introduced among others the following resolution:

"That with an express disavowal of any intention to be impertinently inquisitorial, and for the sole purpose of arriving at the truth, so as to correct misapprehensions and allay all causeless irritation, a committee be appointed of one from each of the Synods of Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Virginia, who shall be requested to report to the next General Assembly on the following points:

"1. The number of slaveholders in connection with the Churches, and the number of slaves held by them.

"2. The extent to which slaves are held from an unavoidable necessity imposed by the laws of the States, the obligations of guardianship, and the demands of humanity.

"3. Whether the Southern Churches regard the sacredness of the marriage relation as it exists among the slaves; whether baptism is only administered to the children of slaves professing Christianity; and in general, to what extent and in what manner provision is made for the religious well-being of the enslaved."

As a substitute for this, Dr. Ross, of Tennessee, offered the subjoined resolutions, which, although they were rejected, serve sufficiently to show, what everybody at the South believes, that abolitionism is one of the grandest impertinences, and the profoundest hypocrisy of the age. The original report was adopted by a vote of 76 to 38. It may issue in a division of the body. Here is Dr. Ross's substitute:

"That, with an express disavowal not to be inquisitorial, a committee of one from each of the Northern Synods be appointed, who shall be requested to report to the next General Assembly:

"1. The number of Northern church-members who traffic with slaveholders, and are seeking to make money by selling them negro clothing, hand-cuffs and cowhides.

"2. How many Northern church-members are concerned, directly or indirectly, in building and fitting out ships for the African slave trade, and the slave trade between the States.

"3. How many Northern church-members have sent orders to New Orleans and other Southern cities, to have slaves sold, to pay debts coming to them from the South. (See Uncle Tom's Cabin.)

"4. How many Northern church-members buy the cotton, sugar, rice, tobacco, oranges, pine apples, figs, ginger, cocoa, melons, and a thousand other things, raised by slave labor.

"5. How many church-members have intermarried with slaveholders, and have thus become slave owners themselves, or enjoy the wealth made by the blood of the slave—especially if there be any Northern ministers of the gospel in such a predicament.

"6. How many Northern church-members are the descendants of the men who kidnapped negroes in Africa and brought them to Virginia and New England in former years.

"7. What is the aggregate and individual wealth of Church-members thus descended, and what action is best to compel them to disgorge this blood-stained wealth, or to make them give dollar for dollar, in equalizing the loss of the South by emancipation.

"8. How many Northern church-members, ministers especially, have advocated murder in resistance to the laws of the land.

"9. How many Northern church-members own stock in underground railroads, running off fugitive slaves, and Sabbath-breaking railroads and canals.

"10. That a special committee be sent up Red river to ascertain whether Legree, who whipped Uncle Tom to death (and a Northern gentleman) be not still in connection with some Northern Church in good and regular standing.

"11. How many Northern church-members attend meetings of Spiritual Rappers—are Bloomers—or Women's Rights conventionalists.

"12. How many are cruel husbands.

"13. How many are hen-pecked husbands.

"14. How many colored people are permitted to rent and sit in pews in the body of Northern Churches."

Horace Mann thus sums up a few of the advantages of modern inventions; "One boy, with a foudrinar machine, will make more paper in twelve months than all Egypt could have made in one hundred years, during the reign of the Ptolemies. One girl, with a power press, will strike off books faster than a million of scribes could copy them before the invention of printing. One man in an iron foundry, will turn out more utensils than Tubal Cain could have forged had he worked diligently to this time."

The melody of "Old Folks at Home" has become very popular. The last number of Zion's Herald contains the following new version, entitled

THE BLEST ONES AT HOME.

Away on the banks of life's bright river,
Far far away—
There will my heart be turning ever,
There's where the blest ones stay.
All through the vale of sin and sorrow
Sadly I roam,
Still longing for the dawn of the morrow
And for the blest ones at home.
All without is dark and dreary,
Every where I roam,
O, brothers, how the heart grows weary,
Sighing for the blest ones at home.

Through all earth's sunny scenes I've wandered,
In youth's gay morn,
How many precious hours I've squandered,
How many mercies scorned;
When seeking sin's delusive pleasure,
Wretched was I;
But now my heart has found a treasure,
There with the blest ones on high.
All without is dark, etc.

One hour there is forever bringing
Memories of love;
'Twas when my sighs were changed to singing
Of the blest ones above.
When shall I see my Saviour reigning
On his white throne?
When will be hushed my heart's complaining
There with the blest ones at home?
All still then is dark and dreary—
Every where I roam,
O, brothers how the heart grows weary
Longing for the blest ones at home.

THE TRUE CONVERT.

Saul's first words when he met Jesus on the way to Damascus were, "Who art thou?" His next were, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Having discovered that it was the Lord who had visited him, he submitted himself to his direction. The extent and nature of this submission, implied in his inquiries, and manifested in his subsequent career, are worthy of attention.

It was to the Lord that the converted Saul looked for guidance. He did not consult with flesh and blood; he did not ask advice of his own pride and ambition; he did not look around to see what might for the present serve his own interests, and square with the temper of the times. Had he done so, his history would have been far other than it is. He remembered no more the commission which he had received from the Scribes and Pharisees, nor cared how much they might object to the change of his course. Christ was now the guiding-star of his life, and he would not, even in thought, refer to any other tribunal the decision of any question concerning the conduct of his life.

"What wilt thou have me to do?" This general question was settled. The new convert was henceforth and evermore to do the will of Christ, without conditioning for any exemption. What remained was, to know the particulars of his duty. He purposed never to dispute, in the slightest matter, his Lord's commands. He asked not, therefore, to know the reason or the bearing of any of them, but only what they were. This was to him the end of all controversy and of all strife; to know Christ's will was to rouse his whole soul, unquestioning and undivided in its energies, to prompt obedience. A true submission in the general includes all particulars, and forbids all reservations.

"What wilt thou have me to do?" "Me," an side-long glance at others; no asking what is expected of them. Not but that all have their duties; yet it was not Saul's business to inquire, Lord, what shall any other man do! He contemplated the case even of standing alone for his Master, with all to molest and none to encourage him. He gave himself to Christ even upon the supposition of standing alone, and felt not his love to slacken, upon his choice to falter.

"What wilt thou have me to do!" To do; he had no thought of any thing but a life of service—labor. He did not ask what frames he should feel, what sweet and happy emotion he should have to exercise. He did not look merely, and apparently not at all, to be rapt to the third heavens in a holy ecstacy. He did not even think of obtaining what may be called the luxuries of refined sensibility. He knew that he was wanted for work, and work that would command effort. His opened eyes saw a mighty field, ripe for the harvest, with only here and there a laborer, and the sickle as yet hardly put in. He knew he should not be carried to heaven in arms, nor dandled thither in the soft lap of ease. Stern work was before him—a life of toil and difficulty, of opposition and danger, bitter to the flesh, repugnant to the spirit of all but the lovers of Christ. He counted all this naught; he panted for activity; he could never, with the fire of his own glowing love burning in his bosom, have been made a recluse. His zeal would have burned itself outwards and around, till it had lit up kindred fires in the human hearts about him.

Has not the true idea of Christ's religion been obscured among men, so that the experience of Christians often fails to show what it is to be converted? If we try the spirit of the present age by the comparative zeal and faith of its religious professors, will it not be found sadly wanting! [London Tract Magazine.

[From the "Night Watches."]

Thy Chastisements—A Meditation.

"For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."—Heb 12: 6

"Chastisement!—the family badge—the family pledge—the family privilege!—"To you it is given to suffer." "Troubles," says a good man, "are in God's catalogue of mercies."

"Afflictions," says another, "are God's hired laborers to break the clods and plow the land."

Believer! is the hand of thy God heavy upon thee? Has he been breaking thy cisterns, withering thy gourds, poisoning thy sweet fountains of earthly bliss? Are the world's bright spots outnumbered by the dreary? Has one tear been following another in quick succession? Thou mayest have to tell, perhaps, of a varied experience of trials. Every tender point touched—sickness, bereavement, poverty—ALL! Be still! If thou art a child of God, there is no exemption from "the household discipline." The rod is a father's; the voice that speaks may be rough, but the hand that smites is gentle. The furnace may be seven times heated, but the refiner is seated by. His object is not to consume, but to purify. Do not misinterpret his dealings; there is mercy on the wings of "the rough wind." Our choicest fountains are fed from dark lowering clouds. All, be assured, will yet bear the stamp of love. Sense cannot discern yet "the bright light in the clouds." Aged Jacob exclaimed at first, "All these things are against me;" but at last he had a calmer and juster verdict, "His spirit revived!" "At evening time it was light." The saint on earth can say, regarding his trials, in faith and in trust, "I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right." The saint in glory can go a step further, "I see, O Lord, that they are so!" His losses will then be shown to be his riches. Believer, on a calm retrospect of thy heaviest afflictions—say, were they unneeded? Was this (what Augustine calls) "the severe mercy of God's discipline"—was it too severe? Less would not have been done. Like Jonah, thou never wouldst have awoke but for the storm! He may have led thee to a Zarephath ("a place of furnaces,") but it was to show thee there "one like unto the Son of God!" When was God ever so dear to thee, or thou to thy God, as in the furnace-fires? When was the presence, and love, and sympathy of Jesus so precious? When "the Beloved" comes down from "the Mountain of Myrrh"—the "Hill of Frankincense"—to his "Garden on Earth," he can get no fragrance from some plants but by bruising them. The spices in the Temple of old were bruised. The gold of his candlestick was beaten gold! It was when the Marah-fountain of thy heart was bitter with sin, that he cast in some cross—some trial, and "the waters were made sweet!"

My soul, be still! Thou hast in affliction one means of glorifying God, which even angels have not in a sorrowless world: Patience under the rod—Submission to thy heavenly Father's will! Pray not to have afflictions removed, but for grace to bear up under it, so that thou mayest glorify God even "in the fires;" and remembering that though "weeping endureth for a night, joy cometh in the morning," close thy tearful eyes, saying—"I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only maketh me dwell in safety!"

THREE ANTAGONISMS.

Three powers are now in active contest for the mastery of the world—Romanism, Naturalism, and Evangelism; and it is our assured belief that if Evangelism does not everywhere become and rejoice to be known as Biblicism—thus availing itself of a position which we believe reason can fully justify by evidence—it must suffer in the collision.

The headless arrows of an arbitrary and sentimental pietism will hardly prevail against the formidable onset of the dogmatic infallibility of Romanism. There is an axe in the Roman fasces, and these pointless darts run no small risk of being added to the sheaf. Extremes will continue to meet as they have met already; and those who have refused to yield unconditionally to God will end by submitting to a human yoke. There is, indeed, a subtle affinity between one human arbitration and another; and he who has found a rule in himself above the Bible, has little to change in finding it—in practice if not in theory—in a sacred corporation. It is then a comparative accident whether the magnetic current shall prove of a negative or positive kind; and the only influence which can break the circuit is the introduction of a new element—a faith distinct from either self-reliance or blind creature-worship—in the absolute word of God.

So is it, too, in the struggle of Evangelism with Naturalism. We invite all who are undecided to re-examine the evidence for the infallibility of the Bible, as a matter of fact, convinced that assurance here will be, as it surely ought to do, those unwise concessions to the so called spirit of the age, which are inconsistent with the idea of a fixed revelation. The mission of the Bible is to conquer the age, and not to yield to it—to ally with itself, indeed, all truth and all progress, but to impress on all its own sublime identity. What can the Bible suffer, if its friends are true to it? With what new weapons can it be attacked? With what green withes can it be bound. What has the enlightenment of the nineteenth century done to supersede it more than that of the fourth or eighteenth?

Every age has more than one Erastrans; but while they are quarrelling for pre-eminence, the temple stands, and their torches expire. Strauss abolishes Paulus; and Ewald declares that in Strauss there is absolutely nothing new. The giants, sprung from the dragon teeth of scepticism, slay each other, while the Bible, like the immortal letters of Cadmus—which are indeed its own—passes on to mingle with the thought and speech of all lands and all centuries.

One might have hoped that by this time antagonism to such a book might have ended, a book that alights everywhere with healing in its wings, that has dissolved the worst fetters of humanity, marked the line for ages between liberty and despotism, as it seems almost about to do in our own between civilization and reviving barbarism, and have so gathered up in itself all the rudiments of the future, and the seeds of advancement, that its eclipse would be the return of chaos, and and its extinction the epitaph of history. The resistance of ages to this book, however, is after all its crowning legitimation. The Bible it too good for the race it has come to bless. It blesses them like an angel whose mission is peremptory, and it troubles too many waters in its work of healing to be left in peace. It is felt and feared by all the rulers of the darkness of this world. It is the visible battlefield of invisible forces, showing in the radiant faces of the martyrs that have died for it, and the unearthly struggles of those who have hunted it from the earth, what mysterious interests are suspended on its safety or its destruction.

[North

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, June 25.

FAYETTEVILLE, ALA.—The P. E. writes of a very interesting revival lately at Fayetteville, on the Columbus Circuit, resulting in about thirty accessions to the Church. This circuit is supplied by Dr. Cox and Bro. James Bolton, whose labors God is blessing among the people.

RELIGIOUS OVERSEERS.—A missionary in one of the best cultivated sections of the Southern States writes us a word or two on the great facilities which pious overseers give in preaching the Gospel and Church organization among the slaves. On the large plantations, and where absenteeism obtains among the proprietors, the importance of this responsible and energetic class of men to domestic missionary operations, cannot easily be overrated. Our correspondent instances a case in which, through the influence of one, the Gospel was introduced into a region which is now returned on the Minutes as one of the most flourishing under the care of the Church.

DONALDSONVILLE, LA.—The second Quarterly meeting at this place resulted in a protracted meeting of nine days, which closed last Sabbath evening. Ten white persons professed conversion and eight were added to the Church; also twenty-eight colored persons. We learn that the little Church was filled, seats and aisles, and usually about 50 to 100 standing, during service, outside. The number added and the subjects of the revival were of a substantial kind, both men and women. Many wept who could not be persuaded to seek, after this new fashion.

In this connexion we have learned by Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, pastor at Baton Rouge, more particularly of the season of grace at this place. Among its results were twenty additions to the Church, and thirty conversions.

PREACHING WITHOUT NOTES.—We like to see such telling paragraphs in the Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, as this:

"Our correspondents, who have been discussing the relative merits of preaching with and without notes, may make whatever use they deem best of the following, which we clip from an exchange paper:

'A young clergyman 'in a neighboring town,' after having commenced preaching on a warm Sunday, lost his sermon rather suddenly and unexpectedly. A gust of wind swept through the aisles of the Church, took the sermon from the desk, and whirled it out. Two deacons gave chase, and after a half hour's pursuit, returned with the last leaf only of the wandering document, the remainder having escaped from them entirely. The clergyman not wishing to preach without notes, had seated himself to await the return of his sermon, and upon learning that it was lost to him forever, rose and gave out the hymn commencing with—

'The wind may sweep our hopes away,
And disappointment be our doom.'

which the choir sang with great effect, after which the services were closed with the benediction."

GAVAZZI MOBBED.—Rome is used to the logic of stakes, gibbets and dungeons. Her adherents, even in America, cannot bear free discussion and fearless inquisition into error. The armory of the Vatican has no weapons for a war of opinion.

It would have been surprising if the terrible assaults of the Italian Padre on Popery, and his merciless exposures of its policy, had been permitted to pass without a brutal demonstration of intolerance. We have it now in two chapters, close upon each other.

After the riot in Quebec on the 7th inst., in which the Church was riddled with stones, and the lecturer hardly escaped with life from Papist rioters, numbering a hundred or more, he went to Montreal, Canada, where he was to lecture in Zion Church. A body of 20 or 30 policemen were posted at the door to preserve order, but these were overpowered by a band of Irish Papists, who forced themselves into the Church; but they were repulsed after a number of shots had been fired on both sides. The lecture was then concluded, and at about a quarter past eight the congregation dispersed. The riot then appears to have been renewed, and the soldiers, who had been called out, fired on the mob, by whose orders is not known; the Mayor declares he gave none. The result was, that ten or twelve persons were killed on the spot, and fifty wounded.

TRAVELING FOR HEALTH.—The following, which the editor of the Knickerbocker has picked up from some discourses by a colored brother, is not too vulgar to be valuable in the present distressing times:

"I is afraid I is gwine to lebe you for a promiscus time. It hab always bin fashionable for congregashuns to send dere shepherds to Europe whenever dey git de brown critters in de frost, or cullinary consumpshun or de bronskill chubes ob de lungs. Now my throat hab bin so sore ob late, dat it wus wid de utmost difficulty dat I cood speak de truff. Some of my influenza frends findin dis fact to be de case in my lectures ob late, hab kinder clubbed together, and formed demselfs into a committee on de hole, to send me off on a sea-voyage. I took a sea voyage to Hohnckeu, but it did'st do me no good, so dey hab kindest 'cluded to send me off far nuff wher I cud pick up a little."

EDITORIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

A few of our exchanges keep a standing notice to this effect: "The editor wishes it expressly understood that he is not responsible for the opinions advanced by correspondents." We would have such a notice, but for deference to the intelligence of our readers. They must know, at a glance, that the paper would be a dull, monotonous, unrepresentative thing that utters only one mind.

While guarding the religious press from abuse, and the Church from being misrepresented, attacked, or unhealthily agitated through the press, there are certain latitudes of discussion and suggestion which we feel it to be no duty to rule out. Editorial discretion is not a tyranny. There are doctrines that we could not permit to be questioned—points we could not permit to be raised—while our supervision over these columns lasts. In doing or permitting such things, we should prove recreant to our trust. No privilege of agitation reaches them. There are other matters on which a difference of opinion is allowable—open to suggestion and improvement. A calm and moderate expression should not be forbid by those who hold to the other side. It is an intolerance, neither amiable nor reasonable. If nobody is to speak out until everybody is agreed, how shall differences be ascertained or agreement effected?

Our course and the main bearings of the paper, in editorials, correspondence and selected matter, are unequivocal. They have not only a leaning to the right side, but are decidedly on that side—the Methodist side. It shall continue to be our care that no essential principle is compromised, but rather defended and promulgated. We would as soon, however, undertake to make all the watches in town keep the same time, as to make half a dozen thinking people agree on all subjects, great and small.

If any reader have a matter against any correspondent, wherefore an uproar and "stop my paper?" Our columns are open to proper discussion; and our advice is that of the Town Clerk at Ephesus—"Let them implead one another."

THE FRIEND OF MOSES.

Dr. W. T. Hamilton, of Mobile, Ala., having written a book with this rather patronizing title, in support of Moses's authority as a historian, is now on a European tour, gathering additional facts. Of course, he could not a be friend of Moses without holding to the Unity theory. This he does. Notwithstanding, Messrs. Gliddon & Nott, of Mobile, with many flourishes of trumpets, are preparing a wonderful book on the other side of the question, and this seems to haunt the traveling divine with needless concern. Mr. Gliddon is very good on mummies, and Dr. Nott on people before they reach that state, but we opine the world need not be put out of heart by any volumes they are likely to perpetrate. Let not that trouble be taken on trust. It might be taking it for more than its worth. Time enough to answer the book when it appears, and not be scared beforehand. Nothing unanswerable has yet proceeded from that quarter.

Dr. H. writes, May 27, some interesting things about the Museum at Berlin. It seems Moses has some fast friends there. Here are names in science that bestride the pair of Mobile saurans like a colossus. We extract from the Mobile Register:

"But the Museum at Berlin, and the learned men connected with the University, were more immediately of interest to me. On my arrival at Berlin, I found that Professor Lepsius was out of town on a visit to his brother at Naumbourg, the place of his birth and education. Dr. Karlo Ritter, a learned professor and a distinguished author, to whom I brought a letter from Sir Charles Lyell, received me very kindly, lent me books, introduced me to other distinguished men here, and rendered me essential service. Mr. Von Olfers, also one of the most renowned of the literati of Germany, and who is Director General of the Royal Museum, received me most politely, and showed me all possible attention. He gave me a ticket authorizing my admission to the Museum at all hours, during my sojourn in Berlin. Moreover, Mr. V. Olfers gave me an introduction to the venerable Baron V. Humboldt, with whom I had the honor of an hour's conversation. I found all these learned men holding substantially, and almost with minute exactness, the views I entertain, and the views I have published in relation to the common origin of all the now differing human races, the bearing of Egyptian archæological lore, and of the discoveries yet advancing in Assyria, upon the great questions of the SACRED BOOKS. I stated to them the substance of certain communications that were not long since published in some of the Mobile papers, relating to these subjects, especially in reference to Major Rawlinson's discoveries, alleged to be fatal to the book of Daniel, &c. These gentlemen hold such pretensions at the same value as I do, and each did most unequivocally aver, that neither in Egypt nor in Assyria, do the discoveries, as yet made and promulgated, present any, even the slightest, indication of hostility to the sacred books, but the exact reverse. Wherever a connection can be discovered, or a relation traced, it is always corroborative of the truth of Scripture; and they all hesitated not to avow their firm conviction that so it will continue to be. As to the unity of the human races, these learned men are all as firm believers in it, and as warm advocates of it, as I am. So, also, is Professor Lepsius. Those few of them who have seen Dr. Nott's book, all admit with me, that he seems to be an amiable man and an earnest advocate of his novel views; but they express surprise and regret that he should expend his efforts in the advocacy of a cause so hopeless."

LA GRANGE COLLEGE, ALA.

Rev. George Shaeffer writes, June 13, from Columbus, Miss.:

"I have just returned from the Commencement at La Grange, which was more numerously attended than any for some years past. There were about twenty-four or twenty-five traveling preachers there, besides a few local brethren. Seventeen young gentlemen graduated, and the degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. J. W. Hannah. The prospects of La Grange are evidently brightening, and I hope it is destined to be the first institution of learning in the South. If the three patronizing Conferences will but apply themselves zealously to the object, they can make it an honor to themselves and a blessing to the country. Indeed, it is that already.

"Three of the graduating class come into the ranks of the Alabama Conference, consecrating their time and talents to the service of God and the interests of the Church. It is especially gratifying to see sanctified intelligence coming into the ministry. May they make workmen that need not to be ashamed."

A LATE CONVERT.

The Catholic Messenger, with other prints of its stripe, has from the beginning given to Protestantism the credit of Spirit Rappings. Not a few paragraphs have we encountered in their columns recording the fooleries, blasphemies, and insanities of the Rappings as the latest phase, the legitimate developments, &c., of Protestantism. Our neighbor has badgered us a good deal with this sort of thing—though we have been unable to see the sense or justice of the charge. But he has seen it and stuck to it.

Well, now, the boot has changed to the other leg. Late telegraphic news has inloaded the following item:

"ROME.—Spiritual rappings are all the rage in the Eternal City. The Pope and Jesuit College have been experimenting."

So, then, the Pope has turned Protestant! The Messenger has been publishing and boasting over a good many changes of late. Why not publish this one?

QUARTERLIES.—The North-British Review (May) and the Edinburgh Review (April) have been received from Leonard, Scott & Co., New York.

We may note, as a leading article in the former, "International Relations." The latter presents a sketch of the "Church of England in the Mountains," that verifies, in some existing cases in the nineteenth century, the description Macaulay has given of the body of English clergy in the latter part of the seventeenth. The curates and parsons of Wales, and of the mountainous, poor districts of the Established Church, have a hard time to live—while the prelates roll in wealth. A Methodist itinerant might almost extend his pity to some of the members of this wealthy hierarchy. One case is given of a curate in Glamorganshire who laid in a large stock of hares every season, and salted them down for consumption during the remainder of the year. That beats the famous regions of "Blount & Walker."

A FAREWELL AT THE FIVE POINTS.—The Ladies' Methodist Home Missionary Society of New York have done much to remove that leper spot known as the Five Points, from the fair face of the Metropolis, and reclaim to the paths of virtue and rectitude the miserable wretches who for years past have resided in that locality and rioted in every species of crime and debauchery incident to the place. We find no account of the following interesting scene, which took place on the 13th instant, in the Commercial Advertiser of the 14th:

Readers are aware that while the new mission-house on the site of the Old Brewery has been in process of erection, Divine worship has been held, and the mission children have been taught, in a frame building, in what is now called Paradise Square, the ladies of the Methodist Home Missionary Society being unwilling to intermit in any degree their benevolent and useful labors in that locality. The mission-house, lecture-room, school-room and parsonage, which have arisen under their auspices, being now completed, it was resolved to remove the school into the new building. The old frame building had, however, been the scene of so many interesting and cheering demonstrations of Heaven's approval of their arduous undertaking, and it had been so often visited by those who are specially interested in the cause of home missions, that all felt reluctant to abandon it without some festive and grateful ceremonies. Accordingly, it was resolved to hold a farewell festival yesterday afternoon, and it proved to be an occasion of most intense interest and gratification.

The benevolent ladies, who, by efforts that would have wearied many of the stronger sex, have established that mission, gathered together the children of the mission school, to the number of about two hundred, and having supplied both boys and girls with suitable clothing, invited them to assemble at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the old frame building. With clean and cheerful faces they came to the pleasant gathering, the boys arranging themselves on one side and the girls on the other, while benches were placed down the centre for their parents, who attended in considerable numbers; and soon the building, on the sight of which, before the Ladies' Home Missionary Society commenced operations, only obscene oaths and fearful curses were heard, became vocal with the songs of Zion and the joyous notes of 200 children redeemed from the deepest degradation, presenting a sight and sounds, such as angels might gaze upon and listen to with purest delight. These exercises were intermingled with appropriate addresses—words of encouragement and words of warning—and afterwards tea and cake, provided by the liberality of the ladies and their friends, were distributed to the children and their parents.

This day those children are sitting in a commodious and well-furnished school-room, opening the school exercises with prayer and praise, on the very spot where the Old Brewery once stood. On Friday that building will be dedicated to Jehovah's service for the redemption and restoration of those of His creatures from whom His image had well nigh been totally effaced, and instead of the temple of vice of a few short years ago, the wondering visitor will behold a school, a church, a home for the reformed and the residence of a Christian minister—and by the way, we may add that the present pastor, the Rev. Mr. Adams, is admirably adapted to his work alike by his zeal, his talents and his judgment. The mission will continue to prosper in his care.

LETTER FROM WOODSMAN.

COURTLAND, Ala., June 10, '53.

My last letter left you cooling by the spring of Tuscumbia. Ten miles towards the south-east, across one of the most beautiful and well cultivated valleys of the world, rises a considerable mountain, a spur of the Cumberland range. On its top Methodism has planted one of the best of its literary institutions—La Grange College. Whatever may be its disadvantages, arising from its isolated and almost inaccessible location, it has in other respects all the natural surroundings which make it, impromptu, the spot where the muses love to dwell, and where the classics find an almost indigenous home.

Two large three story brick buildings, in the Campus, comprise the college edifices proper; near them are houses devoted to the preparatory department, and in the immediate vicinity are the residences of the faculty, and of citizens who have come here for the health and educational advantages of the place. Half a mile from the college buildings is a small brick church pleasantly situated in a grove, where the religious services and Commencement exercises are held.

From the observatory of the main building a view of the Tennessee Valley is obtained, which, for extent and beauty is surpassed by very few scenes of perspective in the United States. It is, genuine landscape, diversified and picturesque. Woodlands, and cultivated fields, with their varied growth of cotton, corn, wheat and rye, are spread out in the lap of the valley, and far to the west and north beyond, a chain of hills describe a half circle of the horizon, and shut in the scenery and the valley together. Thus well defined, the prospect before you reposes in chequered and varied beauty within the embrace of its mountain enclosure. Scarcely a tint or hue of nature's coloring is wanting in the landscape, and the magnificent outlines require no additional touches from the plastic pencillings of heaven. Small towns, such as Florence and Tuscumbia, are perceptible through the blue vapory distance, and farm-houses and quarters, looking like spots of whitewash, here and there attract our attention.

It was a matter of much self-gratulation that my visit to this interesting spot happened during the College Commencement. The examination of the classes began on Wednesday, 1st instant, and continued until Monday night. The examination in all cases was thorough; some failures always where this is the case, and some in this instance, but on the whole, the result was alike highly creditable to the faculty and students.

Tuesday, the 7th, was a day of interest. The speeches of the junior class, fourteen in number, were delivered, some of which, in matter and manner, did honor to their authors. Rev. Smith W. Moore addressed the literary societies; subject, "What is Truth?" The theme was treated with pithiness and strength, evincing a cultivated intellect, an improved taste, along with elegance and purity of style. The address is to be published. Edward Goodwin delivered the address before the alumni, of the subject and merits of which I am not prepared to speak.

Before giving an account of the doings of Commencement day, (Wednesday) I return to the services of Sunday, the 5th. Rev. J. J. Hutchinson preached the Commencement Sermon, at 11 o'clock, as announced. Text, Job, xi. chap., 7th and 8th verses: "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do! deeper than hell; what canst thou know?" The discourse was happy in method and delivery, and the highest encomium I can pronounce is, that eminent fitness characterized the discussion, and plainness marked the application. Sacrament followed the sermon—Rev. Ebenezer Hearn reading the service. The table was surrounded by a large company of ministers, amongst whom I was glad to see several graduates and students, and the communion appeared to be a profitable one to all. Amongst the lay communicants were also a considerable number of young men from the classes of the college—more, indeed, than I had expected, but not more than I had desired. Services were had in the evening at 3 o'clock, and Dr. Hannah preached one of his sermons at night. He was not a Doctor then, but I am sure a great many such discourses were not needed to make him one of right.

Thus passed the Subbath, and now we take up the Commencement proper. The day was bright, and at an early hour the church was overflowing full of the beauty and manhood of the surrounding country. Strangers, visitors and friends of the college from Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama mingled with the throng, and gave the occasion a cosmopolitan character, such as the educational interests of Methodism should assume. Several old traveling preachers from different Conferences, the graduates of a toilsome itinerancy, and others of a younger school, and of a more classic, but not of a more honorable alma mater, were present. This struck me as apostolic—a ministry, uniting perhaps the extremes of inexperience and learning, meeting in fraternal harmony, and "each esteeming the other better than himself." The spirit of Christ makes Paul and John one, and blends the love of the disciple of Gamaliel with the soul absorbing evangelism of the son of Zebedee.

The senior class, sixteen in number, occupied the time until evening in the delivery of their speeches. These were, for the most part, commendably brief, spirited and interesting. Some of them are deserving of special mention, but this would be invidious. Take them all in all, they presented an average of talent and maturity greater than often attaches to entertainments of this kind.

After the "Hoc Diploma accipe," President Hardy pronounced one of the most original and impressive Baccalaureates it has ever fallen to our lot to hear. There have been addresses of this sort abundantly longer and more elaborate, but none more practical and striking. In justice to this gentlemanly Christian and scholar, you will allow me the liberty of an imperfect extract:

"Gentlemen of the Senior Class—It may be expected that I shall say something on this interesting occasion; yet I hardly know whether I can say anything which I have not said before. Occasions of this kind are usually occupied with very grave and solemn advice respecting the future, but from other positions and on other occasions, I have told you, with as much ability and earnestness as I possess, what I think you ought to do—how I think your talents, influence and time ought to be devoted. I will spare you, therefore, the repetition of all that, and ask the indulgence of your patience while, passing by what I may think you ought to do, I briefly refer to some things which I shall advise you not to do.

"In proceeding with my remarks, I must remind you of the fact, with which you are doubtless acquainted, that you are not the first young gentlemen who have received their diplomas from college authorities; and the lessons which I shall seek to inculcate will be drawn from the conduct and history of some of those who have gone before you, and from the general course of educated young men in the Southern country.

"After an experience of twenty years in colleges, and much observation as to the general course and tendency of things in our present social condition, and in the conduct of our youth, I think I may venture to specify the following particulars, and advise you accordingly:

"Observation teaches us that you will have no further use for books, and that you will not study any more. I advise you, therefore, to be guilty of no such unfashionable conduct as to be found engaged in study, or in reading any book, the object of which is the communication of knowledge. Perhaps it may be allowable for you to glance occasionally at a newspaper, a pamphlet of polite literature, or a fresh picayune novel. Farther than this you will not go. To do so would imply several things which are disagreeable. Besides being out of the fashion, it would imply that there are some things which you do not know. It would also imply that there is still with you some want of intellectual development. It should seem that in the opinion of the great majority of young men who toil through a college course, that you are now standing upon the pinnacle of earthly knowledge and intellectual power. There is nothing more to learn—no more strength to gain. Standing where you now stand, they look back on the trials, failures and discouragements of the past four years; they call to mind the ruggedness of the way they have traveled; the thorns and the stones which have mangled their feet in their doubtful ascent; and viewing the past through the transitory eclat of the present, they conclude—'Well, this must be the steep whence fame's proud temple shines afar,' of which they have heard so often and dreamed so much. Hence they are satisfied; there is for them no higher aspiration, no higher honor. They have reached the goal, perhaps with some difficulty, perhaps with some degree of indulgence, and they are content with the blushing honors of Commencement Day. Their labors end there, and their honors too.

"Or are we, gentlemen, to look for the reason of this prevailing fashion among our so-called educated young men in the profound respect they entertain for their instructors and Alma Mater? Are they unwilling for the public to know that their teachers and their college sometimes graduate young men who do not know everything, and whose minds might possibly be further improved by study! If this be so, the Boards of instruction in our collegiate institutions ought to be grateful to them for their professed interest in the reputation of those who have taught them, though for myself I do not think their apprehensions are well founded; nor do I cherish for such a very profound respect.

"Whatever may be the reasons, the fact is certain, you will not disregard the usual course—you will not be called unfashionable! I advise you, therefore, to leave your books on the hill, and to study no more. Perhaps you will never forget what 'Hoc Diploma accipe' means, and that will be sufficient.

"Again, let me advise you that you will now have nothing more to do for several years to come. To-day your captivity ends, and your work also ends. You have come, with great labor and many misgivings, to this hour of rejoicing and triumph. This hour will set you free, free to do nothing; and for years to come, I suppose, no one will dare ask you, 'What doest thou?' You will have the force of general example on your side, and who will be so unreasonable as to ask you to resist the current which bears so many away from the dreaded haunts of manly labor and earnest work. Work! Why, gentlemen, I advise you it is the very last thing you are expected to do! What! for a college-bred man to work! You must not think of such a thing, seriously, under a half dozen years.

"The educated young man! Perhaps you may find him during this time at the paternal mansion, where, after having attained, by some means or other, the one great object of his life, a college degree, he has retired to enjoy otium cum dignitate. His father, being a common man, can plant the corn and till the cotton, direct the servants, feed the stock—in a word, do all that claims the attention of an independent farmer or planter. The son finishes his toilet not till after breakfast is over; then, booted and spurred, full gloved, and tossing jauntily his cane, (the dandy's indispensable,) mounts his blooded steed, and seeks to murder time with his cronies at the village store, and perhaps closes the day with the very profitable and edifying association of those whose welcome presence will not allow me to name them.

"It is earnestly suggested that you do nothing useful till the ardor and impetuosity of early manhood are passed, and you will be apt to gain, if you are not previously drifted and wrecked upon some fatal coast, the dull quiet and breathless sea, where so many of your predecessors are hopelessly becalmed.

"Such, young gentlemen, is my advice, given, I confess, partly from a selfish consideration. It has sprung more from my apprehensions than from my wishes—more from what I perceive is the general course of young men, than from my hearty approbation of that course. My aim has been to convey to you my opinion in terms which you may not easily forget."

From these fragments of the address you may form some idea of the whole, and the practical excellence and wide applicability of them will excuse me to Bro. Hardy for their insertion here.

The following is a list of the Master of Arts in course: Thomas C. Wier, Columbus Sykes, John C. Stephenson, James W. Gregg, Robert B. Taylor, P. N. G. Rand, James H. Mullens.

The honorary degree of Master of Arts was conferred on Dewit C. Greenwood, Aberdeen, Miss.; Wm. B. Wood, Florence, Ala., and Septimus H Rice, La Grange.

With a commendable and singular economy, but one received, what has now become a very questionable distinction, the degree of D. D. Rev. John W. Hannah was the only successful candidate for this honor, to whose fitness and deservings in this regard I have already alluded. The lavish and indiscriminate manner in which these favors have been conferred by some of our literary institutions, is worthy of rebuke. With us they have ceased to be the mark of ripe and successful scholarship, and are worn with almost as much prodigality as those military titles which are born at the parturition of a militia muster. These literary honors should be dispensed with altogether, or they should be so conferred as to make them worth having.

On the whole, there was little to alloy the pleasures of the occasion—but little with which fault could be found. The exercises ended in the moderate festivities of a conversational reunion, given at the Stewards' Hall, which broke up at a late hour. Seldom has it been my privilege to see a more brilliant assemblage of beauty, wit and learning, over which religion seemed to throw a subdued and sanctified restraint. Such occasional parties are open to few objections, whilst they exercise a wholesome influence upon all concerned. Good order and decorum marked the conduct of the students throughout, and nothing but the utmost good feeling appeared in all.

Of President Hardy and the assisting members of the faculty it is unnecessary to speak. It is only necessary to know that you may accord to him all the esteem and confidence of a cherished friend. He impressed me as being eminently suited to the position which he has occupied for several months past as the head of this institution. Of the latter, so far as personal acquaintance enables me to speak, the public has a right to expect the faithful and efficient discharge of their several duties. And now, my dear editor, from this Nebo of North Alabama I look in a straight line towards my own Louisiana, and say vale, once more.

WOODSMAN.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

REVIVALS, SUNDAY SCHOOLS, Etc.

I recently had the pleasure of attending a Sunday School Celebration, held in the Town Hall at Marion, Ala., which excited great interest in the large concourse assembled to witness the exhibition. It was opened with music and prayer, and began with a salutatory address by a friend of the school. A dramatic performance was then exhibited, called the "Cadet of Temperance," which elicited the warmest applause from the audience. At more than one passage of the play the tears flowed freely. A fine moral effect was produced, and the abused power of the drama was redeemed from the inculcation of vice to the commendation of virtue and piety. Music and a collection intervened; after which followed another play, called the "Young Preacher." This was intended to rebuke that class of the community who seem to think that a minister has nothing to do but to make and receive calls, eat dinners, &c., but still expect him to furnish "beaten oil for the sanctuary."

The occasion was graced by the presence of several neighboring ministers. Bros. Kogar, Le Vert, Hutchinson, Capers and others enjoyed and partook of the exercises. We trust that the school, which was already large, numbering about 125 pupils, may be much increased by this anniversary; for the pastor, superintendent and pupils did themselves mutual honor.

The day after this celebration the second Quarterly Meeting for the Marion Station was begun in Hamburgh. An elegant and commodious Church was dedicated on Sabbath. The sermon for the occasion was preached by the pastor, Rev. P. P. Neely, in his best style, on the text, "Hallelujah! The Lord God omnipotent reigneth." A great revival commenced immediately and continued during the following week. About seventy-five persons joined the Methodist Church, and these, in addition to the number that joined in Marion, make the sum of 180 persons, as the fruits of their efforts during the present year. This is almost doubling the number of members, and greatly increasing the piety of the Church.

These facts will suggest a few thoughts on the propriety of connecting a small Church with a greater one—as Hamburgh with Marion—and sending an experienced preacher to take charge, with a younger one to assist. By their alternation in the two pulpits the spirit of itineracy is maintained, and the people to whom they are sent doubly blessed. By the experience of the older preacher the mind of his assistant is relieved of too great a responsibility, while he is greatly benefited by beholding the actions of superior wisdom and grace. On the other hand, the older preacher can lay certain portions of the work to which the zeal and activity of youth are more inclined, upon the eager shoulders of his younger companion. Finally, the two Churches are greatly strengthened by the natural counsel and co-operation of their ministers and members. We suggest those considerations not to the ignorant, but the wise. Are they of any value? If so, let the suburban charges which surround our metropolitan Churches be incorporated into them.

AN OBSERVER.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Arcola and Dayton Missions, (Ala. Con.)

REV. E. W. SEHON, D. D.:—I have delayed my Report till the close of the second quarter, in consequence of the superintendence of the Dayton Mission falling into my hands. The health of Bro. Bond, who was placed in charge of it, failed soon after reaching his work, which made it necessary for the Presiding Elder to release him, and place Bro. Walker, who had been appointed to the Gaston Circuit, in his place; and Bro. Walker being unordained, and not having much experience in the missionary work, it was thought best to place both missions under my supervision, and in filling the appointments, Bro. W. and I were to alternate. It was the first of May before we commenced operations on the Dayton Mission. Since then the appointments have been served regularly, and we find it to be an interesting work. For two years past it has suffered no little from the ill health of the brethren who served it. The servants and owner both became discouraged. Some of the owners were well nigh giving up all interest in the mission, but the appearance of two healthy looking and willing-minded men has revived their spirits, and if our health shall still abundance will be restored, and the work go on as heretofore, if not more successfully.

We cannot report definitely as to the cieties. The Mission-Book has not come to hand yet. Some, however, have been received on probation; some professed conversion; a number appear aroused to a sense of the danger of sin, and are striving for redemption. There are 10 preaching places on the mission, serving the blacks on 14 plantations.

The Arcola Mission is regarded to be in prosperous condition. The work has been enlarged some. It still maintains its hold of the confidence and good wishes of most, if not all, the patrons. Many of the owners are among its warmest friends. Some have remarked to me that they had rather pay the expense of preaching themselves, than to be without it where they overseed. We think that all this class of men did but view the subject in its proper light. Next to the missionary of the Cross, they can do most towards improving the morals of the blacks and leading them to Christ and to Heaven.

We regard the spiritual condition of the work encouraging. Now and then, as we go from place to place, we are met by one and another who, with bright face and glad heart, report "that they have good news to tell us." The missionary understands the language. We think of the joys of the young convert, the love of God shed abroad in the heart, and a soul redeemed from death. Our own souls are made glad and encouraged to go on in our labor of love. Forty-four have been received on probation; 11 by letter; 3 have gone to their reward.

Will not all concerned pray God's blessing upon the labors of the missionaries among the blacks, and especially that more laborers may be sent into the harvest.

A. MCBRIDE, F. WALKER, } Missionaries

June 10, 1853.

A SONG FOR DEATH.

BY D. M. KLINE.

I.

He 'a song for the grim knight Death.
Let the strain ring out on the air.
Like the trumpet tones of the Storm King's breath
As he rides on the lightning's glare.
Let it ring in the gloom of night,
And louder in the blaze of day;
For 'tis the song of a merry old knight,
To keep him in glee while taking his sight.
And these the words on his helmet bright
Change and decay—change and decay!

II.

Tho' white my head, my arm is strong
And joyous o'er the earth I tread.
For when I'm there, they are passing along
With the dead—the noiseless dead.
Then I stand aloof in my matchless might
To gaze on the pageant below.
And verily, I grow glad at the sight
To see them shed tears, yet look with delight,
But soon I will turn their joy to affright,
Shouting, change and decay, as they go.

III.

A farmer of no common mould.
I toil, but it is not for fame,
Nor yet for the fuere; men call gold.
Wretched source of all pride and shame.
But a mightier task is mine, I vow,
For I labor both night and day,
With Fate as the driver, and Time as the plow
The earth with the fruit of all I sow,
And as I flourish my sickle, repeat my vow
Of change and decay—change and decay!

IV.

Ha! a child on its parent's breast.
Fond sight that I love to see,
The babe looks happy, the mother blest,
So might they, if it were not for me.
But I, whom they "King of Terrors" call,
Will soon them a visit pay,
And carry the child with my dusky pall,
And chuckle, as I see the mother fall,
When I sound in her ears my dreaded call,
Of change and decay—change and decay

V.

Ho! for that maiden in her prime,
With pride written upon her brow,
Whose lovely eyes with lustre shine,
When she thinks of her plighted vow.
But I love a maiden vain and proud
So I'll chaunt her marriage lay,
And the bridal robe shall be a shroud,
Ha! ha! what pale gloom will succeed
Her beauty, when I clog my lay aloud
Of change and decay—change and decay!

VI.

But, lo! there stands an aged man,
Rich, haughty and purse-proud is he.
His thin white locks the zephyrs fan,
But 'tis little he thinks of me.
He is forgetful, but I am not,
To obeisance to him I will pay,
To tell him in truth, that he is not forgot.
And that now his name from life's scroll I blot.
But few will be his thanks to me, I wot,
As I pass him to change and decay.

VII.

Born of God, and old as Time.
What is mightier than man he!
Of no age and of no clime—
Who can from my presence flee!
I have mark'd each rolling year,
And the moments of each day,
Drawing glad at the sight of the bitter tear
Which fell at the thought that I was near,
Yet forever sounding my notes most clear—
Of change and decay—change and decay!

ON LOVING.—The more tenderly and warmly one loves so much more does he discern in himself defects rather than charms, that render him not worthy of the beloved. These are our little faults made known to us, when we have ascended the higher steps of religion. The more we satisfy the demands of conscience, the stronger they become. Love and religion are here like the sun. By morning daylight and torchlight, the air of the apartment is pure and undisturbed by a single particle; but let in a sunbeam, and how much dust and motes are hovering about.

[J. P. Richter.

MOBILE REFORM LEAGUE.—This body held a meeting at the Franklin House, Mobile, on Wednesday evening last, B. Labuzan in the chair. The Register says the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the "Public Reform League of Mobile" approve the resolution adopted by the Selma Convention; requesting the Central Committee of this several counties to ascertain the views of the different candidates for the Legislature, upon the question of passing a law at the next session of the Legislature, authorizing the people in each county, city, village, and election precinct, to determine by a majority vote whether license shall be issued to retail spirituous liquors within such area or not.

Mr. P. Williams offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That we congratulate the friends of Temperance Reform in Washington City, in their success in the recent triumphant vote against the License System in the District of Columbia. We hope soon to send back the echo from Alabama. The whole South is now being aroused upon this great question, and it is hoped and believed that the License System will within a few years, be numbered with the things that were in every State of the Union.

Crying children, in church, are usually considered as nuisances, and taken out; but this is not always the case, as the following anecdote from the Ladies' Repository for April will show:

"A brother, just returned from California, was present in a congregation of brother Owen, when a babe in the arms of its mother began to cry. A thing so unusual in California attracted every. A thing so unusual in California attracts not a little attention, and the preacher, with a sound of that babe's voice is more interesting to many in this congregation than my own. It is, perhaps, the sweetest music to many a man has heard, since, long time ago, he took leave of his far distant home." The effect was instantaneous and powerful, and a large, portion of the congregation melted into tears.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—June 1, 1853, by Rev. S. F. Kelley, Rev. GREEN MALONE, of Barbour county, Ala., to Miss JULIA T. WATSON, of Marianna, Fla.

MARRIED—June 7, by Rev. Thos. Stringfield, Rev. LINUS PARKER, of Louisiana Conference, to Miss S. E. F. SALE, daughter of Rev. Alexander Sale, of Lawrence county, Alabama.

OBITUARY:

DIED—At East Biloxi, 16th June, after a long and painful illness, Rev. BENJAMIN LAUGHTON, of Mississippi.

DIED—In Albany, N. Y., on the 6th inst., Charles H. Andrews, member of the N. O. Typographical Union, aged about 37 years. Mr. Andrews was for a considerable time employed in this office. He was a printer of remarkable ability, and enjoyed in no common degree the confidence and respect as well of his fellow-workmen as of his employers. In his death, the profession has lost one of its brightest ornaments. Peace to his ashes!

NOTICES.

The officers and managers of the Ministerial Education Society of the Alabama Conference, are requested to meet at Summerville, Ala., on the 4th of July next, at 7 o'clock, P. M. A full and punctual attendance is desired, as important business is to be transacted.

THOS. H. FOSTER, Sec'y.

June 6, 1853.

The officers and managers are as follows:

Gov. H. W. COLLIER, President.
THOS. H. FOSTER, Secretary.
THOS. W. DORMAN, Treasurer.

BOARD OF MANAGERS.

Rev. J. D. Vesher, C. C. Gillespie, A. H. Powell, C. C. Calloway, T. Moody, J. Hamilton, L. Q. C. De Vaughert, Rev. Daniel Pratt, B. W. Goodman, Robert Dougherty, W. Creagh, Robert A. Baker.

Persons who have funds on hand collected by the use of the Society, as well as those who may wish to contribute to its object, are desired to bring or send the money up at the time specified above, as it will be much needed to carry out the design of the meeting.

T. H. F.

NOTICE!

Our Camp-meeting on the Starkville Circuit, Mississippi Conference, Sharon District, will commence on Thursday, 11th of August next, four miles southwest of Starkville. Bishop Paine, and Bro. Hyre, of Aberdeen, and Bro. Dorman, of Columbus, will be with us. Ministers and people everywhere are cordially invited.

J. M. JONES, P. C.
D. M. WIGGINS, P. E.

Third Round of Quarterly Meetings on Eufaula District, Ala. Conf.

Cusseta	June 25
Fayetta Station	July 2 and 3
Clayton Circuit, Clayton	July 10 and 17
Indiana Station	July 23 and 24
Tallahassee	July 30 and 31
Jackson Circuit, at McNeeley's	August 6 and 7
Harbour Circuit, Five Points	August 13 and 14
Glenville Circuit, Glenville	August 20 and 21
Abbeville Circuit, Abbeville	Sept. 3 and 4
Fundville, Piney Grove	Sept. 10 and 11

The brethren will observe some changes in the time of holding Quarterly Meetings, but they are unavoidable.

WM. M. PIERCE, P. E.

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

FALL SESSION.

The next Session of this College will begin July 14th.

FACULTY.

Rev. JAMES W. HARRY, M. A., President, and Professor of Experimental Science.
Rev. SMITH W. MOORE, M. A., Vice President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
OSCAR F. CASEY, M. A., Professor of Ancient Languages.
SEPTIMUS P. RICE, M. A., Professor of Pure Mathematics, and Rector of Grammar School.
Rev. B. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Mixed Mathematics.
THOS. B. SMITH, B. A., Principal of Grammar School.

SCHOOL EXPENSES.

Tuition ..... $25 00 Per Session.
Room rent and servant's hire ..... 3 00 " "
Board and washing ..... 50 00 " "

The College dues must be paid invariably in advance.

JAMES W. HARRY.

La Grange, Ala., June 13, 1853.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

The Annual Examination of the Pupils of this Institute will begin on Friday, the 1st July next, and close on the following Wednesday.

Rev. N. Y. Levert will preach the Commencement Sermon on the intervening Sabbath.

Dr. Lipscomb, of Columbus, Miss., will deliver the Address at the close of the Ornduation Exercises, on Wednesday, the 5th July.

The Trustees of the Institute will meet on Friday, the 1st, at 12 o'clock M.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.

MACON (MISS.) FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The Examination at the Macon Female Institute of the Alabama Conference will commence on Saturday, 9th day of July next, and continue until the following Tuesday evening, when Prof. Landmann, assisted by the Young Ladies, will give one of his best Concerts.

Bishop Paine, it is expected, will preach the Commencement Sermon.

Hon. Joseph B. Cobb is expected to deliver the Address.

A full meeting of the Trustees is earnestly desired on Saturday, the 9th, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

The public is invited cordially—parents particularly.

H. W. FOOTE, Secretary.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

The Annual Examination of this Institution will commence on Monday, the 11th of July, and close on Thursday, the 14th.

Musical Concerts will be given on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

The Commencement Exercises will take place on Thursday morning, at which time an Address will be delivered by the Rev. T. H. Foster, of Demopolis, Ala.

JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, Principal.

A disgraceful riot took place yesterday afternoon on Bellsville avenue, at the house of Mr. John Donahue. A brother of Mr. D. who had been residing with him about a year, during which he had been ill of consumption, died on Saturday morning. Mr. D. is a Protestant and his brother was a Catholic, but, when dying, gave no particular directions to the family concerning his funeral, leaving it to their discretion; and they made arrangements with other friends and Fathers Moran and Senex for having Protestant services at the house, and then removing the body to the Catholic friends of the deceased for interment in their cemetery. This, it was believed, would settle all the difficulties which had been raised, and no disturbance being apprehended, the funeral was going on quietly, Rev. Mr. Townsend officiating. While he was in his discourse, Father Souez and others drove up and said, according to the testimony of those who heard it, "Is there no good Catholic here that will stop that babbling? He is playing a comedy over the dead body"—in allusion to Mr. Townsend. The services were then stopped, the Catholics rushed in and attempted to get possession of the body, and a general melee ensued, in which the coffin-lid was taken off and used as a weapon by the assailants. The riot continued for some time, but finally the Protestant bearers and friends placed the body in the hearse and followed it to the grave, among much ill language uttered by the other party. The affair will become the subject of a legal investigation. [Newark Advertiser, 15th.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

Receipts to June 25--1853.

☞ Please see that the money sent is duly acknowledged.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

By Rev F M Crain—
R S Barton 1 50
A W Moore 1 50
On account 1 50
Cr. by 500.

By W Garrett—
A Hester 1 50
Benj Sellman 1 50
Cr. by $2 00

By J J Hutchinson—
Mrs C A Sims ..... (less) .. 1 50

By Rev L M Boyd—
On account 1 50
B Powell 1 50

By Rev O W Brown—
Chas Evans 1 50
On account 1 50

By Rev W J Powars—
B Borden 1 50
Mrs O A Ferrell 1 50
Less $3 00

By Rev C Strider—
B B Murphree ..... (less) .. 1 50

By Rev A F Moore—
H Tatom 1 50
Jas Key 1 50

By Rev B Scales—
A T Martin ..... (less) 1 50

By Rev David Duncan—
Lewis Henderson (less) 1 50

By W C Turner—
J A Jones 1 50
Cr by 500.

By Rev W E M Linfield—
J H Black 1 50
Col John R Clark 1 50
Miss Sarah Laird 1 50
Mrs Ellen J Tate 1 50
S B Ferguson 1 50
Jas Hampton 1 00
Geo Brolis 1 50
Rev W L Wingo 1 50
Less $3 50

By Rev J T Roper—
John S Goree 1 50
J B Rogers 1 50
Benj Davis 1 50
Less $4 50

By Rev T L Dunster—
W H Crook ..... (less) .. 1 50

By Rev A S Dickenson—
Rev T M Fields 1 50
B F Price 1 50
P J Godwin 1 50
Thos Commander 1 50
J H Calloway 3 00
Cr. by $1 00

By Rev S F Pilley—
J B Banks 1 50
Rev W A McCreary 5 00
On account 18 50

By Rev D Mayo—
Br A J Sykes .. (less) .. 1 50
Mrs M E Crawford 1 50

Rev R W Speuce—
On account 15 00
Geo C Gray 1 50
W P Murray 5 00
Jos A Hollis 5 00

By Rev J C Huckabee—
G Spencer 1 50
H H Hargrove 1 50
J C Spencer 1 50

By Rev W H Ellison—
G W Grimes 1 50
Jabez Banks 1 50

By Rev J G Rush—
T A Ashe ..... (less) 1 50

By Rev G F Ellis—
W E Taylor .. (less) .. 1 50

By Rev F M Grace—
A J Robinson 1 50

By Rev C N McLeod—
C W Spence 1 50
M D Crawford 1 50
E McCraw 1 50
J P Hill 1 50
Mrs N E Moore 1 50
On account 7 50

By Rev J S Hughes—
Mrs M Otts 1 50
L Cage 1 50
Less 50c.

By Rev John D Fisher—
On account 3 50

By Rev T P Crymes—
W Alexander 1 50
John W Branch 1 50
Jas Tune 1 50
N Owens 1 50

By F M Berryman (self) 1 50
W R Nunn 1 50

By Rev J W Laney—
P Rogers 1 50
Thos W Rogers 1 50
Rev D M Hudson 1 50
Less $4 50

By Rev J M Towles—
On account 10 00

By Rev T Burge—
J O Marcy 1 50
J Jones 1 50
Less $3 00

By Rev Jno W Cook—
Mary L Richardson .. 1 50
W H Rush 1 50
R T Rush 1 50
H Sterling 1 50
Less $6 00

By Rev R V Rew—
N Martin ..... (less) 1 50

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev A Farr—
Jas T Terrel 1 50

By Rev Thos W Brown—
Mrs Annie Fulton 1 50
Mrs Louisa Buskner 1 50

By Rev J A Godfrey—
H G Roberts 1 50
John Garrett 1 50
R A Aikerson 1 50
Cr. by 50c.

By Rev S R Bradshaw—
H F Moore 1 50
Henry Sturdward 1 50
J Shaffer 1 50
J H Foster 1 50
W L Harel 1 50
W Vancey 1 50
Less $5 50

By Rev R F Colburn—
W C Bell 1 50
M F Moody 1 50

By Rev S L Scott—
Wm Graves 1 50
Rev A R Nicholson .. 1 50
Dr J H Krnnon 2 00

By Rev G W Morris—
Rev J J Robertson 1 50
Chas Callader 1 50
Dani Wilkinson 1 50
Less 50c.

By J Mershon—
R W Roberts .. (less) .. 1 50
H W Winter 1 50

By Rev H Williamson—
John Rowlin 1 50
L J Tourille 1 50
J H Watson 1 50
B Malendon 1 50
Less $1 00.

Prof J Harvie 1 50
Prof Funk 1 50
M H Laughter 1 50

By Rev B B Whittington—
H A Ferguson 1 50
L D Fulder 1 50

By Rev J G Jones—
J Pruitt ..... (less) 1 50

By Rev J G Deskin—
W W Hill ..... (less) 1 50

By Rev J W Woodward—
W Y Rooks 1 50
Wm Bilbo 1 50
Cr. by $3 00

Rev R Abbey, an account—
By draft 6 00

By Rev L Ercenbrack—
Mrs S F Barrey .(less) .. 1 50

By Rev L Pearce—
Mrs S Kearney 1 50
Thos R Boswell 1 50
A Waters 1 50
G W Cooper 1 50
Rev P James 1 50
H Selser 1 50
Mrs E Anding 1 50
David Dunn 1 50
W S Grayson 0 50
Less $3 50

Wm H Smith 2 50

By Rev J M Jones—
D Cook 1 50
A Bell 1 50
J Winterstein 1 50
On account 3 00
Less $2 00

By Rev J O Woodward—
S T Duke .... (less) 1 50

By John A Lane—
Mrs M A Nicholson ... 1 50
Mrs A E Collins 1 50
Mrs C D McKaren 1 50
Thos A Compton 1 50
Less $6 00

By Rev W P Harlon—
Isaac Taylor .. (less) .. 1 50

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

J C Beall 1 50
J H White 1 50
Major Jno Greer 1 50
Jas McLemau 1 50
H J Hamilton 1 00
Rev B Pipes 5 00
Mrs Norton 2 00
W H Thorne 1 50

By Rev H A Marse—
H H Chambliss 1 50

By Rev H Avery—
Mrs Hill 1 50
A T Poe .. (less 3 00) .. 1 50

By Post Master—
Jas Dyer .... (less) 1 50

By Rev C J Halbery—
J Sullivan 1 50
Rev S Hockery 1 50
Mrs M Fields 1 50
J Kelly 1 50
On account 6 00

By J Richardson—
Thos Johnson 1 50
Wm Ross 1 50
Malachi Hayes 1 50
Mrs Hall 1 50
J G Parham Jr 2 00

Rev John Pipes—
On account 0 00

By Rev W A Smyth—
J H Salter 1 50
F T Lowe 1 50
R E Hammel 1 50
M H Stallings 1 50
Jas Hunter 1 50
J D Law 1 50
H H Ballard 1 50
D Hagwn 1 50
T C Walmsley 0 00

By Rev L Parker—
C W Saunders 1 50
T C Sale 1 50
Rev H B Ross 1 50
Rev Thos Stringfield .. 1 50
John H Horris 1 50

By Rev W Venable—
W Powell 1 50
On account 8 50

By Rev W W Griffin—
Thos Pugh 1 50
H W Sharpe 1 50

By Rev H L Green—
Rev S Tregarthan 1 50
W Eaglinger 1 50
W H McCollom 1 50
J M Sherrouse 1 50
Or H H Norris 1 50
David Roach 1 50
Mrs Ann R Johnson .. 1 50
Less 50c.

By Rev R H Read—
J W White 1 50
J B Scott 1 50

By Rev P M Goodwyn—
U Hayes 1 50
Mrs A S Lee 1 50
M Miser 1 50
J C Younger 1 50

By Rev B Klunear—
Rev J Bunwoodee 1 50
J A Crary 1 50
Rev Mr Crary 1 50

TEXAS CONFERENCE.

By Rev J C Woollam—
E J Armstrong 1 50
A Duhose 1 50
C A Goode 1 50
Less $4 50

Rev J B Tullis—
W A Tarlton 1 50
F Washington 1 50
Gilbert Wilson 1 50
S L Davis 2 00
J Lott 1 50

By Rev Sam'l Lynch—
B Waggoner 1 50
J Maxwell 1 50
J F Gober 1 50
J H Hulsey 1 50
Less $6 00

By Rev P W Hobbs—
S R Patton 1 50
W Kirkpatrick 1 50
Less $3 00

J W Lowery 2 50

By Rev J W Whipple—
W Kennedy .. (less) .. 1 50

OTHER CONFERENCES.

By Rev L Patterson, Fla—
J W Selman 1 50
R H Evans 1 50
G Y Barkley 1 50
Less $4 50

By Rev E Philips—
Mrs R Rhome, Ark 1 50

By Rev C C C Sullivan—
A Syfert, Fla .. (less) .. 1 50

By Memphis Advocate—
Rev J H Parlar, Tenn .. 1 50
E Ballard, Tenn 1 50
Less $3 00

By Rev J B Annis, Ark—
Thos N Lightfoot 1 50
John Works 1 50
T Lowell 1 50
H C Stockmon 1 50
W Hickman 1 50
Henry Steward 2 50

By Rev W L McAlister—
H D C Massy 1 50
Rev R G Britian, Ark. 1 50

General Intelligence.

CASE OF THE INSURRECTIONISTS—Examination of Dyson and the Slave Man, Albert.—James Dyson and the negro man Albert, slave of Dr. Rushton, charged with inciting the slave population to insurrection, took place yesterday before Recorder Winter.

The State was represented by the Attorney General Morse, and by A. P. Field, Esq. John R. Grymes, Esq. appeared for the slave Albert, and Dyson defended himself in person.

The testimony of the negro man, Wright, was substantially the same as that heretofore published, going to show that Dyson had tampered with the witness, inducing him to believe that a formidable organization was on foot for carrying out a general insurrection of the slave population.

McGill, the fisherman, testified substantially as detailed in his preliminary affidavit, also before published, showing that Dyson had provided arms and ammunition to a limited extent in order to carry out his purposes.

Several other witnesses were examined whose testimony tended to show that Dyson and the slave Albert were implicated in the dark plot charged, to a limited extent.

Taking the testimony altogether, it goes to show that Dyson meditated the insane attempt of which he is accused, though the limited means provided establishes further that his hopes of success originated more from a heated imagination than from calculation based on the knowledge of adequate means at hand

The testimony satisfied the Recorder of the guilt of the parties, and he committed them for trial before the First District Court.

It is probable that if the same testimony be elicited before a jury the accused will have to swing for it.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Interments in the City of New Orleans for the week ending June 18, 1853:

Apoplexy	3	Fever, Bilious	3
Abortion	1	Fever, Typhoid	6
Asphyxia	1	Fever Typhus	2
Bronchitis	1	Fever, Congestive	4
Brain, Congestion of	2	Fever, Pernicious	14
Burn	1	Fever, Yellow	7
Brain, Effusion	1	Fever, Scarlet	2
Consumption	5	Gastro-Enteritis	1
Convulsions	12	Hepatitis, Chronic	1
Cholera	5	Heart, Hypertrophy of	1
Cholera Infantum	5	Hemorrhage	1
Cachexia Infantum	1	Lungs, Congestion of	1
Croup	1	Lungs, Gangrene of	1
Delirium Tremens	1	Measles	7
Dysentery	5	Marasmus	1
Diarrhœa Acute	1	Meningitis	1
Diarrhœa Chronic	4	Old Age	1
Debility	7	Pneumonia	5
Dentition	2	Still Born	0
Drowned	1	Tabes Mesenterica	1
Dropsy	2	Trismus Nascentium	2
Enteritis	2	Tetanus	1
Epilepsy	1	Uncertain	4
Encephalitis	1	Unknown	7
Fever, Brain	2
Total			147

Of these, 84 were under ten years of age, and 26 colored.

A. HESTER, Sec. B. H.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the weekly report, from the 11th to the 18th, inclusive: Admissions, 257; Discharges, 232; Deaths, 32, of which 6 were from yellow fever; Remaining, 620.

A relative of General Harrison gives notice in a card, published in the Cincinnati Times, that all persons assembling in the grave yard enclosure at North Bend, for the purpose of revelry, will be prosecuted as trespassers, and cites as a reason a disgraceful scene which occurred on the 30th ult., which is described as follows:

"A party of several hundred came from Cincinnati in three steamboats, a pioneer band having preceded them the day before in an omnibus, and this pioneer band pitched their tent in the grave yard on Sunday for the sale of liquor, without leave or license from any one. Yesterday that grave yard was selected as the spot upon which the company danced all day, and the voices of the professors, in calling the figures, could be distinctly heard at the house, a quarter of a mile off, in the valley below. That moral recreation of card playing, so refining and elevating in its influences, was indulged in by many of the company upon the humble graves of the pioneers of this settlement, and drunkenness and revelry reigned supreme. The tombstones in our family inclosures have been defaced, and the names of those who sleep beneath them been partly erased, so as to make them read differently, and even the names of the individuals committing these acts written upon the stones in pencil, an insult to the dead and a wanton outrage upon the feelings of the living. The depredations committed upon the beautiful mound where the remains of General Harrison repose are disgraceful in the extreme. Every little shrub and flower planted there by the hand of affection are rudely destroyed by these sacrilegious Vandals in their bacchanalian revelries."

COTTON.—The American cotton circulars are now beginning to allude to the state of this year's crop, but it is much too early to form a correct opinion, or even an approximation to a true one. The reports are all tinged by the wishes of the writers. Though the receipts are growing less week by week, it is a fact that the total receipts are 225,000 over those of last year at this time, while the stocks on hand have increased both in our ports and at Liverpool. The consumption, too, in England actually exhibits a slight abatement instead of an increase, and our exports are not more than equal to last year's. Prices in New York are one-half cent higher than those in Liverpool—a fact of itself sufficient to keep prices from much further advancing. A circular in a New York paper states that "stocks are decreasing throughout the world"—a statement which the Post says is at direct variance from the truth; as the fact is that they are much higher than last year, and that consumption has received a check.

Cuneda, the Captain-General of Cuba, somebody writes from the Isle of the Ocean, receives for his pay something over $400,000 per annum! His regular salary is $50,000; as this is not sufficient to feed him, he is allowed $12,000 extra for terrapins, asparagus, and other table luxuries; for issuing passports (after paying secretaries) he pockets a cool $24,000, and for appointments in his gift the trifling donation fee of $32,000 per annum. Added to this, he exacts three golden ounces ($54) for every limb of native African ebony imported into the Island, and the average of the past six years places this source of income at $260,000—a very pretty house on the trade he is bound by solemn treaty to suppress! Besides and "black mail" run him up another $40,000; so that, on the whole, he is not likely, if he be a considerate Spaniard, to "strike" for higher pay.

The Bilancia, of Milan, under date of Rome, May 2, contains the following: "A very painful discovery was made the other day in the Basilica of Lntornu. Those who are acquainted with the locality will recollect that the Pepo Martiu V. lies buried in the nave. The body having to be removed in consequence of certain architectural repairs in progress, the coffin was opened in the presence of the Chapter. To every body's surprise, nothing was found but the bones of Martin V.; the rings, the gold and silver chalices, the tiara, all studded with precious stones, had disappeared. Their existence in the coffin had been verified about fifty years ago."

PRACTICE ECONOMY.—"It is extravagance and improvidence, and nothing else, which keeps the laboring classes in the power of capital." So says the indefatigable Mrs. Swisheim, and so we implicitly believe. Every man thinks himself as good, to say the least, as every other man; and, to prove the fact, he resolves to live as well; in consequence of which most of our poor people wear broadcloth and patent leather, eat rich dinners, and live in rented houses. In these days of combinations, plain and honest men should combine to promote the laudable purpose of living economically.

The New York Courier, alluding to the Turkish question, says that the state of eastern affairs has not been so portentious since 1840. The great hope of a peaceful issue lies in the fact that a collision upon the Bosphorus might light up a flame of international and civil war over all Europe. No power, unless it be Russia, is in a situation to incur this risk; and a regard for the interests of abolitionism in Germany and Italy must to a certain extent disincline her to pursue a course which may terminate in a general resort to arms.

EXECUTION IN GREAT BRITAIN.—During the fifteen years ending in 1852, 908 persons were convicted of capital crimes in Great Britain, of whom 152 were executed, 617 transported for life, and the remainder had their sentences commuted to lighter punishment.

COMMENDABLE.—At the anniversary meeting of the New Jersey Railroad Company last week, it was stated that out of thirteen millions of passengers carried, the life of no one seated in a car has been lost.

A man in Boston has cured his wife of an attack of "Bloomerism." He watched the "fixing up," and said nothing. His wife went out in full rig, whereupon he assumed her cast-off skirts, and when she came back he was knitting or trying to knit a stocking. She took the hint, and the Turkish arrangement was put aside immediately. Truly, desperate diseases require desperate remedies.

A witness spoke several times during his testimony, of an occurrence about the time of his birth, when a surly judge interrupted him—"Do you mean to say that you can relate occurrences at the time of your birth, from your own recollection?" The laugh which began against the witness turned upon the judge as the former replied—"Why, sir, I cannot say that I exactly remember every particular, but I can assure your honor that I was there!"

INFLUENCE OF COMMERCE UPON THE MENTAL AND MORAL NATURE.—One benefit of commerce is its influence upon the mental and moral nature, or upon the intellects and the hearts of men. It ever tends to stir the minds of a community, and produce activity in business, and at the same time fosters and disseminates Christianity. The first is proven from the history of Tyre, and the second from the reign of Solomon, so renowned both for science and religion. Whatever increases mental vigor, or purifies and elevates the affections of men, is so much gain to the community. The history of the mechanical arts, the improvements in agriculture, of institutions of learning and of religion, clearly shows that they have been fostered and promoted by commerce. Since the day that Paul went to Rome in the merchant ship laden with wheat, wherever Commerce has spread her sails, religion has lifted her banner. The missionaries of our country have gone to their respective fields of labor in merchant ships. So in all ages, Commerce has been the handmaid of religion. Who are the most intelligent, active-minded and religious men in all our communities, but merchants? The agricultural population of a country are, perhaps, generally more steady, uniform, earnest, and permanent; but they are more seldom so active-minded, practically useful and enterprising as our merchants. Where are our great national improvements projected and carried into effect, but in our cities, "whose merchants are princes, and whose traffickers are the honorable of the earth?" Who are the chief supporters of our great schemes of benevolence, the boards of our churches? Who are the most active in endowing our colleges and institutions of learning? Who afford the facilities for trade to the great manufacturing and agricultural interests of our country? The answer will be given by every one. [Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

Arrival of the Mexico—Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Mexico we are placed in possession of Galveston papers of the 17th, and the bulk of our Texas exchanges from the interior as late as due.

We compile from our exchanges the following

SUMMARY OF NEWS:

There are now eight candidates for Governor of the State. The last announced is Col. M. T. Johnson.

The Democratic State Convention, which assembled at Washington on the 15th inst., declined making any nomination for Governor or Lieutenant-Governor.

The Trinity river is reported to be in good boating order, heavy rains having fallen in the northern and eastern portions of the State

It is now ascertained that the quantity of cotton that has been received in Houston since the 1st of September last exceeds twenty-four thousand bales, and it is estimated that at least thirty-five thousand bales of the last year's crop will be shipped through Houston.

We copy the following paragraphs from the Galveston News of the 17th:

The steamer Gen. Hamer, from the Brazos River for this port, with a heavy cargo, encountered heavy adverse winds, on account of which she was unable to make head-way, and put into San Luis, in a leaking condition, on the 14th inst. A supply of wood and coal has been dispatched to her.

The steamer Star State was raised last night, and is once more afloat. The cotton in the hold does not appear to be much burnt, yet it is considerably damaged. The injury done to the boat and cargo will probably amount to ten thousand dollars. The Star State will immediately resume her trips to Houston, and we trust she will have good luck, and soon make up the losses of this late casualty.

Gov. Paine and other members of the railroad delegation from the North, says the State Gazette, left Austin on the evening of the 30th ult, for Fort Graham, where they expect to meet with Gen. Rusk. They are amply provided with provisions, pack-mules, etc., for their trip West, and are determined upon a speedy reconnoisance of the country to El Paso.

The Brownsville correspondent of the Nueces Valley, writing on the 27th ult., says:

On last Saturday Gen Carvajal, with his two companions, Norton and Roundtree, gave bonds before Mr. Cummings, U. S. Commissioner, for their appearance before the U. S. District Court, to answer the charge of violating the neutrality laws of the United States. This Court, I understand, will open on the 1st of June next, and will adjourn from day to day until the arrival of Judge Waltrous, which will be from the 10th to the 15th of the same month.

Gen Persifor F. Smith arrived at San Antonio on the 8th, and was in fine health.

Mr. Smith, the head contractor of the Galveston and New Orleans Telegraph lines, informs the Galveston Journal that the citizens of the different towns along the route to Shreveport are alive to the importance of the enterprise; that the stock has all been taken, and that the work will be immediately pushed forward from each end of the route. The posts from Houston to Montgomery have been contracted for, and those for the Houston and Galveston section are now being contracted for. A large quantity of the wire has been received at New Orleans, and a portion of it sent to Red River—the balance to be sent to Galveston.

The Matagorda Tribune, of the 11th instant, says: A bottle, containing the following memorandum, was picked up by Mr. John McDonald, on the beach, near his residence on the Peninsula, a few days since. If no other benefit to the "rest of mankind," may it not afford friend Maury an item for his theory of storms and currents?

"This was thrown from Her Britannic Majesty's ship Dauntless, on the 2d November, 1852, when in latitude 17 deg. 42 min. north, and longitude 67 deg. 4 min. west."

The same paper states that the fragments of a wrecked vessel, consisting of spurs and a portion of the upper deak of what appeared to be a brig or large schooner, constructed into a raft, drifted on shore near Mr. J. Dietrick's, on the Peninsula, some two weeks ago. The Morning Star was painted on a piece of the timber which composed a part of the raft.

There were also found on the raft a quadrant, a sextant, a gold watch, a small piece of gold coin several chairs, and some two or three hundred brick, but nothing further to lead to the knowledge of where the vessel belonged, or of the fate of those on board. The fragment of the wreck was seen in the offing by persons on the Peninsular several hours previous to its landing. No one was observed upon it, and no hope can be entertained that any of the unfortunates have reached land. Had they been relieved by some wayfaring vessel, it is only reasonable to suppose that the valuable articles found on the wreck would also have been removed. The probable conclusion is, then, that these lonely wanderers of the ocean, whoever they were, have perished from hunger and thirst, or what is very frequently the case with those placed in a situation with all the horrors of shipwreck before them, have, in a fit of delirium, jumped overboard.

The Washington Lone Star of the 16th says that an attack was made a few nights previous on Mr. King, the Assessor and Collector of that county, who left Caldwell for Austin with a considerable amount of money. It appears that Mr. King left Caldwell after dark for his home a few miles from the town, and had made preparation to start to Austin next day.

On his way home he was attacked by two men; one seizing the reins of his bridle, and the other striking him over the head with a club. In the melee the fellow lost his club and drew a knife, cutting at Mr. King, who was still in his saddle spurring his horse, who at length gave a desperate lunge and jumped over the man, who had his horse by the bridle reins. By this means Mr. K. effected his escape without any serious hurt more than being stunned by the blow from the club, and his clothes and saddle cut. The parties engaged in this attempted assassination and robbery are said to be suspected.

THE CROPS, ETC.

The crops in Travis and adjoining counties have been injured by drouth.

The wheat crop is now being harvested, and is abundant. The other crops, in many sections of the State, are quite promising.

The Galveston News says:

The drouth continues here and in all the lower country, as far as we hear, and the crop is suffering generally. In the coast counties this crop will be seriously injured, unless we have rain soon. Cotton is also beginning to suffer. In some of the interior counties the prospect for crops is also very discouraging, though in others the crop is good.

The Leon Pioneer of the 8th says that corn and cotton are growing rapidly and look fine. The prospect of a good crop, both of corn and cotton, has greatly increased within the last two weeks.

The Washington Lone Star says:

A letter from Round Top, dated June 10, says that the crops in that region are very good. We also learn that around Independence and Brenham they are equally as flattering. The only complaint we hear of is in our own neighborhood; some of the upland plantations are suffering for want of rain.

THE GOLD MINES.

The accounts from the gold mines are contradictory, but sufficiently definite to induce those who have visited them to stay at home. A correspondent of the Galveston News, writing from Austin, says:

Although I am extremely sorry to say so, it is nevertheless my duty to my friends to say that the gold mines are a total failure so far.

Small quantities of gold have been found, but not enough to pay one-twentieth of the expense of hunting and digging for it. One dime per day, I understand, cannot be found, one day with another, while the expense of living there is, perhaps, $2 per day. This would make gold hunting rather a losing business.

That gold will eventually be found more abundantly, I do not doubt, but no one need leave home on that business yet, unless he has some time and money to spend hunting a more prolific locality.

On the other hand the Austin State Gazette in an editorial says:

We see almost daily persons going to or returning from the reported mining district above the city; and we have seen no one since the return of Mr. Huyuie and Mr. Kuykendall who had found any gold. The idea seems to be entertained that without proper implements to search for gold, or the means of extracting it, persons can go there and leisurely pick up the precious metal like gathering up stones in a rock quarry. So far as we are advised, no such examinations have as yet been made as would be likely to test the fact whether or no the mines are worth working. That there is gold to be found, in minute quantities, in the region of country spoken of, is placed beyond a doubt; but we are inclined to believe that the accounts of considerable amounts having been found were framed by persons who were either deceived themselves, or were deliberately practicing a fraud upon others who they knew had a confidence in their veracity.

Latest from El Paso.

PROCLAMATION OF THE MEXICAN GENERAL TRIAS.

Judge Hopkins and Mr. Daguerre arrived at San Antonio, Texas, on the 3d instant, from El Paso, making the trip in twenty-six days.

The San Antonio Ledger of the 9th instant contains the following items of news:

The up mail train was met on the 23d ult, at Live Oak Springs. Smith and Hall's trains were met on the 15th. Two days previous they had been attacked by either Apache or Muscalero Indians, who succeeded in plundering sixty-five animals, among which were some very fine American horses. Mr. Crosby lost a very fine horse by this attack. Tullis' train was met on Sabinal, on the 31st ult. Wentworth, with his drove of cattle, had reached the Rio Grande. They met Bennett and wife and Mitchell on the 11th, at Eagle Spring. This party, we believe, are from the Brazos. They were all well, and had met with no accident. On the 19th, they met Ned Holl's party on the way to Presidio del Norte, near Escondido Springs.

From the intelligence received by this arrival, there is just grounds for fearing troublesome times at El Paso. The action of Governor Lane in regard to Mesilla territory, has got up considerable excitement and ill-feeling, which will be very apt, owing to the unprotected condition of the American side of the river, to lead to serious difficulties. Gen. Trias, with seven hundred troops, and a dozen or more pieces of artillery, were quartered at El Paso. A portion of his troops are ruthless savages, armed with their usual implements of warfare—the bow and arrow. Should these get to drinking, no power can control them, and the result will be depredations and outrages upon our settlements. The citizens of McGovinsville are in constant dread of incursions from the El Paso side. About one hundred Indians are incorporated in the regular army at that place, which increases the force to some seven hundred. A general feeling of insecurity pervades that section of country. There have been some massacres of Mexicans.

The following is the Proclamation of the General-in-Chief of the Trais Brigade to his subordinates:

Fellow-Soldiers—Know that the Governor of New Mexico has declared that the colony "De la Mesilla," which is situated on Mexican territory, belongs to the United States.

This act, which he intends to accomplish, even by force, is an outrage upon the honor of the Republic, and which must not be tolerated by Mexicans.

My desire is, by every peaceable measure compatible with honor, to avoid collision, but if the Governor of New Mexico, regardless of the rights reserved to the people by the Constitution of the United States, should persist, it is your duty to resist, and sacrifice yourselves if necessary in the defence of your country.

Fellow-soldiers, I am satisfied that promptness of action and discipline are the guarantees of victory; therefore, show an immutable resolution, and you will conquer your enemies. It is certain that we shall triumph.

Live free, or die, is the only alternative left us; and I am proud with the belief that there is not a single Mexican who does not prefer a glorious death to a life of infamous slavery.

After victory, you may expect the benedictions of your fellow-citizens and the thanks of your country.

But should you be conquered, you will every where meet with humiliation and affronts, and lead a miserable life.

Many of your fellow-citizens are disposed to revenge you, should you succumb, or participate in your victory.

The wants and miseries you may undergo, in consequence of the event, should not arrest your determination.

Fellow-soldiers, depend that, in your privations and dangers, you will always have by your side your companion and friend,

ANGEL TRIAS.

CHIHUAHUA, April 9, 1853.

There are several religious sects among the Chinese, but the principal elements of belief are similar. They believe in three great existencies—two of them original, and without beginning or end, and the third the product of the other two. Of the two first existencies, one is spiritual; the other material; the three together are heaven, earth and man. Heaven is spiritual, earth material, but everlasting; and man the product of both, and partaking of the nature of both. The figures and graven images to which the Chinese pay reverence (uncouth as they are) do not represent gods, but good man who have eminently benefitted their race during their stay on earth. They suppose that these men are in heaven, enjoying a spiritual and carnal immortality, but that the spiritual part possesses the power of being present here on earth, and of being cognizant of all that passes amongst the living. [Home Journal.

THE RAILROAD M

PLEASURES OF SCHOOL-TEACHING.

BY A TEACHER.

[illegible] to your fair teacher tonight;
[illegible] you like her to-morrow?
[illegible] asked's unfailing;
[illegible] and the gracious word;
[illegible] are mouse-[illegible]
[illegible] to-morrow don't sound !")
[illegible] the young rebel Siddigs—
[illegible] still, mamm !"—Joseph keeps a spit-

[illegible] of glad young faces round me,
[illegible] freshness of life's early spring;
[illegible] and maps on all sides bound me,
[illegible] say"—they're playing with a

[illegible] and mixed intent on study—
[illegible] me down, and got my books all muddy !")

[illegible] mute of earthly sorrow e'er has clouded [illegible] bright ! yes, so innocent and fair—
[illegible] John move down ! my seat is
[illegible] redness—("Mammy pulled my hair !").
[illegible] sunny weather
[illegible] !"—No, I haven't, author !")

[illegible] change to me has been fatiguing,
[illegible] of immortal mind—
[illegible] ; its got all rusted !")
[illegible] and feelings kind ;
[illegible] Heaven pleases—
[illegible] got all torn to pieces !")

[illegible] more gentleness of spirit !
[illegible] better ways to guide—
[illegible] now ! oh ! please to hear it !")
[illegible] to endure when "life is beside !"
[illegible] to my arm a dreadful twist !")
[illegible] ! school may be—dismissed.

[illegible]

YOUR WIFE.—Yes, the only way is to [illegible] with just how you stand. Show her [illegible] sheet. Let her look over the [illegible] think it will hurt her feelings. It [illegible] any such thing. She has been taught [illegible] that money was with you just as little [illegible] think it is with their fathers—terribly [illegible] to be reached, but inexhaustible. She has [illegible] already. She has guessed you [illegible] as prosperous as you talked. But you [illegible] have belogged your money affairs, that she, [illegible] poor thing, knows nothing about them. Tell it right out that you are living outside of your income. Take her into partnership, and I'll warrant you you'll never regret it. There may be [illegible] shower at first, but that is natural. Let her see your estimate, and when you come again, she will show you that you have put her bills too high. True, she had an eighteen dollar bonnet last winter, but "it is just as good as ever ; a few shillings will provide it with new [illegible] and redo it a little; the shape," she [illegible] is almost exactly as they wear them now." And you will be surprised to see how [illegible] her expensive she can make your own wardrobe. She will surprise you with a new vest—not exactly unfamiliar somehow, looking as if in another shape you had seen it before—[illegible] as a vest, and scarcely costing a dollar [illegible] you had allowed five. Old cravats will experience a resurrection in her hands, coming [illegible] as to astonish you to find that nobody but those that are let into the secret, would suspect that they are old friends in new shape. The gown you were going to throw—out of whose forgotten chest she has got the material, you cannot imagine—but there it is, comfortable and warm, and [illegible] you want it for the long winter evenings coming on as fast as the [illegible] let them.

[illegible] a wonderful change in her [illegible] ition. Whereas, she always [illegible] was a little out of season or just [illegible] ket ; now, if beef is dear, she [illegible] ton is delightful, as tender as [illegible] If lamb rises, and fish is plenty, she [illegible] "a striped bass is so good occasionally," [illegible] always insists on having it Friday as [illegible] before, she must bear all the musical [illegible] she is "out of all patience with [illegible] singers." If Jenny Lind were to [illegible] sing some of her own sweet airs, [illegible] ear ; but she has had enough [illegible] extravagance, all written on the leger- [illegible] for above, as if it were a sin to [illegible] on the common stuff.

[illegible] you have thought much about it, you will [illegible] If spending most of your evenings, and such evenings, too—so full of [illegible] nts and fireside pleasures, that [illegible] wonder on the record of last [illegible] expenses, and marvel that you found [illegible] or relish for the costly entertainments that [illegible] so seriously taxed your porte-monnaie.

[illegible] dear friend, if, like Spain, your outgoes [illegible] exceed your incomes, be sure and [illegible] tell your husband of it; not in a stone and manner that will lead her to think you don't want her to buy furs this winter, but just as if you wanted a counsellor in the day of your trouble. If she does not come up, heart and soul, and [illegible] ly to your relief, put me down [illegible] for no [illegible], and her for no worthy speci- [illegible] [Olive Branch.

—In a letter from Rome, of the 17th of [illegible], editor of the New York [illegible] the preponderance of the [illegible] the ecclesiastical and the [illegible] intelligence, he adds:

"In the [illegible] the evils of the false system [illegible] ation, there are some tokens [illegible] prosperity [illegible] seen at Rome. I have no [illegible] but that the population of the city has consid- [illegible] increased within the last twenty years. [illegible] to be found in the use of [illegible] ulty which now exists in [illegible] rtments. I am told that [illegible] rly [illegible], and that the spacious [illegible] a few years since stood [illegible] palaces and other large houses, [illegible] ates. This is owing, no [illegible] in part to the general growth of the pop- [illegible] of Italy during the late long interval of [illegible] rest from war, and in part to the new facilities [illegible] for travelling, which bring many more strangers [illegible] to Rome than formerly as visitors or residents. [illegible] this also, which in the ecclesiastical world [illegible] ; in regards the usages and opinions [illegible] doubt floats many hither, [illegible] adds to this new growth of Rome. [illegible] that the Eternal City, in the [illegible] her Campagna, would at no [illegible] unpeopled, must be [illegible] to and indefinite futurity [illegible] their pretention.

"[illegible] city is somewhat beautified [illegible] succeeding years. Statues [illegible] ted; the old irregular [illegible] is, trodden with so much [illegible] had corns on their feet, has [illegible] and its place supplied by a [illegible] one, composed of small rectangular [illegible] of stone, like those used in paving the [illegible] of Paris ; a noble causeway, with para- [illegible] and a pavement of hewn stone, has been [illegible] lately made over the low grounds just without [illegible] the gate, as the new Appian way ; and the pub- [illegible] gardens and the Monte Pincio has been em- [illegible] bellished with rows of busts, in marble, of the [illegible] men of Italy, her sages, artists and [illegible]. Workmen are now occupied in the [illegible] forming its walks and planting them [illegible] trees, among which I perceive the ever- [illegible] magnolia, the bayopet-laven palmetto, [illegible] and other trees of the palm kind, [illegible] not find the climate here too rude for [illegible]

The following is a literal copy of [illegible] petition," which has lately been [illegible] circulated [illegible] with particularly red hair [illegible] on :

[illegible] y that the bearer, Antonion [illegible] Thertye, is a native of Italy, and [illegible] to some of those unfortunate families [illegible] who were thrown from the crests of Mount Ve- [illegible] in the eruption of 1807 ; and in descend- [illegible] ing [illegible] sides of the rugged mountain, with [illegible] of stone, lava, etc., was cruelly separ- [illegible] from his fond parents, his tender sister and [illegible] brothers. Thus he was thrown upon the [illegible] at an early age, an orphan without [illegible] ; but, by the aid of philanthropic Ital- [illegible] ans, she was enabled to procure a license, and [illegible] a stock of penny papers, which he for months [illegible] continued to sell at the various railroad stations [illegible] and about Naples ; by untiring industry and [illegible] economy, he was enabled to reach this [illegible] country, which he now wanders in [illegible] search of his long lost separated family, [illegible] the [illegible] was blowing strong from the [illegible] time of the eruption, he doubts not [illegible]

[illegible] cinder to the tender [illegible] mercies of the [illegible] browing, as I do, [illegible] that he is honest ; and his story (which he can- [illegible] not [illegible]) is a true one.

(Signed) HOMMUM HOPKINS,
Capt. of ship Titus A. Peep.
"Julius Cæsar, Jr., Charge d'Affaires at Na- [illegible]

Loss of Cargo.—The ship Winchester, Capt. [illegible], which has just completed loading for [illegible] carries 2000 bales of cotton, 2765 [illegible] of flour, 12,076 bushels of grain and [illegible] stores, which, we believe, is the largest [illegible] ever taken from this port by a sailing vessel from [illegible]. [N. Y. Herald, 11th].

Further Foreign News by the Pacific.

We subjoin additional interesting details, brought by the steamer Pacific at New York from Liverpool 1st inst.:

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Lords the Earl of Ilardwicke took occasion to ask the Government whether any orders had been given to Admiral Dundas to advance with the British fleet to the Dardanelles? The Earl of Clarendon, in reply, briefly said: "After what had occurred in the House only on Friday night last, when their Lordships seemed to concur in the propriety of her Majesty's Government not giving any explanations on a matter on which they were imperfectly informed, he was sure they would still more concur in the propriety of his declining altogether to state what orders had been given."

In the Commons Mr. D'Israeli, after pointing out how easily the Russians might seize the Dardanelles, put a similar question in these terms: "Taking the contingency referred to into consideration, had Government forwarded directions to the British Admiral at Malta to proceed with the British fleet to the Dardanelles?" To this, Lord John Russell replied: "In the present state of relations between Russia and Turkey, I feel that anything which may be said here will be considered as to the utmost importance, I must, therefore, decline answering the question which the right honorable gentlemen has put. I must leave him to give notice of any motion on this subject which he may think proper to bring forward, and I shall then be prepared fully to defend the course I have now taken." (Cheers.)

CUBAN SLAVE TRADE.—A debate, or rather conversation—for it ended in nothing—took place in the House of Lords, on the presentation by the Earl of Carlisle, of a petition from the ladies of Kingston, Jamaica, complaining of the importation of slaves into Cuba—he taking the opportunity to ask the Government if Spain observed her treaties faithfully for the suppression of the slave trade? The Earl went on to state his case in a three hours' speech. "True it is," he said, "my Lords, that no sooner does any Captain-General of Cuba seem to respect the faith of treaties, and the laws alike of humanity and honor, than very speedily, for some cause or other, he is sure to be removed in order to give place to some less scrupulous and more accommodating functionary in his stead. True it is, too, my Lord, I hear, that under the present Captain-General, Don Canedo, the slave trade is being carried on with unexampled vigor and audacity on the coasts of that unhappy island of Cuba, which I can depose from my own experience to be intended by our God for a paradise, but which ever since the white man first set his foot there he has converted—I can use no softer phrase—into a hell." (Hear, hear.)

Having gone at great length into the condition of the Emancipados, and paying a compliment to Lord Clarendon, whose ability, which he hoped would be exerted in the suppression of slavery, he added—"My noble friend will, I am sure, not deny that gross dereliction of their duty have been frequently manifested on the part of the Spanish Government. Why I talk of causes of war with Spain! Sure I am that Britain has been over and over again embroiled in long and ruinous wars on grounds which, in my judgment, were absolutely paltry in comparison with this. Let me not be understood as expressing an opinion that Britain is called upon to go to war with Spain, even for the suppression of the slave trade. But Spain ought to be told that if she does not observe her treaties—if she, almost alone of all the nations of the earth, persists in this infernal traffic, she must, if her possession of Cuba is ever endangered, be at least prepared to find Britain neutral in the conflict. (Hear, hear.) I do not either desire to throw the whole blame upon the Spaniards, for I am not sure that the United States, considering the liberties they possess, considering their freedom of origin, have not, by their Fugitive Slave Law, committed an even greater outrage upon liberty." The Earl concluded by hoping that Britain would strengthen her fleet on the coast of Cuba.

The Earl of Clarendon, speaking for the Government, replied that he had not much additional information to lay before the House. The treaties alluded to had constantly, feloniously been violated by Spain. What had been said respecting the Captains General of Cuba was a melancholy fact; but Valdes and Concha were honorable exceptions. Assurances had been received from the Spanish Government that instructions were sent to the Cuban authorities to discourage the traffic. It is, however, mainly from the exertions of Britain that the suppression of the trade is to be expected, and nothing will be left undone to accomplish that end.

The Bishop of Oxford made some remarks upon slave grown sugar, not much to the point.

Lord Brougham hoped and trusted that there was not a shadow of foundation for the statement that the bulk of the slave traders employed by other nations, were fitted out from ports of the United States, manned by American seamen, and furnished by American capital. That these reports were rife and general he knew.

Lord Wharncliffe hoped the Governor-General of Cuba would act as the Governor of Porto Rico had done, and stop the trade.

The subject then dropped.

The committee of the projected Roman Catholic College at Dublin had received £800 sterling in subscriptions from America.

The Arctic expedition sailed from Queenstown on the 26th for the North.

An exploring expedition to Australia is projected under the leadership of M. Hang, a gentleman who forfeited his commission in the Austrian service from sympathy with the liberals. The expedition is to be undertaken under the auspices of the Geographical Society.

THE CELEBRATED ACHILLI CASE.—"The Queen vs. Dr. Newman," had been finally closed by Dr. Newman paying all the costs. Achilli's costs were run up to an immense sum, but were taxed at £1031. Dr. Newman's own expenses were very large—much larger than Achilli's.

SWITZERLAND.

THE SWITZERS PREPARING FOR DEFENCE.—Vienna letters to the 23d of May say: Austria is as inflexible in its negotiations with Sardinia, as it proved in the case of Switzerland. There is no hope of a speedy suspension of the sequestration which has been imposed upon the properties of the Lombard emigrants.

From Berne, 23th, we learn that the Federal Counsel had resolved to issue orders to the various Cantons, instructing them to raise their military contingents at once, and be prepared to take the field at the first call.

The Council of State of Neufchatel had been dissolved by a resolution of the Grand Council, taken on the 23d of May.

The suspension bridge at Pency, near Geneva, fell on the 27th ult.; seven lives were lost.

AUSTRIA.

AWKWARD POSITION OF AUSTRIA WITH RESPECT TO THE TURKISH DIFFICULTY.—The instructions of the new Austrian Embassador to Constantinople are understood to include negotiations respecting Austrian trade in the Levant. Baron Bruck, the Embassador, is considered well qualified to undertake the subject, having gained experience as a director of the Austrian Lloyd's.

Austria is in a difficult position just now. If she supports Russia, the envied possessor of the Sulinah mouths of the Danube, she must give great offence to her German allies. If she resists Russian pretensions in the East, the relations between the two powers must naturally be weakened. It is doubtful, therefore, what her precise course of action may be in relation to Turkish affairs.

RUSSIA.

ARMAMENTS OF RUSSIA—Rumored Advance to the Turkish Frontier—Arrival of Menschikoff at Odessa.—Dispatches, purporting to be from Kalish, state that the military camp generally formed during the spring, near Warsaw, had been indefinitely postponed, owing to the state of affairs at Constantinople, and the van of the southern army of 100,000 men had received orders to approach the Turkish frontiers. Letters from Jassy also state that Russian military preparations were continued on an extensive scale. A permanent bridge is in course of erection over the River Pruth.

A dispatch from Odessa, 23d, says: "Prince Menschikoff arrived this morning from Constantinople. The rest of the embassy are expected within three days."

TURKEY.

DEPARTURE OF MENSCHIKOFF—PROBABILITY OF WAR—INTERESTING FROM ALL PARTS OF THE EMPIRE.—It is now officially announced that all further negotiations between Prince Menschikoff and the Porte had been broken off, and on the 22d the Prince took his departure from Constantinople for Odessa. The Embassadors of France and England, and the Ministers of Prussia and Austria, had previously agreed to make a joint attempt at reconciliation between the Divan and Russian Envoy. This attempt, however, was fruitless, as Menschikoff persisted in his demand for the immunities of the Greek Church. "Notwithstanding this intelligence," says the Moniteur, "it seems difficult to believe that the rupture of diplomatic relations between Russia and the Ottoman Porte will be followed by hostilities. One guarantee is the wisdom of the Court of St. Petersburgh, and its assurances of peace given to all the European Courts; and another consists in the fact that, according to the right of nations, the refusal to accede to a demand of concession and advantages not previously agreed to, is not regarded as a sufficient reason for the commencement of hostilities."

In Syria there had been much talk of the new faith which had been started in Persia by the apostate Mahomedan Shaikh Babee, who denies the authenticity of the Koran, and will not recognize any but God, Moses, David and himself. He had made many converts in Persia, and is giving the Schah much trouble. Babee has promised his followers that he will bring back to life all who are killed in defending the faith.

CHINA.

The news from China is important. The rebellion proceeds with unabated fury; the resources of the empire are becoming exhausted, and succor is being eagerly sought for from without. The Chinese Minister, meanwhile, has intimated to his imperial master that spirit begins to be extensively grown, and that its growth ought to be encouraged within the empire, and so save the £6,000,000 sterling paid for it to the foreign producer; and should common sense gain the ascendancy among the Celestials, or pecuniary difficulties compel them to grow for themselves the drug the people insist on having, away go £3,000,000 sterling of our Indian revenue at once. Meanwhile the Americans have proclaimed that they are determined to force Japan to open its ports to foreign trade, and the inevitable result of this is a Yankee settlement, a fleet or fort, troops and territories on the Chinese border, the germ, in fact, of another Anglo-Saxon empire in the East. With these mighty events pressing upon us on every side, the Parliament of England seems anxious to preserve the indolent, extravagant and incompetent form of government long ago felt to be antiquated and out of date, and ludicrously insufficient for the exigencies of the empire. The opening, on the 10th inst., of the Bombay and Tamah fragment of the Great Peninsular Railway, the first in operation in Asia, is the great domestic event of the fortnight.

PROGRESS OF THE INSURRECTION—Americans on Hand.—Hong Kong accounts of April 11 say: "Since the 28th ult. we have little to report."

We have but meagre accounts of the rebellion from the North. The latest date from Shanghai is of the 28th ult., which gives no intelligence that can be depended upon relating to the position of matters at Nankin. All communication with that place seemed cut off. There appeared no doubt of the rebel force investing the city, and a report was current that one of the outer gates had been forced. Among the various reports circulated there was a prevailing one that Keshan, the former Viceroy of Canton, had made a very successful attack on the rebel forces with the Imperial troops, about 150 miles from Nankin, in which many thousands of the rebels were said to have suffered. Nearer Nankin, at Taeping, the Imperial force is also stated to have defeated the rebels with great loss of life. This news requires confirmation. The high Mandarin at Shanghai engaged four vessels, fully equipped, to proceed up the Yangtzekiang, to reinforce Chekiangfoo.

The Bombay Times gives further statements. On the 16th of March, most urgent dispatches were received from the Governor of Nankin by the Chinese Governor of Shanghai, requiring him to implore the foreign consuls to send immediate assistance to Nankin, and stating that unless foreign aid were afforded, and immediately, the city must fall into the hands of the rebels, by whom it was closely invested both by land and water. A fleet of imperial junks, assisted by hired Portuguese armed lorchae, which had been sent up the river to oppose the progress of the insurgents, had been overpowered by the rebel flotilla; and the latter sailing down the Yantzekiang, had anchored without opposition immediately opposite Nankin. The division of the revolutionary army investing the place by land, is stated to be 30,000 strong, and increasing. Several days before this the Chinese Government had also applied for assistance to Sir C. Bonham, the British Commissionor at Hong-Kong. Sir Charles accordingly departed in her Majesty's steamship Hermes, on the 16th of March, for Shanghai, but had not arrived there when the mail left. Her Majesty's steamship Salamander, and the ship Lily, were already there. The French war steamer Cassini, and the United States steamer Susquehanna had both proceeded up the Yangtzekiang, and Col. Marshall, the American Commissioner, had determined to place the latter before Nankin. The immediate effect of this interference on the relative position of the insurgents and imperialists is most momentous. It is acknowledged by the Chinese themselves, that the loss of Nankin would have been the loss of the Empire.

The Friend of China mentions a report that Commissioner Su had been degraded from his office and invited to strangle himself. He had taken the hint and committed suicide.

THE FOUR HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TAKING OF CONSTANTINOPLE.—The late important news from Turkey in Europe was, by a somewhat startling coincidence, received here on the 400th anniversary of the conquest of Constantinople, and of the final destruction of the ancient Roman empire, by the Ottomans or Turks.

The city of Constantinople, founded more than 2500 years ago, and during the first 1000 years known as Byzantium, was subsequently to 330 A. D. called after its restorer, the Emperor Constantine, who removed to it from Rome; and it continued the seat of government of the Eastern Roman empire for about 1000 years after the Western had been overthrown.

According to Gibbon, the city, which had been already besieged for fifty-three days by the Ottoman troops under the Sultan Mahomet 2d, was stormed, and, after a glorious defence, taken on May 29, 1453, O. S., which corresponds (as the difference in the 15th century between the stylea was nine days) to June 7, 1453, of the Gregorian Calendar, or exactly four hundred years ago. The name of the last Emperor, who was killed in the assault, was, like that of the first, Constantine. Since the conquest, the city has been the capital of the Ottoman empire, and is known by its possessors as Stanbol or Istanbol; but by Christians, not subjects of the Porte, its former name is generally retained. The weakness and decline of the Ottoman power, now so manifest, induced some of the clergy to study and to attempt to expound the prophecies in the book of Daniel and the Apocalypse with regard to the Ottoman empire, and the conclusions are somewhat in this strain:

"The power of the Turk to continue ascendant over the third part of men for an hour, a day, a month and a year, or three hundred and ninety-one years and thirty days, began May 29, 1453, when the Greek or Eastern empire was overthrown. That period ended in June, 1844, or, by a correction of the true year, to make it coincide with the vulgar era, in June, 1843; when the Russians invaded the Danubian provinces and laid Constantinople open to their attack. Again they find a period of one thousand two hundred and ninety years during which the desolation of the land of Israel was to increase 'until that determined shall be poured on the dictator.' The beginning of that period is supposed by them to coincide with Nowshicrwan of Persia, in A. D. 531, and the end of it with the year 1821, and the Greek revolt from the power of the Porte."

It will, however, be recollected that the present is not the first occasion on which the occupation of Constantinople by the Russians has seemed imminent. In 1829 they advanced to and occupied Adrianople, within one hundred miles of the capital, and there we believe the treaty of peace of that year was signed. [Boston Traveller.

THE POPE AND THE EMPEROR.—Recently a special messenger was sent from Paris to Rome. His mission, it is said, was to induce the Pope to visit Paris for the purpose of formally crowning his Imperial Majesty. A letter writer says that the reply of His Holiness had been received, and amounts, in substance, to a refusal. The writer says: "The Pope refers to the pleasure it would give him, personally to anoint the Emperor of France, but says that he is not free in a matter of so much importance to consult his own wishes entirely. He must bend to the opinion of the Sacred College. Now, the Sacred College is known to be altogether opposed to the step, and the influence of Austria has been exerted from the beginning against it. It seems, therefore, highly improbable that we shall see the Pope this summer. And yet, I am positively told that preparations for the coronation have been in progress for a month past. They have been conducted with great secrecy, so that, if, after all, the ceremony does not take place, the public may never know the Emperor's disappointment."

AN ALLEGED WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.—The following article is copied from the Boston Courier. We regard it as a serious duty, in giving place to it, to express the hope that no one will be thereby induced to rely upon its recommendations, except under the sanction of competent medical counsel. If the discovery be all that is claimed, it is most valuable to the human family, and its author will merit the gratitude of the world:

Cure for Weakness, Small-pox, or Scarlatina, and Measles.—A merchant and shipowner of this city has had the following recipe sent him from England, where it was furnished by Mr. L. Larkin, member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and who vouches for it as "a medicine that will effect a revolution in the healing art, as regards the prevention and cure, not only of small-pox, but also of measles and scarlatina, however malignant the type, in a manner more efficient and extraordinary than could ever have been hitherto anticipated even by the most ardent philanthropist."

"On the first appearence of fever or irritation usherlag in attacks, whether occurring in families or large communities, the subjoined mode of treatment should at once be entered on: Take one grain each of powdered foxglove or digitalis (valuable in the ratio of its greenness—the dark should be rejected) and one of sniphate of zinc, (this article is commonly known as white vitriol.) These should be rubbed thoroughly in a mortar or other convenient vessel, with four or five drops of water; this done, a noggin (or about four ounces) more, with some syrup or sugar, should be added. Of this mixture a table spoonful should be given an adult, and two teaspoonfuls to a child, every second hour, until symptoms of disease vanish.

"Thus conducted, convalescence, as if by magic, will result. The rapidity of an event so auspicious will equally delight and astonish. It may, however, be necessary further to note that, should the bowels become obstructed in progress of the disease, an evil by no means common, then a drachm of the compound powder of jalap, formed of two parts cream of tartar with one of jalap, and one grain of the herb, tronted as above, formed into a pastil with syrup or sugar, should be given to an adult, and half the quantity to a child. This simple medicine shuts out every other form or article whatever, as totally unnecessary, if not pernicious.

"The methodus medendi of these medicines, capable of effecting results so gigantic, remain now only to be given, and appear to be as follows: The herb, by its anti-febrile qualities, lays hold at once of the fever, the prolific source of woe, which it immediately strangles, while the zinc acts the part of a tonic, instantly restoring the equilibrium."

Mr. Larkin adds: "No emigrant or government vessel should hereafter be allowed to put to sea without a few pence worth of these protectors; and it is further ardently hoped that, as the dearest interests of our common humanity are so vitally involved in this discovery, the press of all countries will give publicity to this announcement."

FURTHER FROM THE MONTREAL RIOT.—Advices from Montreal to Saturday, the 11th instant, say: Almost every hour records some new victim, whose corpse or maimed body has been found by friends.

So far as we can learn, after careful inquiry, the number of persons shot is about fifty, and those killed outright or mortally wounded, from ten to twelve.

A large meeting of citizens was held in St. George's Hall, at 2 o'clock, P. M., yesterday, for the purpose of considering the safety of the city. They passed resolutions requesting Gavazzi to complete his course of Lectures, commending the police, etc. The sixth resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the Mayor ought on all occasions to take sufficient measures for the protection of life and property in the city, or resign his office into other hands; and having failed in this duty, Charles Wilson is not a fit person to hold the office of Mayor, which he now occupies.

The city was in a state of, intense excitement the whole day yesterday. Several instances of attempts at outrage on solitary individuals by Roman Catholics are mentioned.

The Lecture was postponed last evening, and Father Gavazzi left this morning for New York, to be gone a day or two. He is to return and finish his course.

The Mayor, at an informal meeting of the City Councillors yesterday, denied that he had ordered the soldiers to fire, or that the officers had applied to him to do so. Who it was ordered the soldiers to fire, he could not say.

INSTRUCTIONS TO OUR REPRESENTATIVES ABROAD. Hon. Wm. L. Marcy, Secretary of State, has issued instructions to our diplomatic and consular agents abroad, intended to effect certain important reforms in those branches of the public service. Hereafter our foreign Ministers are to transact their own business, and not transfer to their secretaries the onus and responsibilities of official signatures. For the future, all our foreign legations are ordered to be opened every day, except Sundays, from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M., for the accommodation of American citizens, and American passports are to be vised gratis at the American legations, in all places where there is one. All fees paid at a consulate are to be reported to the State Department, under a penalty of dismissal from office. The Secretary has also abolished consular and diplomatic uniforms, in all cases where they can be dispensed with. American Ministers must appear at foreign courts in the simple dress of an American citizen, where they can do so without impairing their usefulness.

"The simplicity of our usages and the tone of feeling among our people," says the Secretary, "is much more in accordance with the example of our first and most distinguished representative at a royal court than the practice which has since prevailed." Not one but an American is to be hereafter allowed to act as Secretary of Legation, and in this connection Mr. Marcy remarks:

"The correspondence between the Government and the legations of the United States must be guarded with the utmost secrecy even as relates to our own citizens. To submit it to the examination of a foreigner will be regarded as an indiscretion in the offender, demanding immediate deprivation of office. The first duty of a subject is considered to be fidelity to his sovereign. Foreign clerks may be justly regarded as unsafe depositories of the secrets of our diplomacy in the legation where they are employed. The possibility that a revolution of our secret State papers may occur in this manner, is sufficient to exoite fears on the subject, and require the strict observance of the above instructions."

DECLIVITY OF RIVERS.—A very slight declivity suffices to give the running motion to water. Three inches per mile, in a smooth, straight channel, gives a velocity of about three miles an hour. The Ganges, which gathers the waters of the Himalaya Mountains, the loftiest in the world, is, at 1800 miles from its mouth, only about 800 feet above the level of the sea—about twice the height of St. Paul's, in London, or the height of Arthur's Seat, in Edinburgh; and to fall those 800 feet in its long course, the water requires more than a month. The great river Magdalena, in South America, running for 1000 miles between two ridges of the Andes, falls only 500 feet in all that distance. Above the commencement of the 1000 miles, it is seen descending in rapids and cataracts from the mountains. The gigantic Rio de la Plata has so gentle a descent to the ocean that, in Paraguay, 1500 miles from its mouth, large ships are seen which have sailed against the current all the way by the force of the wind alone—that is to say, which, on the beautifully inclined plane of the stream, have been gradually lifted by the soft wind, and even against the current, to an elevation greater than that of our loftiest spires. [Arnott's Physics.

MARRIAGE.—When youth weds youth for love, it is beautiful; when youth weds age for money, it is monstrous, and only hate, misery and criminality can come from it. Of those "thrice sodden fools" who marry their grandfathers and grandmothers, old Thomas Fuller says with equal truth and wit, "They that marry ancient people merely in expectation to bury them, hang themselves in hopes some one may come and cut the halter." [Boston Post.

THE WAISTS OF AMERICAN LADIES.—The unnatural length and ridiculous smallness of their waists baffle description. A waist that could be spanned is an English metaphorical expression used in a novel, but it is an American fact; and so alarming does it appear to an Englishman, that my first sentiment, on viewing the phenomenon, was one of pity for unfortunate beings who might possibly break off in the middle, like flowers from the stalk, before the evening concluded. No less extraordinary is the size of the ladies' arms. I saw many that were scarce thicker than moderate-sized walking-sticks. Yet strange to say, when these ladies pass the age of forty, they frequently attain an enormous size. The whole economy of their structure is then reversed, their wrists and arms becoming the thickest parts of the body. Here is a subject worthy the contemplation of the ethnologist. How comes it to pass that the English type—which I presume has not, in every case, been so affected by the admixture of others as to lose its own identity—how comes it to pass, I say, that the English type is so strangely altered in a few generations? I have heard various hypothesee: amongst others, the habits of the people—the dry climate. The effect of the latter on a European constitution would have appeared to me sufficient to account for the singular conformation, if I had not been persuaded by natives of the country, that the small waist is mainly owing to tight lacing. This practice, it is said, is persevered in to an alarming extent; and if report be true, it is to be feared that the effects will be felt by future generations to a greater degree than they are at present. [Dublin University Magazine.

THE ART OF THINKING.—One of the best modes of improving in the art of thinking is to think over some subject before you read upon it, and to observe what manner it occurred to the mind of some great master; you will then observe whether you have been too rash or timid; what you have omitted and what you have exceeded; and by this process you will insensibly be led to the general truth. This kind of understanding has an immense and decided superiority over those confused heads in which one fact is piled upon another, without the least attempt at classification and arrangement. Some men always read with a pen in their hand, and commit to paper any new thought which strikes them; others trust to chance for its reappearance. Which of these is the best method in the conduct of the understanding must, I should suppose, depend a great deal upon the particular understanding in question. Some men can do nothing without preparation, others little with it; some are fountains—some are reservoirs. [N. Y. Sun.

SHIRT-MAKING IN NEW YORK.—We have estimated the number of shirt-sewers in New York at five thousand, each of whom makes one shirt a day—this, of course, includes all kinds, coarse and fine. Allowing two dollars for each shirt, we find that their total value is ten thousand dollars; so that the value of all the shirts made in this city yearly is $3,130,000, which is rather under than over the actual amount at which they are sold in the retail stores. Each shirt-sewer earns on an average two dollars and fifty cents a week, making the aggregate yearly earnings about $600,000. More than one-third of all the shirts made here are sent to the South and West by our wholesale shirt manufacturers, of whom there are about twenty altogether. [N. Y. Herald.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00	per annum
For any two "	5 00	"
For any three "	7 00	"
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00	"
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00	"
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00	"
For Blackwood and the four Reviews,	10 00	"

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.
Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Rotrance 54 Gold st.
☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

EDUCATION.

MACON (MISS.) FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The Examination at the Macon Female Institute of the Alabama Conference will commence on Saturday, 9th day of July next, and continue until the following Tuesday evening, when Prof. Laudmann, assisted by the Young Ladies, will give one of his best Concerts.

Bishop Paine, it is expected, will preach the Commencement Sermon.

Hon. Joseph B. Cobb is expected to deliver the Address.

A full meeting of the Trustees is earnestly desired on Saturday, the 9th, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

The public is invited cordially—parents particularly.
je18 H. W. FOOTE, Secretary.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

The Annual Examination of this Institution will commence on Monday, the 11th of July, and close on Thursday, the 14th.

Musical Concerts will be given on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

The Commencement Exercises will take place on Thursday morning, at which time an Address will be delivered by the Rev. T. H. Foster, of Demopolis, Ala. je18 JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, Principal.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition	$200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument	70 00
French Language	30 00

Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.
For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PROVIDENCE, La.
☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.
REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co, Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co, Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans.
jc11 1y

A NEW MEDICINE.

EPPING'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

THIS excellent extract is a concentrated preparation of Buchu, with other vegetable diuretics. It is, as medical men will see, designed for that class of diseases which affect the urinary organs. For diseases and directions, see the label on each bottle. It is also a very fine alterative medicine. Dyspeptics, laboring under hepatic derangement, find great relief from the use of this remedy. It is on sale at the store of E. WRIGHT & CO., 151 Chartres street, and the store of J. MACPHERSON, 20 Camp st.
It comports best with my feelings to offer this article to Physicians, Druggists and Hospitals, upon my medical knowledge and Christian reputation, without the accustomed puffing. DR. L. PIERCE,
my21 Columbus, Georgia.

JOHN HOLMES, L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,
☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.
Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.
N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 10, 1853, 6mo.

REG. CLEVELAND, WM. CLEVELAND, S. F. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. 1y 6

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound (long ings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled h to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed. Both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonius and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.
ANDREW MEN

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DORMAN. W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 22. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 126.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The history of this benevolent institution is very interesting to every genuine Christian. The following "statement" we take from the Bible Society Record. It was read at the late anniversary of the Society:

Soon after the formation of the American Bible Society in 1816, the agent kept the depository gratuitously at his own office, a room up-stairs, at the corner of Cedar and Nassau-streets.

In the course of a year this place was found so inconvenient, and the calls for books so many, that the depository was removed to a building in Cliff street, occupied by the Society's printer. At first the books were kept in a room nine feet by twelve, but soon a second small room was added.

In about one year there was occasion for larger accommodations; a four story building was hired in Sloat's Lane, now Hanover street, near Wall and the Exchange. Here the agent occupied the lower front room for his office, and the rear one for the depository, a room twenty feet square, and of which he is remembered to have predicted that he should not see it entirely filled with Bibles. This was a day of small things, compared with what was to come, but great compared with what had been done before. The binder occupied the second story of this building, the printer the third and fourth. This place was soon found too strait, so that in 1820 the Board began to inquire as to the feasibility of purchasing or erecting a house solely for the Society's use. The inquiry resulted in the appointment of a committee, the purchase of two lots in Nassau street, near the Park, and the erection of the first Bible House, fifty feet front by one hundred feet deep. This house was finished in 1822, and was wholly paid for by special contributions of New York citizens, at a cost of $22,500.

The issue of Bibles and Testaments for the year when they entered the new house was 5,805, and the total of issues had amounted to 268,174 copies. It was supposed that ample room was now furnished for the Society for a long period to come.

But God's ways are not our ways. In 1828 the demand for the Scripturee had become so great that the managers were under the necessity of giving up their own hall to the binder. In 1829 they felt the necessity of putting up an additional building; and not being able then to purchase lots adjoining their other house, they erected one on the opposite side of Nassau street, a house 37 1-2 feet by 40.

In 1831 they were enabled to purchase two lots adjacent to their first house. They consequently sold the house last erected, and built on the new purchased lots. They had now a building covering nearly 100 feet square, most of it four stories high, with steam presses and many other improvements introduced, and had apparently room and facilities to meet all the demands for the Bible for many years.

It was found, however, in 1847 and '48, that in the present building they could not supply the auxiliaries, very many of which were now engaged in a systematic supply of their respective fields. Two full stories were consequently added to the printing department in 1850. But even now books were not prepared to advantage, and there was no room for enlargement. Inquiries were made for adjoining lots, and for another entire site in the lower part of the city. But as many contiguous lots were required, where a spacious building, easy of access, with an abundance of light and air, might be erected, it was extremely difficult to find a proper locality. Sites could be procured which would serve for a few years, but the Board had experienced so many evils from confined apartments and frequent removals, that they wished next, if possible, to build at least for one or two generations.

In 1851, such had become the necessity for enlarged accommodations, that a special committee was appointed to seek for a new site. This committee entered on their duty with great zeal and patience; but after months of search, were unable to find what they so earnestly desired. At length their attention was incidentally called to a block of ground which had been purchased for a very different object from that of making Bibles, and which they had heard might possibly, at this juncture, be obtained. With no loss of time it was secured, to the surprise of all, with the approbation of all, in the Board and out of it, who were friends of the Society, and with the silent thanksgivings of many, who saw in the event the hand which make the Bible, and made our land what it is by means of the Bible.

The site referred to we occupy to-day. Since the last assemblage of the Society in May, the corner-stone of this goodly edifice has been laid, and these spacious walls, spread over three-fourths of an acre, and rising six stories in height, have been reared—some by stone and brick by brick, until all is complete. Nearly 400 operatives are now engaged in preparing copies of the Sacred Word, with every comfort which can be devised, and every improvement in machinery, and in the mode of warming and ventilation, which this inventive age can furnish.

The building, too, has been erected with an amount of care and unpaid labor on the part of the Board, and particularly the Building Committee, which they would not speak of, but which the friends of the cause here assembled may assert and be grateful for, as it has taken not only days and weeks, but months of time, which was abstracted from pressing private avocations.

The building, too, large as it is, goes up without taking one dollar from the funds given by the auxiliaries and friends for publishing and circulating the Bible. A special contribution of $54,000, cheerfully given by those in this city, with the avails of the former house, and a temporary loan, to be repaid from the rented portions of the house, pay for all that has been done.

In the erection of this house, the Board have been favored in pecuniary arrangements, in their buildings, in freedom from disasters, and in many other ways, far beyond what they anticipated at the beginning of their task. In this house it will be seen there is room for a vast expansion, in the work of preparing books. Let immigration continue, let the peopling of the great West go on; the Word of Life can here be provided for all, if the means of publication are furnished, and the friends of the Bible throughout our borders will give it circulation. And who can estimate the effects as regards this life and the life to come of these countless volumes which are to go hence in coming years? They are to go annually to every State and Territory, to nearly every county and village of our wide domain. They are to go in a great measure to the poor, the neglected, to those which the book-merchant cannot be expected to supply. They are to go oftentimes to the abodes of sorrow, to the dwellings of the profane and the Sabbath-breaker, to the hospital, the prison, to the sailor, the soldier, to all who can be reached by the hand of benevolence.

Is there not occasion, then, to-day for devout thanksgivings for the goodness of God to the Society in former years, and particularly for that of the year now closed? Is there not occasion, too, for fervent prayers in regard to the future, that the Inspired Word, as it goes from this favored spot, may go with the Divine benediction, and become the savor of life to millions in our own and other lands!

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

THE TALMUD.

A late Jewish writer says that "the Talmud, taken as a whole, abounds in precepts of humanity and love, and is rich in narratives embodying toleration and feelings of brotherhood." Very true; and so, taken as a whole, is the Koran, the Vishnoo Baraun, or the writings of Confucius and Zoroaster. I think Dr. McCaul hits the mark much closer when he says: "Rabbinism is Jewish Popery; and Popery, Christian Rabbinism." Thus the wildest extravaganeies of the Gemarah will find their counterpart in Butler's "Lives of the Saints," or the "Golden Legend;" and the most subtle and hair-splitting of the later "Fathers"—not excepting Thomas Aquinas, or even Duns Scotus—would have found more than a match in the "House of Hillel," or the "House of Shammi."

The comparative importance which the Rabbies assign to their sacred books may be learned from the following Talmudical aphorism: "The Bible is like water, the Misbnah like wine, and the Gemarah like spiced wine." And again: "To study the Bible can scarcely be deemed a virtue; to study the Mishnah is virtue that will certainly be rewarded, but to study the Gemarah is a virtue never to be surpassed."

The orthodox Jew, even of the present day, thinks he is doing God most acceptable service who devotes his whole life to the study of the Law—i. e. the Gemarah. This is proved from Joshua i. 8: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night;" and a good Rabbinist never goes to his bed before two in the morning. And when it is considered that the Talmud is invariably read in a whining tone, (for even the mode of recitation claims divine origin,) and therefore a great promoter of the "drowsy powers;" and from the habitual perusal has become void of all interest, this last mentioned feat of heroic endurance should receive its due meed of admiration.

But since there can at present be but a very small proportion of Jews who find it convenient to neglect the ordinary duties of life at the expense of the Talmud, the Rabbies graciously accommodate the others also, and include them in their studies of the law for the consideration of a certain sum, "paid annually." Thus one Rabbi often is the proxy of forty or fifty, and sometimes more, lay individuals. Sometimes he goes to the house of each one of them, and there reads a small paragraph in the Mishnah: now a chapter on trees, again the formula of a bill of divorce, or a charm against toothache, or some other such pious composition. He may add a prayer, if he sees fit, but that is a matter of minor importance.

As I have stated before, there are many beautiful parables and apologues in these writings, as witness the story of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, which may be found in D'Israeli's "Curiosities of Literature." "The Household Jewels," a pretty poem that went the round of the papers some two or three years ago, is also of Talmudic origin. So is the parable of the rich man at his death and his three friends:—worldly goods, friends and relatives, and good works. If my space permitted, I should have written them out, and greatly increased their number. Many of its aphorisms are inferior only to those of Solomon.

On the other hand, by far the greater number of Talmudical stories are frivolous, absurd, impious, and even blasphemous. "The House that Jack Built" is only a parody of a Rabbinical legend, which is embraced in the liturgy of the Feast of the Passover. Their whimsical interpretation of the Behemoth, Leviathan, and "the cattle upon a thousand hills," are too well known to enlarge upon them here. One of their birds, when it spreads its wings, blots out the sun. An egg from another fell out of its nest, and the white thereof broke, and inundated a whole village, etc.

I will give but one specimen of their profane trifling; for I cannot expatiate on such a subject in a Christian paper. They represent the Deity as existing in human form—of a given number of million of miles in height—as dressed in robes of white, and studying the Scriptures by day, and the Talmud by night!!! The reader will excuse me from commenting on these absurdities. More on this subject may be found in Allen's "Modern Judaism;" also in Dr. McCaul's "Old Paths."

This may not be an improper place to mention that the Talmud has often been confiscated and burnt by Popes and Princes as being inimical to the propagation of the Christian faith among the Jews; and in order more effectually to suppress these writings altogether, malicious priests have not scrupled to spread a libel, stating that the Talmud required the Jews to use Christian blood in their Paschal ceremonies. Of course, there is not even the shadow of truth in such an assertion; and it is to be hoped that the spirit of toleration and the march of general enlightenment will preclude any future recurrence of the horrible tragedy of Damascus.

In the minor Jewish academies of Germany and Poland, the Hebrew Bible is taught with the later commentaries as Rashi, Abarbanel, Aben Ezra, Rabbi David Kimchi, Maimonides and others, written between the eleventh and the sixteenth centuries. Of these, Rashi, (abbreviated from Rabbi Shimmon bar Yitzchack,) a French Jew, is the most popular, although or perhaps, because he has the least real merit. He takes almost the same license as the authors of the Gemarah in explaining his text. Take an example: Gen. xviii. 7.—"And Abraham ran into the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good," etc. Says Rashi, "a calf tender and good, signifies three calves; and what did he want with three calves? Answer—to give a tongue to each of the three angels." Now here is a plain text that needs no commentary whatever, and this learned doctor merely starts a difficulty for the purpose of exhibiting his ingenuity in removing it. Nor are these exegeses thrown out as mere hints or suppositions, but are all delivered in the most oracular style, and easily gain the credence of the simple schoolboy, who sometimes prefers the notes to his text, as they afford him much more amusement.

Your readers will begin to think they know enough of Talmudical matters, and that it is time to be done. Well, I will oblige them so far, and conclude for the present.

JOSEPHUS.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

WOODSMAN'S LETTER.

MR. EDITOR:—Why is it that our Church, and religion, and morals generally in our State, are so much in the rear, when compared with other States of the Union? You perhaps readily reply, that it is attributable to its juniority; and this we have no doubt will in part account for it. But, sir, permit us to state that, in our humble judgment, the principal reason is, we do not enjoy revival seasons like those States. And why is it that we are not favored with such seasons?

There are obviously various reasons which we might adduce as bearing their influence. But through your permission, pursuant to our object in penning these few lines, we would briefly advert to but one, which was suggested to our minds while perusing the letter of Woodsman, as published in the last Advocate. It is one which, in our humble conception, militates with us great, and perhaps with greater potency than any other, against the interests of our Churches; particularly in our towns and cities. I mean that fastidious sensitiveness, or contempt of feeling, entertained by many for religious excitements and their conduct.

We do not appear, sir, for the purpose of defending all of the irregularities and excesses as practiced on the occasion of such meetings. They are sometimes attended with some circumstances which no enlightened Christian would approbate; yet they are the life of our Church.

And when Woodsman, (we know not who he is,) or any other man, travelling to a State in which perhaps there is more practical piety in one week than our State can boast in a conference year, (and we mean no reflection on our State,)—we say, when such a man writes back, expressing sentiments so contumelious or slighting of their meetings, which are of that specific character that have ever characterized our denomination, and which, as we conceive, are necessary to the prosperity and perpetuity of the peculiar institutions of Christianity, we feel in duty bound, as we regard our Church, and as we love the cause of our common Master, to enter our solemn protest against such publications.

Now, sir, is he, or is any man, justifiable in branding as "pernicious doggerel" those songs introduced, approbated and practiced by our fathers in the ministry, and the most successful of them, too, with effects good beyond parallel? Is he justifiable in saying that they should be purged from the Church and banished the sacred precincts of our altars? Can he sustain the position that their abolition would in no way prove detrimental to enlightened and scriptural Christian piety? Are not facts against him? Have not the scriptural truths, couched in the words of some of those "hymnologies," as they poured in rich melody from hearts warm with the love of God, been blessed of heaven to the conviction of sinners, and to the sanctification of believers? Have they not contributed much to the interests of worship, by kindling and exciting our whole congregations into feelings of devotion? If we are not mistaken, we could point him to various individuals possessing as high a degree of enlightened piety as he or we dare to boast, who have attributed to them such effects as the above on their own persons.

He has stated "that he may be heterodox" on the subject, "and if so, it is not desirable to be otherwise." So, we would say, we may be heterodox, or fanatic, or any thing else; but sure we are, that we would not desire to be "otherwise," when, with bleeding hearts, we witness that cold formality that is freezing, deadning and damning many of our congregations. We see the most successful of our ministers, those who are accomplishing the greatest amount of good, pursuing the same course.

Revivals, sir, or religious excitements, we have evidence to believe, have occurred in all ages of the Church. And since the great revival on the day of pentecost, the gospel, when and wherever preached faithfully, has resulted in a special excitement. And, reasoning from analogy, we may say that they have always been attended with excesses and irregularities. But if, on this account, they are to endure contumely and reproach, or to be rejected, by a parity of reasoning, you will treat with contempt every means of doing good.

Now, sir, facts stand out in bold relief, of the truth, that as revivals with all their objectionable features, have been more frequent and extensive, or more sparse and confined, in the same proportion have Christianity and genuine piety waxed and warmed. Then let us have revivals. Let us not fear, lest we should excite the people too much on this subject. The danger is in not exciting them enough.

When we consider the subject, and the mighty interests which it involves, we unhesitatingly say that no degree of excitement short of that which would dethrone reason and drive its victim to phrenzy, is too powerful. Why is it, sir, that necessity is laid upon us to set apart a special day of fasting and prayer for more laborers? Why is it that of our younger number some of us are so secular? Why is it that our laity are so cold, formal and worldly, and many of them back slidden and out of the Church? Why is it that sinners are so unmoved under our preaching, and so careless in reference to their souls' interests? Why is it that our success is so poor in swelling the number of subscribers to our excellent paper? The solution is, the people are not sufficiently excited on the subject of religion. They are excited on the subjects of politics and commerce, and there is no difficulty in getting subscribers to political sheets.

I have written more than I intended, not being in the habit of writing for publication. You can publish it as it is, or change it, or publish any portion of it, at your option; or, you can throw the whole of it under the table, and write something better on the subject.

METHODIST.

Shreveport, La., June 20, 1853.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

VISIT TO La GRANGE.

BRO. McTYEIRE:—Permit the writer to say a few words respecting his visit to La Grange College, North Alabama, at the late Commencement.

After an absence of ten years, in company with Bro. Hutchinson, I set out by way of Greensboro' and Tuscaloosa, to revisit this favored spot. On Thursday, the first day of the examination, after five days of warm and dusty traveling, we ascended the summit upon which the college stands. The scene was indeed lovely and enchanting. Standing as we were upon the mountain's top, surrounded on one side by high and lofty hills, on the other by a wide and extended valley, rich and fertile in production, I could but exclaim—It is grand! It is sublime! I had almost forgotten the grandeur and beauty presented to the beholder, as he stood upon Nature's magnificent observatory. As I cast my eye over the lovely valley, in which I spent the springtime of my life, what a variety of thoughts and reminiscencies crowded themselves upon my mind, waking alternately feelings of pleasure and pain! In panoramic view, the scenes and incidents of twenty years were in a few minutes placed upon memory's canvas. Once youthful and inexperienced, I settled there among strangers, with her who had plighted her vows to share the fortunes of the orphan boy. Thirteen years of virtuous toil and the blessings of a kind Providence, gave us a competency of life's blessings, and more warm-hearted and generous friends than I could have expected.

The "hand of time" has wrought but few changes in the valley itself; it has ever been the same beautiful and lovely spot. But mutation's plow has cut many deep and broad furrows on society's surface. Families once unbroken are now in fragments. Upon many death had lain his "cold grasp." A few days previous to my arrival, one of my old neighbors had buried the companion of his youth. She had long been one of the brightest ornaments of our Church. I had often met her in class-meeting—heard her speak of God's goodness, and express a heartfelt solicitude for her husband and children. May her prayers in their behalf be as "bread cast upon the waters, to be gathered up after many days." God grant it. Others have moved to the West. Youth has become manhood and womanhood. Time, oh! what changes thou hast made. Many loved ones have gone. Others, with myself, still linger on the shore of time. I may never meet them again on earth, but may we so live that we may meet in the paradise of the blessed.

I thus spent several days visiting my friends in the valley. As we talked over past scenes, I have no language to express my emotions. My feelings were often more than a match for me, and the excitement of my brain produced the worst paroxysm of headache I ever felt.

On Sabbath morning I returned to the hill. At 11 o'clock Bro. Hutchinson, of Greensboro', preached the Commencement Sermon. It was truly an appropriate and able effort. At 3 o'clock, P. M., Bro. Parker, of New Orleans, preached for us, and at candlelight, Bro. Hannah, of the Tennessee Conference. They showed themselves to be both scholars and preachers.

On Monday the examination of the classes was completed, the description of which I leave to the able hands of the committee. On Tuesday morning Mr. Goodwin addressed the Alumni, and was followed by Professor Moore, who delivered the literary address. We commend them for their happy efforts. The remaining time, until Wednesday evening, was spent in listening to the orations of the junior and senior classes, the former numbering fourteen, the latter seventeen. They were of the most thrilling character, and of the greatest variety. Whilst some visited the fields of fancy, festooning their sentiments with the gayest words of language, others laid before us a feast of reason and flow of the soul. Whilst I listened to the able efforts of the young men, I could but revert to the time when I, though a father of four children, was well nigh determined to to kneel at the same shrine of instruction. Little did I then think, when toiling and praying for the success of La Grange, that my infant boys were to share her blessings, and wear her honors. Could any friend, who had labored and given his money to build up and sustain the college, witness these exercises without feeling grateful to God that it had been his privilege to aid in bringing about such results? I confess it was so with me. As I looked upon the graduating class, as they stood on the brink of manhood, about to take on themselves the responsibilities of life, I felt that progression marks our age, and sent up a prayer to the "All-wise one" to make them all useful in their day and generation. Moral and religious sentiments pervade all their speeches, and what may not the Church and our country expect from this nursery of our youth. Three of them have entered the ministerial field of labor, and from their proficiency as scholars, becoming manners, deep piety and Christian zeal, what may not the Church expect from them. I was much gratified at the exercises, have long felt a deep interest in the prosperity of La Grange, and can say that my visit had no tendency to diminish it, but, on the contrary, to augment it.

R. A. BAKER.

Summerfield, Ala., June 15, 1853.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

GERMAN THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

The foreign correspondent of the Congregationalist gives the following in reference to German theological students:

The chief point of interest in Halle is the University, which has played a most conspicuous part in the ecclesiastical history of Germany for the last two centuries. Almost all the great religious or irreligious movements of ancient times date their origin from Halle. It was here that Spencer and August Franke begun the pietistic movement, so fruitful in its results. Here, in the school of Franke and under his auspices, Zinzendorf received those religious impulses which gave birth to the Moravian community. Her Semler laid the foundations of Rationalism, in its earlier form. It was from Halle that Wolf, the philosopher, was driven by the decree of the King, until it was to Halle that he afterwards returned in triumph. In this University Schleiermacher began his academic activity, which has revolutionized the theology of Germany. Here Gesenius won his laurels as a philologian; and from hence Wegscheider sent forth his widely-circulated, destructive work dedicated to "the shade of Luther." At the present time there are here more than half of the theological students in all Prussia, and perhaps the ablest corps of theological instructors in Germany. It is gratifying to know that the most influential of these instructors are men of true piety; and it would be difficult to find anywhere more humble, earnest, evangelical men than Julius Muller and Tholuck; and these have by far the largest power over the students. The number of theological students in Germany has, however, very much diminished. The causes are, partly—as with us—the increased attraction of other employments, and an apparently superfluous number of students in previous years; but, besides this, the fact here is to be attributed to the spread of infidel sentiments among the middling and lower classes, from which most of the preachers are to be expected. Undoubtedly, the religious state of Germany is, on the whole, better than at any other time within the last half century; but it is the higher classes, preeminently, which have been recalled to faith and piety, while skepticism or something worse still exists, to a melancholy extent, among the comparatively uncultivated part of the people.

One sometimes comes expecting to find sedate, elderly young men in black clothes, like those who gaze at the sunset from Andover hill, or meditate under the elms at New Haven, or pace the sands of East Windsor. The theologians here have a much more hoyish appearance; they are, indeed, quite young, fresh from the gymnasium, in the beginning of their college life, and after they finish their studies in the University, must wait eight or ten years before they can become pastors—in which time, like our college students in America, if they are really religious and earnest, they acquire a dignity of manner and department, and a fixedness of character. Therefore, one need not be surprised if he sees the young theologue here wearing a blue or scarlet cap—very likely without a visor, the badge of his University club—a fancy vest and gaudy cravat, with his boots drawn over his pants, and their tops being nearer his thighs than his knees; or if he sees him engaged in boisterous sports—all of which among us would be justly regarded as unbecoming, and some even as immoral. But on a nearer acquaintance, he will find that while some of them seem to give no evidence of a Christian temper, very many, on the other hand, manifest a simple, trustful, beautiful piety, with a carefulness and boldness in right doing, worthy of all esteem. He will find, also, that while some of them—as is the fact in assemblies of students every where—are stupidly provincial and hopelessly dull, there are others who—often when quite young—have an accuracy and extent of learning, and a scientific power and zeal, which find no parallel in other countries. There are more Johns than Pauls among them, as in America there are more Pauls than Johns. In the Christian life the contemplative, scientific tendency predominates over the more aggressive, propagating spirit.

AN ITINERANT OUT OF PATIENCE.

An itinerant in one of our Methodist exchanges waxes a little wrath on account of the stinginess of those he serves. He thus puts the case to the common sense of his readers:

"It is not right to get mad outright at the most provoking meanness, but to grin and bear it; or, in language more scriptural, to 'love your enemies,' and to 'be patient in tribulation.' But just examine the different forms of covetousness, as it is held up to your gaze, and it will be hard to resist the influence of a burning indignation. For instance, a society on a circuit is noted for love of dimes, and not for love to God. The preacher in charge goes on, labors hard, fills all his appointments, and tries to do good to all. Quarterly meeting comes on, and the question is asked the society, 'What has been collected?' etc. The answer is, 'No report.' The second quarter comes, and again the ominous 'No report' is uttered. It grates like harsh thunder on the poor itinerant's heart. His family comes up in his mind; he heaves a sigh, and lets it pass without a word. Another quarter comes; and now comes the steward or leader from the backslidden, money-loving class. In gets up at the wall, with a look of fiery indignation, and enters a complaint against all the preachers, as far back as he can remember. They have been cruelly neglected. The preachers have paid no attention to their saintly families, and have scolded and pelted them in their sermons; and therefore they do not intend to pay any more! Would a farmer let a plow-boy work three-quarters of the year, and then turn him off without pay, although he had never told him what he wanted done, or whether he liked his work?

"It really makes me writhe to see such bold and scandalous stinginess uncovered before a quarterly conference. Satan himself must laugh at the fool's errand upon which he sends such a steward. Everybody can see that the people in such a place do not intend to be honest—much less religious or godly. Why not pay the laborer till you can reasonably complain, and not wait three-quarters of the year to hunt an objection to the preacher, and make this an apology for not giving any thing to support him? Let no steward or leader who rends this be guilty of such meanness.

"If the preacher has neglected you, do not withhold a reasonable support, else this will vitiate your plea, and make people suspect that your own love of money is more in the way than your preacher's unfaithfulness. Why is it that paying classes and liberal members generally love and befriend their ministers, while those societies who always report, 'No report,' are so hard to please? Another mode of cheating a minister is to neglect or refuse to pay any thing till the third quarter, or perhaps the fourth, and then say the assessment was too high, and you won't pay any, because you cannot pay all. I would not justify a minister in the neglect of duty; I would be willing to be held to the strictest accountability; but when members, impelled by a covetousness so scandalous, make such an assault on their preacher's characters, I think I can 'be angry and sin not.'"

Uprightness Recommended.

A writer on health very justly condemns the habits of lounging, which a large number of people indulge in, as injurious to the health. He says:

"An erect bodily attitude is of vastly more importance to health than is generally imagined. Crooked bodily positions, maintained any length of time, are injurious, whether in a sitting, standing, or lying position, sleeping or walking. To sit with the body leaning forward on the stomach, or on one side, with the heels elevated to a level with the head, is not only in bad taste, but it is exceedingly detrimental to health, cramps the stomach, presses the vital organs, interrupts the free motion of the chest, and enfeebles the functions of the abdominal thoracic organs, and, in fact, unbalances the whole muscular system. Many children become slightly humpbacked or severely round-shouldered by sleeping with their head raised upon a high pillow. When any person finds it easier to sit or stand, or walk or sleep, in a crooked position than in a straight one, such a person may be sure his muscular system is badly deranged, and the more careful he is to preserve a straight or upright position, and get back to nature again, the better."

Seven Properties of Scripture.

The properties of scripture may be summarily enumerated as follows:

1. All of it is clear and intelligible enough to persons who sincerely desire to confirm the heart and life accordingly.

2. The word of God is found to be of special effect upon the human heart for conviction, conversion, instruction and comfort, in all ages and nations; and thereby evinces.

3. Its divine authority; whence it followe—

4. That it is the standard for determining every controversy in matters of faith.

5. It is perfect, as containing whatever is necessary to be known and believed in order to salvation.

6. It is also profitable, as containing nothing irrelevant or useless.

7. The province of God has watched over it, so that it retains its purity unsullied, and can be enjoyed now, as it ever could be from the beginning. [Bengel.

A virtuous person, in the thickest of his misfortunes, is like a quick-set hedge; the more he is cut and hacked, the better he thrives.

New Granada—Religious Liberty.

The project of a law for a complete separation of Church and State in that Republic, has been submitted to the Congress of New Granada by the Executive. It provides that from the passage of the act, the temporal and spiritual authorities shall be entirely independent of each other, and that accordingly no civil functionary shall take part in the election of any ecclesiastical officers of any religious sect whatever. That there shall be no legal obligation to contribute to the support of any religious worship or its ministers. That every citizen of New Granada and resident foreigner shall have the unrestricted right to exercise publicly and privately the worship which he professes, provided that no existing law is thereby infringed. That the prelates and ministers of every religion shall be subject to the laws of the Republic, in civil as well as in criminal affairs, on the same terms with other citizens. That the Executive power shall not admit from the Papal Government any but purely diplomatic agents, and for the sole purpose of negotiating international affairs. That the prohibition of the Jesuits from entering the territory of the Republic shall continue in force. That the penalties against infringing on the free exercise of Catholic worship shall apply to all other religious denominations. The compulsory contributions for the support of religious worship shall cease after the first of September.

In the official document presented to Congress, the question of religious liberty is argued at length and with ability. Referring to this country, it says: "In the United States of America, the toleration of worship and religious independence are absolute. The Government recognizes no educational authority or class; it sees only citizens and foreigners, but no priests. In that country of liberty and progress, which opens its doors to all the nations of the world; only about a twentieth part of the clergy are Catholics, the rest belonging to other religious sects. Voluntary contributions, if they do not enrich the ministers of worship, give them sufficient for a comfortable support. The people are religious without being fanatical, and the clergy present an edifying example of virtue. There the priests have no power over the property of the citizens, nor does religion suffer because there are no compulsory contributions for its support. Let us not doubt that we shall obtain the same results, by adopting the same system. Let us abandon those chimerical fears which to so great a degree retard the progress and the prosperity of the Republic."

Rev. John Fletcher's Preaching.

On my occasional visits I was struck with several things. Preaching on Noah as a type of Christ, he was in the midst of a most animated description of the terrible day of the Lord, when he suddenly paused. Every feature of his expressive countenance was marked with painful feeling; and, striking his forehead with the palm of his hand, he exclaimed, "Wretched man that I am! Beloved brethren, it often cuts me to the soul, as it does at this moment, to reflect that while I have been endeavoring, by the force of truth, by the beauties of holiness, and even by the terrors of the Lord, to bring you to walk in the peaceable paths of righteousness, I am, with respect to many of you who reject the gospel, only tying millstones about your neck to sink you deeper into perdition!" The whole church was electrified, and it was some time before he could resume the subject.

On another occasion, after the morning service, he asked if any of the congregation could give him the address of a sick man whom he was desired to visit. He was answered, "He is dead, sir."

"Dead! dead!" he exclaimed; "another soul launched into eternity! What can I do for him now? Why, my friends, will you so frequently serve me in this manner? I am not informed that you are ill, till you are dying, or hear that you are dead!"

Then, sitting down, he covered his head with his gown; and when the congregation had retired, he walked home buried in sorrow, as though he had lost a friend or brother. [Rev. Melvill Horne.

Affection.

We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is a weakness. They will return from a journey and treat their families with a distant dignity, and move among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg, surrounded with its broken fragments. There is hardly a more unnatural sight on earth than one of those families without a heart. A father had better extinguish a boy's eyes than take away his heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, and values sympathy and affection, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in nature's scenery, than be robbed of the hidden treasures of his heart?

Cherish, then, your heart's best affection. Indulge in the warm, gushing and inspiring emotions of filial, parental and fraternal love. Love God, everybody, and everything that is lovely. Teach your children to love; to love the rose, the robin; to love their parents; to love their God. Let it be the studied object of their domestic culture, to give them warm hearts, ardent affections. Bind your whole family together by those strong cords. You cannot make them too strong.

FRIENDS.—We ought always to make choice of persons of such worth and honor for our friends, that, if they should ever come to be so, they will not abuse our confidence, nor give us cause to fear them as enemies.

The stamped envelops provided for by the recent law of Congress, and contracted for by the Post-office Department, are ready for delivery, and have been inspected and approved by the agent of the Postmaster-General. We hope the public will not be long deprived of them.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1.50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, July 2.

TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS.

John Bull has been waked up. Yes, the redoubtable John, on the other side of the water. He subscribes, too, and sends the cash. Opening a foreign stamped letter last week, a half sovereign dropped out, and the following note faced us:

"June 7, '53.

To the Editor of the N. O. Ch. Advocate:

"Rev. Sir:—I shall feel obliged as your paper is published to obtain a copy. I enclose 10s., which please acknowledge. When the receipt for the above expires, I shall be happy to forward more.

"Faithfully,

"John Bull,

"Leek, England."

He shall have the Advocate: he shall. This British gold pays our printer well. Meantime, will not the folks at home wake up. We must have the ten thousand.

THE ACT OWNED TO.

In speaking of Gavazzi and the Canadian riots, the New York Freeman's Journal, the leading organ of Catholicism in the State of New York, published under the peculiar patronage and favor of Archbishop Hughes, says:

"We say further, that any man who should unwillingly or accidentally hear the Italian booby make use of such language, and not forthwith break his mouth, must be possessed of very little of that pardonable exuberance of irascible mettle that distinguishes the man of honor from the sneak."

Upon this the Albany Register remarks:

"Had that article appeared in some obscure print, edited by an ignorant and besotted fanatic, it might have been regarded as the outpourings of intemperate and hasty zeal. But it originates from a journal of the very highest authority, and largest influence with the Catholic denomination, issued under the eye of the highest functionary of that denomination in the States. It therefore speaks ex cathedra, and is entitled to notice.

"When such sentiments are promulgated from such a quarter, is it singular that the ignorant and unlearned should carry them out in practical demonstration 'to the bitter end?' Is it singular that, in their untaught zeal, under the influence of teachings from such high quarters, they should desecrate Protestant Churches, 'break' Protestant 'mouths,' and shed Protestant blood?

"The spirit of this extract is in no wise different from the Jacobinism that pervaded the worst epoch of the French Revolution. It is destructive of all religious freedom. It is destructive of all social order, of public quiet and morality. It is destructive, too, of all truly Christian feeling, and Christian charity. It is the spirit of disorder and riot, of persecution and bloodshed. It encourages mobs. It would burn Churches and lay waste cities. It would revive the inquisition, reproduce the rack. It would gather faggots, and burn men and women at the stake. With such a spirit abroad, who will say that the Canadian riots are other than legitimate results, flowing from such teachings? And who can say that that blood, such as was shed in Quebec and Montreal, may not be, even in our own country, the penalty of free discussion and free speech?

"It may not be amiss for legislators to pause and reflect, before they give their sanction to the practical supremacy and increase of power of a sect which holds these 'month breaking' doctrines, which makes the rioters who demolish Churches and shed Protestant blood 'men of honor,' while those who withhold their hands from violence, are stigmatized as 'sneaks.'"

Convention.—The State Temperance Convention of Louisiana will be held in Mechanics' Hall, on the 4th of July, at 7 o'clock, P. M. A liberal programme has been set forth.

Rev. H. J. Bardwell, the editor of the Mississippi Presbyterian, died in Kosciusko, Miss., on the 20th of June.

Bible Agent.—The Agent of the American Bible Society is at work in Alabama. Rev. W. W. Thomas, Lowndesboro', June 22d, writes:

"P. S. Bro. Atkins, Bible Agent, is with us, making a fine impression on the public mind in favor of his cause, as well as himself. Since Sabbath morning he has received by subscription and otherwise between $150 and $200—not as much perhaps by far as we ought to give to this noble cause; but it is in its infancy with us. Hope it will progress till large sums are received, and God's holy word lies open before every face in all the land."

The Original Washingtonians.—John H. W. Hawkins, in answer to the statement going the rounds that the leader of the Baltimore Washingtonian movement is keeping a low grog shop in Baltimore, gives the present standing of the original six, as follows:

David Anderson, master blacksmith, doing well and accumulating property; John F. Hoss, master carpenter, doing well; James McCurley, master coachmaker, doing well, also accumulating property; Archibald Campbell, silver plater, doing an extensive business; William R. Mitchell, on his own farm, seven miles from Baltimore—unfortunately does not keep his pledge; George Steers, died in 1841, a sober man—kept his pledge to the last.

"POWER OF TRUTH."

A correspondent of the Church Herald crows valiantly over a conversion:

"Letters which the writer has just received from Houston, Texas, bring the gratifying intelligence that the Rev. George Rottenstein, Methodist minister in that city, and editor of the Texas Wesleyan Banner, has renounced his connexion with that denomination, and made application for admittance to holy orders in the Church.

"This conversion to 'the faith once delivered to the saints,' is as remarkable as it is gratifying, and is an evidence of the power of truth. It is but a few months since the above mentioned gentleman, as editor of the Wesleyan Banner, issued a series of articles in his paper to disprove the doctrine of Apostolical Succession. Of course, he was obliged to read on both sides of the question, and from the fact that he is now applying to the successors of the Apostles for a commission to 'preach the word' and administer the sacraments, it is reasonable to conclude that his investigation of the subject at that time, has led to the happy result of bringing him to the 'Church of the living God.' Would that all who have investigated the subject were like minded, and would fearlessly follow the convictions of judgment and leadings of the Holy Spirit.

"Mr. R. will prove a valuable acquisition to the Church in Texas. Gentlemanly, intelligent, with a good degree of energy, and having perfect command of the German and English languages, we trust he will be the means of bringing many," &c., &c.

Far be it from us to cast a stone "so big as a mustard seed" at our old friend. May he find green pastures for soul and body where he goes. And if he preaches against formality, and insists on being born again, and on knowing that you are born again by the witness of the Spirit, as earnestly as when we first met in class with him, he "will prove a valuable acquisition to the Church in Texas." We beg him to hold as fast to those good old doctrines as he can.

Now that you are about to get into the Church, and no mistake, speak up, old friend, for free grace and sanctification, not forgetting that justification is by faith alone, even without the intervention of a sacrament or priestly manipulations. Come out, flat-footed, for revivals. Own up that you were once really converted, and it was no delusion.

One word more for the sake of Auld Lang Syne. It will be in bad judgment and worse taste to do as many, who have gone out from us, by whom we had done a good part. It has grieved us to behold their ingratitude; for they got religion among us, and surely they got nothing better among their new acquaintances.

You will not follow their example—abusing the Methodists. Remember who took you by the hand when you were a stranger and exile in this land; an infidel then—"dead in trespasses and sins." You were awakened and converted among the Methodists, and loved to tell it once. One of your sons, a talented young man, was educated by the Methodists for the ministry. After they had brought him up; after he ceased to be an expense and burden, and they were looking for a return in labors, he went over to the Episcopallans. It was not the first time "Corban" had been said to the Methodists. They were used to it; hoped he might do good still; bade him Godspeed, and went to quarrying away again on the raw material.

Now the father follows the son. Really, if our Episcopal friends would do as much for themselves as we are doing for them, they would get along better. We question whether the diocese of Texas has hewn out for itself, these few years, one minister, "gentlemanly, intelligent, with a good degree of energy, and having a perfect command of the German and English languages." And we have furnished them two, accepted as such, made ready to their hand. This high appreciation gratifies us. We should not like to put off a bad article on anybody.

The explanation of this conversion—"reading on both sides," &c.—is ingenious and charitable. Our old friend reasoned well in that "series of articles." As nobody else could answer them, in the quixotic chivalry of debate he answers them himself! So, he has felt the "power of truth" on both sides, and knows by this time how it feels.

Right glad they welcome him heartily. He deserves it. We notify them here of a deal of genuine bonhommie in our old friend. He discovered and published it, a good while ago, that the circuit riders held the working oar, and had a hard time of it—but another sort came along after the steamboats and cars got to running. And about eating he had a queer saying of his own—good as joke or fact. It was, that "chickens were for Methodist preachers, ducks for Baptists, geese for Presbyterians, but turkeys for Episcopalians." There's a "power of truth" in that remark.

Our Episcopal friends in Texas must treat him well. We protest against their treatment of some who were drawn off from us by their fair promises, and then neglected and starved. We hope they will give him a fair field and work enough to do, and then not forget to say "turkey" to him.

A Warning to Youth.—Daniel T. Woodward, who was on Thursday last sentenced to be hanged for the murder of his wife, in Washington, the Republic says, handed the following card to the Rev. John C. Smith on the ensuing day, when that gentleman, by invitation, first visited the unfortunate being in his cell, it having been written previously. The paper was directed to one of the associates of his boyish days, and designed for publication:

"To the Youth of the District.—As I have but a few days to live, I feel it my duty to caution you from following my course of life, if you would live long and be respected by all who know you. No matter how humble your situation of life, keep the Sabbath holy, refrain from profane company, and, above all things, refrain from that great destroyer, ardent spirits. Look at my condition. Instead of being one of our best citizens, beloved and esteemed by all, you find me in my lonely cell, under sentence of death, charged with one of the most awful crimes that could be perpetrated on earth; from once a pious youth, the cause referred to above.

"Daniel T. Woodward."

The above imparts a solemn lesson, by which we trust the youth to whom it is addressed will profit.

CITY CORRESPONDENCE.

Gayarre, in his third and last series of lectures on the history of Louisiana, while a French Colony, takes us back to one hundred years ago in a lively and pleasant strain of description. He is speaking of events in 1755, when New Orleans, under the governorship of Kerlerec and the Orleans Regency, fifty-six years after its foundation by Bienville, was bounded by the river in front and Rampart street in the rear, and Barrack and Customhouse streets above and below. Canal street was the boundary of a flourishing plantation, in which the cultivation of the sugar cane was first essayed, and some years after domesticated in this State from Hispaniola.

Gayarre we should not suspect to be prejudiced against those he here describes. It is a refreshing illustration of Jesuitical intrigue and Romish unity on this spot, a hundred years ago: an instructive chapter in the ecclesiastical history of the Pelican State. On page 80:

"At that time there sprung up in the colony a sort of religious warfare, which added to the distraction produced by the expectation of perils from abroad. In 1717 the Capuchins of the province of Champagne, in France, had secured for their body exclusive ecclesiastical jurisdiction over New Orleans, and a large portion of the territory of Louisiana. In 1726 the Jesuits had also obtained permission to settle in the colony; and in order to avoid all collision with the Capuchins, their jurisdiction had been confined to a remote region in the upper part of the colony. But they had taken care to procure, as an apparently insignificant favor, that their Superior might reside in New Orleans, on condition that he should not discharge there any ecclesiastical function, unless it should be with the consent of the Superior of the Capuchins. This was an entering wedge, which the well known and exquisite dexterity of the Jesuits turned to goodly purpose, so far as their interest was concerned. Enough had been granted to men in whom the energy of enterprise was equal to the sagacious daring of conception and to the artful readiness of execution. Thus they began with obtaining for their Superior, from the Bishop of Quebec, in whose diocese Louisiana was included, a commission of Grand Vicar, to be carried into effect within the limits of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Capuchins, with which they had no right to interfere, in virtue of the stipulated conditions of the contract entered into between the Capuchins and the India Company, in 1717. The Jesuits pretended that this was not a violation of that contract, because their Superior did not assume to act as Jesuit, but as Grand Vicar and representative of the Bishop of Quebec in his diocese of Louisiana. But the Superior Council, siding with the Capuchins, had refused to admit and to record the nomination made by the Bishop. Nevertheless, the Jesuits had gradually usurped many of the functions of the Capuchins, in spite of the strenuous opposition of the latter, and had carried their audacity so far as to threaten to interdict their rivals altogether. The poor Capuchins, who were completely bewildered, and who were wanting in the spirit and ability necessary to cope with such adversaries, contented themselves with uttering loud complaints, and clamoring for the help of the government. Unluckily for their cause, they had committed the fault of acting with too much expansion of good nature towards the Jesuits. For instance, on the 9th of March, 1752, Reverend Father Dagobert, the Superior of the Capuchins, had had the imprudent courtesy of inviting Father Baudoin, the Superior of the Jesuits, to give his benediction to the Chapel of the Hospital, built for the poor of the parish of New Orleans. Father Baudoin, the Jesuit, assented with pious alacrity to the proposition of Father Dagobert, the Capuchin, which alacrity was stimulated by the circumstance that Father Dagobert, on that occasion, had, with Christian meekness, offered to act, and did act, as aid, or assistant, to the proud Jesuit, that is, in an inferior capacity. Father Baudoin availed himself of this circumstance as a weapon against the Capuchins. He said that he had published his letters patent as Grand Vicar, immediately after having received them, and that, although he had assumed this title, and announced his determination to act as such, no objection had been raised to his causing, in this capacity, certain publications to be made, on the 26th of February, 1752, with regard to the celebration of the Jubilee in the parish of New Orleans; that, subsequently, he had given his benediction, in the same capacity, to the Chapel of the Hospital, and that, having thus been openly recognized Vicar General of Lower Louisiana, it was now too late for the Capuchins to dispute his title and the prerogatives appertaining thereto. This was the question which had agitated the colony for several years, and which still remained undecided in 1755. It was called the War of the Jesuits and the Capuchins, and produced much irritation at the time. It gave rise to acrimonious writings, squibs, pasquinades, and satirical songs. The women, in particular, made themselves conspicuous for the vivacity of their zeal either for one or the other party."

On page 100 he resumes the history of this interesting and harmonious affair:

"It will be remembered that the Capuchins had been struggling against the encroachments of the Jesuits, since 1755. But, in 1764, they were rid of their redoubtable adversaries, in consequence of the famous order of expulsion issued by the French government against this celebrated religious order. All their property in Louisiana was seized, confiscated, and sold for $180,000, a large sum at that time. It is well known that the Jesuits of Spain and Naples shared the same fate with those of France, and that they were almost simultaneously expelled from all the domains appertaining to those three kingdoms. It was thought that these men who held, it was said, every consideration secondary to the prosperity of their association, and whose attachment to it did not yield to that of Horatius, Scævola, or Brutus for Rome, had become too powerful; and even kings had been taught to fear their doctrines, which were represented as dangerous, and their ambition which had expanded in proportion to the vast wealth of their order. When it was subsequently abolished by the Pope himself, in 1773, the shallow multitude, whose look does not penetrate beyond the epidermis of things, thought that the mighty society created by Loyola was really dissolved. But those who were better acquainted with the prodigious organization of the Company of Jesus, and with the vitality it derives from it, smiled at the ignorant credulity of mankind. Were they not right? Does not the year of our Lord, 1850, find the Jesuits in full resurrection everywhere, and is it not likely that they now possess more property in Louisiana than in 1764?"

This was written three years ago, and three years are a long while in Jesuit history. "Is it not likely they possess now more property in Louisiana than in 1764?" In these three years the Jesuit College on Baronne street has been set agoing, and the magnificent church structure begun hard by. Close observers have detected in that time decided wire-pullings and manœuvers in high places, showing that the Jesuits have not forsaken Louisiana. If from 1755 to 1764, nine years, this order acquired property in Louisiana that sold, when they were ousted, at $180,000—the historian well remarks, "a large sum at that time"—what property in Louisiana do they now control? What influence now have they? In view of their well known character and past history, it were well for citizens and patriots to propound this inquiry seriously. But alas—the short memories of the people!

Woodsman.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

NEXT GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor:—As the time is somewhat approaching for the sitting of the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, I think intimations of at least some matters which may come before that body, or in which the Church generally are interested, should be made.

It is generally expected that the IXth Section of the Discipline will be stricken from that book. It has been demanded by a large portion of the Church, and we hope the now quiet and undisturbed peace of the Church will not be interrupted by the perpetuation of this section. It treats of a subject that, in an ecclesiastical point of view, we have nothing to do, only in so far as to save men's souls.

I am not a radical. I believe in adhering to the original land-marks of Methodism, where they are legitimate, and especially so touching the monied interests of the Church; for this is a delicate subject to legislate upon. Many have thought our hundred dollar system a bad one, in that it did not meet the exigencies of the preachers; but in this opinion I did not agree. Money has not and must not influence our ministers to occupy the sacred desk. But since the worlds of gold have been discovered, and the value of money depreciated, I think it becomes a subject at least of serious consideration, whether the one hundred dollars should not be increased to one hundred and twenty-five dollars, and in the same ratio for children.

You cannot purchase a horse for less than from twenty-five to fifty per cent. advance upon the prices sold at a few years since. So of clothing, and almost every other necessary article. I do not propose to elaborate, but to present for consideration.

We think the Church should feel it an imperative duty to educate the children of our ministers, and that a guarantee of the same should be made in the form of a Church regulation; to be regularly provided for in each Conference, as is now done for the superannuated—and let a committee distribute the amount collected as they may think right and proper.

We cannot and ought not to expect our ministers to continue as such, or men of fine capacity to become ministers of the M. E. Church, at such sacrifices. They sacrifice almost every thing when they lay down their various avocations to preach the gospel. They can expect nothing through life but poverty; and then, in addition thereto, to see their children raised up in the midst of those they serve, with educational advantages inferior to those even in the humbler walks of life, is too much to ask, and if asked, to be conceded. We have the ample means in the M. E. Church, South, to educate our preachers' children, and if a proper system be adopted, it can be done—than which nothing would more advance the spiritual interests and general success of our Church.

Price Williams.

Mobile, June 28, 1853.

Note by the Editor.—We commend the style of the writer in giving his name. It would be more satisfactory to the Church, and locate responsibility properly, and give significance to their suggestions, if all who write on "Our next General Conference" would subscribe their names. Face your own music, brethren.

BLOUNTSVILLE DISTRICT.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Bro. McTyeire:—I have just closed my second round on this district for the present year.

I have been enabled to reach each appointment. The preachers in the bounds of this work are all at their posts, and doing well. We have had encouraging seasons at each quarterly meeting.

We are directing special attention to a part of the work too much neglected—Sunday Schools. No part of the Alabama Conference is more needy than this mountain region. To supply them is one of our main objects. In this, however, we labor under many discouragements; one of the greatest is the scarcity of suitable books and the means to procure them. Thanks to the American Bible Society and its efficient agents, we have been enabled to get Bibles and Testaments on very reasonable terms.

It will be gratifying to the friends of piety and education to know that we are doing something. In some places we are doing well. Without speaking disparagingly of others—which I would not do—it is at the same time due the Blountsville Circuit, with its faithful pastor, (Rev. C. Strider,) to give to the Church the result of his labors in this department of his work. At the last quarterly meeting he reported on his work:—Schools, 20; superintendents, 24; teachers, 86; scholars, 714. What say you, Mr. Editor, if this mountain circuit should be the Banner Circuit in the S. S. Report at our next annual session?

June 20. L. B. McDonald.

Note.—We say it would be just like the precedents of that pastor, and worthy of imitation. [Ed.

THE TEHUANTEPEC ROAD.

In view of the fact that a grant has been confirmed to Colonel Sloo, of the right to open a carriage road across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, to be replaced by a railroad as soon as practicable, we deem the occasion a fit one to make some remarks concerning this favored route.

The mouth of the Coatzacoulcos river, on the Isthmus, lies equally distant with Vera Cruz from New Orleans, and the run there may be made by a good steamship in sixty hours. At the mouth of the Coatzacoalcos is a safe and commodious harbor, with plenty of water at all seasons for large class vessels. This river, through a distance of forty-two miles from the town of Los Almagres, has a depth of from sixteen to forty feet, which may be further deepened by the removal at a few points of the hard sand and stone which compose its bottom, thus making it navigable for the largest class of vessels. Steamers of the draught of those which now ply on the Gulf coast, may run without hindrance to Los Almagres at all seasons. Hence to Mal Paso, a distance of ninety miles, the river is always navigable for steamboats drawing three feet water. This entire distance, of one hundred and thirty-two miles of inland navigation, comprises about one half of the journey from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific, and may be accomplished in less than twenty-four hours. From Mal Paso, the head of steamboat navigation, the distance on land to the Pacific ocean, by the road now opened and used by the natives, is about seventy-five miles, and is traveled by means of mules in three days. This road passes through the towns of Boca del Monte, San Juan Guichicova, El Barrio, Chihuitan, and through the city of Tehuantepec—all situated at convenient stages—to the Bay of Ventosa, on the Pacific. A carriage road further south and more direct might be opened with little expense, which would shorten the distance to less than seventy miles. This could be traveled by stage coaches through by daylight, and on horseback or by means of mules in two days. Putting these facts together, the space of time required to go from this city to the Pacific ocean, is incomparably limited. Under the most favorable circumstances, the opening of the road would effect a shortening of time between this port and San Francisco of from six to ten days. The reduction of distance by this route against that by Panama is over seventeen hundred miles, and persons may calculate for themselves, by this estimate, the saving of time.

That this route may be opened to the California travel with little difficulty, and at a moderate expense, we are aware from the face of the country and the short distance to be overcome. The ports of Ventosa on the Pacific, and of the Coatzacoalcos on the Gulf of Mexico, being thrown open to the admission of vessels, there is no obstacle to the immediate adoption of this road for the transit of passengers between New Orleans and San Francisco and the Pacific coast. Those who have any knowledge of the country would prefer it to the long, tedious and expensive route by Nicaragua, or by the still more tedious and health-endangering passage of the Isthmus of Panama.

With vessels running from this city to the Coatzalcoalcos river, a small steamer or two, plying on Mal Paso, and ready means of embarcation from Ventosa Bay, passengers between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts would adopt this line of travel voluntarily, and this without any assistance from Col. Sloo and his Company in transporting their effects. The Isthmus would soon be alive with emigration. The land travel could be effected without other means than those which the natives are willing and ready to offer, and if need was, an enterprising emigrant to or from the land of gold, with but a small wardrobe, could set at defiance all extraneous aid, and make the trip in three days on foot.

Russia and Turkey.—The imminent prospect of war between Russia and Turkey renders any information with regard to their strength and resources of present interest and importance. It is generally supposed that Russia overpowers Turkey so immensely, both by land and water, as to render the contest wholly unequal. The following statistics go far to prove a contrary doctrine, and leave it much more than possible that the Crescent may be able to defend itself from assault for a considerable time. The Russian army consists of one hundred and one thousand six hundred and ninety-two men in the cavalry arm, including Cossacks. There are fifty-nine thousand artillerymen and pioneers, and six hundred and forty thousand infantry—embracing every description of foot troops—making a grand total of eight hundred and one thousand men.

Russia has also a naval force of some size in the Black Sea, consisting of eighteen line-of-battle ships, thirty-one frigates and smaller vessels, six steam frigates and fifteen smaller steam vessels—making in all a fleet of seventy vessels of war. She has also over two hundred gun-boats and an unknown force of sailors and marines, all of which could be made instantly available for the conquest of Constantinople.

On the contrary, Turkey has a regular army of one hundred and fifty thousand men, of whom one hundred and six thousand are foot soldiers, and about fifteen thousand artillerymen. They are well drilled and finely disciplined, and are, to some extent, officered by French and Austrians. Turkey has, moreover, a contingent force of between two and three hundred thousand men, consisting of Albanians, Wallachians, and so forth, who are ready and willing to enlist in a war against the Czar.

The Turkish navy consists of sixteen line-of-battle ships, carrying fifteen hundred guns, fourteen frigates, carrying nine hundred guns, and about thirty smaller sailing vessels. There are also eighteen steamers and a large array of floating batteries, gun-boats, etc. This naval force alone, without the aid of the French and British fleets, ought to be able to defend the entrance to the sea of Marmora. And an army like that which the Crescent has under its banners, fired with any of the old spirit of Othman, ought to make a hecatomb of these invaders who long for the pleasant land lying south of the Pruth and Danube.

Right Spirit.—At the Literary Fund Dinner in London, D'Israeli presiding, a great many Americans attended. It is said that a direct communication was made by the American Minister in London, that if any public compliment were paid, during the proceedings, to the name of Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, all American guests would immediately rise from the table and quit the room.

It is pleasant once in a while to find that our Ministers and Consuls resident abroad, and our citizens traveling in foreign lands, have sufficient courage and patriotism to take a stand in behalf of the country which raised them. We have had a great sufficiency of runaway negroes and philanthropic abolitionists to misrepresent us abroad. Just at present, we seem to have a few gentlemen in England of whom we can be justly proud. Col. T. B. Lawrence very prettily snubbed the Exeter Hall-ites at a public dinner in Boston, England, and Johnny Bull has now got another exhibition of American feeling, fully as decided and from a considerably higher source. We hope it will continue to fall, until they are neared across the water that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe and Fred. Douglass do not represent either the political, moral, literary or religious sects of America.

BE UP AND DOING.

The Treasurer of the Alabama Conference Missionary Society is out in the following brief and pointed words to its members:

Tuscaloosa, June 22, 1853.

My Dear Brethren:—Suffer the word of exhortation in regard to our missionary interests.

Two years ago we brought up the largest missionary collection ever raised by a single Conference in our connexion, and our zeal provoked very many. Last year we fell short of that amount several thousands of dollars, but the deficiency was attributed to the shortness of the Conference year, and the early period of our session.

This year the first excuse is removed, while the latter remains; and I fear that, unless we begin at once and earnestly, the next Conference will tell a tale whereat many ears will tingle.

As Methodists we preach a growing doctrine, experience, and practice. None of us, either preachers or people, can say that in any former year we have done too much; and if not, we are bound to do at least as well this year as we have ever done.

The measure of our duty is our ability, and with the ability to raise $30,000, God's demands on us cannot be satisfied with $20,000.

I feel very little concern in our being the "Banner Conference," but I feel an anxious desire that we do our whole duty to the cause of God.

O. R. Blue.

Methodism in France.—Our Brethren of the M. E. Church, North, are doing a good foreign mission work in France, by supplying aid to the French Conference. The last appropriation was $2500. There is a gradual increase of evangelical religion in France, particularly in the South; and recently this work has advanced to the very confines of Italy, and has established itself even within the confines of Italy, in the city of Nice, and this under the superintendence of the Wesleyan Methodist mission in France, aided by this appropriation. Nice is a city in which many persons from the north of Europe spend their winters, chiefly in pursuit of health. They are persons of influence and distinction, and their circumstances incline them to listen to the word of God. Mr. Cambon, an Evangelical French minister, in connexion with the French Methodist Conference, is the missionary at Nice, and is under the superintendence of Rev. Dr. Chas. Cook, President of the Conference.

The President writes to Dr. Durbin, acknowledging this timely aid. From his excellent monthly missionary abstract we learn the facts. Dr. Cook says, May 30:

"For many years we have not had such prospects of usefulness as now present themselves. The recent outpouring of the Spirit of God on our Churches in the South, the truly excellent and well instructed young men (four) who have presented themselves for our work, with your liberality, which allows us to take them on trial, are features of encouragement such as we have not had for years. They have led us to bless God and take courage.

"The revival in the Methodist societies of the South still continues its beneficent influence, and is extending further and further, affecting not only our societies with whom it commenced, but the National Reformd Church, the Free Church, and the Dissenters. Nothing like this revival has ever been seen in France. We have had one or two partial revivals in the neighborhood of Nismes. Our societies there were doubled in numbers two successive years, by such a revival many years ago; but this revival has been much more extensive and powerful, and the enlargement it has given us has been peculiarly acceptable in the present political circumstances of this country."

Don't be Lengthy.

1. In your calls of courtesy on business men and ministers of the gospel.

2. Especially regard this caution in the office of an editor. Editors have work to do, and they hate most emphatically to have men call to read their exchanges, and lay around and talk about nothing.

3. Regard it also in that interesting story you are fond of telling. Amplification dilutes, and the dish is injured because the cook is so long over it.

4. Don't make that editorial article too long. Too many a column is frightful, even of your good thoughts. That good deal which you wish to say, will be more acceptable in short articles, and perhaps with different titles.

5. Look out, too, about that long sermon. Can't you squeeze out some of the superfluities, and by condensation give much matter in a smaller compass? "No, I don't think such a sermon as mine can be so used." Well, then, add more precious thoughts, and make two of it. Your own good opinion of it will be elongated by such a process.

6. Don't be long about paying that debt. Make the creditor's eye glisten by your promptness. Perhaps he has showered some inverted blessings upon you already for your delay. Prevent another drop.

7. Don't be so long in getting to the house of God. Better wait there than be waited for. People who are lengthy in the matter of their progress to the sanctuary, are in danger of provoking short words about them, by those who are disturbed by their sluggishness.

8. Do not be long about any thing requiring promptness and dispatch. Come boldly and decidedly up to every requisition of duty.

The lingerer and loiterer accomplishes but little, painfully dragging out a comparatively useless life. [Puritan Recorder.

Mr. Weed, of the Albany Evening Journal, denies the rumor that he is going to Rome to embrace the Cathlic faith.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Rev. B. A. Houghton

Bro. McTyeire:—It becomes my painful duty to announce the death of the Rev. B. A. Houghton, late of the Mississippi Conference.

Bro. Houghton died in my house at this place yesterday, 21st inst., of nervous debility. He had been ill nearly 12 months—arrived here on the 10th inst., in search of health, but was in a sinking condition when he arrived, from which he never recovered.

He died in his 51st year—had been a laborious and useful minister in the M. E. Church some 30 years, some 25 of which were spent in the regular itinerant work in the Alabama and Mississippi Conferences.

A better man than Benjamin A. Houghton rarely if ever lived or died in any age or country. In all the relations of life he is extensively known to have been a most admirable man: an able, faithful and useful pastor and minister; a most circumspect and exemplary Christian, unusually generous, kind and good to his neighbors; a model husband, fond father, and excellent master.

Bro. Houghton died, like he lived, in full sight of Heaven. His mental faculties were unclouded and vigorous to the last. About one hour and twenty minutes before he breathed his last the writer of this notice desired an expression from him in regard to his preparation for his rapidly approaching change. He calmly inquired what time in the afternoon it was. On being told it was half-past two, he remarked he could not live one hour—hoped he should not be compelled to labor so hard for his breath that took. Then turning his eyes to his wife and children, he dwelt affectingly upon the subject of the tender and sacred ties severed by death; insisted that good was to come out of it to them all; declared he had not once murmured during his protracted illness, and that he should not then do so. He dwelt with great force and beauty upon the plan of salvation by Christ. "I am a sinner saved by grace—grace that is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by Christ." Said he, "When I look within I see nothing to condemn or disapprove. Thanks to his name, my cleansing from guilt and sin is God's own work, and it is a perfect work;" declared "he had not a single doubt or fear in regard to his future happiness;" that he had "a delightful and cheering testimony within that all was well, but I labor so hard for breath it somewhat embarrasses the joyous realization of my glorious triumph."

His voice then sinking to a whisper, distinctly articulated, "I soon shall be done with temptation and sorrow." As he sank in death, we sang one or two appropriate hymns, during which a sweet smile covered his face and rested on his clay-cold features.

Thus did Benjamin A. Houghton breathe his last on earth and go to his reward in Heaven, leaving a fond and deeply afflicted wife and three children, a niece and nephew (members of his family,) together with a large circle of acquaintances, to lament his loss.

E. R. Ports.

Ocean Springs, June 22, 1852.

Lights of the World.

A distinguished minister, writing from the South to the Christian Observer, in connection with sketching a powerful revival recently experienced, thus exclaims with many others:

"O, how difficult it is to keep Christians up to the mark! to live above the world whilst in the world, and thus be the lights of the world. And after a little effort, they relapse, and feel comparatively satisfied that a few have been hopefully converted to God. Many think that the outpouring of the Spirit is 'periodical,' and therefore at other times not much is to be done; whereas the fallow ground is to be broken up, and Christians are to grow, and this all the time; yes, all the time. But O! this downward bending. 'Prone to wander! Lord I feel it!' Lord make us feel it, and correct this dreadful evil, that the Church may stand erect before the world, and be truly a light in the world."

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

"NEEDLESSLY POSTPONING BAPTISM."

Mr. Editor:—In the Advocate of June 11 there is an article under the above caption, over the signature of "Union," dated at "Daleville, Miss., May 15, 1853." I know of but one Daleville in Mississippi, and it is in the bounds of the De Kalb Circuit, Alabama Conference. If the "writer" hails from this quarter, he has misrepresented me.

After alleging that, as far as his observation goes, it is the "general practice" of preachers "in charge," when they call up "probationers" to be received into full "connection," if any of them have not been baptized, to "postpone" it "until" their "next appointment," the "writer" proceeds: "My feelings were peculiarly awakened upon this subject to-day, on seeing a mother received and her daughter turned off to wait one month for baptism." And again: "For what cause, then, did our brother postpone in the case of our sister to-day?" "There was a pitcher of water upon the stand, and what more could he need?" "If he had been an immerser the delay might have been necessary, but he was not."

I postponed the young lady's baptism because she desired baptism by immersion, and the Discipline requires me to allow candidates the right of choice in the mode of baptism, and to administer the ordinance as they desire. And I had an appointment more than four miles from there the same evening, and I had not time to immerse her and meet my appointment; for that "pitcher of water" was not quite large enough to immerse her in. "He" says I am "not" an "immerser." Well, I had immersed six persons before, that day, and I have immersed that young lady since.

I have not made this explanation for "Union," but for the readers of the Advocate, that they may know that I did not "needlessly" "postpone" baptism in the above case.

C. N. McLeod.

De Kalb, Miss., June 22, 1853.

The Pope's Bull.—This name, which is now applied exclusively to instruments issuing out of the Roman Chancery, is derived from the seals which were appended to them, being formerly of gold bullion. Bulls were not originally confined to Popes alone, but were also issued by Emperors, Princes, Bishops, and great men, who, till the thirteenth century, sometimes affixed seals of metal, as well as of wax, to edicts, charters, and other instruments, though they were equally called Bulls, whether they were sealed with one or the other. The Popes continue to the present day to affix metal or lead seals to their bulls, and only when they wish to bestow any peculiar marks of grace and favor on sovereigns or princes are seals of bullion or gold affixed. The bull of Pope Clement VII., conferring the title of Defender of the Faith on Henry VIII., had a seal of gold affixed to it. Bulls containing matter of grace and favor, were suspended by strings of red and yellow silk; but denunciatory and punitive bulls were hung by hempen cords.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Holmes county, Miss., June 11, in the 24th year of her age, Mrs. MARY ELLEN MATCHET, in pure and certain hope of eternal life.

I was with her the last two days of her illness. At my first interview I found her as calm as a summer's evening. She said she loved the Saviour, and she felt that he loved her; but she did not feel so happy as she had often and as she would wish to feel. She continued for a few hours perfectly calm and conscious of her condition, when Heaven seemed to open to her view; at which time she gave way to her feelings, and shouted aloud GLORY! GLORY! GLORY! And feeling the near approach of death, she bade farewell to her weeping friends, and exhorted them to meet her in Heaven. She called her children to her, kissed them, and bade them farewell. Singing was introduced—"Oh, sing to me of heaven when I am called to die." She joined in this delightful song, and sung it in perfect with a voice loud and clear. She had no sting. JOHN T. DEW.

DIED—On the 24th instant, MARTHA ELIZABETH, daughter of Rev. Middleton Otey and Mary R. his wife, aged 1 year, 2 months and 17 days.

There is but one book that tells of a world where there is neither sorrow nor crying—"neither shall there be any more pain." And the reason is, "there shall be no more death." And that world this lovely infant has gone.

THOMAS NIXON.

Yazoo, Miss., June 27, 1853.

The Nashville Advocate is requested to copy. Rev. Ford to copy, as the most of his relatives live in Tennessee.

DIED—In Holmes county, Miss., May 3, WILLIAM HARRINGTON, a native of Edgefield District, South Carolina.

He had just completed the 69th year of his age. He emigrated to Amite county in this state in the year A. D. 1824. Before manhood he became an humble but devoted member, and a zealous member of the M. E. Church, and so continued to his death, having a period of over fifty years.

The leading object of this man's life seems to have been to fit himself for Heaven. The Bible was emphatically his book—the man of his counsel and the guide of his life; in paying its sacred pages and meditating on its precepts, he habitually spent some hours each day, and the work of each day was begun and finished with the reading of the Scriptures in the midst of his family, singing and prayer.

His religion, though serious, was not of the sad and gloomy kind; and notwithstanding he was not exempt from disease for more than twenty years prior to his death, he maintained a cheerfulness.

In his dealings with men he was scrupulously honest. No man ever seemed to suspect him of seeking advantage over a fellow. He rightly thought all religious profession vain, when made by one who disregards the rights of others. No one not perfectly honest could, in his opinion, be a Christian. In his friendships he was sincere, slow to believe evil of any one who had gained his confidence. His temper was quick and his passions strong, though Christian grace had brought them under control. In his tastes he was plain, and had a contempt of all display. In his feelings he was kind and benevolent, though cautious not to waste charities on unworthy objects. In his family he was kind, without being indulgent. To his slaves he was uniformly humane. He seemed to regard them as a people for whose welfare he was responsible; and patience in their moral and religious culture he took much interest.

Of great industry and decision of character, and possessed of sound mind, he was uniformly prosperous in life. His wife, after much suffering, died some fifteen months before. Though he bore her loss with Christian fortitude, he seemed to feel his mission on earth was then nearly finished.

The preacher in charge of the circuit lived with him a short time before his death, and told him he was clear. "Yes," he at once replied, "my way is clear." His eldest son came to him that we would have prayers once more. This was cheering news, and seemed to revive him for a moment, and to bring him back as it were to earth again. As the minister prayed that God would conduct the weary pilgrim through the dark valley and shadow of death, to that blessed land, where the inhabitant shall not say, "I am sick," the response was frequent from the couch of the dying saint. When it was told him by one of his sons, a physician, that he could not live more than ten hours, he prayed that the time might be shorter; for he longed to depart and be with Christ.

The last word he was heard to utter, and that in a low whisper, was—"I am safe." He never up to that moment could he so have said. Till then he was in an enemy's land. Being called to fight or fall; but now the last enemy is conquered. When he could no longer speak, he would feebly clasp his hands, smile and look upwards; and this he continued to do while he had strength.

Thus departed one of the best of men, full of years, riches and honors. A FRIEND.

DEATH OF GENERAL MELENDEZ.—General Don Gregorio Melendez, the warlike chief of the Tehuantepec Indians on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, is dead. The Eco del Comercio, of Vera Cruz, states that the Governor of Oaxaca announced his funeral—that there was something very mysterious in his death, and that the Governor would busy himself to ascertain the cause of it.

This Melendez has for a long time been the head of a powerful party on the Isthmus, and by force of arms, resisted the power of Mexico for the last ten or twelve years. Some years ago the Mexican Government laid a protection on the manufacture of salt in the State of Oaxaca, whereupon Melendez put himself at the head of the Juichetece Indians, continued to make and convey salt into the interior of the republic, and resisted successfully the military force sent there to stop him. Finding that he was too strong for the weak forces sent against him, he established a small republic on his own hook, kept an army of several thousand men constantly under arms, refused to pay duties to Mexico, and from the advantages of his position in the gorges and defiles of the Cordilleras, defied all attempts on the part of the Government to exercise jurisdiction in that quarter. In 1851 he made a descent on the City of Tehuantepec, and, after routing the garrison, burned everything that was combustible and retired. He showed great friendship for the Americans who were engaged in the scientific survey of the Isthmus, and expressed a strong desire for annexation to the United States. He was a true republican.

COMMENCEMENT PROGRAMME.

The following has been handed us, showing the order of exercises and the young gentlemen's names who recently graduated at La Grange College:

1. LATIN SALUTATORY—W. Hamilton, Alabama.
2. THE ALPHABET—A. S. Fletcher, (Representative of the Lafayette Society,) Alabama.
3. THE SPIRIT OF PROGRESSION—N. Fletcher, Alabama.
4. MATERIALS FOR POETRY IN AMERICA—D. E. Green, Alabama.
5. IT IS A MYSTERY; WHY CAN I WITHHOLD IT?—J. M. Patten, Alabama.
6. THE WORLD'S FAIR—W. L. Lea, Tennessee.
7. SOUTHERN RIGHTS—Samuel P. Hand, Alabama.
8. GENIUS WILL BE ADMIRED THOUGH IN RUINS—W. E. Sykes, Mississippi.
9. DICEAGYNE—W. R. Hardy, Georgia.
10. MIDDLE AGES—N. H. Scruggs, Alabama.
11. WHITEWASHING—Joseph B. McDonald, Alabama.
12. DESTINY OF OUR REPUBLICS—L. W. Vaughan, Tennessee.
13. SOURCES OF INTEREST CONNECTED WITH THE STUDY OF HISTORY—G. A. Shaeffer, Alabama.
14. CUBA, ITS ANNEXATION AND DESTINY—D. D. Saunders, Alabama.
15. ———, J. S. Belton, Mississippi.
16. VALEDICTORY—W. L. Baker, Alabama.

NOTICE.

Camp-meetings, Rankin Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

The present Conference year with us being shorter than usual, I have been compelled, in advance of our next Quarterly Conference, to appoint the times for all extra meetings on the Circuit during the year, so as to avoid conflictions.

The time of the Camp-meeting at Sand Hill has been fixed to embrace the third Sunday in September, and that at Shiloh to embrace the second Sunday in October. Ministering brethren are cordially and earnestly invited to attend. JAS. MACLENAN, P. C.

Rankin Circuit, June 1, 1853.

NOTICES.

Our Camp-meeting on the Starkville Circuit, Mississippi Conference, Sharon District, will commence on Thursday, 11th of August next, four miles southwest of Starkville. Bishop Paine, and Bro. Ilyre, of Aberdeen, and Bro. Dorman, of Columbus, will be with us. Ministers and people everywhere are cordially invited.

J. M. JONES, P. C.
D. M. WIGGINS, P. E.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.

Third Quarterly Meetings — 1853.

New Orleans Circuit—Sacrament, July 10th, at Algiers; Quarterly Conference, July 11th, 5½ o'clock, P. M., at Carrollton.

Morgan Street—Quarterly Conference, July 15th; Love Feast, July 18th.

German Missions, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4—Quarterly Conference, at Dryades street, August 5th; Sacrament, Dryades street, July 31st, and Love Feast, 6½ o'clock, P. M.

McGehee Charge—Quarterly Conference, August 21; Love Feast, August 28th.

Wesley, Soule, and Hinson Chapels—Quarterly Conference August 24th; Love Feast, August 29th, at 3½ o'clock, P. M., Wesley Chapel.

Elijah Steele Chapel—Quarterly Conference, August 25th; Love Feast, August 29th.

Plaquemine and Point Coupee—At Plaquemine, August 13th and 14th.

Baton Rouge—August 20th and 21st.

Donaldsonville, Pierson's Mission and Napoleonville, Lafourche Mission—At Napoleonville, September 3d and 4th.

Houma and Baton Rouge Mission—At Tigerville, September 10th and 11th.

Thibodeaux—September 17th and 18th.

3y2 2t J. C. KEENER, P. E.

COMMENCEMENT. CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The Examination of the Students of this College will begin July 20th

On the Sabbath following the Annual Sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Speer, of Natchez.

Monday, 25th, the Joint Board will meet.

Tuesday, 26th, the Anniversaries of the Literary Societies will be celebrated

Wednesday will be Commencement Day.

The friends of Education are requested to be present.

R. H. RIVERS

Jackson La., June 13, 1853

Third Round of Quarterly Meetings on Eufaula District, Ala. Con.

ENON	June 25
EUFAULA STATION	July 2 and 3
CLAYTON CIRCUIT, Clayton	July 16 and 17
MARIANA STATION	July 23 and 24
APALACHICOLA	July 30 and 31
JACKSON CIRCUIT, at McNeeley's	August 6 and 7
BARBOUR CIRCUIT, Five Points	August 13 and 14
GLENVILLE CIRCUIT, Glenville	August 20 and 21
ABBEVILLE CIRCUIT, Abbeville	Sept. 3 and 4
WOODVILLE, Piney Grove	Sept. 10 and 11

The brethren will observe some changes in the time of holding Quarterly Meetings, but they are unavoidable.

je25 2t5p S. F. PILLEY, P. E.

La GRANGE COLLEGE.

FALL SESSION.

The next Session of this College will begin July 13th.

FACULTY.

Rev. JAMES W. HARDY, M. A., President, and Professor of Experimental Science

Rev. SMITH W. MOORE, M. A., Vice President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.

OSCAR F. CASEY, M. A., Professor of Ancient Languages.

SEPTIMUS P. RICE, M. A., Professor of Pure Mathematics, and Rector of Grammar School.

Rev. R. H. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Mixed Mathematics.

THOS. H. SMITH, B. A., Principal of Grammar School.

SCHOOL EXPENSES.

Tuition	$25 00 Per Session.
Room rent and servant's hire	3 00 " "
Board and washing	50 00 " "

The College dues must be paid invariably in advance.

je25 4t2p JAMES W. HARDY.

La Grange, Ala., June 13, 1853.

JM. HENDERSON, ALEX. HENDERSON.

S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,

(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson)

WHOLESALE GROCERS,

No. 66 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La.

3y2 1y

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates

One Square first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

The New Bedford Mercury says: "The Smithsonite mightily pleased because a poet of the name Alexander) has made a promising debut in England. They talk of a mass family meeting, about are at a loss for a place big enough to hold it in."

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The report of this Institution for the week ending Saturday June 25 shows: Admitted, 265; discharged, 183; killed, 26; remaining, 648

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Interments in the City of New Orleans for the week ending June 25, 1853:

Apoplexy	3	Fever, Scarlet	4
Anchylosis	1	Fever, Yellow	19
Abscess of Liver	1	Fracture of Leg	1
Bronchitis	2	Gastro-Enteritis	1
Brain, Congestion of	3	Gastritis	2
Consumption	16	Gangrene of Throat	1
Convulsions	8	Hydrocephalus	9
Cholera	3	Hepatitis	1
Croup	1	Hemorrhage	1
Cramps	1	Hooping cough	1
Colic, Bilious	1	Liver, Cirrhosis	1
Delirium Tremens	4	Lungs, Congestion of	2
Dentition	2	Measles	1
Debility	9	Marasmus	1
Diarrhœa Acute	8	Meningitis	2
Diarrhœa Chronic	2	Miscarriage	1
Dysentery	3	Parturition	1
Drowned	3	Paralysis	1
Dropsy	2	Poisoning	1
Enteritis, Acute	1	Pneumonia	2
Enteritis, Chronic	1	Sun Stroke	1
Epilepsy	1	Scrofula	1
Fever Brain	1	Small Pox	2
Fever, Bilious	4	Tetanus	2
Fever, Typhoid	3	Trismus Nascentium	1
Fever Typhus	1	Tuberculosis	1
Fever, Congestive	2	Uncertain	3
Fever Irritative	1	Unknown	1
Fever, Pernicious	3	Wound	1
Fever, Puerperal	1
Total			167

Of these, 58 were under ten years of age, and 46 colored.

A. HARRIS, Reg. B. H.

A RUM SELL.—Yesterday, while one of those tall gaunt, white-haired Hoosiers, who grin tall from looking over the hills to see the sun rise was saunteringly along Chartres street, admiring what was to be admired, and gazing at every thing and anything, he was victimized after a fashion that is one of the newest. Having occasion to pull out his "pusse" to get change for a handfull of pea-nuts for which he had negotiated, he was observed by a pair of sharpers, who immediately "spotted" him as a goose good for plucking. Their plan was soon laid, and they immediately proceeded to put it in execution. Pretending to be strangers to each other, and to be on their separate affairs, they both walked after the Hoosier and passed him, one going at a rapid rate, and some steps in advance of his contederate. The foremost one, when about a dozen paces ahead of the other—the Hoosier being behind both—dropped a large and well-filled pocket-book. Rogue number two picked it up and shouted to rogue number one that he had dropped something. Rogue number one immediately wheeled around, and with great apparent agitation returned to receive his rescued treasure. He was overpowered with joy, and had not words to express his profound gratitude to the gentleman (?) who had found, and so generously returned his lost pocket-book. He was ready and anxious to make any return—to give any amount in reason—as the reward so richly merited. This crisis of matters interested the Hoosier, and he made one of the party—went up to listen. Rogue number one then pulled out from a roll of bank notes a $50 bill, and tendered it to rogue number two. Number two would not accept it. He wouldn't take a red cent—but rogue number one insisted that he should take something—to the extent of a ten or so at least.

At last, the modesty of number two was overcome, and he consented to take $10. Rogue number one had not less than a $50 bill, and rogue number two had not change for that amount. He was poor—very poor—and so weak in the luck that he could not leave round change for fifty dollars if he had been going to die. In this dilemma, "Hoosier" was called to the rescue. He had the change, and his sympathies were aroused. Besides, he could not bear to see honesty go unrewarded. So he forked out fifty dollars in good, honest gold pieces. Forty dollars he handed to rogue number one, ten dollars to rogue number two and put the fifty dollar bill in his pocket. The three parted on mutual good terms—numbers one and two to meet around the corner and divide on more equal terms, and the "Hoosier" to travel homeward to his hotel, there to discover that his $50 bill was—counterfeit!

HOW TO PROSPER IN BUSINESS.—In the first place make up your mind to accomplish whatever you undertake; decide upon some particular employment and persevere in it. All difficulties are overcome by diligence and assiduity.

"Be not afraid to work with your own hands, and diligently, too. "A cat in gloves catches no mice." "He who remains in the mill, grinds, not he who goes and comes."

Attend to your own business; never trust to another. "A put that belongs to many is ill-stirred and worse boiled."

Be frugal. "That which will not make a pot will make a pot-ful." "Save the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves."

"Be abstemious. "Who dainties love shall beggars prove."

Rise early. "The sleeping fox catches no poultry." "Plow deep while sluggards sleep, and you will have corn to sell and keep."

Treat every one with respect and civility. "Everything is gained, and nothing lost, by courtesy." "Good manners insure success."

Never anticipate wealth from any other source than labor: especially, never place dependence upon becoming the possessor of an inheritance. "He who waits for dead men's shoes may have to go for a long time barefoot." "He who runs after a shadow has a weary-some race."

Above all things never despair. "God is where he was." "He helps those who truly trust in him."

The New York Tribune, of the 18th instant, says:

One murderer was executed in this city yesterday, another is to die next Friday; eight or ten are in our City Prison awaiting trial on the same charge; one has been convicted, but hopes for a new trial; and still another is added to the list this morning. A Mrs. Sally, an Irish woman, recently residing at No. 232 Mulberry street, died yesterday, at the Hospital, from (as the jury say) the effects of maltreatment by her husband. Both husband and wife were the degraded slaves of rum, and both were frequently drunk. Already there have been six executions in this city within a year, and Neary (hang) will be the seventh. Fitzgerald shot his wife. Grunzig poisoned his wife. Neary beat his wife's head to pieces. Clark killed a policeman, and and Howlett killed a watchman, and Stokey killed a negro. This is a fearful catalogue, and it grows rank, and tall and strong, and branches out upon every side, for its reels are coiled in the distillery and watered by the rum glass.

MINISTER TO CHINA.—The Washington Union of yesterday officially announces that the Hon. R. J. Walker has accepted the appointment of Minister to China. Referring to the present revolutionary movement in China, the Union says:

Should this revolution be accomplished, it will be the most important event of this century, and may be fraught with incalculable benefits to our country and to the world. It is generally believed that the new dynasty will be more favorable than its predecessor to foreign trade and intercourse; and our increased commerce from the Atlantic, as well as from Oregon and California on the Pacific, place this country in a position for the development of an immense trade with China and the neighboring States. The United States and China are both great powers fronting upon the Pacific, and their products and manufactures are admirably calculated for an immense and largely beneficial trade and intercourse. We are the only great nation that consumes ten, the staple product of China, free of duty; and our cotton and cotton manufactures, and various other articles, ought to be freely received in exchange.

The present crisis has induced the President to tender this mission to the Hon. Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, late Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, accompanied by all the necessary powers and authority to accomplish the great object of this important trust; and Mr. Walker, we understand, has accepted the mission. It is well known that the last Congress placed the mission to China upon the highest grade known to our diplomacy. Since this action of Congress, new events have given to the mission a still more commanding character. There is at present no diplomatic station upon which the public eye, not only of our country, but of all civilized nations, will be more intently fixed. To this signal interest and importance of the mission above, we presume, it is owing that Mr. Walker, whose political antecedents so eminently fit him for the work before him, has abandoned his well known preference for private life, and undertaken this high and difficult diplomatic service.

When men are fit, truly remarks the New York Dutchman, for nothing else, they commonly look to the interests of their country. Out of every hundred office-holders in the country, you will not find over three per cent. who could make a living, even if they owned the fee simple of a gold mine. Men will dontch their fitness to open a broker's shop, peddle clams, or act as switch tender to a railroad; but who ever saw an individual who distrusted his ability to take charge of a custom-house, or fill a foreign embassy. We pause for a response.

"Fellow-citizens," says the New York Sunday Times, and as the remarks are most peculiarly appropriate at our present writing, we cordially adopt them—"Fellow-citizens—as you sprawl on your sofa this pleasant forenoon, or make an inverted Z of yourself by propping your chair back against the wall, you probably think it must be easy to write what you find it easy to read. Did you ever plow, hoe corn, or plant cabbages? We have been engaged in all these rural exercises, and have also swung the scythe and cradle under the hot sun of the South; and we solemnly declare that the physical labors aforesaid are mere recreations in comparison with the exhausting toil of writing for the press in a close office with a south-western aspect, when the thermometer is in the neighborhood of the nineties. The vigorous ideas that should find their way by electric telegraph from the brain to the pen, bumify on the road and ooze out in big globules of perspiration, while the more delicate fancies evaporate by the 'insensible' process. 'Excuse, therefore, the shortcomings of genius under the enfeebling influence of the summer solstice; for be assured that a vertical sun, however it may dulcify and mature cherries, plums, and other fruital 'plumidudes,' is by no means favorable to the development of intellectual products."

YOUNG AMERICA A LITERARY LION.—Putnam, at the close of the first volume of his magazine, states that he has received, during the six months of its publication, four hundred and eighty nine original articles for publication, the greater portion from writers who were previously unknown to him. All this mass of MS. was carefully read, and a large number of the celebrated articles which appeared in the magazine, and which have been attributed to the most eminent authors of the age, were produced by obscure writers. The system adopted by Putnam of refusing to publish the names of authors with their articles, works so well that it will be continued. Each article has to stand on its own merits, which fact gives young men a fair field before the public.

Mr. Putnam states that, although the names of many men of lofty reputation were given as contributors and sustainers of his enterprise, he refused from the first upon Young America, whose name did not appear on the cover. This is quite complimentary to the said, youthful gentleman, whose disposition has been generally supposed to incline to belligerent deeds other than belles-lettres. May he always deserve the flattering confidence reposed in him, and add to his literary reputation until it fills the earth. [Cin. Commercial.

Eight persons, accused of being principals or accessories in the riotous proceedings at Quebec, have been arrested, and are awaiting examinations by the Magistrates.

Louisiana Interior.

The Mindea Herald of the 18th says that the crops in that vicinity were becoming to be in good order and assuming a promising aspect. The health of the country was generally good.

The Baton Rouge Advocate of the 23d inst. says:

"The Swamp Land Commissioners, Messrs. R. Grant, S. Van Winkle, and J. W. Butler, closed the labors of their first session at the Capitol on yesterday, to meet again on the first Monday in August next. A great amount of preliminary business was transacted by the Board with reference to its organization and the important work confided to its charge under the act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands of the State. The Commissioners before adjourning appointed Mr. Vincent Kirkland, of West Baton Rouge, as Engineer for the Second, and Mr. W. H. Peck, of Madison parish, as Engineer for the Third Swamp Land District. The appointment for the First District will be made in a few days."

Two negroes were instantly killed by lightning, a few days ago, near Clinton, La. One of them belonged to John D. Lee, and the other to S. Hatcher.

They are suffering greatly in the vicinity of Bayou Sara for the want of rain. With the single exception of a little shower, they have had no rain for six weeks. The corn and cotton crops were suffering on account of the drouth.

The Farmerville Enquirer of the 17th instant says:

"The weather for the last two weeks has been warm and dry, owing to the continued wet weather previous. Corn crops begin to suffer for the want of rain, cotton looks like it might make a fair yield if we should have a favorable fall."

From Mexico.

By the arrival of the steamship Texas, on Saturday evening, we have received files of papers from Vera Cruz to the 22d, and dates from the City to the 18th. The news is unimportant:

The difficulties between the States of Chiapas and Oajaca are not yet settled.

The old law and duty of Alcabala has been re-established as it existed in 1846.

During the month of May, the mint at Guanajuato coined in silver $452,000, in dollars, $26,000 halves, $28,000 in quarters, and $9,000 in eighths.

The Supreme Government has confirmed Don Fernando Nicholas Maldona as Governor of Chiapas.

Santa Anna's birthday, the 10th of June, was celebrated with great pomp; salutes were fired, the troops paraded, and the President received the diplomatic corps.

The newly appointed judges of the Supreme Court and Senor Aguilar, the new Secretary of Government, took the oath of office on the 15th instant.

It is stated that the Indians are committing great ravages in Coahuila. Three bands of them traverse the State in all directions without the slightest opposition.

The delivery of arms by the citizens had been suspended in the State of Durango, in order that they might be able to defend themselves against the Indians.

A riot occurred on the 9th in Marfil, State of Quadalajara, caused by drunkenness, but was of short duration, and its only results the death of a few of the rioters.

The Diario Oficial announces that advices have been received from the Governor of Sinaloa, and also from the Governor of Guadalajara, stating that the expedition of Count Boolbon against Sonora had been dissolved in California.

Active measures were being taken to strengthen the Government of Yucatan against the Indians there. The artillery had been ordered up from Tabasco, and the collector of Vera Cruz was ordered to remit to the Commissary in Yucatan the sum of $10,000 in cash.

Importation of arms has been prohibited. The official paper in Vera Cruz announces that persons of good repute, and whom the Government believes will make good use of their arms, can apply for the return of those which have been taken from them.

WEST POINT.—The annual examinations at this institution have been concluded. The entire First-Class passed the examination and received their diplomas. The following are their names and the order in which they graduated:

General Merit Roll of First Class—June, 1853.—1. Jas. B. McPherson, O. 2. William P. Craighill, Va. 3. Joshua W. Sill, O. 4. William R. Boggs, Ga. 5. F. J. Shunk, at large. 6. William S. Smith, O. 7. John M. Schofield, Ill. 8. Matthew M. Blunt, N. Y. 9. Thomas Hight, Ia. 10. Geo. R. Bissell, Me. 11. Thos. M. Vincent, O. 12. H. C. Symonds, Mass. 13. John S. Bowen, Ga. 14. George Bell, Md. 15. James D. Burns, Jr., Ill. 16. William R. Terrill, Va. 17. Lewis H. Peleuze, Pa. 18. Owen F. Solomon, Ga. 19. Lieut. L. Livingston, N. Y. 20. Richard C. Duryea, N. Y. 21. J. G. Chandler, Mass. 22. Robert O. Tyler, Conn. 23. W. Jenkins, at large. 24. N. B. Sweitzer, Pa. 25. James L. White, Fla. 26. Benj. Allston, S. C. 27. B. F. Chamberlain, N. Y. 28. J. H. Edson, at large. 29. Thos. Wilson, at large. 30. Wm. H. Lowe, Iowa. 31. J. R. Chumbliss, Jr., Va. 32. Wm. McE. Dye, O. 33. H. H. Davidson, Tenn. 34. Philip H. Sheridan, O. 35. William A. Weld, Me. 36. John L. Grattan, N. H. 37. Elmer Otis, O. 38. Alfred E. Latimer, S. C. 39. Benj. F. Smith, N. J. 40. Silas P. Diggins, Ala. 41. Henry H. Walker, Va. 42. Edmund C. Jones, Ia. 43. Alex Chambers, N. Y. 44 John B. Hood, Ky. 45. Jas. A. Smith, at large. 46. Robert F. Hunter, O. 47. Thos M Jones, Va. 48. A. H. Plummer, Pa. 49. J. B Molntyre, Texas. 50. Lucius L. Rich, Mo. 51. Reuben R. Ross, Mo. 52. William Craig, Ia.

MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS BY THE ADMINISTRATION.—It is said the following number of appointments have been made by the President since the 4th of March:

Foreign Ministers, 10; Charge d'Affairs, 10; Consuls, 7; Commissioner to Sandwich Islands, 1; Treasurers, 21; Registers, 67; Receivers, 66; District Attorneys, 84; Marshals, 30; Collectors, 66; Surveyors, 58; Naval Officers, 11; Appraisers, 20; Deputy Postmasters, 207; Surveyors General, 22; Pension Agents, 23; Indian Agents, 30—grand total, 710, exclusive of the numerous appointments by the heads of the several departments.

A SINGULAR FISH.—Dr. T. Duan English, formerly of Baltimore, who is engaged in making geological explorations for some New York capitalists, in Western Virginia, while riding past a little shallow pond, some weeks since, observed a small fish, of the kind there call d black perch or red-eye (Percoides,) whose singular movements attracted his attention. He had no difficulty in taking it with his hands, and found it to be blind, as he at first supposed, but from a peculiar cause. The iris and pupil of each eye were hidden, but the entire visual globe was filled with the usual humor, in which was coiled away a small worm. The parasite seemed at home, in its habitation, occasionally moving, though its sphere of action was circumscribed. The fish was placed in alcohol, and will be sent, along with other specimens, to the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington.

The Ohio Organ has the following account of the origin of the name "Ann Arbor," in a letter from that flourishing Michigan city:

"Thirty years ago, two travelers, with their wives and children, stopped on the spot where Ann Arbor now stands, and concluded to remain there for the night. The weather was hot and sultry; angry clouds swept along the sky and threatened rain, sudden, severe. Not a house was visible; and in this emergency, the two men were compelled to do something to protect their families from the peltings of the pitiless storm. Accordingly they erected a frail structure with the limbs of trees, over the top of which they spread a few pieces of white canvas, thus making a handsome little arbor; and as their good wives were both called Ann, their husbands appropriately named their little retreat Ann Arbor. Thirty years have since rolled by, and the city of Ann Arbor now marks the spot where the wearied travelers sought safety and repose."

A case was recently tried in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, in which Judge Smyser ruled that an attempt to sign a will—death occurring to prevent the signing it—is sufficient to sustain the will. In this case the decedent had commenced his name by writing the letter P, when he sunk back exhausted, and died in ten minutes.

It is estimated that during the last twelve months there have been imported into New York, from England and colonies, 100,000 tons of bituminous coal, which, at $10 a ton, would amount to $1,000,000.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Minister to England—Fishery Question.

WASHINGTON, June 29, 3:50 P. M.

It is said here that Mr. Buchanan objects to receiving instructions from Secretary Marcy, and that he will probably decline the mission to England.

It is believed now that the Fishery question will be settled in Washington.

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA.

Cancels Improving—Chinese Rebellion—Success of Insurgents.

NEW YORK, June 30, 9 A. M.

The Cunard steamer Africa has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool of the 18th inst., three days later than the accounts brought by the Baltic. The following is a summary of her commercial accounts:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, June 18.

Cotton has been in good request since the departure of the Niagara, from the trade, for speculation and for export, and the sales of the week ending last evening embrace 65,000 bales (including 20,000 bales have been taken for speculation, and 6,000 for export, leaving about 33,000 bales for the trade.

Prices have been firm during the greater part of the week, but without any quotable change, and the official quotations remain as follows:

Fair Orleans, 5¾; Middling Orleans, 5; Fair Uplands, 5¾; and Middling Uplands, 5¼ per pound.

The Chinese Rebellion—Capture of Nankin—Shanghai Deserted.

The report of the capture of Nankin by the insurgents has been fully confirmed. The inhabitants of Shanghai and Chang Chá had deserted those cities, in the apprehension of an attack on the part of the insurgents.

LATER FROM NEW MEXICO.—We learn from the San Antonio Ledger that the Santa Fe mail arrived there on the 9th instant, but brought no news from Santa Fe. The Ledger says:

We learn from Rife, the mail conductor, that Trias has taken possession of the Mesilla Territory, which commences about thirty five miles above El Paso, on the Rio Grande. He swears that he will not give it up without a fight, although he affirms that the Americans will flagellate him in the event of a collision. The bad feeling which lately existed between the Americans and Mexicans on this side, and the Mexicans on the other, has entirely subsided, as much so, that on the 1st or 2d ult., a barbacue was given in El Paso, and a general invitation was extended to the citizens of McGoffinsville and Franklin, and the country adjacent. Capt. Skillman was one of the honored guests.

Trias issued an order that an insult to any American would be followed by instant death. Trias is described as a pleasant fellow, of strongly marked Mexican features, with little force of character or mental calibre. He occasionally crosses the river, and becomes decidedly mellow from the squadliente of the McGoffinsvillites. The people on this side are decidedly indifferent about the Mesilla affair.

Capt. Rife assures us that the roads were never better, or the water and grass more abundant. On his upper trip, while encamped at Live Oak Creek, seven miles this side the Pecos, he was visited by a body of twenty-three Lipan warriors, with their chief Guapo. They constituted but a relay of a considerable body encamped some miles distant. They were very friendly. Both on the upward and downward trip the train met innumerable Indian signs, including smoke. It will be recollected that smoke can be described on the prairie for twelve or thirteen miles.

Big Turtle, a chief of the Wyandot tribe of Indians, who removed from Ohio to the Indian territory, gives the following account of the present condition of his people:

Our improvements, when appraised, amounted to upwards of $127,000, which was paid us in the autumn of 1845. In the spring of 1850, our chiefs retroceded the granted tract to the Government, and $100,000 of the proceeds was invested in five per cent Government stock—making our present annuity $22,000. We have two churches, one a splendid brick edifice, nearly finished. We have three district schools in operation, under the immediate superintendence of the Council. We have two flourishing Sabbath schools, with good libraries. We have a large temperance society, and a division of the Sons of Temperance about to be formed; and as for our agricultural pursuits, they are carried on profitably, every year yielding a surplus for market. Our general thrift surpasses any tribe north of the Arkansas line. In short, we are in far better circumstances than when living in Ohio. The nation generally is contented and happy.

The "King of the Mosquitoes," who resides at Bluefields, about 70 miles from San Juan, is said to be about nineteen years of age, of slight and graceful figure, pleasing countenance, small feet and remarkably delicate hands; his color that of an Indian, his hair straight and black; in short, his tout ensemble is that of the pure-blooded Indian, without the faintest touch of the negro. His usually dresses plainly but neatly—white pants, black jacket or coat, and straw hat. At times he wears his uniform, which is also neat, and becomes him well. He has received a very fair education, and his manners with strangers are modest and reserved; but on acquaintance he proves lively, courteous and agreeable. He lives in a very comfortable and commodious building, having a broad piazza on all sides, and commanding a fine view of the sea and surrounding country.

MEXICO.—An export duty of six per cent. is now placed on all silver coin and bullion shipped from the Mexican ports. General Arista's letter, protesting against his banishment, as recently published, was a forgery, as the real one is published at Havana, and contains no such passages as those referring to American institutions, annexation, Carvajal, etc. In the late Vera Cruz insurrection three of the Government troops were killed and five wounded; and if the rebels forty were killed and wounded, and thirteen made prisoners. A German merchant was among the killed. Three of the most distinguished prisoners were put to death. A Territorial Government has been formed for the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, a General Marin appointed Governor, and the capital fixed at Minatitlan.

The Calaveras (California) Chronicle says that in one of the openings, about twenty miles from that town, there is a cedar which is over 220 feet high, with extraordinary circumference, of "eighty-eight feet." It was measured by Messrs. Field and Lewis, five feet from the ground. Near the root it was still thicker, but somewhat irregular.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE OFFICE,
Saturday Morning, July 2, 1853.

The principal feature in our general market during the past week has been a very active movement in Tobacco, with a further advance in prices, predicated upon advices from the West with regard to the condition of the growing crop. In Cotton we have but little change to report. The demand during most of the week has been rather better, owing in part to the more favorable political accounts from Europe by the recent steamers, though but little effect has been produced on prices. We published on Monday morning a telegraphic summary of the Baltic's advices, embracing Liverpool dates up to the 15th June. These accounts represented the Cotton market as firmer, with a good demand prevailing during the three or four days preceding the Baltic's departure, with sales of 30,000 bales, of which 9000 had been taken for speculation and 2000 for export. There was no quotable change in prices. Yesterday morning the Africa's accounts appeared in our telegraphic columns, bringing up our Liverpool dates to the 18th June. These report a continued good demand in the Liverpool Cotton market, with sales for the entire week of 65,000 bales, of which 20,000 had been taken for speculation and 6000 for export. Prices were still without any change of moment, and the official quotations were as follow: Fair Orleans 5¾, Middling Orleans 5, Fair Uplands 5¾, and Middling Uplands 5¼ ₱ lb. On Saturday, the 18th, the market was firm, and the sales were estimated at 8000 bales; 2000 for speculation and 500 for export. Trade in Manchester was unchanged. In the Money market Consols had advanced on ¼, and closed at 93¾. At Havre the demand for Cotton had been good, and the sales of the week ending June 14th were stated at 8000 bales, prices having slightly advanced for all descriptions.

COTTON—We left the Cotton market, at the close of our last weekly review, with a rather drooping appearance, sales for the Middling grades have given way ⅛@ ¼ ₱ lb under the influence of the Humboldt's advices, and the sales of Friday reaching barely 1700 bales, making a total for the week of 11,500 bales. On Saturday the demand was still more limited, and only about 600 bales changed hands during the day, though without further alteration in prices. On Monday morning the Baltic's advices appeared in our columns, and being of a more favorable character, their publication was followed by considerable activity in the demand. The day's sales accordingly reached 5000 bales, mostly at firmer prices, but without a quotable advance. On Tuesday and Wednesday the demand was fair, and about 5400 bales changed hands during the two days, the rates remaining steady. On Thursday about 2500 bales were sold, and yesterday 1500, making the total sales of the week 10,000 bales. Prices closed without any change of moment, and we still quote as below.

The receipts of the week are 1674 bales, against 2375 bales for the corresponding period last year, and in the total receipts at this port the increase, compared with last year, is 223,073 bales.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	5¼@ 7¼	Middling Fair	11¼@11¾
Ordinary	7¾@ 8¾	Fair	—@—
Middling	9 @10	Good Fair	—@—
Good Middling	10¼@11¼	Good and Fine	—@—

COTTON AND TOBACCO

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

BERANGER TO HIS OLD COAT.

Beranger is emphatically the poet of homely things the minstrel of society. His ingenious fancy could weave the most beautiful thoughts out of themes that in other hands would have been barren. If not repulsive. Here's an address to an old coat, equisite poetry, on the most prosaic theme in the world. The translation is executed fairly, almost elegantly. [Boston Transcript.

Be faithful still, thou poor dear coat of mine!
We, step for step, are both becoming old;
Ten years these hands have brushed that nap of thine.
And Socrates did never more. I hold.
When to fresh bear and wear the time to be
Shall fores thy sere thinn'd texture to submit.
Be philosophic and resist like me:
Mine ancient friend, we must not sunder yet

Full well I mind, for I forget not much,
The day that saw thee first upon me pet!
My birth-day 'twas, and as a crowning touch
Unto my pride, my friends all praised thy cut
Thy indulgence, which does me no disgrace,
Has never caused these kindly friends to flit,
Each at my fete yet shows a gladsome face:
Mine ancient friend, we must not sunder yet

A goodly darn I on thy skirts espy,
And thereby hangs a sweet remembrance still
Foiering one eve from food Lisette to fly.
Who held by them to baulk my evening will
The rap was followed by a grievous rent,
And then her side of course I could not quit;
Two days Lisette on that vast darning spent:
Mine ancient friend, we must not sunder yet

Have o'er I made thee reek with murky steams,
Soak'st your self-admiring fools virtuist?
Have I exposed thee, courting great men's beams,
To levee mock or antechamber rail?
A strife for ribbons all the land of France,
From side to side, well-nigh asunder split;
From thy lapel nothing but wild flowers glance:
Mine ancient friend, we must not sunder yet.

Fear no removal of those coarser vain,
Those madcap sports which once employed our hours:
Hours of commingled joyfulness and pain,
Of sunshine chequered here and there with showers.
I rather ought, methinks, thy faded cloth
From every future service to acquit;
But wait awhile—one end will come to both:
Mine ancient friend, we shall not sunder yet.

PAY AS YOU GO.—The New York Times has the following advice, which, if followed up, would prevent many an aching heart and sorrowful bosom. It reminds us of some of Franklin's excellent essays:

"What, not avail myself of this capital opportunity for a bargain, just because the money is not in my pocket? There are a great many snug fortunes made by buying on time. But our mercantile friends who draw most largely on their credit will agree with us in advising a young man to 'pay as he goes.' A sixpenny loaf of bread without butter, and no debt on it, has a better relish than your best dinner that is to be paid for to-morrow. The potatoes that are paid for before eating them, have no bitter taste, while a coppery flavor mingles with the vanilla of the creams that are bought on credit. Cash lards handsomely the leanest beef. Credit makes the fattest slices shrink in the pan. If you pay as you go, very likely you will fall astern of your bold speculating neighbor, but you will have your vessel in better trim for a squall. Men do not always get rich very rapidly who adopt the motto, but they very seldom can make out to fail. It may be hard for them to get rich, but it is harder for other people to suffer very bitterly on account of their poverty.

"The man who pays as he goes, and has nothing but the suit he has on, and the meal he is eating, that he can call his own—how much poorer is he than his neighbor who keeps a carriage and a servant, and lives in splendor, and owes more than he can ever pay? The latter, one will say, enjoys all the money that his splendor represents. This is very much a matter of taste. We should not enjoy it. Widows and orphans will weep when he dies, not because he has gone, but because his estate pays only twenty cents on the dollar. 'Pay as you go,' and leave no unpleasant business for your executor to transact. It is not gratifying for the widow to have your debts to settle, and children come by degrees to think less of their deceased father, when bills are presented that cannot be met by his assets. Pay as you go, sleep sound o'night, and drive out the nightmare from your dormitory. Your account book will be a model of simplicity. You will buy what you want, and leave what is unneeded till money is plentier. You will find the necessities of life to be only the decimation of what generally are called rich. Off their faces, tearing the lean and haggard mask, you will find jolly; I say luxuries behind.

"Your library will contain fewer and choicer books. Your wardrobe will be a collection of wearable garments—your home an aggregation of comforts for every day use. Your wife will be as tidy and neat as the best of them. She will have very little old jewelry to exchange for new, and the months will not much trouble her during these warm days. Your balance sheet will always be a pleasant document to study. The amount you have in the bank, the property you hold, the stock you own, will be the true representative of your means. Pay as you go, and when you die enjoy the satisfaction that there is but one debt left behind you. If you have not any thing, the undertaker's bill will not be very heavy—too small to trouble you much afterwards. Next to having money enough, the most comfortable thing, in a financial aspect, is to owe nothing to any man. Pay every body as you go, but pay the printer in advance."

A CANINE SKETCH.—Just then the door opened, and Mr. Rawley walked in, and close at his heels stalked Bitters. Both seated themselves; the one on a chair, and the other on end directly in front of the Surrogate. Mr. Jagger looked at the dog with the solemn eye of a surrogate, and shook his head as only a surrogate can shake it.

"Are you one of the witnesses?" inquired he of the dog's master.

"I am, sir," replied Mr. Rawley. "I was subpœnaed to testify, and here's the document." As he spoke he laid upon the table a paper which, from having been several days in that gentleman's pocket, had faded from white into a snuff color; and was particularly crumpled.

"What's that animal doing here?" demanded the Surrogate.

"He hasn't had time to do anything," replied Mr. Rawley. "He comes when I come; he goes when I goes. He's a peeler."

"The animal must leave the court. It's contempt of court to bring him here," said Mr. Jagger, angrily. "Remove him, instantly."

Mr. Rawley had frequently been in attendance at the police courts, and once or twice had had a slight taste of the sessions; so that he was not as much struck with the Surrogate as he otherwise might have been, and he replied:

"I make no opposition, sir, and shall not move a finger to prevent it. There's the animal, and any officer as pleases may remove him. I say nothin' ag'in it. I knows what a contempt of court is, and that ain't one." And Mr. Rawley threw himself back amiably in his chair.

"Mr. Slagg," said the Surrogate to the man with a frizzled wig, "remove the dog."

Mr. Slagg laid down his pen, took off his spectacles, went up to the dog, and told him to get out; to which Bitters replied by snapping at his fingers as he attempted to touch him. Mr. Rawley was staring abstractedly out of the window. The dog looked up to him for instructions, and receiving none, supposed that snapping at a scrivener's fingers was perfectly correct, and resumed his pleasant expression towards that functionary, occasionally casting a lowering eye at the Surrogate, as if deliberating whether to include him in his demonstration of anger.

"Slagg, have you removed the dog?" said Mr. Jagger, who, the dog being under his very nose, saw that he had not.

"No, sir. He resists the court," replied Mr. Slagg.

"Call Walker to assist you," said Mr. Jagger, sternly.

Walker, a small man in drabs, had anticipated something of the kind, and had accidently withdrawn as soon as he saw there was a prospect of difficulty, so that the whole court was set at defiance by the dog.

"Witness!" said Mr. Jagger.

"Sir!" exclaimed a thin man in the corner, who had been subpœnaed to his own great terror, and who at that particular moment had an idea that he was the only witness in the world; starting to his feet under the vague impression that he was to be sworn on the spot, and thoroughly convinced that testifying and committing perjury were only different names for the same thing.

"Not you—the man with the dog."

Mr. Rawley looked the court full in the face.

"Will you oblige the court by removing that animal?" said Mr. Jagger, mildly.

"Certainly, sir," said Mr. Rawley; "Bitters, go home."

Bitters rose stiffly and went out, first casting a glance at the man with a wig, for the purpose of being able to identify him on some future occasion; and, having comforted himself by a violent onslaught upon a small dog belonging to the Surrogate, whom he encountered in the entry, was seen from the window, walking up the street with the most profound gavity [The Attorney.

INQUIRIES ABOUT SHANGHAIS.—A Mohawk farmer writes to an agricultural editor that the "hen fever" rages some up that way, and inquires:

"Now what do you think of the variety called Shank-highs, whose name don't belie them? I tell my wife they have no body at all, and that when the head is cut off the legs come right apart! Am I right? Neighbor Buckingham's wife says they're the beatenest to lay on airth, and that they sit and lay both at onst. I don't believe it—it's contrary to nater. I think they only recline a little, as it were, and—Jerusalem! how can them things set? my jack-knife can set as well as they can.

"I tell you, Mr. Editor, they put things out of joint, too, dreadfully. When Buckingham's wife got her Shank-highs home the other day, old Kink happened to hear the rooster crow the first time, and not knowing anything about the matter, summoned half the hands on the place to come and help get the old blink-eyed mule out of the crib. Old Kink says, day don't sit on de roost same as odder chicken nohow, but dey sits straddle of de stick, ossuse why, when dey 'tempts to sit same as common chicken, de head aint heasly 'nuff for de legs, and dey falls off backward. Correct philosophy that.

"They sit when they eat, I know, for I've seen 'em do it; and I've seen 'em try to eat standing, but 'was no go, when they peck at a grain of corn on the ground they don't mor'n half reach it, but the head bobs right between their legs, making them turn a complete somerset. May be they're like swinged oats, worse than they look, and that's bad enough, anyhow. I'd as soon see a pair of tongs or compasses walking about the yard, as these Shank-highs. And I had like to have forgot to tell you, that Pete says they're big liars, 'cause dey crows long time 'fore day in de mornin' when 'taint day; but Kink says, Pete don't 'flect dat dair legs is so long, dey see daylight long time 'fore common chicken."

A SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANCE.—A few days since, Mayor Snellbaker received a letter from an Attorney at law, in Curtistown, Tuolumne county, California, stating that a client of his was then under arrest upon the charge of murdering a lady named Jane Morton, formerly of Fulton, near this city. What led to his arrest. It appears, was a daguerreotype of a lady which was found on his person, which was identified as the miniature of Mrs. Morton. Before the Coroner's jury, one witness swore positively that the deceased was Mrs. M., although the body was in so decomposed a state, that identity appeared almost impossible. This witness swears that he cannot be mistaken; the likeness is correct, and that he knew Mrs. Morton, wife of Joseph Morton, residing in Fulton, Hamilton county, Ohio, that they lived near a saw-mill where he once worked, and that Mrs. M. formerly resided in Madisonville, about eight miles from Cincinnati.

This object of the Attorney, in addressing the letter to this city, was to ascertain if such a lady ever lived in Fulton, or yet resides there.

Mayor Snellbaker immediately set to work to investigate the matter, and fortunately found a lady residing in Fulton, corresponding in every particular to the description in the letter. She is at present residing in Fulton; her maiden name was Ross, and she formerly lived in Madisouville. She married a man named Joseph Morton, who is now proprietor of a saw-mill in Fulton. She cheerfully made affidavit to the foregoing facts, and had her daguerreotype taken, at the request of the Mayor, which was forwarded by him to the Attorney in California.

As the trial has been postponed for three months, in order to give the person imprisoned an impartial hearing, it may readily be expected that the above intelligence, when it reaches him, will be a source of the greatest gratification, releasing him from the ordeal of murder, and in all human probability saving his life, for it is well known that in California it is a difficult matter for one charged with crime, more especially murder, to extricate himself from the dilemma, when there is the least suspicion or evidence to fasten the crime upon him. [Cincinnati Times, 16th.

The editors of the Home Journal were among those invited to Niagara Falls, on the late excursion of the Legislature of New York, and among other incidents noted is the following:

We had the luck to see a horse go over the falls on Sunday afternoon. We say luck, because, though we were sorry to see the horse should end his life in so summary a manner, yet since he was so destined, we considered it a piece of luck to see him do it. How he got into the river, or where, no one knew. We caught sight of him when he was in the midst of the rapids, above the American side of the Horseshoe Falls; and those rapids tossed him up, and whirled him on, as they would a chip—as they would an elephant. Whether he was alive or dead before he reached the fall we know not; but if he had been endowed with the life of a thousand horse power, he would have been tossed and whirled, and rolled and hurried just the same. Over he plunged into the roaring abyss. In less than a moment he re-appeared in the comparatively still water near the spiral staircase, with a gash across his body that half severed it; and there, in the curious eddies of that part of the river, he continued to float, and turn about, and over for a long time. Probably he is there at this moment, for the water in which he floats is hemmed in on one side by a precipice of rock, and on the other by a precipice of water, rushing away from the terrors of the cataract. It is impossible to convey to any one, not familiar with the falls, an idea of the interest with which this scene was overlooked by the people on the shore.

DREADFUL OCCURRENCE—Three men suffocated.—An occurrence of awful and disgusting character took place on Thursday night, or rather between one and two o'clock on Friday morning, on the premises of Smith & Watkins, on Myrtle, between Main and Second streets. Three Germans, named Henry Uhlman, Francis Howald and Francis Schulenburg, with some others, were employed to clean the sink on these premises, tenanted by some German families. Howald descended first into the sink, and from the presence of foul gases became suffocated almost immediately, and fell into the pit. Fearing that all was not right, Uhlman next went down, and from the same frightful cause was overcome, loosened his hold, fell down, and was smothered like his partner. The noises ceasing below, Schulenburg descended to the assistance of his companions, and soon met a similar dreadful fate. A fourth man had now a rope attached to him and descended, but he soon fainted in the horrid hole, and was drawn up with scarcely life in him. After great exertions the bodies of the three victims were recovered in some twenty minutes, life extinct, of course, and presenting a fearful spectacle in the triple mortality. [St. Louis Democrat, June 20.

VALUABLE ACQUISITION TO OUR PUBLIC ARCHIVES.—Mr. Randall, the Secretary of State, has obtained possession of some valuable additions to our Revolutionary History, which the Library Committee of the Senate and Assembly, and other gentlemen, were invited last evening to examine at the mansion of J. V. L. Prune, Esq.

As we have reason to hope that these most interesting manuscript volumes will become a part of the archives of the State, we will content ourselves with saying now, that among them is the Treasonable Correspondence found concealed in Major André's boot when that officer was scorched by his captors, Paulding, Williams and Van Wart. The papers consist of the enumeration of the number and disposition of the American troops at West Point; and a description of the fortifications, with suggestions in regard to weak and exposed points. There is also a pass from Gen. Arnold, under which André, as "Mr. John Smith," was traveling.

André, it will be recollected, having obtained this information from the traitor, was on his way back with it to the British Commander-in-Chief. [Albany Evening Journal.

REMARKABLE DEATH.—Day before yesterday, a Mr. Bowles, living on Fifth street, near the corner of Almond, went into the city commons for the purpose of skinning a cow that had died and been dragged there. The cow died, it is thought, from poison, or the bite of a mad dog. In skinning her, Mr. Bowles cut his finger; the wound coming in contact with the poison, his hand and arm commenced swelling immediately, and he died in great agony about twelve hours afterwards. [St. Louis Republican.

The Crystal Palace—Opening of the Exhibition.

The increasing activity in and around the Crystal Palace gives a good degree of assurance that the announcement made a few days since by the Directors, of their intention to open the Exhibition on the 15th of July next, will be fulfilled. Several hundred workmen are employed upon the Palace. The magnificent dome is nearly enclosed, and will contribute greatly to the beauty of the structure. An iron railing, now in process of erection, will enclose the building, and the intermediate grounds are to be ornamented with shrubbery and flowers.

The interior arrangements of the Palace, under the direction of the General Superintendent, Mr. Du Pont, are nearly completed. They are simple, but admirably classified. The ground floor is divided into four quarters, lettered A, B, C and D, separated from each other by wide and spacious naves. Each of these parts is divided into areas of twenty-seven feet square, to which are added four triangular areas. Most of the articles in the American Department are assigned either to Division A, or appropriate places in the Galleries. Divisions B and C, and a large part of Division D, will be allotted, with a sufficient portion of the Galleries, to foreign articles.

The centre of the building, a wide and spacious area, immediately under the dome, and of course the most conspicuous point in the exhibition, is to be occupied by a noble contribution of Italian genius, the Baron Marochetti's equestrian statue of Washington, in bronze.

Other works of art, such as statuary, sculpture, bronzes, busts, etc., will be distributed throughout the naves, and courts of the building, under the direction of the General Superintendent. Among these are some specimens of the rarest merit, and which will doubtless attract a large share of attention from the curious visitor. Not to enumerate all, it will be sufficient to mention such works as Thorwaldsen's group, in plaster, of Christ and the Twelve Apostles; Professor Kiss' celebrated group of the Amazon on horseback, attacked by a tiger, which received a Council Medal at the London Exhibition; Carew's colossal statue of Daniel Webster, is to occupy, we believe, one of the naves or main aisles of the building. A group, in bronze, of an Indian rider hurling a javelin at a serpent; the figures of the size of life, and pronounced a production of the highest merit. At each extremity of the four galleries, overlooking the centre of the building, is to be placed one of the suits of ancient armor from the Tower of London, which the English Government have contributed to the exhibition. The American contributions of the fine arts, sculpture, paintings, engravings, etc., have not yet, we understand, been assigned their places, but will be the subject of special direction from the Directors of Paintings and Sculpture, under the authority of the General Superintendent.

The extent and variety of the contribution of foreign articles to this exhibition, will be found on an inspection of the catalogue, much greater than has been generally supposed. Most of the nations of Europe contribute liberally, and some of them munificently, to this great collection of the Industrial Arts. Some of the finest specimens of the arts and industrial skill of Great Britain, France, Italy, the German States, Switzerland, even Austria, have been received, or are on their way to be placed in comparison by the side of the products of our own soil, and the labor of our own countrymen. Take, for example, the latter country, with whom we have very little commercial or diplomatic intercourse. The contributions of Austria are both extensive and varied—comprising specimens of the useful as well as the fine arts. Among the former are specimens of cutlery, edge tools, clothing, shawls, dyed silks, silverware, porcelain, candelabras, vases, table slabs, etc., in marble; Mosaic tables, etc. Among the latter are pictures, bronze statues, bas reliefs, some fine sculpture in artificial marble, porcelain paintings, enamel-corals, letters on glass, etc. There is among the collection one painting by an eminent Austrian artist, that will doubtless attract the attention of the connoisseur, namely—the founder of the Austrian monarchy, Rudolph, of Hapsburg.

Even the black Emperor Souloque sends from Hayti specimens of the products and industrial resources of that Island. These have already been noticed by the press. The Turkish frigate, with her cargo of Mussulman fabrics and curiosities, has not yet arrived; we hope to welcome it, if not at the opening, certainly before the close of the fair.

Prominent among the French contributions, and perhaps first among the textile fabrics of the world, in point of elegance and artistic skill, stand those famous and wonderful productions, the Gobelin tapestry and carpets. Napoleon III has contributed some very elegant and costly specimens of these fabrics to the exhibition, and a word in respect to their history and manufacture may not be uninteresting to the reader. Their manufacture dates back to about the year 1450, and the name is derived from the ingenious inventor, Jean Gobelin. The practice of an art or trade was then a mystery, and each the fabrication of the Gobelin tapestries seems to have remained even down to the present day. So as great perfection had it arrived in the days of Louis XIV., that that munificent monarch purchased the establishments for the State (L'etat c'est moi—I am the State,) and they have ever since continued the property of the ruling power in France. They were nearly destroyed during the revolution of 1789, but were revived again under Napoleon, and are now in full and successful operation. In the manufactures of these fabrics, the most patient labor and exquisite skill are required. None but the very finest paintings are used as copies, and one of the most eminent artists in the empire is the superintendent of the establishment. Some of these tapestries require many years to finish, and to such an exquisite perfection of workmanship have they arrived, that the tapestry pictures are said, in point of color and finish, to be superior to the originals. The tapestries and carpets are manufactured entire. The largest ever made was for the Gallery of the Louvre, 1300 feet, or nearly one quarter of a mile in length. These carpets are only used in the royal palaces of France, or, like the tapestries, given away by the Emperor as presents to propitiate foreign powers. The specimens sent to this country for exhibition by Napoleon are said to be exceedingly rich and valuable.

Altogether this exhibition bids fair in many of its features, to equal, if not exceed the public expectations—and to be not only a highly useful, but a grand and imposing display, of the best specimens of the products, the arts, and the industry of our own country and Europe. The Directors are certainly entitled to great credit for the perseverance and energy with which they have so far conducted this great enterprise, and we doubt not they will fully carry it out to a successful termination. The credit of the whole country, as well as the honor of the city of New York, is involved in the success of this undertaking. [N.Y. Times.

A DOG OUT OF PLACE.—On the evening of a recent Sunday, as the inhabitants of Ystradgynlais, South Wales, were crowding to the chapel to hear a somewhat famous itinerant preacher, a huge dog made his way into the building, bolted up the pulpit stairs, and took possession of the place assigned to the pastor. The unsuspecting itinerant walked up to the pulpit in a short time, but, assailed with fierce growls and a row of teeth like an alligator's, he was glad to get to the bottom of the steps. A second ventured, but only elicited some additional growls. A third sage, thinking discretion the better part of valor, next ascended to make an amicable settlement with Tyke. He did not dispute the dog's right of possession, but endeavored to charm him from his elevated position with a piece of candle. At this Tyke waxed more furious than ever, deeming the candle an insult; and at length the pastor took his place in the small reading-desk, in which he preached, Tyke all the while remaining perched aloft listening to the discourse with a gravity and decorum worthy of a class-leader. The scene may be "more easily imagined than described." [Liverpool Standard.

GREAT SPEED.—The Pittsburgh Dispatch says that, on Saturday week, the fast train on the Pennsylvania railroad, when near Greensburgh, attained the extraordinary speed of eighty miles per hour. A perfectly straight stretch of ten miles was run in seven and a half minutes. This, we believe, is one mile to the hour faster than the quickest English time.

SWEARING REPORTERS.—A Judge of the Criminal Court at Cincinnati has lately established a rule of court requiring the newspaper reporters to appear before the Clerk and take an oath to report the proceedings correctly, or be excluded from the court-room. The reporters refused to comply with the mandate of his honor.

"FILIBUSTERISM" AT THE UNIVERSITY IN HAVANA.—The teachers and students at the University in Havana have got themselves into trouble with the Captain General, on account of their "filibusterism." It appeared that the Captain General, in order to discover whether he was correct in his suspicions that too much "filibusterism" had been inculcated into the minds of the students, caused the removal of the "Medal" of the University, (a sort of superior usher, whose duty it is to see that the classes perform their duties,) and appointed in his stead a person of the name of Carcuo, taken from the office of the Political Secretary. The students had become much attached to their bedul, and were indignant that he should have been turned out at the will of the Captain General to make room for Carcuo, who began to make himself disagreeable. In their displeasure, the students tore down the Captain General's edict confirming Carcuo's appointment, and drummed the latter out of the University.

Gen. Canedo having been informed of what had occurred, in a high state of excitement ordered the Rector and the entire posse comitatus of the University to appear before him. He gave them a severe lecture, and it is said some very strong language was made use of, and some of the professors resigned their appointments and are about to leave the country. The Rector and other dignitaries denied the accusations brought against them. They were, after being cautioned, dismissed, with the exception of Professors Le Reverend, Piact, Castro, and the Deacon of Laws, Don Diego de la Tovic, whom the Captain General desired to remain with him, and then accused the whole four of them individually of being filibusteros at heart, informing them, also, that he was aware that they had been occupying themselves in collecting money to send to the United States for the purpose of forming new expeditions to invade Cuba.

They were subsequently allowed to depart, with this final observation of Gen. Canedo, that "if in future he heard the slightest whisper against their names, they would be provided with lodgings in the Moro, and that no mercy might be expected of him; that he was disposed to be forgiving, but he could also be severe!"

The students have since made an attempt to blow up, with gunpower, Gen. Canedo's obnoxious "Medal" or Bendio Careno, in consequence of which the University has for the present, at least, been closed by order of his Excellency, and several of the young men provided with lodgings in the Punta Castle.

Another account states that the foundations are now being laid for a large edifice covering four entire squares, and said to be designed for a new Jesuit University, and as a substitute for all other colleges.

SINGULAR CASE OF INSTINCT IN A HORSE.—We do not remember ever to have heard of a more remarkable exhibition of unique intelligence than was communicated to us a few days since by Mr. Allen, of this place. The circumstances, as they were related to us, are as follows:

Mr. Allen has had for a considerable time a span of sprightly little horses that he has never separated. In the stable, in the field, in the harness, they have always been together. This has caused a strong attachment to grow up between them. A few days ago he went with them out to Lake Minnetoka, on a fishing excursion. Taking them out of the carriage, he led them down to the Lake, and tied them with stout ropes, several rods apart, on a strip of grass that grew upon the shore, and left them to feed. Returning to the shantee, he threw himself upon the floor to await the return of the party who had repaired to the lake to fish. Not much time had elapsed before the sound of an approaching horse's feet attracted his attention, and a moment after one of his span appeared at the door, the animal put his head in, and giving one neigh, returned at a slow gallop, yet under evident excitement, to the spot where, but a few moments before, he and his companion had been seemingly safely fastened. Surprised to find his horse loose, and struck with his singular conduct, Mr. A. immediately followed, and found the other lying in the water entangled in the rope, and struggling to keep his head from being submerged.

While Mr. A. proceeded to disengage the unfortunate horse, his noble benefactor stood by manifesting the utmost solicitude and sympathy; and when his mate was extricated from his situation and again upon his feet on terra firma, the generous creature exhibited the most unquestionable signs of satisfaction and joy. That this intelligent animal should have noticed the misfortune of his mate; that he should know where to apply for rescue, and in his efforts should sunder a three-fourths of an inch rope, and finally that he should exhibit so high an appreciation of the event, are circumstances to astonish us and commend themselves to the thoughtful consideration of those who would limit the power of reasoning to the "genus homo." [St. Anthony's Express.

The North Carolina Company's copper mine proves highly productive. In but one day last week, of twelve hours' working, a quantity of ore containing thirty per cent. of metal, valued at $3,000, was taken out by a few miners working on the engine shaft. One hundred men are now at work—a force sufficient, with the new machinery, to bring to the surface fifty tons of ore per day. With only a small part of the force, the company obtained six to eight tons per day. This small quantity is sufficient for an annual dividend of fifty per cent., besides paying for machinery, and without calling on the stockholders.

DEDICATION OF THE FIVE POINTS MISSION BUILDING.—The new Mission Building, erected on the site of the "Old Brewery," in New York, was dedicated on the 18th instant. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev. J. Floy, D. D., and a brief address was made by Rev. J. B. Wakely. The exercises were quite interesting, and attracted a large number of visitors. The entire expense of the erection of the new building will, when fully completed, somewhat exceed $36,000. $23,000 of this sum has been collected within the past eighteen months, leaving the society in debt to the amount of $13,000.

It appears that the new University of Urbana, Ohio, is established, and is to be sustained by the disciples of Emanual Swedenborg. The is the first educational establishment in the country, of the rank of a university, devoted to the propagation of Swedenborgism, Professor J. W. Jenks, of Boston, and Professor M. G. Williams, of Urbana, were to be inaugurated into office on the 19th and 20th instant—the first as Professor of Languages, and the second of Sciences. A female department is also to be connected with the University.

NOVEL DIVORCE SUIT DECIDED.—A few days since we referred to a suit for divorce going on in the Circuit Court at New York. The mother of a young man, named Isaac Courson, applied for a dissolution of the nuptial knot, on behalf of her son, who, it was alleged, had married a women of ill repute, while in a state of insanity. The bride's name, formerly, was Elizabeth Mead. The jury rendered a verdict, on Saturday, adverse to the application.

According to the calculations based on the English life tables, it was estimated, a priori, that of all the immigrants to the United States since 1790, 2,214,000 should be living at the date of the last census. The actual returns of that census give us the number of foreign-born residents, 2,210,000—a remarkable instance of the accuracy which may be attained by scientific deductions on points which seemingly admit no elements of calculation.

The natural salt ponds on the Florida Keys, which in 1851-52 yielded about 75,000 bushels of salt, have been, during the last winter, greatly improved and extended, so that the evaporating surface is now 600 acres, and will soon be increased to 800. During the winter the ponds have contained pickle sufficient to make five hundred thousand bushels of salt.

Santa Anna is said to have made the Universal his newspaper organ in the city of Mexico, and is supposed to be the writer of the leading editorials. The Universal is very abusive of the federal system and of the United States, and advocates consolidation.

A few days since, on the New York and Erie Railroad, a train left Corning for the city of New York, consisting of seventy-six cars, drawn by a single engine, loaded with eight hundred thousand feet of lumber.

Miss Martha H. Mowry, M. D., of Providence, R. I., has been elected Professor of Obstetrics and Diseases of Women and Children in the Female Medical College of Pennsylvania.

MISS LESLIE ON SLANG.—"There is no wit," says the author of the Behavior Book, "in a lady to speak of a 'snooze,' instead of a nap—in calling pantaloons 'pants,' or gentlemen 'gents'—in saying of a man whose dress is getting old, that he looks 'seedy,' and in alluding to an amusing anecdote, or a diverting incident, to say that it is 'rich.' All slang words are detestable from the lips of ladies. We are always sorry to hear a young lady use such a word as 'polking,' when she tells of having been engaged in a certain dance too fashionable not long since; but, happily, now it is fast going out, and almost banished from the best society. To her honor, be it remembered, Queen Victoria has prohibited the polka being danced in her presence. How can a genteel girl bring herself to say, 'Last night, I was polking with Mr. Bell,' or 'Mr. Cope came and asked me to polk with him.' Its coarse and ill-sounding name is worthy of the dance. We have little tolerance for young ladies, who, having in reality neither wit nor humor, set up for both, and, having nothing of the right stock to go upon, substitute coarseness and impertinence (not to say impudence) and try to excite laughter, and attract the attention of gentlemen, by talking slang. Where do they get it? How do they pick it up? From low newspapers, or from vulgar books? Surely not from low companions? We have heard one of these ladies, when her collar chanced to be pinned awry, say that it was put on drunk—also, that her bonnet was drunk, meaning crooked on her head. When disconcerted she was 'floored.' When submitting to do a thing unwillingly, she was brought to the scratch. Sometimes 'she did things on the sly.' She talked of a certain great vocalist 'singing like a beast.' She believed it very smart and piquant to use these vile expressions. It is true, when at parties, she always had half a dozen gentlemen about her; their curiosity being excited as to what she would say next. And yet she was a woman of many good qualities; and one who boasted of having always 'lived in society.'"

The custom of making Friday hangman's day is quite modern in this country. In England, formerly, very few executions took place on that day. Tuesday or Saturday was generally assigned for the purpose. In some portions of our country, before the revolution, the practice was the same. Saturday was more usually assigned for that purpose than any other day. Richard Smith, who was convicted of the murder of Captain Carson, was hung on a Saturday. The superstition which considers Friday unlucky, doubtless had its origin from the fact that our Saviour was crucified on that day. The belief in the ill-omened character of Friday is spoken of by Geoffrey Vinsauf in his lament for Richard Cœur de Lion, who was killed on a Friday. Chaucer refers to the same circumstance. Cooper, in one of his sea novels, tells the tale of a ship called the Friday, which was built on Friday, launched on Friday, and went to sea on Friday, to founder at once. Among modern Friday disasters are those of the British steamer Amazon, which left England on Friday, Jan. 2, 1852, on its first voyage, and the Birkenhead troop ship, which sailed the same day. The steamer was burned, and most of the passengers perished. The ship stranded, and several hundreds were drowned. Other vessels, which were commenced, finished, and sailed on other days, have also foundered; but their disasters, of course, were not in consequence of ill luck in the day chosen for important events in the vessel's history.

WAGES IN ENGLAND.—The ship-builders on the Tyne river have come to terms with their employers, and agree to accept wages at the rate of 33s. sterling per week, with 3s. "allowance" at old work, and 38s. per week, without allowance, at new work. These are the terms now received by all the shipwrights on the Tyne and Wear, and at Blythe and Hartlepool. The wages of other classes of operatives, formerly about 21s. per week, is now 27s. sterling, with full employment.

An exchange very truthly remarks: "We are tired of reading articles on Mrs. Stowe's reception in England. Who cares how those receive Mrs. Stowe, who would have hanged Washington, had they lived in his day and been able to catch him?"

LINES BY AN OLD FOGY.

I'm thankful that the sun and moon
Are both long up so high.
That no presumptuous hand can stretch
And pull them from the sky.
If they were not, I have no doubt,
But some reforming ass
Would recommend to take them down,
And light the world with gas.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all or any of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 10 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.
Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.
☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to add pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition..... $200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French Language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUROSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, LA.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jel1 1y

A NEW MEDICINE.

EPPING'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

THIS excellent extract is a concentrated preparation of Buchu, with other vegetable diuretics. It is, as medical men will see, designed for that class of diseases which affect the urinary organs. For diseases and directions, see the label on each bottle. It is also a very fine alterative medicine. Dyspeptics, laboring under hepatic derangement, find great relief from the use of this remedy. It is on sale at the store of E. WRIGHT & CO., 151 Chartres street, and the store of J. MACPHERSON, 29 Camp st.

It comports best with my feelings to offer this article to Physicians, Druggists and Hospitals, upon my medical knowledge and Christian reputation, without the accustomed puffing. DR. L. PIERCE,
my21 Columbus, Georgia.

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic affictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 10, 1853.—ame.

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. F. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 6

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable cams, are attached to these bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound (ringings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled h to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonius and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.
ANDREW MENEELY'S SONS.
West Troy, Albany county, N. Y., 1851.
SLARK, DAY & STAUFFER,
ap10 Agents in New Orleans.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.

S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 60 Gravier street, New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Main factory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety
Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. } Publishing Committee
T. W. DORMAN, } of Alabama Conference.
W. MITCHELL, }

VOLUME III. NUMBER 23. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 127.

[From the Puritan Recorder.]

THE MINISTER'S QUARTER PAY-DAY.

As the parson sat at his books one day,
A rap at his door heard he;
The Parish Collector had called to pay
The Society's Quarter fee.

A hundred dollars, and fifty more,
Were counted the parson's due,
Though small sum this, for a half a score
To victual and clothe and shoe.

But the day had come, and for youthful sport
The parsonage ne'er displayed
A day like that, when his scant support
Was about to be promptly paid.

The children danced, and giggled, and grinned,
And wriggled like eels in oil;
And smiles broke forth on the visage thinned
By fasting, and tears, and toil.

The Parish Collector sat him down,
And out of his pocket took
The tithes he'd gathered about the town,
Crammed into his pocket book;

It was not much of a cram at that:
Though hony and milk indeed,
Not milk enough for a starving cat,
Nor honey enough for need.

But such as it was, without much risk,
The collector poured it out:
He spread it around on the parson's desk,
And scattered it all about:

But little of shining gold was there,
And less from the silver mine,
And bank bills—they were exceeding rare!
Alas! for the poor divine.

First came a note for a little sum,
Which the poor man into had given
To a rich parishoner, near his home,
Whom he hoped to meet in Heaven:

Ten dollars was all—not much, I know,
But an order followed the note,
With butcher's bill, and a bill or so
For butter and bread, to boot.

The doctor had drawn for his small amount,
The grocer had filed his claim,
And all intended their bills should count,
Whenever his pay-day came.

The good collector reckoned them up;
The minister stood aghast!
It was a bitter drug in his brimming cup.
To think he had lived so fast.

Who knows what pain the parson endures,
As the good man hands them o'er,
And says, with a hem, "Sir, these are yours,
And they should have been paid before:

For a scandal it is to religion, sir,
Which the world can never forget,
When a man of sense like a minister
Is unable to pay a debt.

And here besides is a lot of cash,
Three fives and a lusty ten;
Your daughters in satins now may dash,
And your boys dress up like men,

But allow me to say, good Parson Gray,
You'd better just lay aside
A little of this for a rainy day,
Or a walk instead of a ride.

For money is scarce, and the times are hard,
And you, sir, are getting gray,
And you may not fare as you here have fared,
Should the people turn you away.

We've given you here a large support,
And the farmers all complain
That the crops this year will be dreadful short,
If we don't soon have some rain.

We can't long pay such enormous sums
As we have to pay you now,
For you know that the pay-day often comes,
And the Squire has lost a cow:

And one of old Goodwin's sheep is dead,
And he feels poor this year."
The tender shepherd here turned his head,
To drop—for the sheep—a tear!

Of this the collector no note took,
He gabbled his story through
Then slowly folded his pocket book,
And looked as if he knew

He took his hat, with a cheerful smile,
Rejoiced in a duty done:
Then rode away to his home, a mile,
At set of December's sun.

The parson rose, as he left the room,
And bowed with a smile of grace,
But his heart resembled a ruined tomb,
In spite of his smiling face.

He closed the door, and resumed his chair,
Till, amid his grief and fears,
He seemed half choked for a breath of air,
Then burst in a flood of tears.

He thought of children's needy feet,
His barrel of meal was gone;
And the question arose, "What shall we eat?
What raiment shall we put on?"

He thought of the ravens, how they're fed,
How the lilies' garments grow;
But when was a raven's rent unpaid?
Or a lily arrayed for snow?

With tender emotions all astir,
In the parson's heaving breast,
The children's mother—he thought of her—
How she, who had done her best,

Still needed a hood, and cloth, and thread,
A dress, and a thick or shawl—
Till pressed in spirit, he knelt and prayed
To the glorious Lord of all.

The evening came, and he met his wife,
And his blooming children nine;
Yet naught they saw of the inward strife
That harrassed that sad divine:

He sat serene in the central seat,
And his wife sewed near his side,
The children hovered about his feet,
And to be cheerful tried.

But when he went to his nightly bed,
To sleep till the waking morn,
He felt, as he pillowed his aching head,
That he wished he had ne'er been born.

And all that night was his pillow drowned
With the tears no eye could see,
But His, who once for the thankless groaned,
And bled upon Calvary's tree.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

VISIT TO La GRANGE.

[CONCLUDED.]

Bro. McTYEIRE:—In my former I promised to say something of the Faculty of La Grange College, the duty of the Church towards her, and of her future prospects. With the Faculty I was much pleased. They all had the appearance of solid piety, soberness of thought, stability of character, and fixedness of purpose. They are honest, they are working men, and we are glad to say are, by their untiring efforts and indomitable energy, re building our much cherished institution. And whilst we are commending their characters as men, we would not pass by unnoticed their proficiency as scholars. The advancement and good standing of their pupils, the manner in which they passed the ordeal of examination, both clearly show that able professors have had them in charge. With the President I am the best acquainted. I spent several days under his hospitable roof. President Hardy is a plain, unassuming man, a ripe scholar, devoted Christian, and possesses an energy and determination that defies defeat. Not among the least attractions about his home is his most excellent wife, whose graceful and easy manners win for her the affections of all with whom she becomes acquainted. Her warm-hearted interest in the students will cause many of them to think of her with pleasure, when they are buffeting the billows of life, many years having passed away. I could but think how well she was suited to be the companion of him who had so weighty a responsibility, and whose every power is drawn out to do good. The entire Faculty are laborious, effective and self-sacrificing men, well worthy of the confidence of every one who has sons and wards to educate. I was much gratified in seeing them manifest so great an interest in regard to the deportment and moral conduct of their pupils. Whilst they improve and cultivate the mind, they are by no means forgetful of the heart, which, in my opinion, speaks volumes in their praise.

As to the duty of the Church to La Grange College, it is plain and manifest. This institution was founded by, and is under the direction and patronage of Tennessee, Memphis and Alabama Conferences. Had all these Conferences done their duty, she would have been well endowed, and in her finances far beyond contingencies. The college is in the State of Alabama, but in the bounds of the Tennessee Conference. In North Alabama she is liberally patronized; but few, however, from the State of Tennessee—attributable to the numerous colleges in her bounds, and the cheapness of living, combined with the fear of health in sending their sons South. If the united energies of all these Conferences were brought to bear upon the ballance-wheel of her destiny, as they should be, La Grange would soon be what she ought to be—an unrivaled institution. She has worthy Trustees and the best of professors; the Church is in the back ground. We should arise from our lethargy, and lend a helping hand to the object of our trust.

A word to the Alabama Conference, brethren of the ministry and laity. The subject of rearing a college in our own borders has been and is still agitated amongst us. Is it best so to do? I, for one, think not. I see neither policy or economy in the enterprise. Some say it is too difficult of access. To this I answer, these difficulties are being removed by the various projected railroads. On the west border of the Conference by the Mobile and Ohio road. The Memphis and Atlantic road will soon be an unbroken line, running within four miles of the college. Eastern Alabama has now easy access by railroads and steamboats, with only fifteen miles of staging, which will very soon be entirely done away with. In the centre of the State, the Selma and Tennessee River Railroad is being rapidly completed.

On my return from La Grange, a few days since, I had a conversation with Gov. Collier, who is in favor of the State running a road from Montevallo, the present terminus of the Selma road, direct to North Alabama. This is an important work, and I think the time has arrived, in the march of intelligence and enterprise, when the State will come forward and give such aid as will bring North and South Alabama in social, commercial and political association. All of these facilities of access will be consummated much sooner than we could rear and put in successful operation a college within the bounds of our own Conference. Then why paralize and weaken an enterprise which has cost us so much anxiety, toil and money? Where, in the whole State, is there a spot so favorably suited to the situation of a college? It is remarkably healthy, and far removed from the fruitful sources of temptation to the youth. For a situation it is without an equal in the South-west, and will, in a few years, be one of the most accessible. I am opposed to such movements and talk, "in toto." Some say they want their sons nearer home. Take the history of college students, and you will find that young men residing in the vicinity of a college, as a general thing, make less proficiency than those from abroad. The cause is obvious. Frequent visits home, pic nics, wedding parties, "et cetera," dissipate the mind, deprive them of the advantages of regular and uniform recitations, and the inculcable advantages of literary societies. For one, I don't want a college near me, at which to educate my sons. What of a few dollars expense to secure, as I conceive, these superior advantages? We have labored and prayed, and given too much money, and too often seen the good fruit of our exertion, to abandon old La Grange, whose streams have been gladening and blessing the West for a quarter of a century. Let us rather continue to toil, pray and give, and then we may hope, as her present prospects are bright and still brightening. It is a great pity some of our people are so fickle. They talk loud, promise much, but too soon become discouraged. Suppose we abandon La Grange, with what face can we go to our friends and ask them to build us another college. To the rescue, friends. Let us hold on, work on, support it, and make our beloved La Grange College unsurpassed. This ought, and it must be done, or we will fail to redeem the promises and pledges we have given the public, and especially the Church.

I have often been much mortified at seeing our most prominent brethren sending their sons to institutions where moral and religious instruction is never tendered to the pupils, and as for revivals of religion, no such thing is ever heard of. No wonder that many of them return home imbued with infidelity; or, at least, repudiating the Church of their fathers. As fathers, Methodists and Christians, piety should be the "first and last" in the training of our sons. As sources of solid and substantial learning, as well as wholesome religious instruction and training, La Grange College and our institutions generally, will not suffer in comparison with others. Whilst at La Grange I met with a very pious and intelligent brother from East Alabama, who had two sons there. A short time since he personally knew nothing of our college—save that it was under the direction and control of our Conference. Many institutions in his native State were to him much more convenient, but the above mentioned fact induced him to patronize old La Grange. His example struck me with much force, and I earnestly commend it to our other brethren. Let us be united and sustain our Church institutions.

R. A. BAKER.

Summerfield, Ala., June 22, 1853.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES

EVERY DAY LIFE.

Now, my dear reader, if you have no objection, I will introduce you to the interior of a well regulated Jewish household. Over the gate you perceive, in large Hebrew letters, that truly oriental index of hospitality: "Blessed art thou in coming, and blessed art thou in going." "Shalom alechem" (peace be with you,) would be the greeting awaiting you from the master of the house, and a vernacular "be welcome" from the lady—were you of the Mosaic faith. To the Gentile he is not so gracious, and in his intercourse with him he lays by his oriental manner.

Do you see yonder, on the east side of the room, that frame with the embroidered word Misrach, (East.) You will find it in every house, to indicate the point whither the Jew is to turn his face when praying. But it is not in the parlor we must look for the national characteristics; for, with the exception of the said picture, the Sabbath-lamp, and the phylactery-bags, the room resembles that of its Gentile neighbor. To get a true insight of the heavy burdens imposed on the Jewish matron, I must take you into the kitchen. Start not—for know that on the Continent (and particularly among the Jews,) the kitchen yields to the parlor only in splendor, and is quite a different affair from what is thus denominated in this part of the world. It is a spacious apartment, you perceive, and needs must be; for every thing here is in double sets: the hearth, the plate, china, pots and kettles, as well as all the other culinary apparatus.

And pray, what is all this for? You shall hear. In Ex. xxiii. 19, it says: "Thou shalt not seethe a kid in the milk of its mother," and never, sure, was there a larger superstructure upon so slender a foundation, than the complicated system which the Rabbinists support by this text. They take it to express that flesh and milk must never come in contact with each other. They, therefore, have a separate set of utensils for any meals, in which milk, butter or cheese may enter, and which cannot be used at dinner, if there is to be meat of any kind. Fish are neutral ground, and may be used "fleshy" or "milky"—the two cardinal divisions of the Jewish kitchen. If, by any mischance, a drop of milk—or water boiled in a "milky" vessel—should fall on any of the dishes or utensils belonging to the other department, they are Trephah, (literally torn, but meaning "unclean,") and can no longer be used. This same word trephah is the great bugbear of the Jewish housekeeper. As a matter of course, they can never employ Gentile domestics in this part of the house.

I well recollect, when on an emergency a lady once employed an ignorant peasant girl to supply, for awhile, the place of a Hebrew domestic just left, and how, her instructions to the contrary notwithstanding, she washed the "fleshy" and "milky" dishes in the same vessel, and then put them all together on the same shelves. Nor have I forgotten the domestic revolution succeeding it, and how the "gudeman" grumbled at the china-dealer's long account. But there was no help for it. To entrust a Gentile with so important an affair was indeed a very flagrant offence; and the Rabbi imposed a penance upon the lady, viz.: to spin Zizis or fringes, (mentioned in my last.)

"Fleshy" food may be taken at the expiration of an hour after the eating of "milky" viands; but five hours must elapse after the eating of any kind of meat, ere it may be followed by any thing made out of milk. Fish, bread, fruit and vegetables are neutral, and may be partaken of at any time. Do you see this meat spread on a kind of stove over a tub? It has just come from the butcher, and is trephah until free from every drop of blood. It is strewn over with salt to draw the blood, and two hours afterward water is copiously poured upon it, which takes away both salt and blood; then the meat is kosher—clean. I need not mention that they have very good authority for this custom, both sacred and sanitary.

The ladies have to give their personal superintendence to these matters; and the Talmudists, thinking considerately that they would thus have quite enough to do, absolved them from many ceremonies devolving on the other sex. They need pray only when convenient—say once every Sabbath. In school they simply learn to read Hebrew, without understanding much about it; and as they seldom or never read the Bible in the vernacular, they are generally very ignorant of the principles of their faith, and try to work out their salvation by an implicit adherence to the ceremonial law, which her mother instils into her mind from early childhood.

The great theological and psychological problem, whether a woman has a soul, seems to have been solved in the negative by the old Talmudists. Many are the tirades against the fair sex contained in their ponderous tomes: here's a specimen: "He that teaches Torah"—(law, including the Talmud, as well as the Pentateuch,) "to his daughter, is worthy of death"—because a woman can keep no secret, and the contents of the law must not be divulged to the Gentiles. Although the spirit of the times has rendered these doctrines obsolete, yet even at this day every Jew says in his daily morning prayer: "Blessed art thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, for not having created me a woman!!!" And the ladies, poor creatures, resignedly substitute thanks for having been "created according to God's will!" I think it would not be a bad idea to send a dozen or two of our Lucy Stones and Abby Kellys across the water, to teach these benighted females their "Rights!"

KILLING ANIMALS.

Almost everybody knows that the Jews kill their animals in a peculiar manner, and have many attendant ceremonies; and their Scripture authority for this is all but imaginary. All that Moses ever says about it is, "thou shalt slay," or, "and he slew," etc. Now, say the Rabbies, this is so very indefinite that it implies another [the oral] law; and then of course they go on making these other laws ad libitum. No one can slay an animal without having studied all these regulations, passed examination, and received a license from the Rabbi. In every congregation there is a functionary of this sort; though sometimes the Hazan or "Reader" performs also the duties of the Shochet, or "slayer." The animal is not prostrated with the axe, but first suspended, and then has its throat cut. The Shochet has a long knife—say two feet long—which must be free from rust, nick, or any imperfection of the cutting edge, one cut only being allowed. If more is required, or the blessing neglected, which must be said at the right moment, the animal is deemed unfit for food by the Hebrews. After the animal is perfectly dead, it is examined by the Shochet. If the lungs and liver be found to adhere to the sides, or any lumps be found on them, he declares it trephah, and the meat can only be sold to Gentiles. But if the organs are in a healthy condition, it is kosher, or proper. As it is difficult to separate "the sinew" spoken of in Gen xxxii. 32, from the flesh, and as many Jews do not know at all what sinew is meant, the Rabbies have thought proper to interdict the use of the hind quarters altogether, on the principle of "the hedge round the saw." And strange as it may appear, a piece of the hind quarter of a kosher beef is considered as trephah as a rasher of bacon!

Fowls are killed with a smaller knife; the blood is allowed to fall upon some ashes, and then covered over. Pigeons and other clean birds (Lev. xi.) of a small size, can only be slain three at a time, as the name of the Lord must not be pronounced on trifling occasions, and the Shochet must never draw his knife without saying the required blessing. Of course the Jew eats of no animal forbidden in Lev. xi., or any clean animal, not killed in the prescribed form.

On the Continent, where turkeys still are very scarce, a fat goose is considered a great bon bouche, and my brethren have a hereditary prejudice in its favor. They fatten a dozen or two of them, and use the grease thus obtained for culinary purposes, (since they may not use lard.) It often happens that when the goose is cleaned, various spots become visible, such as a blue leg, or some other such blemish. When these are evident marks of disease, the bird of course is trephah: but when they are but slight, and the goose is very fat, a decision is not so easily reached: a shaanah—inquiry of the Rabbi—is made; if the Rabbi is in doubt, which he always is, he will suspend the weight of the goose on one of the sinews of the leg; if it holds, it is kosher; if not, trephah. Now, I have myself seen an orthodox Rabbi declare a goose trephah, and unlawful to be eaten by a Jew, when the owner, much afflicted at the sad prospect of being deprived of his savory dish for Friday night, very cunningly applied to another Rabbi, less "high church," who of course declared it kosher, being ignorant of his rival's previous decision. The pious man went home and ate his goose with great gusto, proclaiming aloud his triumph over Rabbi No. 1. As to his having any personal responsibility in the matter, that is out of the question; "what do I pay the Rabbi for?" I should like to know myself.

JOSEPHUS.

Louisiana.

USE THE MINUTES.—"It is asked," says Channing, "how can the laboring man find time for self-culture? I answer that an earnest purpose finds time or makes time. It seizes upon spare moments, and turns fragments into golden account. A man who follows his calling with industry and spirit, and uses his earnings economically, will always have some portion of the day at command. And it is astonishing how fruitful of improvement a short season becomes, when eagerly seized and faithfully used. It has often been observed that those who have the most time at their disposal, profit by it the least. A single hour in the day, steadily given to the study of some interesting accumulation of knowledge."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

THE BETTER COUNTRY.

BY MARY HARRIS.

Where jasmines weave a gorgeous screen,
With sunbeams peeping in between,
A little child, with golden hair,
Was culling flowers bright and rare.

A tiny brooklet at his feet,
Warbling music quaint and sweet,
Mirrored within its bosom fair
The little boy with golden hair.

A beauteous thing was that fair child,
Bright as the flowers on which he smiled,
As sunshine and shadow, mingled there,
Softly played with his golden hair.

But many seasons have passed away,
Of joy and sorrow, since that day,
When the fair child with golden hair
Was culling flowers bright and fair.

An old man now with locks of gray
Is sitting where the moonbeams play,
Where a silvery brooklet sweet
Doth warble gently at his feet.

As there he sits this solemn hour,
His thoughts are ruled by a mystic power,—
And lo! yon stars, like spirits of love,
Seem beckoning his soul to realms above.

Through the wild maze of years profound,
A boy he sees, with wild flowers crown'd,
Listing the cadence of flowing streams,
While an angel, bright, bends o'er his dreams.

Now the boy is gone, and the flowers are dead;
Th' brightness of earth from his spirit hath fled;
But the angel points to a land of flowers,
Where streams e'er flow 'mid porennial bowers.

Shelby Co., Alabama.

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

OAK BOWERY COMMENCEMENT.

MR. EDITOR:—Having been appointed by Conference one of the Visiting Committee to Oak Bowery College, I was promptly in attendance at its commencement, beginning on Friday, the 17th instant, and ending on Tuesday following. It has become so common for visiting and examining committees to praise teachers and pupils, that you look for it with as much certainty as you do to hear a preacher, who preaches a funeral, praise the virtues of the dead. But, sir, if I should speak in terms of commendation of the exercises of the above occasion, please exonerate me from the charge of following custom. As I was the only one of the committee present, it required that I should be constantly on hand during the examination of the classes, and therefore I had a good opportunity of judging of their merits. In consequence of the protracted ill health of Mr. Wm. F. Samford, President of the Institution, the business of instruction during the past session, and the conducting of the examination, fell into the hands of the female teachers—among whom are Miss Bailey, the two Misses Tonmer, and Miss Starr. These ladies have indeed done nobly. They have had control of a goodly number of students, who gave evidence, by their discreet behavior, and by their familiarity with their text books, that their manners and their minds had been well cultivated.

The primary classes, under Miss Starr, acquitted themselves handsomely—not only answering the questions propounded to them accurately, but distinctly, speaking out to the comfort of all who had come to listen.

The higher classes in the literary department, under care of Miss Bailey and the younger Miss Tonmer, did equal credit to themselves and their instructors.

The compositions of the junior and graduating classes were quite entertaining, being good in point of style, sensible, and were well read. There was running through them a healthy moral sentiment, which spoke well for the influence they were under.

The musical department has been under the control of the elder Miss Tonmer. She is a very skillful performer, and an apt instructer. Her pupils and herself gave to the audience a rare musical feast. Some of the pieces sung and played were thrilling and entrancing. Miss Tonmer is not only skillful in this department, but in others, being a finished scholar.

Dr. Means, of Georgia, was with us, and preached the Commencement Sermon. He also preached Sabbath night. The Doctor has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most eloquent orators in Georgia. I heard him preach when I was a boy, and have never, up to this day, lost the impression he made upon me. He is an ornament to his State, as a man of science, and to his Church, as a Christian and minister.

The literary address was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Connor, of the Georgia Conference. The audience appeared pleased. The address was well elaborated and finely delivered.

Upon the whole, Mr. Editor, the exercises were interesting and well calculated to reflect much credit upon the institution. Oak Bowery ought to succeed, because it is situated in one of the choicest parts of Alabama. The water is good, the air salubrious, the lands fertile, and the people, many of them, rich. They have a beautiful Church edifice, with a large membership. There appears a strong desire among the citizens to build up an institution which shall rival the best in the land, by affording every facility for imparting thorough instruction to those who may resort thither.

C. D. OLIVER.

June 27, 1853.

PRAYER.—One has somewhat quaintly, but very truly, said: "God looks not at the oratory of your prayers, how eloquent they are; nor at their geometry, how long they are; nor at their arithmetic, how many they are; nor at their logic, how methodical they are; but he looks at their sincerity—how spiritual they are."

A GOOD HEARER.

1. He is sure to be in season at church. His goodness would be marred, were he a loiterer. He would aid in spoiling other men's good hearing, were he to disturb sanctuary services by late attendance.

2. He appears to hear, as well as really hears. When people's heads are down, or askew, looking out of the windows, or at other worshippers, or examining ceiling and walls, etc., perhaps they can hear, and perhaps they do. But it appears as if they did not. The preacher doubts it, and so do others. But the good hearer looks to where the preaching comes from. He hears the better for it; and he thus seems to others to hear, which is worth something in the sanctuary.

3. The good hearer does nothing else but hear. Some investigate the hymn book, some inspect post and pillar, especially every late comer, as if life depended on knowing who he was. Some turn in for a nap, and some turn out their imaginations on a cruise all over the creation. Thus many do any thing but hear. But the good hearer does nothing else; he came for that purpose, and he does it.

4. He helps others to hear; his example sheds a happy influence round him. It interests and effects them to see how interested he is, and they insensibly catch his spirit, and become good hearers too.

5. And he makes, or helps others to make, good preachers. The pulpit fires up when the pew is wide awake to catch every word. It makes the preacher feel as if he were doing something to some purpose, when he can gaze upon a whole sanctuary full of up-turned faces and fixed eyes. It sends the life-blood quicker through his veins. The hearers warm him up, and then his augmented ardor and energy warms them up, and they have a good, warm time of it, helping one another.

Thus we can see,

1. How the pulpit eloquence of our day can be improved.

2. The subject shows how much preachers are indebted to the two classes respectively of their hearers—the good hearers and the good sleepers.

3. The pew and the pulpit are co-workers for man's best good, and what God has joined together let no man put asunder. [N. Y. Evangelist.

MILTON'S DEATH BED.

John Milton, the chief of poets, held the post of Latin Secretary under Cromwell. At the restoration he was, of course, dismissed from his office. He was now poor and blind, and to these afflictions Charles II. added political persecution; he fined him, and doomed his writings on Liberty to be publicly burned. Nothing daunted by these fierce and multiplied trials, the great poet retired into private life, evoked his mighty genius, and produced "Paradise Lost!" But after he had endured the ills of poverty several years, Charles, feeling the need of his matchless talents, invited him to resume his former post, with all its honors, emoluments, and court favors. But Milton knew that the price of this honor must be silence on the great question of human liberty. Therefore, he did not hesitate a moment. It was a strong temptation—the bribe was splendid. By merely keeping silence, he could have honor, abundance, and high position, in exchange for poverty, persecution and neglect! But this could not be. The poet loved truth too well; his soul was too noble, too sincere, too firm in its allegiance to God and liberty, to barter away its right to condemn tyranny for place or gold. Hence, he spurned the royal offer, clung to his principles and his poverty, until death called his free soul to enter its congenial heaven. And so gentle was the summons; so sweetly calm was his unruffled spirit in the hour of dissolution, that his friends knew not the precise moment of his death.

How sublimely beautiful the grand old poet stands out before the mind in this fact! Harassed, tried, aged, and blind; having the power to turn the enmity of a royal despotism into favor, by simply refraining to speak and write on the liberties of mankind, he grows majestic in his poverty, as he nobly spurns the bribe in obedience to the voice of duty. For the truth's sake, he holds fast to poverty and obscurity. To maintain the right of free speech, he sacrifices himself, and defies the power of the king. Noble Milton! As the author of Paradise Lost, seated in his study, surrounded by the sublime creations of his genius, he wears an aspect of sublimity; but in that act of fidelity to God and liberty, his attitude is far more grand, sublime, and beautiful. As the first of poets he shines resplendent with intellectual lustre; as the scorner of the royal bribe he exhibits the moral grandeur of a faithful man—he fills our ideal of the man of faith, standing defiant and unawed by human power, because upheld by an immovable trust, and by an unconquerable allegiance to the invisible God. Well did the ancient heathen exclaim of a good man, in similar circumstances. "See a sight worthy of God!" [Zion's Herald.

Influence of the Reformation.

The London Times says: "As a broad and general conclusion, there is no historical fact more incontestable than that those States which embraced the doctrine of the Reformation have advanced in science, freedom, wealth and prosperity, while those who rejected them have either remained stationary, or have decayed in almost exact proportion to the blindness of their bigotry. Spain became politically defunct, Portugal ceased to become a maritime or colonization power; Naples sank into the degradation we behold. On the other side, Holland, which had furnished a type of the forthcoming conflict in its victory over Spain, became a formidable State; Prussia, in the course of a century and a half, divided the supremacy of Germany with the old Imperial House; and Great Britain became what she is. France, midway between north and south, and contested by Catholic and Huguenot, derived at least enough vigor from Protestantism to run a course of its own. In Switzerland the contrast is peculiarly conspicuous from the smallness of the scale. The change from a Popish to a Protestant canton is a change from apathy and stagnation, to enterprise, vitality and power."

The Value of Silence.

How many are there of those popular sayings, and what good ones they are, on the wisdom of governing the tongue. I speak not now of those urging the duty, though such are by no means wanting—but the wisdom, prudence and profit, of knowing how to keep silence as well as how to speak.

The Persian, perhaps, is familiar to many: "Speech is silvern; silence is golden;" which we may compare the Italian, "he who speaks sows; he who keeps silence reaps;" and on the safety that is in silence, I know none happier than another from the same quarter, and one most truly characteristic: "Silence was never written down;" while the irrevocableness of the word spoken is set out by many striking comparisons; it is the arrow from the bow, the stone from the sling, and can as little be recalled as these. Our own, "He who says what he likes, will hear what he does not like," gives a further motive of self-government in speech; and the Spanish one is in a higher strain, "The evil which issues from thy mouth falls into thy bosom." Nor is it enough to abstain ourselves from all such words; we must not make ourselves partakers in those of others, which it is only too easy to do; for, as the Chinese have said very well, "He who laughs at an impertinence, makes himself an accomplice." [Unc. Art.

A Beautiful Illustration.

A florist will tell you that if you paint the flower-pot that contains a favorite, beautiful, fragrant flower, the plant will wither, and perhaps its blossom will die. You shut out the air and moisture from passing through the roots, and your paint itself is poisonous. Just so mere external cultivation, superficial, worldly accomplishment, or a too exclusive anxiety and regard for that, injures the soul. The vase may be ever so beautifully ornamented; but if you deny the water of life to the flower, it must die. And there are kinds of ornamental accomplishments, the very process of which is as deleterious to the soul as the paint upon the flower-pot is pernicious to the plant, whose delicate leaves not only inhale a poisonous atmosphere during your very process of rendering the exterior more tasteful, but the whole earth is dried and devoid of nourishment. Nature never paints, but all her forms of loveliness are a growth, a native character, possession and development from the beginning. If the sun can never be called a painter; it is only because the plants absorb his rays, and receive them into the very texture and life of their vegetation. So, whatever is real knowledge, wisdom, principle, character, and life in education, is a process of the absorption and devisement of truth—is not mere painting.

[Cheever.

INFLUENCE OF HYMNS.—Benefits the most substantial are often those of which the least tics is taken; and silent blessings are wont to be silently received. Thus putting out of view their adaptation to public worship, hymns and spiritual songs—a species of literature in which the English language is more rich than any other—administer comfort, excitement and instruction, to an extent and in a degree which can never be calculated. The robust in body and mind, the earthly, the frivolous, know nothing of that solace, of that renovation of heart, which sacred poetry is every day conveying to the spirits of tens of thousands around them. It is not merely when sickness has slackened the cords of life, but also when the heart has become benumbed by the toils and cares of a common day, and even when the understanding is rendered obtuse. It is then that the hymn and psalm, at a late hour, restore the spirits, and give renewed clearness, by giving consistency to the distracted intellect, and so lead the intellect back to its place of rest, in the presence of "things unseen and eternal."

[Isaac Taylor.

THE WHITE HOUSE.—A correspondent of the Christian Mirror, "A Pastor," makes the following statement which will gratify every pious heart:

"I am sure that many parents will rejoice to know, on unquestionable authority, that the Presidential Mansion is a house of prayer. Daily social devotions, attended on Sabbath morning by all the inmates of the house, together with the constant recognition of God at table, while they mark the highest household in our land as exempt from the malediction pronounced against those "families that call not upon the name" of Jehovah, may serve to encourage Christians and set a good example to all."

The World's Temperance Convention have issued the call for that meeting. It will take place in New York, on Tuesday, 6th September, and will continue in session for four days. Its business will relate especially to the enactment of a prohibitory law, like the Maine law, by the Governments of all States and Nations. The committee extend an invitation to the friends of temperance in every part of the world, assuring them of a cordial welcome to the meeting, and an opportunity to exhibit fully the advance of the cause in their own respective districts.

True friendship is made up of truth and kindness, prudence and piety.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, July 9.

CIRCUIT LIBRARIES.

The good suggestion of the Newberne Circuit, communicated by Rev. F. M. Grace, that Circuits and Stations provide a standing library for the itinerant pastor, ought not stop this side of action. There be no disciplinary allowance for his buying books, which, added to the difficulties of transportation, reduces the stock below the minimum point of the treasury of knowledge that hath "things new and old" in it.

A pastor in Louisiana informs us that his charge have been presented with such a library, at the cost of $235 00, by one gentleman. This is better than giving him house rent. His hearers will say so.

OAK BOWERY.—Rev. T. P. Crymes writes, after a gratified attendance upon the Commencement, that President Samford's ill health has caused his much regretted resignation. The diplomas were delivered to the graduating class and a happy impromptu baccalaureate, by Rev. C. D. Oliver.

JEWISH CEREMONIES.—Those readers who have not read the articles of Josephus, missed what others much enjoyed. He tells, on good authority, things worth knowing, and tells them excellently. Read the past numbers, and this one, and those to come.

HARPER (FOR JULY) AND PUTNAM.—This brace of monthlies makes the hot weather endurable. Carver & McGinnis furnish them.

BLACKWOOD, JUNE.—A very readable account here of the Pitcairn Islanders. One Bible and one man has raised up, from this mutineer family, a paradise in the Pacific.

The Churches of the Sandwich Islands, not long ago idolaters, give from $20,000 to $30,000 annually for the support of the Gospel among themselves and elsewhere—one of the results of missions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY—NEW SCHOOL PRESBYTERIAN.—The Christian Observer says of this Church Council:

"NO SECESSION—NONE SHOULD BE THOUGHT OF.—We congratulate all concerned on the integrity, union, harmony, and enlargement of our Church as represented in the General Assembly recently met in Buffalo, whose sessions were duly closed on Tuesday of last week, the 31st of May. The rumor of excitement and threatened secession, sent through the land on the wires of the telegraph, was a false alarm—given perhaps by an enemy, or if not, by one who has an interest in getting up exciting dispatches. It is condemned as a libel on the Assembly—and we expose it as a sheer fabrication, as unworthy of credit, as the fictions of the greatest of all liars—Common Fame."

* * * * * * *

"Of the measures of the Assembly—the noble resolve to raise $100,000 to aid in the erection of Church edifices—the measures contemplated to advance the cause of education for the ministry—the work of Home Missions—the publication of Tracts," &c.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.—At the recent anniversary, the Earl of Shaftsbury, in his address stated, "that from the first institution of the Society in March, 1804, which took place in a single room, where about three hundred persons were assembled, upwards of eight hundred societies, including colonial, Irish, and foreign branches, had been established. The Scriptures had been translated into no less than 148 languages and dialects, of which 121 had, prior to the establishment of the Society, never appeared in type. Upwards of 43,000,000 of these translated copies had been disseminated among, it was computed, not less than 60,000,000 of the human race. Of the languages into which these copies had been rendered, upwards of 25 had previously no alphabet, and were merely an oral form. This Society was essentially a 'Free Trade Society,' a 'Peace Society,' and a 'Defence Society;' one, too, affording a 'cheap defence to nations.'"

GREECE.—A letter from Athens, dated May 27, says:

The case of the Rev. Mr. King, the Missionary from the United States, has taken a new form. The Ministry has decided to pay the demand made on his behalf by the American Minister. Mr. King had demanded the sum of twelve or fifteen thousand drachmas for the site of a building used for public purposes—not as has been stated in the newspapers, three hundred thousand drachmas; while the Ministry declined complying with the second demand of Mr. Marsh. This was that the sentence of the Areopagus should be rescinded by an authoritative act of the Government. By this sentence, Mr. King was condemned to fourteen days imprisonment. A demand of this kind could not properly be made by one Government of another. A relief from the difficulty was presented in the fact that Mr. Marsh had not been accredited at the Court of Athens, and consequently his interference in the affair was not official, but officious. The two United States frigates that have been expected here for some time have not yet arrived.

THE GERMAN MUSICAL JUBILEE.—The grand pic-nic and festival of the German Musical Societies, on the 28th ult., at Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, was attended by about 5,000 persons. The Philadelphia Ledger, speaking of the concert at the Museum in that city, on the 27th ult., says:

"It was attended by upwards of 3,000 ladies and gentlemen, and the vocalists performed their music in excellent style. Governor Bigler and several other distinguished persons were present."

The Inquirer also says:

"The effect of the great number of voices uniting in ... was truly grand. The sound went up like ... of many waters, and ... to the same centre of every one present. It will never be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to be in attendance."

"THE FOURTH"

A lively appreciation of American institutions was manifested in this part of the Republic on the late anniversary. Military and civic demonstrations, Sabbath School and Society celebrations of unabated spirit and unusual good behavior, were the order of the great day here and the regions about. The 77th year of Independence is tolled out, and the watchman from the tower cries, "All's well." Thou Lord, only makest us to dwell in safety.

The Temperance Convention in this city, and meetings in some villages along the Gulf, inaugurated a new Declaration of Independence. They declared that the people had a right to be free from the liquor tax. King Alcohol was repudiated, as King George had been. Strange it is that this worse despotism has been suffered so long.

The Picayune publishes the resolutions, and says:

"But what will the political wire manœuverers say to those resolutions which stigmatize the bottle and the bar-room influence, so long a prominant but disgraceful agent in political contests? A reform in that respect is among the most essential wants of the times, and is needed for the securing of every political blessing which we enjoy in such profusion."

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS OF THE STATE TEMPERANCE CONVENTION OF LOUISIANA.

Whereas, in the sense of this Convention, the indiscriminate traffic in intoxicating drinks, licensed and sanctioned by the laws of this State, is the fruitful source of nine-tenths of the crimes and offences of every grade that disturb the peace and order of the community, and is daily and rapidly undermining our social and political Institutions; and whereas, further, the experience of our sister States of the Union has shown, conclusively, that all partial measures for the restraint of this traffic and the repression of its attendant evils, have failed to effect the reform now demanded by every interest of our country, but that the great principle of TOTAL PROHIBITION, inaugurated in the North-east, is now gradually sweeping the foul vice of intemperance from our republican land: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the ultimate object of the friends of the Temperance Reform in this State should be the total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, except such as are really adapted and applied to mechanical, medicinal and sacramental purposes.

Resolved, That, to this end, the Legislature of this State should be urged to take immediate steps to ascertain, by a general vote, the wishes and will of the people of Louisiana on this important subject; and that so soon as their voice shall have been pronounced in favor of prohibition, "a Louisiana Liquor Law" should be passed to suppress the common manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, and regulate the mode in which liquors may be obtained for mechanical, medicinal and sacramental purposes.

Resolved, That the permanent executive committee of this Convention prepare, and cause to be circulated among the people of this State, at as early a day as practicable, the form or outline of an act to secure this great object, accompanied by an address explaining its motives and ends.

Resolved, That we hail the passage of the act of the Legislature of the 4th of March, 1852, entitled, "An act concerning the licensing of drinking houses and the sale of intoxicating liquors in this State," as the first great step in the path of legal suasion; and we do urge and insist that it is the imperative duty of the respective parochial and municipal authorities throughout the State to carry out the spirit of said act, by submitting annually, to the citizens and voters within their jurisdiction, the question of "For" or "Against" license, and thereupon, in obedience to the popular vote of each ward of a city, or of each town, or any ward thereof, or of each ward of a parish, to ordain within what limits the future sale of intoxicating liquors shall be restricted or allowed, and provide suitable and severe penalties for the infraction of such ordinance.

Resolved, That while this Convention repudiates all alliance with the politics of the State in a party point of view, it looks upon the temperance reform as a question of paramount importance, socially, civilly and politically. Its members, therefore, do hereby pledge themselves to support no man for the local councils, or police juries, or for the Legislature, who is unwilling to consult the views of the people on this question and, when fairly ascertained, to enforce them in wise and salutary enactments, by the police power of the State.

Resolved, That the practice, prevalent among candidates for public office, of frequenting coffee-houses and bar-rooms, securing their influence, and treating their inmates and visitors, with the view of obtaining votes, deserves and should meet with the severest reprehension and reproach; that such a course not only disgraces the office-seeker and derogates from the dignity of the office sought by him, but it also degrades the suffragan, dishonors the ballot-box, and brings contempt on our free, republican institutions.

Resolved, That the establishment of election polls in coffee-houses is an incentive to corruption, and virtually deprives of the right of suffrage the sober, honest citizen, whose peace and liberty depend on the free exercise of his vote and the purity of the ballot-box.

Resolved, That in the present juncture of our political administration, it is the duty of every American citizen to declare, and the members of this Convention do therefore announce, that they will support no man at the ballot-box or elsewhere, who is addicted to intoxication or frequents coffee-houses for electioneering purposes, or votes for the location of election polls in coffee-houses.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee of this Convention shall, as soon as practicable, be composed of at least one resident citizen of each parish of the State, and of each District of the city of New Orleans; that five members thereof, in the city of New Orleans, shall constitute a quorum; that, with the sanction of the President of the Convention, they shall have and exercise the power to appoint parish agents, lecturers, and sub-committees, and also devise ways and means to raise funds to defray the expenses of said committee, and to take all other proper steps to promote the objects of this Convention.

LOVE TO GOD'S HOUSE.

The North Louisianian publishes, at the request of many of the principal citizens of Bastrop, an able sermon delivered by Rev. R. Trippet, on the 5th ult., in the Methodist Church—subject, "Love to God's House," Ps. xxvi.: 8. It is well for this rapidly populating land that many of God's messengers are abroad, demonstrating the beauty, the value and power of the Gospel. Here is a practical appeal to infidelity:

"It is the testimony of travelers and of missionaries to foreign lands, that savages cannot be civilized by systems of mere education. It is true religion, and true religion only, that changes the heart, and until the heart is changed, there can be no real elevation of character, for out of the heart are the issues of life; and until it is changed by the grace of God, it is the seat of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful kind. How can sweetness of manners mark the intercourse of society, so long as ferocious passions are permitted to rage and brutify the human mind, and put out the light of truth and hush the voice of conscience? Why has not infidelity supported missionaries in heathen lands? Why have infidels not civilized some island of the sea, or some spot of the globe? Why, if the gospel is not necessary as the forerunner and ally of civilization? Let them point to a single spot of earth in Europe, Asia, Africa, or America, or to a single island of the sea or ocean, that infidelity has civilized, reformed and blest. Let them point to a single family, neighborhood, town or individual that has been made better, that has been educated, that has been made more useful and happy by infidelity.

"The only way to civilize and to refine, and to give permanent elevation to any community, is to give it the gospel. Erect the pulpit, and around it schools and benevolent institutions will spring up, as the thousand lesser stars follow the evening star. The accompaniments of the sanctuary are the living ministry, the preached gospel, the Sabbath, the ordinances of religion, and the blessings of education. Schools, academies and colleges owe their very existence to the house of God."

The house of God! Who looks for it, thinks of it, on entering a place. Yet, if it be not there—if its beneficent influences are not abroad—who would take up an abode? Who would buy and live and raise up a family there? Scoffers and Christians, parents and property-holders, all have an interest in this house. And yet its building and repairs, its support and paying it out of debt, is regarded only a Church affair—let the members do it. On this a well put paragraph of the sermon:

"What was the value of Lot's house in Sodom, though it was, perhaps, built of the most costly materials, decorated with all the art, and furnished with all the elegancies of his age, yet subject to the invasion of a most depraved and licentious community, compared with the humble tent of Abraham under the oak in the plains of Mamre. Lot's neighbors were not under the influence of religion. Abraham's people were."

METHODIST PRESS.

TAKING AWAY THE CRUTCH.—Zion's Herald likes the prospect of making the Book Concern do its own work, and throwing the support of the superannuated ministry, &c., upon the living Church:

The liability of the Book Concern to make its usual dividends to the Annual Conferences this year, is a fortunate event in the history of the M. E. Church. It takes a crutch from the hands of the Church, on which she has already leaned too long, to the injury of her worn-out ministers—a crutch she does not need, and which has really hindered her from doing her duty. Its unexpected removal, by making it necessary to appeal to the people for direct contributions to support their worn-out preachers, will demonstrate that these deserving men can be sustained, and well sustained too, without any aid from the dividends of the Book Concern. And may we not hope that it will, hereafter, lead the conferences to adopt systematic measures for the competent support of their superannuated members; and to each action of the General and Annual Conferences as may be necessary to devote the profits of the Book Concern to the work of cheapening its publications!

BIBLICAL INSTITUTE.—Dr. Dempster, President of the Concord Biblical Institute—the first and only Methodist "Theological"—took occasion, before the Black River Conference, to vindicate the experiment. We extract from a report in the Northern Advocate. After stating that, six years ago, the Institute began with seven students, and last year it numbered above seventy—that its funds were safe—he said:

Sir, six years ago the future existence of this school of the prophets was an utter uncertainty; now it is a fixed fact. Then was the anxious question whether its workings would harmonize with the mighty movements of our grand itinerancy—now those workings themselves solve that question. Then but few small conferences patronized it—now the number has swelled to eight, and many other conferences, which rejected the principle on which it was founded, now practically adopt that principle, by connecting BIBLICAL DEPARTMENTS with their own educational institutions. What else has so prominently marked the leading institutions in almost every conference through the great West! Does not this apply to the University in Ohio? to the McKendree College in Lebanon, to the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, to the Asbury College in Indiana, and to many Conference Seminaries elsewhere? Nor has this great revolution in public opinion been restricted to the Middle and Western Conferences. It has swept like a wave of light over the South itself. One of the most active editors in the M. E. Church, South, thus remarked to me in person, one year since: "Just such an institution as yours at Concord is now needed by Methodism in the South, and the leading minds there are preparing the way, in silence, for its establishment."

"Now, sir, we affirm that the manner in which the "Institute" has endured its six years probation—has passed through the fiery ordeal by which its tendencies were tested, is prophetic of its future behavior. Hundreds of our ministers—some blinded by prejudice, or hesitating in doubt, or tremulous with hope, have personally witnessed at our examinations the workings of the thing; and universally, without one known exception, the scales have fallen from their eyes—doubt has yielded to conviction, and hope given place to certainty. The energy and beauty of its operations have allowed but one opinion to arise from personal inspection.

It is true, this great change of sentiment, as to ministerial education, which has passed upon whole conferences, is not often avowed in words, but is distinctly proclaimed by the stronger language of acts, to which we have alluded. These speak like the blast of a trumpet, of principles retracted, and of opposite ones adopted.

And what, sir, is there marvelous in all this? Was not Methodism from the very beginning a creature of Providence? Was it not so in the time and place of its birth, and in all the measures adopted by its great founder? Can its advocates stereotype its appliances, and be true to its principles? Can they be heedless of the providential changes passing on society, and still hope to meet the claims of God on their services to society? Can they dream of a stationary agency efficiently acting on an advancing age?

But, sir, to argue this question is no part of my present object. This has been sufficiently done on prior occasions. Indeed, all a priori argument is now superseded by the powerful results of unerring experiment.

When the Institute existed only in prospect, its friends were not unmindful that great discrepancy is common between what appears in plausible theory, and in practical results. In this instance, however, the test of experment has shown no such discrepancy in both intellectual and moral advancement; our young men have not merely exceeded their former selves, but likewise our most cherished hopes. Their piety has not languished, but generally kindled. Their call to the sacred office has not died away to an inaudible whisper, as it often does in other pursuits; but like the trump of God on the burning mountain, it has waxed louder and louder. Their missionary spirit has in many cases matured into a commanding principle, swaying the power of a passion that rules in death. Study, so far from having become the grave of pious emotion, has formed the pathway of its deepest researches, lighted by the flame of the altar. So that every acquired thought, like the dew-drop in the morning, has been made to reflect and refract the light of felt piety.

And, sir, what other result could a deliberating mind have anticipated? All truth is the quickener of the intellect, and when that is so pursued as to make it converge on the sacred office, it is a quickener of very moral power.

It is impossible to know the mode of teaching adopted in this Institute, without the conviction that it must give power to the intellect—that it must both elicit and enrich the mental faculties.

Of the manner, sir, allow me to adduce a specimen or two. It so teaches History as to make the facts disclose the principles which bind them together, and not so as to lumber the memory with unspeaking events. By this means the whole history of the Church becomes an exhibition of the workings of the supernatural principle on the ever varying mind of the race. It so expounds Mental and Moral Science as to prove the great principles of psychology and morals in harmony with the universal government over man, as to exhibit the relations of the intellect to the heart—the relations of man to man, of man to God, and of universal mind to all matter. It so teaches Natural Theology as to show the pupil how the grandest discoveries of science conspire to illustrate and sustain the loftiest claims of religion. It so develops Biblical Literature as to familiarize the learner with the philology of the two sacred languages in which God communed with man—with the archæology of both Testaments, and with the well settled principles by which they are to be interpreted. And—to give but another instance—it so inculcates SACRED RHETORIC as to divest the speaker of all his acquired awkwardness, and to give to his cultivated powers unrestrained scope. First spreading out before him those great principles common to all good speaking, and then by more than a score of carefully prepared lectures, exhibiting what is peculiar to pulpit eloquence.

GOOD SUGGESTION.—Listen to what the editor of the St. Louis Advocate says about nominating first-rate schools into fifth-rate colleges:

"Our brethren of Kentucky have determined to make an effort to establish a High School under the patronage of the Conference. This is the true policy of the Church in Kentucky and elsewhere—to establish good High Schools in every part of the country where it is at all practicable. It has been too common in parts of the West to call almost every school a college, and by such a course, in reference to the numerous little 'one-horse concerns' which have sprung up through the country, the standard of true education has been lowered, and an injury done to the cause, especially when these concerns began to imitate real colleges, by dealing out their D. D.'s, their LL. D.'s, &c., forcibly reminding one of 'Puss in boots,' and effecting nothing so much as making themselves ridiculous in the eyes of all who know what a college really is.

"We hope the brethren of Kentucky, having learned a lesson from Augusta and Transylvania, will now go seriously to work in a way that will likely do much for the cause of education."

WELL BEGUN.—Texas has begun the collections well in "an old Texan." May the new ones and others follow suit. Rev. R. Alexander writes to the Banner from his circuit:

"It is my privilege to report a donation to the Texas Conference Missionary Society of $200, all in double eagles. This donation is from Rev. Wm. Robinson. Father R. is an old Texan in moderate circumstances, but rich in faith, and zealous of good works. I want, in due time, to furnish him with certificates of life-membership of the Parent Society for all his children, and this will be to them a memorial."

PERSONAL SKETCHES, AGAIN.

The editor of the S. C. Advocate is getting away from us. Last year he called us "our confrère of the New Orleans Ch. Advocate." By referring to a French dictionary, we found that confrere meant brother, and felt complimented. In his paper of 1st inst. he calls us in plain English, cousin—"our amiable cousin of the N. O. C. Advocate." This looks like clawing off. But we mean to hold on to him, and claim kin as long as he will let us.

We hope the editor does not sympathize in the spirit of envy and detraction that characterizes his correspondent, "Cottager."—Yet he is lending himself to it, in the publications, to which we sometime ago objected. This sketch-work, always delicate, when done up with propriety, and within certain limits, we agree with him, is allowable and very readable. But when made the occasion of insendoes and cowardly attacks from an ambush, it is not to be tolerated. Ministers are not open, ex officio, to the depreciatory criticisms of any anonymous scribbler, who chooses to work off a little bile through the Church press. The houses of private gentlemen are not hotels, and a well mannered public will not wish to be introduced into them, without an invitation from the proprietor. It is this offensive and unwarrantable feature of this correspondence that we objected to; and we are not alone.

Passing by others of this covert kind, we quote this from one of these letters about New Orleans:

"Alas! Where is Jonah with rent garments, his sackcloth and sprinkled dust, with tremulous tone, sorrowful heart, proclaiming the solemn doom—for here is Nineveh over again. Messieurs preachers, here is something more to be done, than discussing abstract niceties of dogmatism, and talking about big guns and little ones, discussing fate, foreknowledge and free will, and pampering nabobs, because they have money."

"Messieurs preachers" can well afford to bear a chiding for their want of diligence and self-sacrifice from this modern Jonah—a gentleman of leisure, lounging about the St. Charles, visiting bal masque, and spending "an hour or two" at a late breakfast. But what mean those last words? "Why this unadulterated, gratuitous insult? Can the editor of that paper justify himself in such a publication?

Touching the matter of this writer having, on a former occasion, while taking off other distinguished preachers, taken off himself, our cotemporary ventures the following:

"We claim to know as much of the secrets of our own sanctum as the N. O. Advocate can possibly know. Of course that paper did not get the information on which it founds the charge from the party concerned. We know it did not receive the information from us. It hastily jumped at the conclusion; and that conclusion we here affirm to be wholly erroneous."

We know nothing of his sanctum. We never paid any one to take notes there and abuse his paper. Yet, when authorship is concerned, it is more important to be near the author than the printer. "Cottager" will thank his patron for assuming so much responsibility. While at it, why not put in a general denial! "Cottager" did not "deign an explanation!" Would not "notice the thing!".

The authorship in question is of no consequence to us, except in view of the above feeble statement of the editor of the S. C. Advocate. While his testimony would be conclusive on any subject, under proper circumstances for information, in this matter it is likely he has been misled by appearances. The first part of the letter referred to—the news part—may have been furnished by another. The "taking off" itself may have been in another handwriting. No doubt the thing was done modestly. But how happens it that, in the midst of "takings off," the accomplished writer, without any interruption in the series, is himself taken off! It is done as one would be supposed to do such a job for himself. The style is identical. A short time before it appeared, he elicited from a gentleman certain critiques on himself. They were unique and original. Our friend communicated them to no one else, and was not a little surprised and amused when they reappeared in this "taking off," with singular minuteness and accuracy! This looks like he had, at least, a hand in it! So much, in part only. But as our cotemporary has doubtless been misled in committing himself so extensively on this point, we forbear to press it further.

Bro. Wightman is a good man, and keeps the golden rule. Therefore, in this matter, he is doing to others as he would be done by. Suppose, then, we give him a taste, ad hominem. It is a friend that comes up to this business. Our "pleasant smile" is on, and we are in as good humor as the weather allows:

Physique fine and commanding: Napoleon-like. Style and bearing high-toned: perhaps rather ambitious. You are won by his affable and conciliating manner, especially when you remember the important post he fills. Upon a first general survey, there is an impression of "fuss and feathers." Upon a last survey, the "fuss and feathers" impression is confirmed—yet so as not to be unpleasing. Mouth set to lofty periods, and has rolled out many, ore rotundo. Nose well chiselled: literateurs would call it classic, snobs aristocratic. The large eyes roll in liquid fire. Their expressive lustre seems to be fed from the perennial fountains of genius. Forehead both high and expansive: such as great thought might covet for its throne. The entire face, especially in profile, is a specimen of manly handsomeness.

As an editor, he has gathered his proudest laurels—albeit, he permits his personal feelings (we would not say resentments.) to influence him too much in the control of a connexional organ.

Having made a suitable background of the face, a la "Cottager," let us phrenologize the Doctor a little. Head sizable: (this head wears a large hat.) Bumps: veneration, large: benevolence, very large: self-esteem—not "a little one." (Don't be dodging so.) What bump is this?—Not laid down on any of the charts. Yet a bump it is, and a large one, too. Ah, it is—can it be possible?—it is the Bishop's bump!! It has been growing away here these three or four years, and is well grown for its age. Albeit, it might be better sustained by the surroundings. (So much dodging we can't proceed to further particulars;) but take this head, by and large, it may be classed, as cotton brokers say, "good middling," and is "not much behind the best" of its sort.

Do you continue to fancy the sketches, Bro. Wightman? If so, we will finish this one. We promise you, too, that it shall be done artist-like, and no daub.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

"YOUNG MEN, EXHORT." [PAUL.

Where much is given, much is required. We have fallen upon good days. Ours is a heaven-favored land, and a time-honored age, honored beyond all others on the rolls of time. Never was life so valuable, never could it be so well and so usefully improved as now.

Our country and its institutions, beyond all others, develops and brings forward the young man. It affords him an earlier, a wider, and a nobler field of enterprize, than was ever offered to the activities of man before. Educational processes are simplified—improved methods of communicating knowledge are employed—books are numerous, various, and accessible. The physical divisions of the globe have been discovered, and nearly all explored. The means of communication between all the great and interesting localities of the earth are direct and rapid; the triumphs of modern art have almost annihilated space, and brought the most remote into immediate proximity. Commerce navigates every sea, and trades in the products of every climate. Speech is free—thought is unfettered, and conscience uncontrolled by the tyranny of man. The press speaks in her thousand voices, and no man dare say, "What sayest thou?"

Such is the glorious and happy state at which we have arrived. The world is rushing on with accelerating velocity to some grand and unparalleled consummation. It is our exalted privilege to bear no mean part in the mighty movements of this onward age.

But while our age and the institutions of our country are favorable, beyond example, for the development of all that is great and good, and for the realization of all that is desirable, to such as will put forth hearty and persevering effort, nothing is promised or offered to the indifferent and idle. Never was any age or any country so much against the slothful. These times will leave such further behind and in deeper disgrace than any that have preceded them. In no country will the contrast between sloth and industry—between success and defeat—be so wide, and so much to the disparagement of the defeated.

Our times, if improved, will bear us on to success like one who marches with and shares the fortunes of victorious armies; but if we attempt to be passive and idle, like straws in the path of a charging host, we shall be trampled in the dust, left on the field, and lost to hope and renown forever.

Never was the field so open and so fair as now; but never was the competition for fame and fortune so great. He that would succeed must practice self-denial—must have indomitable resolution, and must put forth untiring energy. To such, and to such only, the prize is sure. Let the young man contemplate this picture—and having contemplated, let him gird on the armor of a high and unfaltering resolve, and go forth to do valiantly in the great battle of life.

J. B. WALKER.

[From the Nashville Advocate.]

A CALL FOR PREACHERS.

As the period approaches for holding the sessions of the different conferences, in the field of Southern Methodism, it may be appropriate to direct the attention of the preachers, in the different conferences, to a subject of great importance to our prosperity and success as a Church. It is known to all, from publications in our Church papers, that there is a great call for a large increase of laborers in most of our conferences; but while this is true, more or less, in all our conferences, it is more especially the case in several of the weaker and more frontier portions of the work; and the design of this paper is to direct the thoughts of the preachers, in the stronger conferences, to the subject of asking transfers to those more destitute portions of the work.

We shall name some of these fields of labor which we deem the most needy. Western Virginia Conference occupies an important field, with forces very inadequate to its proper cultivation; a dozen additional preachers would find ample work, and encouragement too, in a healthly country, and among a hospitable people.

In old Kentucky we found last year a great scarcity of men; much of our work there was very inadequately supplied, and many interesting fields were left entirely without laborers. Of old Kentucky we need say nothing, as to country and people. The fame of Kaintuck, in these regards, is too well established.

In the two Missouri Conferences we have a glorious field of effort open before us. A country of vast extent and immense fertility, which must, sooner or later, contain a heavy population, invites the labors of devoted and self-sacrificing ministers of the Cross, and will yield a rich harvest to the labors of such ministers. In the city of St. Louis alone we ought to have a large increase of ministerial effort, to meet the growing demands of that rapidly increasing metropolis. The brethren there, I am glad to see, are awake to the great importance of Church extension. This is an important principle, over which we have too long slumbered in most of our large Southern cities. We establish a few churches, and then think we ought to rest awhile to replenish our pockets; and this rest frequently lasts several years. Meanwhile trade and population are not resting; they are ever actively advancing, and other denominations advance with them; and by the time the Methodists have gotten through their nap, most of the desirable locations are occupied, and hundreds who might have been with us, have been folded by others, or have become lost to all religious influence. Our great cities should receive more special attention than we have been in the habit of bestowing on them. They should be accurately surveyed by those in authority, as to their position for influence, as great missionary centres. The proper number of preachers should be appointed, and if there is not ability to support them by the people, they should receive help from the mission funds. They will soon, if properly cultivated, be capable of repaying all that has been expended on them, with interest. So much for my notions on the occupancy of large cities, for which abundant reasons might be offered, but it is not appropriate in this place.

Dropping down the river, we pass Arkansas, greatly improved and enlarged; still, it would not be injured by considerable additional strength. Still lower down, among the cane fields of Louisiana, we find the conference of that name, with a rich, beautiful and prosperous country, in which there are open doors on every hand, inviting us to come and preach to the tens of thousands of immortal souls, especially among the slaves, as well as thousands of white people who are destitute, and would gladly receive the preachers and support them; and yet they have asked, for many years, in vain for help. And in addition to these calls, there is New Orleans itself, the great commercial emporium of the South-west, with its teeming population from all quarters of the earth, a population already great and rapidly augmenting. It is a grand centre from which to extend religious influence. And what are we doing there? Much do you say? Be it so. We have done enough to inspire gratitude to God for the past, and to encourage increased effort for the future. But he who knows the actual state of things there, will feel that little has been done, compared with what remains to be accomplished. We need more than double the number of churches there, and pastors to fill them. The devoted brethren who are there have done well, and we seem very much inclined to leave them alone in their glory, that they may have a chance for early martyrdom, by working themselves to death. The Louisiana Conference has not half enough preachers for her work; and some of these few, alas! are not prepared to give themselves wholly to the work. I don't believe that there is a single conference in the South, which is called to cultivate a field of richer promise, if we only had a sufficient supply of preachers of the right stamp.

Passing away from this interesting portion of our work, let us step over to Texas—a few years since a little handful, now a large and promising conference. Perhaps there is none of our frontier conferences so well supplied as this; and yet as the country is rapidly populating, and new circuits and missions are forming annually, there will probably be, for many years to come, room for more preachers than will be raised upon the spot. The Eastern Texas Conference is not near so well supplied as the other; for some how or other, it would seem that the preachers have not emigrated to the Eastern Conference as to the other. Yet that conference occupies a most interesting country. There are, however, very destitute of preachers, and a brother from that work, writes me that unless they got a good reinforcement from the older conferences, their work must be seriously injured. Come, brethren, who will meet me at Marshall next winter, and throw in his lot with the devoted band who are there trying to establish the kingdom of God in that important portion of our republic?

The call from California meets us again, loud and earnest as ever. Let us respond to it nobly and promptly. Our watch-word is "Onward." Methodism must take no step backward. Our Indian work, too, demands help in its schools and circuits.

And finally, one more appeal for China. Bro. Jenkins will, if God permit, return to his work there, in the early part of next year. I greatly desire to send out with him several additional laborers. I have as yet only one engaged, and he is a young man in comfortable circumstances, the only child of God-fearing parents, who, however much they love him, love the cause of God better: and instead of hindering him, they say they have given him to God in baptism, as well as very often on other occasions, and if God calls him to China, they dare not interpose. Let other parents of sons go and do likewise. I want at least three others. Shall I have them? I have no fear for the money; our people are giving for it. Shall I get the preachers? Let our young men think of it.

J. O. ANDREW

Oxford, Ga., June 17, 1853.

☞ Our Church papers will please copy.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC.

MR. EDITOR:—In the Christian Advocate of the 11th June, I find, over the signature of "Schwarzerd," an article on the subject of Instrumental Music in Church. He goes on to state his grounds of objection, and says:

First, It must be enjoined or recognized in the Scriptures as a part of, or as having connection with divine worship; or,

Second, It must be ascertained by experience to be productive of the proper ends of Christian association, viz: vital piety.

Then, first, there is no direct Scripture authority for instrumental music in public worship; or, indeed, in any other kind of worship. Singing is recognized as a part of public and social worship, but no other kind of music is.

Whether its use is productive of vital piety, I am unable to say, having never witnessed its use; but I have charity for the opinion of those who use it.

As to there being no direct Scripture authority, I differ from the Brother, if he will admit the Old Testament to be Scripture. I will cite a few passages, of which I would like to know the meaning:

Num. 10: 10—"Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginning of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God; I am the Lord your God."

Psalm 71: 1-4—"Sing aloud unto God our strength; make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob."

2. "Take a psalm and bring hither the timbrel, the pleasant harp with the psaltery."

3. "Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed on our solemn fast-day."

4. "For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob."

Psalm 150: 1-5—"Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in the firmament of his power."

2. "Praise him for his mighty acts; praise him according to his excellent greatness."

3. "Praise him with the sound of the trumpet; praise him with the psaltery and harp."

4. "Praise him with the timbrel and dance; praise him with stringed instruments and organs."

5. "Praise him upon the loud cymbals; praise him upon the high-sounding cymbals."

The above, I think, will prove that it was proper in old times, and not only so, but was required to be done by the Lord of the sanctuary; and are we more righteous than they? God grant that it may be so. We boast of our civil and religious liberty; then let us worship God, guided by the dictates of our own consciences, and allow others to do the same.

A READER

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

TEMPERANCE RESOLUTIONS.

At the third Quarterly Meeting Conference of the Perryville Circuit, Alabama Conference, the following preamble and resolutions on the Temperance Reform, were introduced and read by Rev. J. W. Shores, and unanimously adopted by the Conference, viz:

Whereas, It is manifestly evident that there is great necessity for prompt and continued exertion, upon the part of the friends of the Temperance Reform, to carry on their work; and it is highly important that members of the Church, generally, should define their position upon this great moral question; therefore,

1. Resolved, That this Quarterly Meeting Conference heartily approve the actions and doings of the Temperance Convsalions which have been held in this State, and highly commend the energetic efforts that are being made to secure the enactment of such wholesome laws as will effectually abolish the liquor traffic, as it now is.

2. Resolved, That we will, as church-members, give our chearful aid and hearty co-operation in such a noble and praiseworthy enterprise.

3. Resolved, That we highly approve of the plan of forming Temperance Leagues, and the frequent delivery of Temperance lectures, to speed on the legal Temperance reformation.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

4. Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be signed by the President and Secretary of this Quarterly Meeting Conference, and forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Alabama Commonwealth for publication, and the Crystal Fount and other papers favorable to the cause, will copy.

F. G. FERGUSON, P. E.

T. B. SPROTT, Secretary.

At the third Quarterly Meeting of Prattville Station, Same district, the following resumbls and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, the evil of intemperance has and is still making fearful inroads upon the peace and happiness of the citizens of this State, and believing as we do that much of this evil is attributable to rapacious rum-sellers, we will with satisfaction the efforts of the friends of Temperance to crush that monster, who is ever wont to glent with malignant eyes over broken hearts and widowed prospects; therefore, be it

1. Resolved, That we approve and will cordially co-operate with the friends of Temperance of the State of Alabama in the suppression of the traffic in ardent spirits.

2. Resolved, That we approve of the Alabama Law, as set forth by the Selma Convention, and recommend its passage by the Legislature of our State, at its next session.

F. G. FERGUSON, P. E.

S. P. SMITH, Secretary.

Punch has the following witty parody of a nursery song:

"Rashaby, pontiff, upon the sword's prop.
When the world moves, the popedom will rock;
When the prop breaks the structure will fall:
Tumbledown comes papacy, pontiff, and all."

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On Thursday evening, the 23d instant, at the M. E. Church, by Rev. C. D. Mercer, Major ALBERT S. ELMORE to Miss MARY JANE, daughter of Col. Wm. H. Taylor.

MARRIED—By Rev. A. H. Powell, June 22, T. P. HOLCOMBE to Miss MARY JOHNSTON, both of Mobile, Ala.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Clarke county, Ala., June 2, MARTHA T., wife of Isham Keimble.

She was born in North Carolina, in 1797. She had been for many years a member of the Church and a devoted Christian, and the preachers who traveled this circuit in years past, will read of her death with the tenderest feeling of affection. Let me die the death of the righteous. T. S. ABERNATHY.

DIED—June 8, in Barbour county, Ala., Mrs. NANCY A. NORTON, wife of Rev. John W. Norton.

For 35 years she had been an exemplary member of the M. E. Church, having professed religion at the age of 16. She was married at the age of 17, and for four years after shared the privations of Methodist itinerancy with her husband, who was then a member of the South Carolina Conference. Her afflictions were severe and protracted, but she suffered with meekness. It may well be said of her, she was made "perfect (in love) through suffering." Her confidence in the promises of the Gospel remained unshaken to the last. As she drew near the brink of death, she assured those around her that "all was well."

Thus peacefully she passed away to dwell with the redeemed in Heaven, leaving her husband and thirteen children to mourn a loss that earth can never repair.

W. K. N.

Camden, Ala., June 29, 1853.

DIED—On the 4th of June, in the 31st year of his age, Mr. JAMES CUNNINGHAM.

He became a member of the Old Presbyterian Church in the 19th year of his age afterwards united with the Cumberland P. Church, in which he remained until death. Some time before he died he became very much impressed with the importance of living more faithfully to God. He especially felt that he had neglected one duty, viz: the dedication of his children in the holy ordinance of baptism. His wife being a member of the M. E. Church, he concluded to get Bro. Murrah to attend to it as his next round of appointments. But before that time he was called to press a dying pillow. Still anxious to discharge this duty, he sent for me, and while the cold sweat of death was on him, he presented his three little children for baptism. After the solemn duty had been performed, he said that he had discharged his last duty, and was then ready to die.

DIED—On the 18th of June, Mrs. AGNES CURETON, consort of John B. Cureton, and daughter of Hugh and Mahala Cunningham, aged 22 years.

Mrs. Careton had been a member of the Cumberland P. Church about four years. She, as her brother had done, had her only child dedicated to God in baptism, by Bro. Murrah, on the day before she died. She died in full confidence of the truth of the religion she professed. She was beloved by all who knew her, and has left many to mourn.

S. F. HILL.

DIED—June 30, Mrs. REBECCA L. BOSWORTH, wife of Major Wm. Bosworth, of Fort Pike, La. She died at my house in this place.

Up to the morning of her death there were no alarming symptoms appearing in her case. At 5 o'clock, A. M., she began to sink, and at 11 she died.

During her illness, prayer meetings were held in her room two or three times, at which she rejoiced in hope of a glorious immortality.

To the members of the family and friends visiting her, she uttered such sweet words of Heaven as they will not soon forget.

Just before her departure I asked her if she was safe. She promptly replied, "Yes, praise the Lord." These were the last articulate words she spoke; but when almost out of sight of earth, and struggling with the grim monster, she attempted to join the attendant friends in singing the hymn—"Oh, sing to me of Heaven," &c. Beyond description was the brightness and serenity upon her countenance when we sung the words—

"Let music charm me last on earth
And greet me first in Heaven."

Such a scene and such a Christian triumph it has not been my lot often to witness.

T. W. MATHEWS.

Toulminville, Alabama.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

NOTICE.

Camp-meetings, Rankin Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

The present Conference year with us being shorter than usual, I have been compelled, in advance of our next Quarterly Conference, to appoint the times for all extra meetings on the Circuit during the year, so as to avoid conflictions.

The time of the Camp-meeting at Simi has been fixed to embrace the third Sunday in September, and that at Shiloh to embrace the second Sunday in October. Ministering brethren are cordially and earnestly invited to attend. JAS. MACLENAN, P. C.

Rankin Circuit, June 1, 1853.

NOTICES.

Our Camp-meeting on the Starkville Circuit, Mississippi Conference, Sharon District, will commence on Thursday, 11th of August next, four miles southwest of Starkville. Bishop Paine, and Bro. Hyre, of Aberdeen, and Bro. Norman, of Columbus, will be with us. Ministers and people everywhere are cordially invited.

J. MCJOHNS, P. C.
D. M. WOOD, P. E.

COMMENCEMENT.
CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The Examination of the Students of this College will begin July 20th.

On the Sabbath following the Annual Sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr Speer, of Natchez.

Monday, 25th, the Joint Board will meet.

Tuesday 26th, the Anniversaries of the Literary Societies will be celebrated.

Wednesday will be Commencement Day.

The friends of Education are requested to be present.

A. H. RIVERS.

Jackson, La., June 13, 1853.

Third Round of Quarterly Meetings on Eufaula District, Ala. Con.

ENON	June 25
EUFAULA STATION	July 2 and 3
CLAYTON CIRCUIT, Clayton	July 16 and 17
MARIANA STATION	July 23 and 24
APALACHICOLA	July 30 and 31
JACKSON CIRCUIT, at McNeeley's	August 6 and 7
BARBOUR CIRCUIT, Five Points	August 13 and 14
GLENVILLE CIRCUIT, Glenville	August 20 and 21
ABBEVILLE CIRCUIT, Abbeville	Sept. 3 and 4
WOODVILLE, Piney Grove	Sept. 10 and 11

The brethren will observe some changes in the time of holding Quarterly Meetings, but they are unavoidable.

je25 2t3p S. F. PILLEY, P. E.

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

FALL SESSION.

The next Session of this College will begin July 14th.

FACULTY.

Rev. JAMES W. HARDY, M. A., President, and Professor of Experimental Science.
Rev. SMITH W. MOORE, M. A., Vice President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
OSCAR E. CASEY, M. A., Professor of Ancient Languages.
SEPTIMUS P. RIPE, M. A., Professor of Pure Mathematics, and Rector of Grammar School.
Rev. H. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Mixed Mathematics.
THOS. H. SMITH, M. A., Principal of Grammar School.

SCHOOL EXPENSES.

Tuition	$25 00 Per Session.
Room rent and servant's hire	3 00 "
Board and washing	50 00 "

The College dues must be paid invariably in advance.

je25 3t2p JAMES W. HARDY.
La Grange, Ala., June 16, 1853.

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.

S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.

(Successors to Hinchcliffe & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS.
No. 95 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La.

jy2 1y

Some of the most important empires on the globe are, says the New York Herald, now ruled by young men. The Emperor of China, Hien Fang, is now in the twenty-second year of his age, and the third of his reign. It will be recollected that he is of the Tartar or Tu-tsing dynasty. Prince Chu-kisin, of the Ming dynasty, who aspires to the throne of China, is about nineteen years old. The Sultan, or Shah of Persia, Nasser-ad-Dia, is about twenty years of age. Abdul-Medjid-khan, the Sultan of Turkey, was born in April, 1823—of course he is now little over thirty years of age. The Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, is nearly twenty-three. Having been born in August, 1830. He ascended the imperial throne in December, 1848. These empires embrace more than one-third of the population of the world.

The Cabinet opinions in Washington, we are told, says the New York Express, are, that Turkey and Russia will settle their differences—that Switzerland will be protected by France, and that the questions in controversy between the United States and Great Britain (the Fisheries and Central America) are all in train of amicable adjustment. Mr. Mann, the Assistant Secretary of State, is good authority upon Swiss politics. There is a growing disposition in the Cabinet to keep the country out of foreign broils.

The Bank of England has increased its stock of bullion in one week from £17,941,547 sterling to £18,253,934 sterling. Increase £308,387—and it is now daily adding to its treasure. The amount of notes in circulation was, on the 2d June, (according to the return made 10th June) £21,328,535 sterling, being an increase of £750,000.

The increase of private securities, which shows the demand for money, was £610,615 sterling.

The Montgomery (Ala.) Journal, in noticing the vote of Montgomery in favor of the subscription of $500,000 to the Montgomery and Pensacola Railroad, says the arrangements of the Directors are such as will enable them to prosecute the work with great rapidity, and in the course of six teen months the road will be completed and in operation.

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Weekly report of the Charity Hospital, from the 1st to the 8th. Admissions 42. Discharges 22. Deaths, one of which is from yellow fever. Number remaining 742.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Interments in the City of New Orleans for the week ending July 2, 1853:

Apoplexy	1	Fever, Typhus
Brain, Congestion of	1	Fever, Scarlet	2
Brain, Inflammation of	2	Fever, Yellow	1
Bowels, Ulceration of	1	Gastro-Enteritis
Consumption	16	Heart, Disease of	1
Convulsions	10	Hepatitis
Cholera Infantum	3	Hooping-cough	2
Cramps	2	Measles	2
Delirium Tremens	7	Marasmus	2
Dentition	3	Old Age	1
Debility	1	Pneumonia	1
Diarrhœa	1	Pleurisy
Dysentery Acute	4	Rheumatism
Dysentery Chronic	1	Sun Stroke	7
Drowned	3	Still-born	5
Dropsy	1	Scrofula	1
Enteritis	8	Small Pox	1
Fever, Intermittent	2	Tetanus	2
Fever, Brain	1	Ulcer	1
Fever, Bilious	6	Uncertain	2
Fever, Pernicious	4	Unknown	20
Fever, Typhoid	1
Total			177

Of these 77 were under ten years of age, and 21 colored.

A HANDSOME SUM.

We learn from the Barnwell (S. C.) Sentinel, that a murder was perpetrated on the 21st inst. upon the plantation of Col. R. H. Brown, near Barnwell, on the child of the overseer, Mr. Jas. Kirkland, by a negro girl about eleven or twelve years of age, whom he had chastised a few hours previously for some offence. The child was about three years and a half old, and was beaten to death. He was said to have been an interesting little fellow—loved by the whole family.

SCHOOLS IN NEW YORK CITY.—There are 100 Public Schools in that city, under the immediate control of the Board of Education. 108,000 children attend the schools—the daily average attendance being one-half that number. The Free Academy has 500 students, 13 professors, and a number of tutors; and the annual appropriation for its support is twenty thousand. Columbia College was established in 1754, has 121 students—exclusive of a large grammar school—and rejoices in a library of 15,000 volumes. The New York University was established in 1831; has since that time educated 455 students, one-half gratuitously; and with a splendid edifice is unfortunately some $100,000 in debt.

The following table shows the quantity of public lands already granted to the several new States of the Union respectively:

Ohio, 2,272,858 acres; Indiana, 3,267,460; Illinois, 5,581,197; Missouri, 3,212,727; Alabama, 2,074,284; Mississippi, 1,151,011; Louisiana, 1,216,122; Michigan, 6,140,800; Arkansas, 6,250,813; Florida, 2,622,993; Iowa, 2,713,353; Wisconsin, 3,128,769; Tennessee, 3,353,821; California, 500,000; Minnesota, 2,997,497; Oregon, 12,186,978; New Mexico, 7,493,120; Utah, 6,681,707; total, 84,222,148.

SUGAR AND MOLASSES SPECULATIONS.—As a matter of some interest to our merchants we clip this following from the St. Louis Evening News of the 28th ult:

Dealers in these articles made a "wide miss" this year, and if a majority who purchased largely wind up at the close of the season with balanced accounts, they may deem themselves fortunate. The difficulty has been this: The crop was an increased one, and not knowing precisely to what extent, dealers bought two heavily at an early day, at what was then considered low figures. The stock almost from the beginning was large, and still continues so. At no time has there been anything like a scarcity of either, but receipts have been constant and steady, with less animation and a greater uniformity in prices than we remember to have ever noticed of a season before. Sugars opened at about 3¾ to 4¢, and these figures are the quoted ruling rates at present. Molasses has declined, and is now fully as low or lower than it was at the opening of the season. We have no means of ascertaining the precise amount of either in store, but we are assured that it is sufficient for at least two months, should not another hogshead or barrel arrive.

CLIPPER SAILING.—Our Eastern exchanges exult in honest pride over the extraordinary speed attained by our clipper ships over those of the Old World and former times. The clipper ship Flying Cloud has performed a prodigy of speed, as will be seen by the following extract from her log, received from her captain, A. P. Creesy, who was spoken at sea by a New London vessel on the 15th of May, in lat. 1-8 S., lon. 31 03 W.:

"Wind light—fine weather: middle and latter part faint and squally. Civil time, this date, 15th of May, at 8 P. M., crossed the Equator, in lon. 34 20, seventeen days from Sandy Hook, or 408 hours, averaging nine knots for every hour at sea. Passage shorter than ever made. Whole distance run, on straight lines from noon to noon each day, is 3,672 miles. No time since leaving have sky-sails been off the ship for over three hours, and that only in one instance."

Lieut. Maury mentions several clipper ships that have approached this performance, but none that have equalled it. The Sea Serpent, in March, accomplished the distance in eighteen days; the Flying Fish and Samuel Russell, in November, each in nineteen days. The others named by Lieut. Maury were "out of their twos" before they crossed the line. So the Flying Cloud bears the palm. She belongs to Messrs. Grinnell, Minturn & Co., and no doubt they feel proud, in a very modest and becoming way, of course, of her "overstepping the line" on the seventeenth day of the voyage.

THE WILLIAM AND MARY.—Captain Stinson, of this unfortunate vessel, has not gone to Australia, but to the West, to see a brother. The Boston Atlas says the following is his latest explanation for deserting his vessel and passengers:

"He did not run the ship ashore, he says, because he was surrounded by sunken rocks, in a dark night, and did not know how to steer to avoid others more dangerous than those he struck on; he considered it safest to hold by his anchors if he could keep the ship afloat till daylight, hoping to be seen by wreckers in the morning. He did not send down spars to make a raft, because the men were entirely beyond control, and it would have been impossible to get any of them aloft that night. He left the ship when he supposed she would not float at longest more than an hour, having ten feet of water in the hold, and having done himself, as he thought, all in his power, the wind blowing direct from the nearest land, and the ship with so much water in unmanageable."

COMPLIMENT TO AMERICANS.—The following Americans had the honorary degree D. C. L. conferred upon them at the recent installation of the Earl of Derby as Chancellor of the University of Oxford: The Hon. Joseph Randolph Ingersoll, Minister of the United States; the Hon. Martin Van Buren, formerly President of the United States; the Right Rev. George Jehosaphat Mountain, Bishop of Quebec; the Right Rev. Charles Petit McIlvaine, Bishop of Ohio; the Hon. Mr. Justice Haliburton.

LAKE SUPERIOR COPPER.—Last week the propeller Globe delivered another large cargo of Lake Superior copper at Detroit, one hundred and twenty-seven tons weight in gross, some of the masses weighing four thousand pounds pure copper, and the whole averaging more than seventy-five per cent. The Detroit Tribune estimates the current weekly value of the receipts from the Lake Superior region at $10,000, and it assumes that the copper resources of Michigan have scarcely begun to be developed.

FROM CENTRAL AMERICA.—A letter from San Juan de Nicaragua, dated June 15, reports everything as quiet at that place and Costa Rica.—The war between Guatamala and Honduras was slowly progressing. The U. S. sloop-of-war Albany arrived at San Juan on the 1st and sailed thence on the 5th. During her stay in port her officers were very hospitably entertained by the inhabitants at San Juan at the date of the above letter.

THE RAILWAY TO THE PACIFIC.—Lieutenant Whipple, U. S. Topographical Engineer, and Lieut. J. C. Ives of the same corps, and Lieut. D. S. Stanley, A. A. Quartermaster and Commissary, arrived at this place on the 29th, en route for Fort Smith, where the survey of the route, via Albuquerque, is to commence.

[Little Rock (Ark.) Whig, 30th.

Weather and Crops.

ALABAMA.—The following is from the Greensboro' Beacon, of the 24 instant:

It is now upwards of three months since we have had, in this place or vicinity, a plentiful rain. During the month of April we had two tolerably good, though not plentiful, rains, since which, we have had only a few very light showers, sparcely sufficient for thoroughly laying the dust. In some neighborhoods east and south-east of this, they have had one or two pretty good seasons within the last few weeks; and we understand that the crops in those neighborhoods are nothing like as unpromising as they are in this section generally. The corn crop, except on the bottom lands, is in most cases too far gone to be benefitted by future rains. Many fields will not produce a bushel to the acre. Cotton has also been doing badly for the last two or three weeks.

The Grove Hill Herald, of the 24th ult., says:

We regret to state that the upper and lower portions of this county are suffering very much for the want of rain, not having had a "season" for more than two months. We had thought and hoped that the fine rains, which have fallen in this section within the last three weeks, were of a general character. In some places, we are informed, a bushel of corn will not be made to the acre.

The Butler County Alabamian, of the 21 inst., says:

Our exchanges from all parts of the country agree in their complaints of the long dry spell, and a short crop this season seems inevitable. The crops in this section are pretty nearly burnt up, and nothing short of a good old-fashioned rain will revive exhausted nature. We have seen corn so far gone as almost to be beyond hope.

MISSISSIPPI.—The Lauderdale Republican, of the 28th ult., says:

The showers for two or three days previous have relieved the brows of our farmers of some enormous wrinkles, and their faces of a very decided lugubrious aspect. There is a prospect for an abundance of rain.

For six weeks previous we have not had rain enough to lay the dust. Our condition began to be deplorable indeed. We understand that the drouth has been equally severe in the north-eastern part of the State. The farmers began to talk of sending north for corn. But if the seasons have been general there will be plenty of corn made for all necessary purposes.

Since the above paragraphs were written we are sorry to learn that the rains were not so general nor so heavy as was supposed. Many of our citizens have had but very little rain, and their crops are suffering very much.

KENTUCKY.—The Louisville Journal of a recent date says:

The most gloomy accounts reach us in regard to the long timed drouth. We are told that many of the gardeners in the vicinity of the city have ceased coming to market, as everything has been parched by the very hot and dry weather. The oats and grass crops will be very short, and corn, tobacco, and hemp will not fare better unless we have rain.

Later from Texas.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP MEXICO.

The steamship Mexico, Capt. Lawless, from Indianola and Galveston, arrived yesterday morning.

By this arrival we have Indianola papers of the 28th ult., and files from Galveston to the 1st inst.

The Mexico brings the following sums of specie on freight: $34,305 to Wm. Feldhaim on board, $5,611 to Borkman, $2,500 to T. S. Elder & Co., $145 to Robertson & McDonghan.

Passenger list:

G. Lowe and lady, Talabousse and wife, Mrs. R. M. Forbes and servant, Parks and lady, W. J. Cox, Judge Linn, E. Fadre and lady, W. T. Pickett, M. Caldwell, R. A. Dingmans and lady, Mrs. Thompson and son, Nel on, Campbell, Wrightley Wm. Hutchings, J. H. Barnes, Capt. Davenport, J. Francis, M. Nelson, G. Stearns, Shields, Swann, H. Barrett, Judge Nelson, and 30 on deck.

We find the following items in the Indianola Bulletin of the 28th:

The Masonic Lodge of Indianola celebrated St. John's day on Friday last. A procession of 50 members moved from the Hall to the church, where an address, brief but well conceived, was made by S. T. Sewell, Esq.

During the past week we have had numerous refreshing showers, replenishing the cisterns and reviving vegetation. Crops are said to promise well in the interior. An abundant yield of corn, sugar cane and cotton is expected.

We are pained to announce the death of Mr. Charles J. Mitchell, editor of the Victoria Advocate. He died at Port Lavaca yesterday, from injuries received in attempting to dive from the wharf where it was too shallow. Mr. M. was a worthy and promising man.

We also learn that Mr. George W. Murphy, a tinner, was drowned at Port Lavaca last week.

From the following, also from the Bulletin, it appears that the San Antonio railroad is not likely to be completed at an early day. The Bulletin says:

Mr. Jones, of San Antonio, one of the contractors to build this road, left for the North some days since. It seems from the contract, that Jones and Devine, who took the contract to build the road at the round sum of $27,000 per mile, are to take in pay the bonds of the company for nearly the whole amount, perhaps four-fifths—the remainder to be paid in cash by the company. The company, of course, never can pay even this one-fifth, unless private stockholders pay in enough to raise the amount; and of this it appears there is no prospect, as the large landholders, who took the most stock, now refuse to pay up, as the San Antonio papers say, in consequence, we suppose, of the contract having been let at double Col. Johnson's estimate of the cost, and hence want of confidence in its success. We have little doubt that the same cause will have the same effect on the county subscriptions. At any rate, it is now perfectly plain that the only real dependence of Jones & Devine, is the hope of selling the bonds of the company in the North to raise the money with which to build the road: and this, we presume, is the mission of Mr. Jones North.

The Galveston Civilian of the 1st states that the expedition gotten up by Gen. Rusk for El Paso had not left Fort Graham at the last accounts. Mr. Greely, of Boston, has returned. The South-western American says Gov. Payne is sick at Waco; his recovery is doubtful. Gen. Rusk was expected at Fort Graham in a day or two. Gen. Clarke will go through to El Paso. Major Neighbors employed Jem Shaw as a guide for the expedition. Should an escort be needed, it will be furnished free of expense by Texas citizens, and placed under the control of competent men. Neighbors will qualify as Indian Superintendent, and proceed at once to the discharge of the duties.

We clip the following from the News of the 1st:

The Trinity and Brazos rivers are represented to be still navigable.

Many persons have still great confidence that abundance of gold will yet be found in Texas. Much is anticipated from the Gran Quivira expedition now set out under the direction of Wells. The company is said to be well appointed and capable of defending itself from the numerous tribes of Indians they expect to encounter. They do not expect to return till October.

The walls of the State capitol in Austin, we learn, are now nearly completed to their full elevation. The appearance of this edifice is said to be very imposing, standing, as it does, on the high elevation at the head of Congress Avenue, and presenting its full proportions to the eye from a great distance. Its six massive columns in front, rising from its basement to its summit, and greatly to its architectural appearance. The whole building is constructed of the perfectly white and beautiful stone so abundant in the neighborhood, which is polished to the extent of its capacity, which is but little short of the polish of marble. It is expected that it will be completed sufficiently for the next Legislature to hold its session in it.

The Bastrop Advertiser of the 25th ult. says that during the previous week there had been a great abundance of rain, too much for those of the farmers who are in the grass. The crops are just as good as they need be.

The State Gazette of the 25th ult. says the editor was gratified on a trip through the counties of Bastrop, Fayette and Washington, to observe the crops present a most encouraging prospect. In the three counties above-named, he thinks, the yield of corn and cotton will be a full one; and the quantity of land cultivated in cotton this year is said to be nearly double that of last year.

[illegible]

In addition to the Texas news published above we find the following in our exchanges from the Interior. The Lavaca Gazette of the 25th ult. says:

DRY RAIN.—HOW IT RAN OUT.—At last we fear we shall be forced to exclaim, "Hold, enough!" It has rained every day this week on Thursday and Thursday night we had two very heavy showers, and from the present threatening aspect of the clouds we have but a faint hope of fair weather, soon.

It is now pretty generally admitted that the cotton and corn crops of this county will be remarkably good. We have seen and conversed with several of our planters within the last week, and all seem highly gratified with their prospects.

It is stated that property in Lavaca has taken an unexpected rise. Lots, situated on the outer limits of the town, have recently sold for from $50 to $150. The business prospects of the place are increasing rapidly.

The citizens of San Augustine and the vicinity have subscribed one hundred thousand dollars to the Opelousas and Texas Railroad, and it is expected that the adjoining counties will subscribe one hundred and fifty thousand dollars more to insure the terminus of the road at Fullerton's Bluff, on the Sabine. The people of that section expect that this railroad will be extended from New Orleans to San Diego, on the Pacific.

The San Antonio Ledger says that two gentlemen are in that town, with a capital of $200,000 to invest in a cotton manufactory in the neighborhood of San Antonio.

CHIHUAHUA ITEMS.

The editor of the San Antonio Ledger is indebted to an intelligent friend for some Chihuahua items which may be interesting to the general reader.

The town of Chihuahua embraces a population of about two thousand souls. The foreign population does not exceed to much extent two hundred. The buildings are mainly constructed of stone or adobe, and the style of architecture is of the Mexican model—thick walls and flat roofs. The principal products are wheat, corn and beans, the former of which is cultivated entirely by irrigation. The yield is oftentimes stupendous. They are furnished at moderate prices. Flour can be procured at as low rates as in our western States. The price at present is at the rate of six dollars and a half for three hundred pounds.

According to the late armarel, the tariff on staple articles of dry goods varies from 3 to 4 cents per vara. It must be understood, however, that this is the tariff enforced upon the introduction of goods into the Territory. The merchant is inducted an additional duty of two cents the vara.

The mining region commences about four miles from the city. There are but few mines worked by foreigners. The discoverer of a mine, though it be on the premises of another, is entitled to work it. Nor can another claim the benefit of the discovery until it has been deserted six months. The only tax upon the miner is the payment for the essayal of his bullion. Silver with gold alloy are the main minerals.

The cattle, horses, sheep and other domestic animals of Chihuahua are of inferior quality, and are becoming each day more scarce on account of Indian ravages. The species of Chihuahua dogs so much sought after by lovers of pets are nearly as rare there as among us. Sometime since a lady was offered five hundred dollars for a diminutive canine. She preferred donating it to Aristo.

The Apaches are the dread of Chihuahuans. They descend from their mountain fastnesses and commit with impunity robbery and murder. It is idle to pursue them. Once amid the mountains they outstrip the deer in flight. The Comanches are doing like injury in Durango, Zacatecas and the adjoining States.

With its mining, grazing, agricultural and commercial facilities, and a climate unsurpassed for health, Chihuahua would be the loveliest and wealthiest space on the Western continent, if the remorseless Apaches were driven away.

LATE FROM VENEZUELA.—By the steamship Union, arriving at New York from Aspinwall, the intelligence is brought that the revolution in Venezuela is progressing.

The province of Cumana, one of the most important of the republic, made a pronunciamiento on the 5th instant against the tyranny of the brothers Monagas. In the second article of the pronunciamiento is stated what follows:

"We proclaim a confederacy as the system most congenial with the rights of the sons of Cumana, reckoning as a model worthy of imitation the government of the United States of North America."

A letter received by the Union adds that the province of Margarito, which since the war of Independence has earned the glorious name of New Sparta, for her gallant resistance to the combined armies of Spain, has followed the example of Cumana, and declared in favor of the revolution; and it was rumored that the provinces of Coro and Maracaibo, on the west, were also ready to throw off the yoke of the "stupid domination of the Monagases."

LATE AND INTERESTING FROM BOGOTA.—A correspondent of the Panama Star, writing from the capital of New Granada, says the new Constitution has been adopted, and was to have been promulgated on the 23d instant. It is founded on universal suffrage in all elections; two legislative bodies, one based on population, and the other on territory; all municipal and judicial officers to be elected by the people; and a separation of the municipal power from the General Government. The military had caused a disturbance at the capital, on the ground that Congress was about to abolish their pensions. They induced the mechanics and artizans to demand an increase of import duties on foreign manufactures from the members of the House. An immense crowd assembled, and on the plaza several encounters took place between the principal youths of the city and the artizans, which resulted in the death of two of the multitude, and several wounded.

A correspondent of the Mobile Register furnishes that paper with the following:

REMINISCENCES OF ALABAMA SHIP BUILDING.—The new clipper ship now notually commenced here will slightly exceed 1700 tons carpenter's measurement. She is designed to be as good a ship as can be built of the best materials and workmanship. The party contracting to build intends his skill and long experience in shipbuilding shall be exercised to their utmost capacity to produce a craft equal to any other—to be a credit in any port to the city from which she hails.

The undertaking is a large one, but when there exists such a feeling of liberality towards the enterprise, Mr. Porter can meet with little obstacle to his progress. Sites upon which to build the ship, for example, have been offered upon exceedingly favorable terms, though one has not been yet selected.

The ship is to be built for Messrs. James Heid & Co., of which firm our popular fellow-citizen, Roger Stewart, Esq., is the active partner, with some other of their friends.

It is not perhaps generally known or remembered that the first steamboat that ever arrived at Mobile and ran upon the Alabama waters was built at St. Stephens, seventy miles above here, on the Tombeckbee river, and was called the Alabama. She was built by Mr. Brown, or Bell, one of the late partners of that eminent shipbuilding firm now of New York, who have not a great while ago retired from business—said to be very rich. His start he made at St. Stephens. The Messrs. Doaring (now of Tuscaloosa) built another steamboat there afterwards, called the Tombeckbee. But antecedent to those, a fine large schooner was built for Major Wm. Henry, called the Alpha; and old Col. Rawkin has a beautiful sloop, built a short distance above.

Thus old St. Stephens was once quite a shipbuilding point.

For Mobile to become permanently and extensively a ship building point, will, in unnumerable modes, contribute to the wealth and importance of the State and our sea-port, and is eminently entitled to every encouragement.

TREASURY BONDS.—The Secretary of the Treasury has given official notice that the 6 per cent. stock of the United States issued under the act of March 3, 1843, will be redeemed on presentation at the Treasury Department on the 1st of July, after which date interest ceases. The certificates may be transmitted by mail, on receipt of which drafts will be transmitted for the amount, payable by such Assistant Treasurer as the holder of the stock may designate.

The total value of India rubber goods manufactured in the United States is estimated at ten millions annually, and nearly the whole trade has sprung up since 1843.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE OFFICE,
Saturday Morning, July 9, 1853.

There has been but little animation in our general market during the past week. In Cotton transactions have been restricted from two or three causes—among which are, the delay in the receipt of later intelligence from Europe and the want of one or two particular qualities in the stock on sale. The inquiry for Tobacco has been fair, but much less active than last week. Flour has been in moderate request at easier prices. Corn has continued rather scarce, and the rates have generally improved. Provisions have been extremely dull, without much further change in prices. Freights have slightly advanced, and Foreign Exchange has been lower.

COTTON.—The Cotton market at the close of our last weekly review, was inactive. The sales of Friday reaching barely 1500 bales, making a total business for the week of 10,000 bales. On Saturday there was still less inquiry, and the sales were limited to some 800 bales at unchanged prices. On Monday, though a holiday, about 600 bales were taken, and on Tuesday the market was stimulated by the favorable tenor of the Liverpool letters, and the sales reached fully 4500 bales, mostly at an advance of ⅛ @ ¼ ₰ lb. On Wednesday business opened with some degree of animation, but the demand ran chiefly on Low Middling, with which factors' tables were poorly supplied, and the sales were limited to about 500 bales, prices remaining very full. The inquiry continued fair on Thursday, when about 1600 bales found purchasers, and yesterday 1400 more were disposed of, making the total business of the week 9500 bales. Prices closed with considerable irregularity, but generally very full prices have been paid. We advance our quotations as below.

The receipts of the week are 2067 bales, against 2845 bales for the corresponding period last year, and in the total receipts at this port the increase, compared with last year, is 221,215 bales.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.
Inferior	6½@ 7¼	Middling Fair	11¼@11¾
Ordinary	8¼@ 9	Fair	—@—
Middling	9⅛@10¼	Good Fair	—@—
Good Middling	11 @11¼	Good and Fine	—@—

COTTON AND TOBACCO STATEMENT.

	Cotton—bales.	Tobacco—hhds
Stock on hand Sept. 1, 1852	9,532	18,761
Received since	1,055,029	39,411
" yesterday	332—1,055,361	000—39,411
	1,064,893	58,165
Exported to date	1,597,483	52,529
" yesterday	688—1,598,177	816—53,336
Stock on hand not cleared	66,716	24,829

TOBACCO.—There have been some reports of rain at the West, and some buyers have shown less anxiety to purchase than during the previous week. Still the inquiry has been good and factors have insisted upon full prices, which, as far as we can learn, they have realized in all the transactions of the week. The sales embrace about 2200 hhds including 500 on Saturday, Monday and Tuesday, 400 on Wednesday, 650 on Thursday, and 650 yesterday. They embrace the following particulars: 75 hhds. 8s (old) at 7 and 32 at 7¼; 200 hhds Low A. and R. at 6¾ round; 43 A. at 7½; 52 hhds Lugs at 5¼; 44 hhds at 7½; 12 hhds Low Factory Lugs at 5¼; 10 hhds Missouri at 7¾; 121 hhds: 22 at 5½ and 99 at 7; 238 hhds: 188 at 6¼ and 50 at 7¼; 248 hhds at 5¾; 200 at —; 128 at 6¾ and 1 at 8¢; 9 at 6; 30 hhds Mason County (old) at 6¢; 66 hhds at —; 33 hhds: 1 at 5, 17 at 5¾, 4 at 6¾, and 1 at 6; 317 hhds: 245 at 6¼, 71 (two fine crops) at 7½, and 1 at 8; 140 hhds: 69 at 5¾ and 30 Scented Yellow Banks at 8¢; and 108 hhds: 60 at 6, and 48 at 8¾¢ ₰ lb.

Lugs	4¾@5¾	Fair to Fine	6¾@7
Leaf Inf. to Com	5¾@6	Choice & Select'ns	7¾@8½

SUGAR.—The receipts of Sugar have been light and prices steady, with sales during the week of 600 hhds, including only a few small lots yesterday. Our quotations are as follow:

Interior to Com	2¾@3¼	Prime and Choice	4¾@5¼
Good Common	—@3¾	Clarified	4¾@5¾
Fair to Fully Fair	3¾@4¾

Week's receipts, 945 hhds—exports, 43.

MOLASSES.—The transactions in Molasses have been on a limited scale, without any material change in prices. The week's sales embrace some 500 bbls, mostly at 12@13½¢ for Fermenting, and 16¾@17½¢ ₰ gallon for Reboiled, but including yesterday 62 bbls thin Reboiled at 12½, and 77 Prime at 18¢ ₰ gallon.

Week's receipts, 956 bbls—exports, 561.

FLOUR.—The demand for Flour has been moderate, and with a slight increase in the receipts, the rates have hardly been sustained. The sales up to Thursday evening embraced some 5000 bbls, mostly at $4 75@$4 80 ₰ bbl for Superfine St. Louis, and $5 10@$5 20 for Extra to Choice Extra brands. There were also some sales of Sour at $3 55, and some Ordinary Extra at $3 95 ₰ bbl. On Tuesday we noticed the receipt of 100 bbls ground from new Wheat, the first of the season. It was of the Star brand, and was consigned to Messrs. Eager & Co. Yesterday the market was more active, with sales of fully 2500 bbls, including 800 St. Louis at —, 418 in two lots, at $4 60, 400 at $4 75, 150 Extra Illinois at $4 85, 195 Extra St. Louis at $5 00, 150 at $5 10, 150 at $5 25, 400 at $5 45, and 170, in two lots, at $5 50 ₰ bbl.

Week's receipts, 8782 bbls—exports, 2236.

CORN.—The market for Corn has been only moderately supplied and with a good demand most of the week, holders have generally realized an advance on our last quotations. The sales up to yesterday morning comprised 13,000 sacks, mostly at 58@60¢ for Mixed and Yellow and 61@62½¢ ₰ bushel for White, though including some small lots, mostly resales, at 63@65¢ ₰ bushel for White. Y

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE MAIDEN'S COMPLAINT....By Bess.

I really think it is a shame
A woman can't propose,
Instead of waiting like a dunce
Or obstinate young beanx;
Our foolish custom never allows
A timid maid to choose,
But she must listen to man's choice,
Then take him or refuse.

They tell us that when leap-year comes,
This privilege we have,
But 'tis an idle tale, I vow—
We're nothing but man's slave;
I wish some one would make a law,
To take effect direct,
That man should henceforth sit,
And woman should not-sit.

Why, if a woman now declines,
If asked some time or other,
And thus lets one proposal slip,
She ne'er might get another.
But man can poke his nose around,
And pick where he's inclined to,
Or he can let the matter pass,
Just as he has a mind to.

It clearly is a shameful thing,
To my the least about it,
That men alone should have a choice—
Made bipeds, do you doubt it?
If women gives the van to man,
Why don't they do their duty,
And pop the question, sans delay,
To every smiling beauty?

There is more truth than poetry in the following, which we find in an exchange:

Thoughts on Marriage....By E. R. M.

In how many instances, at the present day, is marriage merely a union of hands—the affections not being ever taken into consideration. The question on the one side, "Is she handsome? has she money?" On the other, "Can he support me in style? shall I be able to make an appearance?" How much better would it be to ask—"Has the woman a heart capable of pure affection? will she be willing to share with me adversity as well as prosperity? will she forsake all others and cleave only unto me through weal and woe?"

And woman, yes woman—she whose very nature ought to stimulate her to higher and holier motives for taking upon herself the marriage relation—is too often only anxious as to the length of her husband's purse, and the amount of his bank stock. The heart—the mind—the intellect—yes, everything worth marrying for, being non-essentials.

But oh, the misery which too often follows such marriages. The husband, when it is too late, laments his blindness and folly. The wife is made to realize that riches take to themselves wings and fly away; and then comes the consciousness of a want of sympathy and congeniality of feelings. Each are thrown back upon themselves, for not a chord in the breast of one vibrates in unison with the other. Let the young beware how they enter the marriage state from such motives, lest they awake too late for the delusion. Consult the judgment and hesitate when that says, "beware!" Let the property be in rather than with the companion.

Oh, the loneliness of an unwedded heart. The hands may be united; but to feel that in heart, you are separated must be misery indeed. Truly the rotine of duties might be regularly performed, and with that exactness which would preclude the possibility of a complaint; but with the knowledge that it was not prompted by love; that it is not the spontaneous expression of a heart all your own—life may be endured. Many, alas, too many, can testify to the truth, from practical experience. Let their experience prove a warning to others against the shoals and quicksands of this uncertain sea.

Examine the heart, not the purse; the soul, the mind, not the tenement it dwells in. Consult judgment, not fancy. Let pure, heartfelt affection be the incentive to marriage. To think of being obliged to associate for life with one who has not a feeling in sympathy with you, and who is moreover in sentiment, taste and feeling directly opposed to you—how revolting the thought. Then, let love, not ambition, lead you to form those ties that nought but death can hopefully sever.

The Poet-Quoting Lawyer.—Ardent young men fresh from the schools, in their early attempts at the bar, are very apt to adopt a flowery bombastic style of language and sentiment. There is, indeed, in multitudes of instances at the bar, a strong temptation to magnify and embellish things essentially trivial, beyond all reasonable bounds: and the sanguine young lawyer, especially anxious to make the most powerful effect on the minds of the jury, and succeed in his first efforts, becomes florid and bombastic before he is aware.

But seldom is such a pleader more sharply dealt with by senior brothers than in the case following:

There was in the town of B., in West Tennessee, a young lawyer, who had studied the poets more than the legal writers of the age, and who availed himself of every opportunity of displaying his poetical acquirements, by quoting from Byron, Milton, Young, and other verse-makers. He once employed on a criminal case, and, as usual, launched forth in a flowery speech, quoting all the poets, both known and unknown, until he had worked the jury up into such a state of excitement, that they were ready to render their verdict in his favor instantor. The State's Attorney, who was a very plain, straightforward man, listened quietly to the whole speech, and seemed much pleased with the happy effort of his young opponent. Slowly rising from his seat after the speech was ended, he said;

"May it please the court and gentlemen of the jury—I have, for more than twenty years, practiced in this court, and knew not, until my young brother's appearance at the bar, that every lawyer had to contribute his share of rhyme, and I beg your kind indulgence of my ignorance of this new style of pleading. I know but one piece of rhyme, and would never have recollected that, had not a friend of mine been wicked enough to perpetrate a parody on it. It was written for a fisherman, and I give it for the benefit of the court, who will please excuse its inappropriateness, as I have nothing better to contribute—

"'His pole was made of the sturdy oak
And his line a cable that never broke,
He baited his hook with tigers' tails,
And sat on a rock and bobbed for whales.'

"My friend, whose couch was infested with a species of insect which is noted for its biting and stinging propensities, altered it to the following—

"'His pole was made of the peacock's feather,
And his line consisted of the lightest tether;
He baited his hook with ashes of cheese,
And sat on his bed to bob for fleas.'"

This burlesque was received with roars of laughter, and the discomfited young lawyer retired, having the mortification of hearing a verdict rendered against his client.

Petty Debts.—Make two large debts sooner than a small one. These petty, trifling, clamorous, troublesome, vexatious little debts, crush them in the egg, my dear young friends; despise them; pay them! In point of fact, these debts have no real existence. They slip through your fingers like an eel, just when you think you have hold of them—when you want to discharge them, your purse, the moment before well filled, is suddenly found to be empty. There is something supernatural about it. Happy is the man who makes debts with impunity, thrice happy he who makes none.

From these petty debts arise daily a thousand ingenious expedients, sublime sacrifices, stolen privations.

For instance, most young men of the present day die rich or poor, have no money for the necessaries of life, while they always have enough to waste on its most frivolous indulgences. They are lavish on every thing that is got on credit, seeing of all that must be paid for in cash. Thus a student, or a fashionable man about town, or any other spendthrift, takes far greater care of his hat than of his coat.

There is logic in this. The enormous profits of the tailor make him in his very essence a swindling tradesman, while the small gains of the hatter make him the most obstinate of all dealers for cash only.

Many a young man offers to the admiring eyes of the fair, dazzling waistcoats, overpowering cravats, diamond shirt-pins, a whole shop window of jewelry, who, very probably, has no stockings on. There is a reason for this, too. The hosier don't trust.

You are walking, one balmy summer evening, with a pretty widow hanging on your arm, who is soon to make you a present of her fair hand, with all the lands, tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto appertaining. While you are talking about love and happiness, and also about economy and a well-regulated household, a gaunt, hideous monster crosses your path. He has something wrapped up in a colored handkerchief, which he thrusts at you. It is your tailor—and his bill. Farewell to the hand of the pretty widow, with all the lands, houses, tenements, etc.

To sum up all in one word, run in debt for a hundred, thousand francs sooner than for a hundred.

A Chapter on Bonnets.—The Home Journal contains the following, which may be interesting to our readers:

"Bonnets without fronts we are used to; but the last Parisian novelty is a bonnet without a crown! 'These bonnets,' says a Paris letter, 'have three great qualities—light as a feather, transparent as gauze, and hanging on the head like a Neapolitan plateau.' This bonnet is an assemblage of flowers, ribbons and lace: a point of taffetan, richly embroidered in large dots with straw, which shades the knot of plaited hair which falls on the nape of the neck. We have said 'bonnets without crowns:' ere we sure they have any front? We can scarcely say; if the narrow, black lace, which edges it, and playfully falls on the forehead and gracefully encircles the face, is the only front—we certainly dare not give this coiffure the name of bonnet. On each side bunches of flowers, as well as the bread strings, complete the harmony. The designs are embroidered to match the plateau. This bonnet requires particular attention in the dressing of the hair. The summit of the head must be left free, and the hair arranged quite low. These bonnets are destined to create a sensation in the fashionable world; but only the very pretty and the very young dare to adopt this novelty."

A Random Dialogue.—In the town of N——, in New Hampshire, lived old farmer P——, who had the misfortune to be very deaf. On his farm, and close by the road, there stood a very large tree, and some thirty feet from the ground on the tree was a large knot.

As farmer P—— was passing by one day, he thought he would cut it down to make a mill post. He had been at work a short time, when he thought some stranger would come along and ask him the following questions, and he would make the following answers:

Stranger—What is that tree for?

Farmer.—A mill post.

S.—How long are you going to cut it?

F.—Up to that knot.

S.—How much do you ask for it?

F.—Five dollars.

S.—I won't give it.

F.—Well, if you don't somebody else will.

As old farmer P—— was working away, sure enough a stranger did come along, who asked the following questions, and received the following answers:

Stranger—Good morning, sir.

Farmer—A mill post.

S.—How far is it down to the corner?

F.—Up to that knot.

S.—You don't understand me—how far is it down to the corner?

F.—Five dollars.

S.—You old soamp! I have a good mind to give you a whipping.

F.—Well, if you don't somebody else will.

Names of Newspapers.—The number of newspapers now printed in this country (not including monthly magazines) is, according to a statement of the Philadelphia Register, 3500; and there is a remarkable sameness in their names. The Inquirers, Advertisers, Transcripts, Mirrors, Advocates, Recorders, Chronicles, Republicans, Whigs, Palladiums, Tribunes, Heralds, Patriots, Observers, Messengers, Journals, Couriers, Sentinels, Reporters, Registers, Mercurys, Flags and Banners, constitute about two-thirds of the whole. Besides the above, there are 167 Democrats, and 129 Gazettes.

As an offset to this, we may notice a few of the unique names, such as the Pleasure Boat Life Boat, Yankee Blade, Rough Notes, Rough Hewer, Almighty Dollar, Old Oaken Bucket, Locomotive, Screw Driver, Busy Martha, Young American, Nonpariel, Straight Forward, Acorn, Sunbeam, Rainbow, Fact, Plain Dealer, The Wonder, Hinge of Mirth, Cataract, Tempest, Old Settler, Uncle Tom's Cabin, All Sorts, David's Sling, Circumstance, Urn, Budget, Castigator, Lantern, Pick, Yankee Notion, Uncle Sam, Boston Notion, Prairie Bird, Gem of the Prairie Land, Ram's Horn, Bugle, Chronotype, Golden Rule, Old Colony, Pine Knot, Whip and Spur, Blue Hen's Chickens, Hornet's Nest, Live Giraffe, Beobachter, Auzeiger, Kaddaradatsch, and some jaw-breaking Norwegian and German names which we do not remember, some of them among our most able and valuable papers.

What is a For?—A Mr. Stark, in a lecture before the Young Men's Association, of Troy, N. Y., gave the following definition: "The fop is a complete specimen of an outside philosopher. He is one-third collar, one-sixth patent leather, one-fourth walking-stick, and the remainder gloves and hair. As to remote ancestry there is some doubt; but it is now pretty well settled that he is the son of a tailor's goose. He becomes ecstatic at the smell of new cloth. He is somewhat nervous, and to dream of a tailor's bill gives him the nightmare. By his hair one would judge he was dipped like Achilles: but it is evident that goddess held by the heed instead of the heels. Nevertheless such men are useful. If there were no fopdoles there would be no frogs. They are not so entirely to blame for being so devoted to externals. Paste diamonds must have a splendid setting to make them sell. Only it does seem a waste of materials to put five dollars' worth of beaver on five cents' worth of brains."

General Jackson's Law Office.—It may not be generally known among our distant readers that the office in which General Jackson read law in this town is still standing. It is a small frame building, and seems to have been once painted red; but its color at present would be hard to describe. The hand of time is visible upon it. We visited it a few days ago; it stands upon the lot of Nathaniel Boyden, Esq., and in front of his elegant dwelling. A stranger would wonder that it was permitted to remain a decaying and unsightly structure in the midst of taste and elegance; but there are associations connected with it—be it said to the honor of the proprietor—that preserve it from the ruthless hand of progress. Its former tenant, after a career among the most brilliant in the annals of history, now mouldere in the grave, leaving behind him a name as lasting as time. From this humble, insignificant office he went forth, rising step by step, encircling his brow with fresh laurels, and extending the circle of his fame at every advance, until he at last reached the proudest height, the most honored station in the world. Living, he was his country's pride, and dead, his memory is shrined in every heart. [Salisbury (N. C.) Banner.

A Model Memoranda.—The clerk of the steamer Greek Slave, upon a recent return trip from St. Paul, furnished the reporters of St. Louis with the following memoranda. Let the clerks in the lower trade follow his example:

"Memorandum—Steamer Greek Slave—St. Louis, June 11, 1853.—Freights scarce and boats plenty; politicians aspiring and the people perspiring; strawberries disappearing, musquitoes appearing; theatres closing, editors dosing. Left the Asia in port, in some legal sport; on Sunday the Grand Prairie we met, hurrying below some freight to get. Monday, very early in the morn, at Keokuk heard the Franklin blow her horn. Leaving Nauvoo, the Excelsior was spied, and at Pontussac we were side by side. Tuesday morning, while lying at Moline, the steamer Golden Era on her downward trip was seen. In the evening we met the Michigan and passed the Lamartine; we touched at Galena, found the Nominee asleep, and the West Newton waiting a quick trip to make, and was only lying by to accompany the "Die." In Lake Pepin the Ben Campbell we met, kept steady on our course, but still did'nt fret, and early next morn came into port after being just about 11½ days out."

A Son of the Forest.—A sturdy son of the forest, whose copper color, straight black hair and high cheek bones gave unmistakable evidence of his paternity, quietly seated himself in the Senate gallery yesterday. His dark eye wandered, the perspiration rolled down his swarthy cheekn, his long black hair soon covered most of the features of a well formed face, and he lolled over on one side in the enjoyment of a quiet nap. The poor fellow was so intoxicated that he soon occupied full six feet of the seat, and snored audibly. The sergeant-at-arms conducted the poor Indian to the door. [Albany Argus, June 11.

The returned Californians from Australia make most melancholy statements of their treatment in the new El Dorado. All Americans were treated with indignity there, being openly and grossly insulted in the streets. Some Frenchmen who have returned to California from that country make similar statements concerning themselves.

Later from New Mexico.

The Santa Fe mail of the 1st of June reached Independence, Mo., on the 21st. The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 24th says:

Among the passengers were Mr. Greiner, late Secretary of the Territory, and Mr. Dallon, a merchant of Santa Fe. The trip was, we understand, a very pleasant one. On the Arkansas, near Fort Atkinson, a large number of Indians—Camanches, Kiowas, Cheyennes and Arrapahoes—were collected, waiting for the arrival of Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Indian Agent, who was expected with presents for distribution among them.

The news from New Mexico is interesting.

Early in May a party of Navajoes came down on a ranch on the west side of the Del Norte, opposite La Canada, and killed a Mexican, who was herding animals, took captive five children, and ran off a quantity of stock. The Indians concerned in the foray were known to belong to Black Eagle's band, which inhabits the Canon de Chelle. Upon demand being made, the prisoners and stolen animals were restored: but the chief said he could not surrender the murderers, because they were of too much consequence in the tribe to be dealt with in that way. Black Eagle was then informed that the murderers must be given up before the full moon, (about the 20th of June,) or force would be used to compel the surrender. Time matters stood at last date. Col. Sumner was preparing to march into the Navajo country in three divisions, and would pursue an energetic course. These Navajoes are said to be very well off. They have an abundance of stock, and one field well planted in corn, containing fifteen square miles. About the time of these occurrences six thousand sheep were driven off by the Navajoes at one time from the Rio Abajo.

The Navajoes, up to the time of these outrages, has been quiet for nearly two years. Further mischief, the renewal of the old depredations and a troublesome war may be apprehended.

There was less excitement upon the Mesilla valley question. Gov. Trias, of Chihuahua, early in May, was at El Peso, with eight hundred men and artillery. He did not, however, occupy the disputed territory. As we understand, a letter was brought by him from our Minister in Mexico, Mr. Conkling, to Gov. Lane, in which Mr. Conkling advised the Governor to "recede from his position as gracefully as possible."

Gov. Lane replied to this letter, and probably showed pretty good reasons for the course he had taken. Armed with this letter, Gov. Trias was enabled to create an impression that Governor Lane's course would not be sustained by our Government, especially as Col. Sumner had refused to act. Accordingly he became quite gracious and amiable towards the Americans. The hospitalities of El Peso were tendered to Col. Miles and the garrison at Fort Fillmore. The Colonel and some of his officers accepted them, and, so far as these festivities could accomplish it, the hatchet was buried amid the hillarities of a fandango, which lasted fourteen hours.

As regards the matter of occupation of the Mesilla Territory, we may add, that although Trias was not in the Territory, there has been, if we are not misinformed, a small Mexican force there for some time, and Americans claiming to reside there as citizens of the United States, have been ordered out.

Gov. Lane has been nominated for Congress by the Mexicans of the Rio Abajo. Mr. Wrightman has not been nominated, but was understood to be a candidate. It was possible that a Mexican might be nominated. Should there be no such nomination it was believed that Gov. Lane would be elected.

Business in the Territory continued dull.

Weather and Crops in Mississippi.—The Yazoo Democrat of June 20 says on this subject: "The weather continues dry—for several miles around the city there has not been rain enough for nearly two months to completely lay the dust. In some portions of this and Holmes counties there has been abundance of rain. We have heard of some plantations, on one portion of which plenty of rain has fallen, while on the other there has been none. The corn crop must be short, several valley planters having told us that they will not make ten bushels to the acre. Cotton continues backward."

The Columbus Argus of June 23 remarks: "Copious showers of rain have fallen in this region during the past three days, making all kinds of vegetables look once more flourishing. The rain, however, comes too late to do early corn and garden vegetables much good, as most of it died before the rain fell."

Health of the Interior.—The Hinds county (Miss.) Gazette, speaking of the sanitary condition of portions of the State in the interior, says:

"While that dire calamity, the small pox, provails to some extent, in a number of counties to the North, it is useless to attempt to conceal the fact, that an extraordinary amount of sickness has prevailed in this vicinity for a month or two past, with an unusually large number of deaths among both children and adults. No particular disease, however, has prevailed in this locality, unless it be the dysentery running into flux, which has proved quite fatal; and we do not know that we can say that there is any change for the better."

Singularly Tragic Incident.—On Wednesday of last week a most tragic incident occurred on the Central Railroad at Tyrone Station, in this county, the particulars of which are about as follows: An Irishman whose name we have not learned, and who had been employed about the road there for some time past, was waiting the arrival of the train to come to Altona; and while loitering about fell in with another man who was at work on the road; and the two by some means got into a good-natured tussel, when the latter ran boyishly away, the first pursued, and in the chase the foremost tripped and fell, the Irishman (being close upon his heels) fell over him, and by a singular fatality dislocated his neck and died instantly. Afflicting incident, surely! But how much more afflicting when we add that the very train for which he was waiting bore his wife and children, just from Ireland, on their way to meet him. Imagine then the sore anguish which exercised them while gazing on his cold and lifeless remains, instead of receiving his fond and affectionate embraces. The picture claims a tear. [Hollidaysburg Register.

Squatting.—The following account of an event in Traverse de Sioux will give an idea of the state of society in some of the distant locations of Uncle Sam's dominions:

"A young man, some months since, went to Traverse do Sioux, made a claim and plowed, staked out, and improved his land. Having business to attend to, he left for Illinois, and during his absence, three brothers, strangers, went to Traverse, and, contrary to custom, law, honor, and the advice of the inhabitants, made themselves masters of the young man's property. On his return, he, of course, claimed his land; whereupon a quarrel arose, and in the heat of anger, the brothers attacked and shot the young man.

"The citizens were so incensed at such conduct, that they resolved at once, having no magistrate to appeal to, to have Lynch law, and hang or shoot them down at once. The missionaries, however, interfered, and persuaded the people not to take their lives; but they could not prevail on them to wait for the law of the territory to take its course. Accordingly some citizens had taken the three brothers, bound them to trees, and with a cat-o'-nine-tails, made expressly, gave them such a whipping as will take a life-time to forget—one man, indeed, prayed to them to shoot him, to put him out of his misery.

Special Envoy from Rome.—The New York Freeman's Journal states that Monsignor Bedini, Archbishop of Thebes, former Commissary Extraordinary of the Pontifical Government to the Legations, has left Rome as special Envoy of His Holiness to the United States. He is charged by the holy Father to pay a visit to the Government at Washington, and also to hold interviews with the different Prelates of the Church in the United States, and to acquire the most exact information respecting the interests and condition of the Catholic church in this country.

After making as long a visit as may be of advantage in the United States, Monsigner Bedini will go to Brazil, where he is to reside as Apostolic Nuncio near that Government.

The new railroad law passed by the Legislature of Connecticut, though essentially modified since reported by the special committee, still retains the provision rendering the company, where an individual has been killed, liable to an action for damages to an amount not exceeding $10,000.

The Frontier Indians—Apprehension of Encroachments.—Since it was announced by Col. Benton, and after him proclaimed by several of the presses friendly to him, that large portions of the Nebraska country are open to white settlers, a feeling of apprehension has arisen among the Indians, lest the lands they had supposed theirs might be entered on by the whites. As already stated by a Western paper, application has been made to the post at Fort Leavenworth with a view to such protection as the Commandant there might think fit to extend to the Indians in case of necessity.

The apprehension in question is not confined to the Nebraska tribes. The Cherokee Advocate of the 15th, referring to an arrest made in the Creek nation, by the Marshal of the Western District of Arkansas, and the rescue of the prisoner by order of a Creek Chief, remarks:

"We regret that the interest of the Creeks as a nation should be put in danger by the patriotism, though thoughtlessness of one of its Chiefs. Situated as the Indians generally are, subject to the oppressive hand of power, we greatly fear that this act of the Chief may lead to something that will injure the people.

"The Cherokees or Creeks, as nations, cannot, with safety to themselves, oppose force to the operations of the United States' laws, however unjust the people may conceive them to be—we are weak, they are mighty. Any act on our part that might lead to rapture would be the very thing sought and desired by our white neighbors who look with envious eyes upon the beautiful and rich country possessed by the Creeks and Cherokees.

"However much we regret the act of our neighbors, we believe that the course pursued by the United States Court and its officers towards the Indians, oppressive and not warranted by treaty stipulations.

"The whole of the Creek difficulty has arisen from the construction given by Judge Ringo to the Intercourse Law, 'regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes.'

"If as great efforts were used to prevent the bringing to our line by their own citizens the great quantity of hell's distilled liquid, as there is to find out and drag to Van Buren, some poor Indian who may have given to a friend a dram, there would scarcely be any use for the United States Courts at Van Buren. We have no doubt his honor, Judge Ringo, by his decision, designed good to the Indians; but as we remarked to him we feared the execution would lead to just such a result as that in the Creek Nation. [St. Louis Intelligencer, 29th ult.

Interesting from South America.—By advices from Rio, to the 17th ult., we learn that money was in extreme request there, and, for several days the banks refused all applications for discounts. The revenue of Brazil for the financial year was estimated at $34,000 000, and the expenditures at $30,471,000. The Minister of Finance had laid before the Chambers his proposals for the establishment of a bank of issue, the capital of which is to be 30,000,000 rons.

At Bahia the yellow fever was very prevalent, and the shipping were getting almost disabled by the loss of so many of their men. Commander Read, R. N., of Her Majesty's ship Express, died after a short illness on the 14th of May.

At Bahia, for several days, there was a rumor that a general rising of the black population would take place. The authorities kept the troops under arms all night, but nothing of the sort occurred.

Com. McKeever, of the U. S. squadron, was to have left for Buenos Ayres on the 3d ult., for Montevideo, and thence for Rio. The U. S. sloop of war Jamestown was at Buenos Ayres with several other foreign national vessels.

The state of affairs at Buenos Ayres is very bad. The besieging party occupy all the outskirts of the town, and daily the inhabitants are aroused from their sleep by the discharge of artillery in the skirmishes that take place. A cannon ball took off a woman's head while sitting in bed combing her hair; another came thundering down one of the streets and took a leg each from two men. The city is not only besieged, but blockaded. Business is as dull as possible. The besiegers have declared several new ports of entry open, above and below the city, in order to ship the hides, they are so rapidly accumulating by killing the cattle of the province.

"Ion," writing from Washington to the Baltimore Sun, under date of the 26th ult., says:

Advices received by mercantile houses in Boston and New York, from their European correspondents, go to show that there is no probability of a war between Russia and Turkey, or any other war, notwithstanding the signs of the times. It is said, also, to be the opinion of the Cabinet at Washington, as derived from their European advices, that war will not occur. In fine, a war in Europe at present is generally considered to be, to use the words of one of her statesmen, "an impossibility."

The rumored alliance between Spain and Santa Anna is so far improbable, that we can get no war out of that. A great deal is to be made, however, out of Uncle Tom Cabinism, and it is already declared, in at least semi-official quarters, that in that now demand lurks a casus belli. If we consider the Stafford House concern as the British Government, and reflect also upon the fact that it is, at best, a petticoat government, and remark upon the sympathies between the lady monarch and the lady agitators, we must admit that, at best, "war is inevitable."

The demonstrations in favor of Mrs. Uncle Tom, added to the rumors of British designs for the abolition of slavery in Cuba, are already considered us an adequate justification of the proposition for our Government to take the initiative in the war impending, by the immediate seizure of Cuba.

The Fishery question is, after all, the nearest chance for a war at present, and if we cannot get it out of Tom Cabin, we may get it out of Tom Cod.

The American fishing vessels have gone out well armed and well manned, and a great number are to follow during the next month. They will resist what they consider the aggressions, and I have no doubt they will construe the convention of 1818 to mean that they may, as heretofore, fish where they please. A single fishery vessel may not undertake to resist a ship of the line or even an armed cruizer, but a number of them combined may be able to make reprisals both ashore and at sea; and this, as I learn from good authority, it is their purpose to do.

Meanwhile, the negotiation for the adjustment of the question is going on very well, and will no doubt, in the course of time, be brought to a satisfactory conclusion—but not in time to mer the expected sport of the fishermen, either in fishing or fighting this season.

Several of the newly appointed foreign ministers are expected to arrive here during the present week, for the purpose of receiving their instructions, written and verbal.

Wool Growing in Virginia.—We are gratified to observe that the planters and farmers of the Old Dominion are bent upon making themselves practically independent.

An ounce of hard, earnest effort in the right direction is worth half a session of declamation. Wool is one of the great staples which has been neglected in Virginia from time immemorial. The Northern States have hitherto possessed almost a monopoly of this essential article.

What they have failed to supply has been furnished by Spain and South America, with an occasional supply from Germany and Saxony. Virginia has stood aside, and seen the wealth derivable from the growth of wool absorbed and appropriated by her neighbors. But a new era has been opened, and we boldly predict that our State will shortly rank among the first in furnishing wool for the marts of the world. We saw, yesterday morning, a sample of fine Saxony wool, grown in this State, that would bring, in any market, from 85 to 90 cents per lb. We also looked over some samples of Merino, grown within twenty miles of Richmond, that brought sixty cents in this market. The grower remarked that at such rates he could not engage in a mere profitable business. It seems that he had entered upon wool-growing merely as an experiment—and has only 170 sheep in his flock. For this season's clip he received about $350. He informed us that he had 100 lambs for sale, for which the butchers had repeatedly offered $4 per head, but that, as they were full-blooded Merino, he had sold most of them at $10 each, and expected no difficulty in selling the remainder at the same price. At this rate his profits for a single year will be from $750 to $1350 upon 170 sheep! On being asked the annual cost per head of feeding them, he replied forty cents—but added that, since their manure was worth three times that sum, he concluded that his wool had really cost him less than nothing. Considerable attention is now being paid to the growth of wool upon the poorer lands of Fairfax and Prince William, and the business is steadily increasing throughout the whole Piedmont region from Harper's Ferry to the North Carolina line. We doubt not that even in the tide water sections of our State, the growth of wool will be found profitable. [Richmond Dispatch.

The telegraph recently gave an account of the death of Mr. Winthrop Richardson, at Stoneham, Massachusetts, by being run over by a railroad train, adding that his body was so mangled that no piece larger than his hand was found. We were disposed to regard this as an exaggeration, but from the following account, which we take from the Boston Courier, it appears to have been literally true:

"Mr. Richardson started from his house, for the purpose, as is supposed, of seeing Mrs. Wood (his daughter) safely in the cars. As he approached the track, the Manchester express train hove in sight, and he saw it. He looked at it, as if to measure the distance, and then attempted to run across the rails. He made several jumps, and succeeded in leaping upon the platform; but in so doing lost his equilibrium, fell backwards, and was struck by the locomotive. His body was mangled into pound particles. His head was crushed into atoms—the warm brain was found upon the platform, the liver adhered to one of the brakes, the still throbbing heart was found upon a rail, and pieces of dissevered limbs were strewn along the track for some distance. Not a limb escaped unbroken, and never was mangling more complete. The engine was smeared over with blood, and particles of flesh adhered to it. Mrs. Wood was a spectator at the destruction of her father, and two or three other persons were standing near the Station-house at the time."

Oppression.—We hear much, from time to time, about the half-paid labor of seamstresses, particularly in New York city. That the oppressions heaped upon this class of persons are burdensome and cruel in the extreme, facts of every day occurrence fully illustrate. For instance, the Tribune, speaking of the "shirt makers," states the following among many similar facts:

"We have stated that shirts are made for five cents apiece, and some even as low as four; but we will take the former price as being the more usual. For this sum the shirt has to be completed so as to be ready for wear and delivered a very expert needle-woman can make three between her hours of rest, which are rarely sufficiently prolonged to recruit her overtasked strength. Six days labor would thus produce ninety cents, but only if uninterrupted by other duties; but this sum, small as it is, is never attained at these prices, as the dealers, seeking and returning the goods, and producing several journeys for settlement of her claim, make a great inroad into her hours of labor, reducing her earnings one-half, or to about five cents per week!

"Another firm, reputed wealthy, and whose opulence has been mainly gained by this murderous trade, has probably attained the acme of perfection in the art of getting the greatest advantage at the least outlay; as, in addition to paying miserable wages, and requiring a deposit, it is stipulated that one-half of the amount earned by the seamstresses in their employ shall be taken out in other goods at this self-sacrificing house!"

Elihu Townsend, a director of the New Haven railroad, died in New York. The recent terrible accident and loss of life on the road made a deep impression upon his mind, from the effects of which, it is said, he never recovered.

AN ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY FOR THE YOUNG.

FORRESTER'S BOYS' AND GIRLS' MAGAZINE.

This popular work is now issued on the first of every month, by Franklin & George C. Rand, No. 7 Cornhill, Boston.

This Magazine has been lately much improved, is issued promptly, and is pronounced by the most respectable presses to be the very ablest thing of the kind in the country. It is edited by "Francis Forrester, Esq.," a gentleman who has no superior as a writer for the Young.

Each number will contain 32 pages of handsome print, and will be illustrated by more than half a dozen beautiful Wood Engravings.

Terms, $1 00 per annum, invariably in advance. Liberal discount made to Clubs.

Agents wanted, who can furnish unquestionable references. Individual subscribers, however, may be their own agents, by carefully enclosing a gold dollar to the Publishes. A new volume commences with the July No.

A specimen No. sent to those who desire it.

All Methodist Traveling Preachers are authorized Agents—to whom a commission of 25 per cent. will be paid for new subscribers.

Address F. & O. C. RAND,
No. 7 Cornhill, Boston.

jy9'1t

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two "	5 00 "
For any three "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews,	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y]

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received, except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition..... $200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French Language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUROSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans.
jel1 1y

A NEW MEDICINE.

EPPINO'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

THIS excellent extract is a concentrated preparation of Buchu, with other vegetable diuretics. It is as medical men will see, designed for that class of diseases which affect the urinary organs. For diseases and directions, see the label on each bottle. It is also a very fine alterative medicine. Dyspeptics, laboring under hepatic derangement, find great relief from the use of this remedy. It is on sale at the store of E. WHEELER & CO., 151 Chartres street, and the store of J. MACPHERSON, 29 Camp st.

It comports best with my feelings to offer this article to Physicians, Druggists and Hospitals, upon my medical knowledge and Christian reputation, without the accustomed puffing.
Dr. L. PIERCE,
my21 Columbus, Georgia.

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.

HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19, 1853. 3mo.

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 6

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the slapping from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enables them to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonious and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.
ANDREW MENEELY'S SONS.
West Troy, Albany county, N. Y., 1851.
SLARK, DAY & STAUFFER,
ap10* Agents in New Orleans.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & Co.,
No 60 Gravier street, New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety
Coach, Ole, Buggy, Bearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Mellice Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish; India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gibs and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods, Traveling and Packi Tru leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, Valls
mh6 '52—1y

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

☞ The claims of this new discovery are:

A CALL FOR PREACHERS.

As the period approaches for holding the sessions of the different conferences in the great field of Southern Methodism, it may be deemed appropriate to direct the attention of the preachers, in the different conferences, to a subject of great importance to our prosperity as a Church. It is known

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER,

H. N McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DOSSMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 24. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 128.

THE OLD MAN'S FUNERAL.... By W. C. Bryant

"We an aged man upon his bier,
Whose hair was thin and white, and on his front
Whose hair was thin and white, and on his front
Were furrows of the cares of many a year;
Although that were ended and forgotten now,
And there was sadness round, and faces bowed
And women's tears fell fast, and children wailed aloud.

And one went another hears upon and said:
"Gathering accounts behind weeping train,
Why grieve ye that our aged friend is dead?
Have not sad he to see the gathered grain,
When their mellow fruits the orchards cast,
And the yellow woods shake down their ripened mast?"

"Right not when the sun, his course fulfilled,
His glorious course, rejoicing earth and sky,
Sinks at evening, when the winds are stilled,
And bids their balmy islands of refreshments lie,
And leave the smile of his departure, spread
On the warm-colored beach and ruddy mountain head."

"Then weep ye then for him, who, having won
The bound of man's appointed years at last,
And blessings all enjoyed, life's labors done,
Sinks to his final rest has passed;
And the soft memory of his virtues yet
Lingers like twilight hues, when the bright sun is set?"

"His youth was innocent; his riper age
Marked with some act of goodness every day;
And calmed by eyes that loved him, calm and sage,
And his late declining years away.
And he gave his being up, and went
To the holy rest that waits a life well spent."

"And happy every day he gave
Up for the fair existence that was his;
For many made him not his state,
But him with her phantom miseries,
From toil he never racked his aged limbs,
Many and sloth had nourished mine for him."

"I am glad that he has lived thus long,
And that he has gone to his reward;
Nor deem that nature done him wrong,
Who disengage the vital cord.
For the weak hand grew palsied, and his eye
Was with the mists of age, it was his time to die."

LETTER FROM FRANCE.

[Correspondence of the Advocate.]

PARIS, June 16, 1853.

It is now nearly eighteen months since I gave an account of the formation of the Paris Young Men's Christian Association, and of the Paris Sunday School Union: it is high time I should say something of the progress of these two Societies, which held their first general meetings towards the end of April, the same time as the other religious societies of this city.

The Young Men's Christian Association has grown slowly, but steadily progressing. Beginning with only twelve members, it has since gained seventeen, which makes a total of twenty-nine. But five of these have already been obliged to leave us, as they do not intend staying in Paris any more, but have returned, some to the country, some in Switzerland, and some to America. This last young man was from the neighborhood of Charleston, I believe. Being unable, on account of his health, to continue his labors as an itinerant preacher of the M. E. Church, he had left the ministry, and come to Paris to study medicine. When he had left us to return home he promised to do his utmost in forming a Young Men's Christian Association in the place of his residence, and he also informed us of his intention of writing to us, to let us know how he was getting on. We have not yet, however, heard from him, although he has been gone more than eight months. Should this meet his eye, or that of some friend of the Southern Christian Advocate who knows him very well, we hope he will not delay any longer to communicate with us. He will be pleased to hear that in the weekly prayer meetings, the members of the Paris Union often pray for him by name, as well as for the American Association, including that of New Orleans, the publication of which they have heard through the columns of the N. O. Advocate.

Many are to return. The interest excited in Paris by the formation of the Paris Association (we call it here Union,) has been very remarkable. In consequence of a circular issued on the subject a few months ago, letters of sympathy, of encouragement, and even of help, were received by the committee in great numbers, and we know some of France where to be a member of the Association is the best recommendation to the acquaintance of ministers that can be had. As a natural consequence, meetings of young men, generally young up in most localities where there are Christian youths, and regularly organized Unions now exist in Strasburg, Montaubar, Nismes, Ste. Foy, Saumur, &c., whilst others are forming in Lyons, Bordeaux, Marseilles, &c. These various Associations are to be merged in one great Society, called the Young Men's Christian Union of France, a plan of which will be established wherever a few more members reside together. These Unions, of which there are as yet seven, containing nearly 100 members, will correspond regularly, and visit one another as often as practicable. The Paris section is of course the largest and most important. Its meetings are frequented by some thirty or forty persons. Last winter, a course of fifteen lectures on the Evidences of Christianity and other subjects, were given by ministers of the Church of Chorohes, and the principal of these lectures were attended by as many as sixty young men, nearly one-half of whom were Catholics. The result has been encouraging. The spirit of inquiry has been awakened in regard to divine truth in the minds of many.

The reading rooms of the Union are to contain a dozen religious newspapers. The library comprehends about 400 volumes, which have been given by friends. Receipts, for the present time, $440. Expenses, $410.

The first report of the Sunday School Society is just issued. It is a pamphlet containing an account of the annual meeting, a list of members and a catalogue of books recommended by the committee for teachers and others, and sold by the agent of the Society, with a reduction of 20 to 40 per cent.

During the first year, the action of the committee has chiefly been one of organization. They have to make known the Society and its objects, and to obtain adhesions of members and subscriptions. The committee have also published 500,000 reward tickets, of which 300,000 are already sold, a Teacher's Class-book, and three tracts on Sunday Schools. They have, moreover, examined carefully and recommended to their Sunday School Catalogue 56 volumes. Deputations have been sent to the centre of France, to Switzerland and Belgium, and in consequence of these a certain number of new Sabbath Schools have been opened. The number of members of the Society is about 150, chiefly ministers and teachers. Receipts, $245. Expenses, $230.

Methodism seems to have taken for its motto in France the word "Onwards." The Northern and Southern District Meetings, held since my last letters, have elicited most encouraging facts, which are sure signs of future prosperity. Most delightful revivals have broken out in our three largest circuits, and hundreds of conversions have taken place, not only among us, but also amongst our brethren of the Established and of the Dissenting Churches; not only amongst the adults, but also and especially amongst the young, and particularly amongst Sunday scholars. One instance of conversion is so interesting that I may be excused for giving it at length.

In the small village of Bourdeaux, in the Drome Circuit, nearly all the children of our members have lately found peace with God. One day, a few weeks ago, they met together, to examine what children they could pray for. "I know," said one, "there's poor Joshua, he hasn't been able to attend any of our revival prayer meetings, because he is laid up in bed, and I dare say he isn't converted. Let's go and see." Off six of them went at once, and being introduced into the room where was Joshua, a little boy eight years old, laid up in consequence of a paralytic stroke, one of them said: "Joshua, we're come to pray for you, that you may be converted." The poor boy scarcely knew what that meant. However, he let his young comrades kneel round his crib, and pray one after another; but their prayers did not move him. "Well," said the children, "we'll come again to-morrow." They did come, and this time it was not in vain. The sick child soon began to weep, and then to cry out for mercy, and before his young friends retired, he had felt the pardoning love of God, and his soul was set at liberty.

A few days after, a Methodist minister visited him, and asked him how he was. "Very happy, sir," was the answer. "Have you always felt so?" "Oh no! sir," said Joshua, "formerly I used to be very miserable, when I heard my companions playing and enjoying themselves in the street." "What, then, makes you so happy now?" "Why, sir, it's because I feel God loves me, and I love him." "And are you always happy now?" "No, sir, sometimes Satan comes and tempts me, and makes me feel miserable." "What does he tell you?" "Oh! he says that I am mistaken, that I am not really converted." "And how do you answer him?" "Why, sir, I tell him that it's he that is mistaken, and not I; and then I tell him also, that even supposing I am not truly converted, it's none of his business, for it is not to him I'm going to be converted, any how."

I might give other instances of conversion, including that of a poor ignorant Roman Catholic girl, who found peace at a prayer meeting, and being accustomed to pay the priests for every favor she received from them, turned at once towards the ladies who had been praying for her, thanked them heartily, and added, with the most artless simplicity: "How much now do you charge for your prayers?" But space forbids, as I am afraid my letters are already much too long for many readers. Enough has been said, however, to show the encouraging aspects of our work in France. Even in the North, where there has not been a general outpouring of the Spirit, individual instances of conversion have been frequent. At Calais, a disciple of Voltaire, well versed in the writings of the atheistic school, is now come to his right senses, and meets regularly with us. In Paris, two soldiers have lately found peace, and they are endeavoring to make their light shine in their barracks amongst their military companions.

These facts and others, brought before the District meetings, made the brethren "thank God and take courage." They were also cheered by the circumstance that three young men presented themselves for the itinerant ministry, and passed their examinations in so creditable a manner as to be unanimously recommended to Conference. A good many other brethren offered themselves also as evangelists and colporteurs. It is true, that to employ them, money is wanted, but we do not despair on this score. Our usual receipts for the year present an increase on the preceding year of nearly $500, besides which special collections in the Paris Circuit, on behalf of the funds of the Committee of Evangelization, have reached nearly $100, and a sale in the South for the same object has produced $140. Then our American brethren from the North have kindly volunteered pecuniary help to the amount of two or three thousand dollars; and who knows but our brethren from the Southern States will do the same. We, therefore, have the means; we hope to find the means, the harvest is ready for us, and we are sure to obtain God's blessing. What more do we want?

I have said that the revival has not been confined to the Methodists, but that Church people and Dissenters have had their share of it. I am now happy to add that great progress has been made of late by the Evangelical party amongst the ministers of the Established Reformed Church, numbering rather more than 500. When my father came to France some thirty-five years ago, as a Wesleyan Missionary, there were not, he said, ten truly pious ministers in the whole number. But, through the blessings of God on his labors and on that of others, the orthodox pastors are now believed to be in a majority. It was, indeed, ascertained lately, in consequence of a division in which each party counted pretty closely its adherents, the three-fifths of the ministers are pious Christians. The publishing organ of the Rationalists is of course mad at this discovery, and were it not a cause of deep regret, it would really be amusing to see the artful way in which the editors misrepresent the simplest facts so as to make it appear they still are the strongest.

This progress of Evangelical truth has had a beneficial influence over some religious societies which had hitherto been merely Protestant. They have felt that in order to maintain their ground, they must enlist the sympathies of Evangelical Christians. Hence, at the late anniversaries, nearly all the speakers, even at the meetings of the School Society and of the Protestant Bible Society, which are in the hands of the Rationalists, were Evangelical men. May this change have lasting results on the Church.

Politically, I have little to say; the papers having less news every day. The Empress had a miscarriage a month ago. Two attempts were lately made on the Emperor's life—one in the Bois de Boulogne, when an officer attempted to stab him, and another in the Hippodrome. Not a single paper has dared to mention these two attempts, the truth of which I can vouch for. As to the war which is to be or not to be between Russia and Turkey, I cannot make out any thing from the press, as some say yes and others no. I am, however, disposed to believe that the Czar, awed by the English and French fleets, now before Constantinople, will not engage war, and will be satisfied with a few concessions which Turkey will be but too happy to make. But whatever happens, we are to know that "the Lord reigneth."

Mrs. Stowe is actually in Paris. But she has been so much wearied out by public receptions in England, that she has come here incog., wishing to see and receive nobody. There will, therefore, be no meetings of any kind.

J. P. C.

P. S. I open this letter to say that information has just been given to me of a third attempt at assassinating the Emperor. A field marshal, and some of the maids of honor of the palace, are said to have been imprisoned in consequence. I know no details.

[From the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.]

EMOTIONAL PREACHING.

South-western frontier preaching has occasionally furnished our personal perceptions with some rare exercise, and but for our authoritative senses we could scarcely have credited things we have seen and heard. Taken as a class of pure and elevated men, our backwoods preachers present singularities of style and manner that set all a priori reasoning at defiance, and leave you in perfect mystery as to the influences that could have developed such strange forms of language and illustration. Where they are, as is ordinarily the case, men of sincere piety, accrediting their profession by self-denying virtues, and devoting all their energies to planting Christianity amid the first rude signs of civilization, it is really the opening of a new department in unomalies to listen to their performances. The uncultivated mind, quickened by the operation of great truths, easily forgets that obedience to restraint which weakens the oratory of more refined men; its impulses are almost as sacred as inspiration, and it would as soon commit any other sin as to suppress them. Whatever interests them, they feel: and whatever they feel, they are sure to express in some shape or other. The strong individualism of all their modes of thought and utterance gives you a personal view of Christianity that can be found nowhere else; and if you understand human nature—how it thinks, hopes, fears, loves, and rejoices—you will not fail to gain an insight into religion that will be worth a score of learned commentaries. The moment in which they begin to have their emotions moved, you mark a change in their language. It becomes poetic at once, so that you tell their state by the class of words which they employ.

A beautiful feature of their humble preaching is its pathos. As soon as their hearts are touched, you will hear allusions to the departed; and no matter how wild their rhetoric may be, the genuine outburst of passion will be certain to reach you. They have friends in heaven—this is sufficient to mellow them. It is their heaven, because their wives and children are there; and with the force of instinct they cling to it as their all. The social element that is thus vital in their whole experience and teaching, gives an indescribable charm to the manifestations of their minds: they are true philosophers in feeling, if not in abstract sentiment; and knowing how to trust their own hearts, they resign themselves, without care or concern of popular opinion, to the sway of impulse, and depend on it for the entire effectiveness of their eloquence. Public speaking with them is no artificial measurement of how much this truth or that argument, this fact or that figure, will accomplish. They know nothing of these sins of scholastic orators. Religious influences are allowed to take their own course—often distorted, there can be no doubt, by low views and unrefined tastes—but still compensating every defect, by that simple, earnest hearty, passion, which brings out boldly the prevailing ideas and feelings of the hour.

The connexion of this singular style of pulpit effort with what is popularly called "stump speaking," may be clearly traced. It has, indeed, formed the whole system of tactics passing under that significant name. The direct, impassioned homeliness of political stump speaking has been derived entirely from this source; and its remarkable effects on the crowd may afford a good idea of what it has done in the ministry. Go into any cross-road meeting, where political candidates are appealing to the people, and you will hear the very figures, appeals, and tones of voice, that distinguished the ministry of these old way-side preachers. Politics has added its usual share of grossness and vulgarity to the original style; but, despite of this, you can see the primary influences that have determined the popular talent of the country in this direction.

Supposing a due veneration for truth, it is indisputable that imagination and passion are the main constituents of powerful eloquence everywhere in human life. The true orator has no other means of embodying himself and transferring his own thoughts and emotions to those around him. Nothing else can bring him out of himself nothing else transmute his audience with him—nothing else make truth undergo the media of social intercourse. Art multiplies its methods, but nature holds fast to her ancient and abiding laws. She will not be superseded: she tolerates no substitutes. If you wish her sanction, you must seek her language—smile with her look—frown with her sternness—shed her tears, and tremble with her sorrows. The sluggish canal might as well try to imitate the free mountain torrent, or the fireworks of a Fourth of July night the Alpine thunder-storm, as artificial speaking counterfeit the authentic utterances of honest eloquence. Nature may be adopted, embraced, and even improved, but she cannot be copied. The introduction and spread of this kind of pulpit effort grew out of popular necessities. It had no deliberate origin, but sprung spontaneously from the necessities of society. The world demands Christianity in natural forms of presentation; and though it may have laid too much stress on excitement, yet no abstract or logical mode of preaching can ever approach a compliance with the first conditions of effective eloquence. Instruction is not, indeed, a secondary business at any time, but instruction can only be valid and vital where the sensibilities are made the channels of its conveyance. The institution of the ministry contemplates this fact as its controlling law: for otherwise the simple possession of the Scriptures would be sufficient to regenerate society. The work of the true preacher is to reproduce those Scriptures in the warmth and strength of his own experience: to convert the mere letter into the more impressive and welcome spirit; to humanize its profound import in the language of common life, and thus win the world to virtue and goodness.

YOUR BOYS ON THE SABBATH.

Why do not the parents of our village have pride enough in the welfare of their boys to keep them within doors, or at Church, on the Sabbath? Scarcely a Sabbath passes by, especially in pleasant weather, that does not witness a noisy gang of boys in some one or other of our streets, or in some vacant lot, engaging in the sports and pastimes incident to the season, as indulged in during the week days. They may be seen at almost any time during the day, playing ball, marbles, trundling the hoop, &c., &c., or with line and pole in hand, starting for the streams trouting. Boys thus transgressing, are not only injuring themselves, and casting reproach upon their parents, by winning the unenviable reputation of wicked, loafing, Sabbath-breaking boys, but they are nuisances to their neighbors, who seek to appreciate the blessings of one day in seven in rest.

Nor is this all. Parents should reflect that by allowing their boys to disregard the Sabbath, and to appropriate its moments according to their inclinations, in fishing, hunting, ball playing, &c., they are permitting them to take the first step in vice, that may eventually lead them to the prison or the gallows. If no restraint is imposed upon them, they soon mingle with those proficient in vice and crime, who will lead them in the same paths they are treading. Parents should reflect that in thus permitting their boys to break the Sabbath, they are giving their tacit consent to their taking this first step in vice and crime, which, unless restrained, will lead to idleness, ignorance and ruin. They give them permission to become pests to society, not respecting themselves, nor being respected by others.

A history of the lives of all the criminals ever sentenced, imprisoned, or executed, would show that a disregard of the Sabbath was one of the leading steps in their progress to ruin; that in company with those who, like themselves, desecrated its time, they had taken the initintory step in vice that eventually led them to the commission of crime. And we are taught to believe that the parent, as well as the child, is responsible for these negligences, these sins. How easy a matter it is to destroy all desire in the child to dishonor this day, if you only commence in season. First evil impressions are easily eradicated—foul weeds sown in a good soil are quick to germinate, but are easily destroyed when they first spring into existence; but allow them to grow up and go to seed, and the fruits thereof are scattered in every direction, multiplying, kind parents, teach your boys to regard the Sabbath. The lessons taught us in that serene quiet of that Holy day, in childhood, though not taught by a parent—a mother—are still indelibly impressed upon our memory, as though it were but yesterday we received them. If they do not go to Church, keep them within doors, that they may not prove enemies to themselves, and nuisances to those around them. How can enjoy the quiet of home, and have a gang of boys in front of dwellings, playing games, laughing, shouting, cursing and swearing, especially on the Sabbath. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is one of the Commandments. [Exchange.

DIMENSIONS OF HEAVEN.—We find the following singular calculation in the Charlottesville Jeffersonian:

Rev. xxi: 16. "And he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal."

12,000 furlongs—7,920,000 feet, which being cubed, is 496,793,088,000,000,000,000 cubic feet; the half of which we will reserve for the Throne of God and Court of Heaven, half of the balance for streets, and the remainder divided by 4096, the cubical feet in a room 16 feet square, and 16 feet high, will be—30,321,843,750,000 rooms.

We will now suppose the world always did, and always will, contain 900,000,000 of inhabitants, and a generation will last 33 1/3 years—27,000,000,000 every century, and that the world will stand 100,000 years—2,700,000,000,000 persons. Then suppose there were 11,280 such worlds, equal to this in number of inhabitants, and duration of years, then there would be a room 16 feet long, 16 feet wide, and 16 feet high for each person; and yet there would be room.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

A LAFOURCHE "FOURTH."

THIBODAUX, LA.—A NEW "THING"—FOURTH OF JULY—GOOD EFFECTS OF SABBATH SCHOOLS—COLLECTION.

BRO. MCTYEIRE:—Though Christianity has been long struggling in this delightful section of country, it is but a comparatively short period since it has obtained any footing. But the leaven being now put into the measure, will it not leaven the whole lump? And where could it be more judiciously placed than among the children?

Notwithstanding a Sunday School celebration was a new thing in Thibodaux, it was determined by the S. S. of the Methodist Church here to take advantage of the glorious Fourth, and to appropriately pass the day in exercising the little girls and boys of the school in delivering suitable speeches, singing, &c.

The morning came, but to the sorrow of all, it was ushered in with deep toned thunder, rumbling in the distance, with presently dark lowering clouds, weeping over the town, and to all appearances, prospects were any thing else but favorable to the contemplated celebration. But happily the weeping was only for a season, and presently joy sprung up, as it was evident the clouds had spent themselves.

The citizens and children, at the appointed hour for meeting, began to assemble at the Church, though the passing clouds, in the language of one of the S. S. boys, were "still fretting." After prayer by the Rev. N. P. Chamberlin, Bro. Harp delivered an appropriate patriotic address, and then called upon his corps of little girls and boys, who surrounded him, for their speeches, to which they promptly responded, delivering a dialogue, a speech, in prose or verse, or singing, as the case might be. The exhibition was creditable. The teachers and children, Bro. Harp included, were in happy mood. The spectators were gratified, and answered to the dialogue of pewter plates in the handsome sum of $27, which nearly liquidated for the select library stowed away in their neat and spacious book-case, donated to the school by a worthy brother of the Church.

The Sabbath Schools are the nurseries which contain the lambs, and are so closely joined to Jesus Christ, that a ray of light emanates from these exhibitions, to which the darkness of Romanism must give way, and must remove the veil of prejudice which priestcraft has so long held over the eyes of a duped people. Oh! when shall the Sun of righteousness arise upon this people with healing in his wings!

I cannot refrain referring to one incident which occurred.

A Catholic lady whose little girls, against the expressed command of the priest, had been attending the S. S., was so much pleased with the progress and performances of her little girls that, with a burst of gratitude and native frankness, sent them to Bro. Harp to thank him for what he had taught them. "Go," said she to her sparkling eyed daughters, "and thank Mr. Harp for all the trouble he has taken to learn you something."

It has been remarked by old citizens that it was a still and quiet Fourth, compared with former ones. All the stores were closed—only those demoralizing dens of iniquity and vice, the grog-shops, remained with open doors, breathing forth their nefarious and contaminating atmosphere. When will the people rise in mass and rid themselves of of these plague spots!

LEWIS A. REED.

July 5, 1853.

LETTER FROM GALVESTON.

GALVESTON, Texas July 7, 1853.

MR. EDITOR:—It may be interesting to the friends of Zion to hear from Texas occasionally. I propose a few items. In the early part of the year our Church, through the agency of some of our sisters, turned its attention to the Sunday School, and they raised between one hundred and fifty and two hundred dollars to enlarge their library and subscribe for Sunday School papers. We now take one hundred and fifty S. S. Visitors, and the same number of S. S. Advocates. By this means every family that patronizes our Sunday School, is furnished with a copy of one of our papers weekly. This has given an impetus to our Sunday School operations, and resulted in an enlargement of the schools under our care—three in number.

Our Church edifice we found quite too small for the congregation, and attempts to build a new Church failing, we resolved to add to the size of our old Church, (Ryland Chapel, a monument of the zeal of our beloved brother, Dr. T. O. Summers.) In pursuance of this plan, a subscription started, and as the work progressed, the workmen were paid. By the 4th of July, a day dear to every American patriot, our house was in such a condition as to be ready for a Sunday School celebration. This was the order of the day with us. A heavy rain in the morning threatened us with a postponement, or a failure; but by 12 o'clock the rain was over, and the ladies, under whose direction the collation was prepared, were busily engaged receiving and arranging the dainties; and at 3 o'clock our Church was crowded to its utmost capacity, besides quite a number of interested spectators at the doors. Three hundred and fifty Sunday School Scholars and Teachers is a moderate estimate of the number present.

After singing and prayer, the Declaration of Independence was read by one of the pupils. Then followed declamation and singing, in both the English and German languages, for about an hour. The exercises closed with prayer, and a procession formed, led by a band of music, and marched around a square and to the School-house of Bro. Naylor, (the room in which the collation was prepared.) Here the chattering voices and merry laughs of the children, as they were served by their teachers and parents, told how happy they were in the approving smiles of God and men. The success of the past year, and plans for the future, were freely discussed, and upon many a smiling face was read the delight of being a Sunday School Scholar.

After refreshments, they again formed a procession, and formed compactly around the pastor of the Church, who addressed them briefly, and dismissed them with the benediction.

We have had a gradual increase of members during the year, and I trust our people are in good earnest, praying for and expecting a general revival.

Yours in Christ,

N. A. CRAVENS.

The following sketches are from the pen of a lady in the western part of our State. They are the result of her personal observations; and were, at their urgent request, submitted to the perusal of her immediate acquaintances: among these is the present editor; who has been so much fascinated by the purity of style and the luxuriance of diction, as well as interested and instructed by the fidelity of her descriptions, that he has not felt at liberty to withhold this—first production, as he believes, of the fertile female mind of Louisiana—from the public eye.

The country of Calcasieu, as the fair author justly observes, is almost unknown to the rest of the State. Cut off by the great swamp of the Mississippi on the east, and the pine forest that skirts the banks of the Red River on the north, from the abodes of more advanced civilization, the humble habitans of Calcasieu retain much of the original customs, habits of thought and simplicity of life, that characterized their humble but honest ancestors.

Calcasieu has for many years been the resort of the lovers of the chase and the amateurs of rural sports from the adjacent parishes; and if the perusal of this sketch shall induce these who now travel North, or back upon the shores of Lake Pontchartrain, to seek for nature in all its simplicity on the banks of the Calcasieu, the labor of the editor will not have been vain. They will find there, it is true, no scenes of revelry, or outbreaks of boisterous mirth, but to those who love to ——"Look through nature up to nature's God," the majestic forests, the vast prairies, the velvet lawns, the gay parterres, the "resounding shores," and the balmy breezes of Calcasieu afford abundant material to quicken their devotion. [Crescent.

CALCASIEU AND ITS INHABITANTS.

BY M. E. W.

Calcasieu—once forming part of the parish of St. Landry, but lately re-assuming, as a separate parish, the name by which it was originally distinguished—lies in the South-western part of Louisiana, and by its difficulty of access and the peculiar character of its inhabitants, has remained, until lately, a "terra incognita," even to the natives of the State in which it lies.

It was formerly inhabited by a numerous and powerful tribe of the Attakapas Indians, who, confiding in numbers and strength, made frequent inroads upon the territories of the neighboring tribes of Texas. They were generally successful, and multitudes of prisoners were yearly sacrificed to appease the manes of their fallen warriors, and satisfy their own cannibal tastes; but the enjoyment of these bloody feats was at last somewhat diminished by the intelligence of a combination among some hitherto hostile tribes to rid themselves of a common enemy.

The Attakapas, however, had been too long victorious to entertain any serious dread of the union of foes, whose separate impotence had already been displayed by frequent and numerous defeats. In happy unconcern they sacrificed the last remaining prisoner, pledged each other in his blood to a safe and triumphant return, and departed to meet the enemy who were already established on the opposite side of the Sabine.

The conflict was long and terrible; but on the side of the Attakapas, unaccompanied by such loss, that very few of the numerous warriors who left Calcasieu with a conceited certainty of victory returned to tell the galling tale of their total and bloody rout. By strenuous exertions, however, on the part of the chief of the tribe—a man of energy and sagacity—another war party was organized, which, by its superior skill, was expected to avenge the losses of the previous engagement; but their day of success was over.

The small-pox in its most virulent form broke out among them, and by its ravages left neither power nor inclination to prosecute the intended enterprise.

Even their wonted apathy deserted them and gave place to a general panic, when they saw the flower of their tribe sink daily beneath the scourge which seemed to gain fresh strength at every access of victims, and with a simultaneous effort they prepared to leave a spot tenanted, according to their superstitious ideas, by the malignant spirits of their slain enemies, who, by this fearful malady, avenged themselves upon a race unconquerable too.

Slowly and painfully they traveled towards the Gulf, which lay scarcely fifty miles from their usual place of sojourn, but the evil influence from which they fled pursued and cast its darkest shadow upon their path. Every step was marked by the bodies of the dead and dying, who had soon succumbed to fatigue and disease. In utter despair they at last reached Lake Calcasieu, and on a high shell bank, on its western border, determined to await, with quiet endurance, the death which a further progress would only accelerate.

Their fate is too truly told by the piles of bleached bones which are still to be seen on the shell bank, and the few survivors, who escaped the pestilence, in the loss of friends, and almost utter extermination of their tribe, soon learned to envy the fate which at first they had thought themselves only too fortunate to have escaped.

Not more than thirty of this once powerful tribe are now to be found in Calcasieu, and they have become so completely assimilated in manners and habits to the Creole "habitans," as to make it difficult, at a cursory glance, to detect any difference, save that of color, between them, and in many cases even that distinction does not exist.

With strange tenacity, however, they cling to the marvelous traditions of their nation, and some few of its customs. They acknowledge the authority of the hereditary chief of a nominal tribe; to his judgment submit every difficult and perplexing point, and whatever may be his decision, from it there is no appeal. He is an old Patriarch in whom still lingers some of the wild spirit which seems to have totally deserted the degenerate race. His glance brightens and his language warms when he enumerates the victories of his once invincible tribe, and although too much under the influence of civilization to approve openly of their maintaining propensities, there is still a covert gleam of satisfaction in his dim eye when he tells of the numerous victims yearly sacrificed at the "Feast of Blood."

Different, I believe, from most Indian tribes, they erected funeral pyres on which were consumed the dead bodies of their friends, whose ashes were gathered in an old urn of red clay, and religiously preserved and honored as the "Penates" of their wigwams, whose power could ward off most domestic evils. Of all the traditions related by the old chief, there was one which forcibly impressed itself upon my imagination as bearing some connection with a most interesting portion of Stephens' Central America, where he speaks of a city into which the foot of a stranger had never penetrated. One account is probably quite as traditional as the other. The Indian, however, had certainly heard of Stephens' mysterious city, and had never himself seen a city of any kind or description whatever, and divesting his tale of much of the marvellous and improbable which colors so largely into the traditions of his people, I think that the coincidence is sufficiently marked to be interesting.

CHAPTER II.

The "Spirit Land" of the Indians is by most tribes supposed to exist on some sunny spot of earth, where vast hunting grounds, filled with every variety of game, under climates of perpetual spring, will permit the enjoyment of the utmost extreme of felicity of which their rude natures are susceptible. The Attakapas of Calcasieu extend that belief so far as to suppose that this Elysium is attainable even in this life by some favored few, who thus pass into the enjoyment of a happy immortality without undergoing the previous ordeal of death.

Four Ideas—the chief, the prophet of the tribe, and two distinguished warriors—were so fully impressed with the truth of this singular belief as to determine to seek the "blessed land," to which they were promised access by a dream of one of their number, which dream also pointed out the course to be pursued in order to arrive at the place of destination.

Many important ceremonies were performed at an appointed place of parting, to which they were accompanied by the tribe. They were laden with charms and amulets whose virtues was expected to avert the spirits of evil, to whose malignant influence they were to be exposed in their paradisical quest. Lastly, the death song was chanted by the voyagers, in which, after recounting the principal exploits and bidding farewell to the friends whom in this life were never to be met again, they painted, in gloomy terms, the delights of a Paradise, to which deeds of bloodshed and daring would give a ready and honored access. Their friends were entreated by the slaughter of all enemies, and truth and union amongst themselves, to win the right of an entrance into a land from which their encroaching foes, the pale faces, would be forever debarred. At last, with stoical composure, they turned their faces to the South-west, and, without further word or sign of farewell, proceeded on a journey which their imaginations had painted as invested with neither difficulty nor danger which perseverance could not surmount.

Time rolled on and no intelligence was received by the Attakapas of the absent warriors, which was to them a decided proof of the success of the pilgrimage. Suddenly, however, in the midst of a great feast, at which the whole tribe were assembled, a stranger stood amongst them; at least, one who at first sight appeared a stranger, for it needed long and close examination to detect the identity of the haggard individual whose emaciated form betokened suffering and fatigue, with one of the buoyant and dauntless braves who, years before, had set forth on their holy quest.

His tale was a wonderful one, even in that of dreary wanderings in the direction they had sadly the path of the wide and rapid rivers which would sometimes bear their frail rafts down the swift current, and dash them to pieces against the roots of the trees which projected far out into the stream. He spoke of the luxuriant growth of the forests; vines in wild profusion, twining around the trunks of gigantic trees and intercepting their progress by a warped and tangled growth; strange flowers of gorgeous hue and delicious perfume which glowed at a distance like clusters of brilliant flame; birds whose plumage seemed tinted by the rich dye of the flowers on which they rested, and insects which shone like tiny stars through the thick boughs of their leafy prison.

He said that in many places in the dense forest they would journey on for days without catching one gleam of sunshine through the impenetrable foliage overhead, and then they would carefully prepare the weapons of defense, for the fiery eyes of wild beasts would glare out from the thickets around, and serpents of an enormous size drop at their feet and slowly and listlessly move their dark coils in the very path. Sometimes, indeed, earthly weapons were of little avail, for strange voices would sound in their ears, unearthly laughter break the stillness around, and then they knew it was with no mortal foe they had to contend, for the only living objects to be seen were those bright birds overhead. Right and left would they then cast the amulets to guard the path, and loud would rise the exorcising chant by which the Prophet had been taught to lay the demons of the woods. They, however, journeyed on, unharmed, for so strange was the sight of man in those regions that even the wild beasts would gaze at the intruders with a curiosity which overcame their natural instincts.

At length, after many month's dreary wandering, the travelers reached an immense plain encircled by a chain of lofty mountains. They thought of the vast prairies of Calcasieu, in which the greatest part of a wandering life had been spent, and to which the green desert before them bore a sister-likeness, and with a feeling of relief at quitting the dark forest in whose depths they had been so long buried, the Indians emerged into the free pure air which breathed of their distant home.

The ascent of the mountains was difficult and fatiguing, for it was rocky and precipitous, but when the travelers reached the summit, the scene which burst upon their view left no thought save for the prospect before them.

At their feet lay a plain similar, in appearance and dimensions, to the one through which they had so lately passed, and like it, encircled by mountains whose height seemed to oppose an insuperable barrier to further progress. Stretched over this plain, and almost covering it by its extent, was a city of singular appearance, surrounded by a high wall. The buildings seemed, to the astonished Indians, to be constructed of some glittering substance which caught and reflected the rays of the sun with dazzling brilliancy, and, although at the height at which they stood no sound could reach the ear, yet busy motion could plainly be discerned among the objects within the walls of this mysterious city.

The Warrior turned to the Prophet, who was generally the ready expounder of all difficulties beyond their comprehension; but, for the first time since the commencement of the journey his features were the perplexed and gloomy expression of a mind doubtful and ill at ease.

"Brothers," he at last ejaculated, "the Great Spirit who has guided and directed our course thus far has now thrown a veil of darkness over my mind. I can see nothing beyond the walls of yonder city. I know nothing of what may befall us within them. Through it lies our path; but a heavy mist envelops our further progress. There are perils in our road, but ye are brave, not women to shrink from them. Brothers, to gain all, we must dare all. Let us proceed."

If they had found the ascent of the mountains toilsome, the descent seemed almost impracticable; with hardly a shrub or vine to steady them on the slippery path, and with the sharp rocks wounding their feet at every step, all previous difficulties became comparative trifles; but the Prophet, with stoical indifference, led the way, and bearing without a murmur the sufferings of which he was ashamed to complain, they followed him in silence.

When the plain was reached, the sun was low

[CONTINUED ON FOURTH PAGE.]

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, July 16.

WEATHER AND HEALTH.—Rain, rain every day, more or less, for a fortnight. Our exchanges from the interior bring similar news. In some portions of the city there is also a very considerable sprinkling of yellow fever.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—A note from the pastor, June 4, having been mislaid, delayed this gratifying announcement:

"After sermon, Sabbath before last, we took up a collection for carrying on our Church building, when we raised over $3000. We are out of debt, with this in hand, and expect to finish this fall. The Church will cost, perhaps, $18,000. A thousand or two dollars more, and the matter is closed up."

WETUMPKA, ALA.—Rev. O. Santos writes to the Visitor:

"We expect to lay the corner-stone of our new brick Church sometime in July. We anticipate having one of the neatest Churches in this part of the State. We have already one of the best parsonages, and that well furnished. The people here are very kind to their preacher. We have added five white and twenty-five colored members to our Church since January."

LIFE AND LETTERS OF DR. OLIN.—Of these two volumes, just from the press of Messrs. Harper, President Hardy says in a private letter to us of the 7th inst.:

"I received a few days ago, through the mail, a copy of the 'Life and Letters of Dr. Olin.' I have had a treat, especially in reading the letters. Dr. Olin was a good as well as a great man, and these books are put up on a first-rate plan. Their wide circulation in the South will do much good. You were not under his instruction, I think. In that you cannot speak as I can; and I shall never cease to be grateful to him for his kindness, for his example, and for his instructions. No one can read these books without feeling that he is in the presence of a great and pure spirit, such as we seldom meet with in life's journey. They well deserve not only to be read, but studied, that the temper and spirit of the good man may be imbibed, and that his views and character may be fully comprehended."

REMOVAL.—The advertisement of the large and excellent store of Messrs. S. Robb & Co. shows their removal to No. 4 Canal street.

The Centenary Church, Philadelphia, in which the venerable Bishop Hedding was next to the pastor, for the Church weighed oppressively upon his spirit, until—as he tells us—"one night in the winter of 1851, as I was kneeling in my bed-room, praying, about midnight, God so impressed upon my mind that the Church was not mine, did not belong to me, or depend upon me, that I have felt all that burden removed from that hour. I love the Church and the brethren still, but I leave them in the hands of God, and I can say, 'Thy will be done.' The Church is not mine—it is God's. God has taken care of the Church; God will take care of the Church!"

A "CUTE PADDY."—An Irishman was brought up before a late magistrate for the East Riding, on a charge of vagrancy, and thus questioned:

"What trade are you?"

Pat—"Sure, now, your honor, I'm a sailor."

"You in the seafaring line? I question whether you have ever been to sea, in your life."

Pat—"Sure, now, and how does your honor think I came over from Ireland in a wagon?"

"Commit him—commit him."

POSTAGE ENVELOP STAMPS.—The Postage Envelop Stamps are now being issued at the North, and we perceive that Adams & Co., acting under authority of Postmaster-General Campbell, have expressed quantities to Southern and Western postmasters. The price fixed upon them is three dollars and twenty cents per hundred, being three cents each for the stamps, and twenty cents per hundred for the envelops. Cheap enough; however, we perceive that some of our Eastern cotemporaries complain bitterly of the Postmaster-General permitting Mr. Nesbitt, the contractor, to place his advertisement on the back of them, so that every one who uses envelops must circulate his business.

The proprietors of the Philadelphia Sun say they "will give Postmaster-General Campbell $100,000 per annum, and furnish the envelops gratuitously, for the same privilege."

This is certainly a novel method of advertising and cheating the printer; and, like the Sun, we seriously object to having Uncle Sam a party, as an advertising medium. A correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer expresses the hope, from the disapprobation with which the matter seems to be almost unanimously regarded, it will induce the Postmaster General to abate the nuisance by an immediate recall of the issue already made, to be replaced by such as the public can use without being accessory to the promotion of any body's private purposes.

ALMONTE IN WASHINGTON.—We see by the papers that General Almonte, the new Envoy from Mexico, has arrived in Washington. His intimate acquaintance with our language, our people, and their institutions, cannot fail to make him a most suitable and successful negotiator in the present crisis of our diplomacy with his country. The fact that Santa Anna selects Almonte as his representative to the United States satisfies us that he is perfectly willing to maintain peace.

The Washington Monument is now 132 feet high; the workmen have been delayed on account of raising additional derricks. Three blocks have been received this month—one from California, one from the highest peak of Mount Otter, Va., and one from the Cincinnati Society of Princeton, N. J.

OUR MISSION FIELD.

The Eighth Annual Report of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, is a document of 172 pp., and is by this time, we hope, well distributed throughout the country. A copy has been upon our table two or three weeks, and our thanks are due the Secretary, Dr. Sehon, for the satisfaction derived from its well-arranged matter.

We have already presented its principal figures and features, and take this occasion of presenting some general reflections thereon.

The collections have increased in seventeen of the twenty-one conferences—in some 25 per cent., in others 50 and 75; and in one (Louisiana) 200 per cent. Among those that have fallen behind last year's figures there is no evidence of a decay in spirit or substance. In most instances the deficiency is so small that it may be accounted for by a rainy day or a neglect to take up the collections at a single appointment. Florida Conference falls behind herself $500; Western Virginia $11 00, and Holston two cents. Alabama's position on the list (second in aggregate amount) shows what spirit she is off. Even this shortness is laid to the charge of a short conference year. And we doubt not that, on the next list, she will take her place again as first. So stands the money account. It looks firm and reliable.

The various Conference Treasurers sent up their accounts in a transparent style, showing satisfactorily to the Church and world the history of every cent of the one hundred and sixty thousand dollars that supports this gospel propagandism among the slaves of the South, the destitute white settlements, the Indians of the West, and the Chinese. The General Treasurer and Assistant present their usual business-like statements.

The General Secretary, with much courtesy and effect, has worked largely into his own Report those of Conference Missionary Secretaries. This brings to light, in these local centres, the presence and influence of wide and accurate information and intelligent zeal, touching missions. The following are the divisions of the field, as now occupied:

I. In the destitute portions of our regular work—121 missions; 104 missionaries; 23,627 white, 1412 colored members, with 62 churches; 84 Sabbath schools, and 2906 scholars.

Some of the fairest portions of the Church were once included under this division: Self-supporting congregations are annually returned from it, and remembering their indebtedness to this Society, they become contributors to its funds.

Thus is the advance guard of civilization kept up with, and the pioneer never gets out of sight of the preacher. Of the above missions, 29 are in Missouri, 11 in Arkansas, and 9 in Texas. Others are in older States, supplying poor and sparse settlements, of less promise, and yet not to be abandoned. It is God's husbandry.

II. Among the people of color—120 missions; 102 missionaries; 34,934 colored members, with 59 churches, and 16,657 children under religious instruction.

This indicates the position of the M. E. Church, South, in regard to the servile portion of this country. Here is more than in Liberia Conference in extent and results. It is a gratifying evidence of the success and acceptability of our missionaries here, that nowhere else is there a greater demand for their labors.

III. Among the Germans—9 missions; 8 missionaries; 378 members; 5 churches; 5 Sabbath schools, and 263 scholars.

The Dutch are taking the country—some parts. They are the most thrifty, industrious and sober of the increasing population—a thinking and reading people. Arminius was a Dutchman, and Arminianism suits his countrymen. The Dutch mind is Protestant and eminently capable of profound religious experience. The principal portion of this work lying in New Orleans, we can bear this testimony.

They are in a state of healthy, but not vigorous prosperity; not vigorous, because, although they have sympathy and good will from their older American brethren, they have never yet had a vigorous setting up. But they are getting help now, and are not wanting in a disposition to help themselves. We know not any missionary work, under the care of the Church, promising greater enlargement and spirituality, within its own bosom, than the German.

IV. Among the Indian tribes—30 missions; 27 missionaries; 4232 members; 39 churches; 34 Sabbath schools, and 1254 scholars; 9 manual labor schools, and 490 pupils.

These missions have been favored lately in the presence and counsels of the Secretary, who reports interestingly. The manual labor schools (of which Fort Leavenworth, with 100 scholars, is the most prosperous,) have been considerably assisted by the U. S. Government, which is thus paying up a debt, dating from the discovery by Columbus, to the "poor Indian." The Superintendent of this school, in his report, says:

The case of one poor young woman we cannot forbear to mention. She had been a scholar in the F. L. Labor School for several years, but had returned to her people—the Delawares—and some months before her death was married to a young man of her own tribe. Her sickness was very severe, but of short duration. She endured it with true Christian fortitude, expressed her full confidence in the merits of Christ her Saviour, and just before she departed, she asked her husband to open a small bundle and take out a little money, which she had carefully put away, and requested him to give it to the support of missions as her last earthly token of gratitude to God for the spiritual blessings which, under God, she owed to missionary effort.

The principal preaching ground and Churches are in the Cherokee Nation, and about Talequah, the capital, which sends up $44 00 missionary collection! In the Indian Mission Conference are native preachers, full-bloods, who, it is said, would compare well anywhere. Page, and Lewis, and Boot, by crossing the Mississippi and making a town in the "white settlements," would awaken an interest in behalf of their brethren not yet felt, and raise enough money to buy "Choctaw Testament." The latter, John Boot, is a circuit rider, and Vice-Chief of his Nation.

V. China Mission—1 mission; 3 missionaries.

But for the unexpected turn affairs have taken by revolution, the past year, we believe, by general consent, would have been set down as rather gloomy in the missionary aspect of the Celestial Empire. Our own devoted missionaries have had no small share of the apparent misfortune. Just as one (Cunningham) arrives, another, (Jenkins) under family affliction, is leaving—to return, however, without the mother of his children. And the Superintendent of the Mission (Dr. Taylor) labors without the cheering presence of his wife, who was obliged to leave or die. They are yet out of doors—no Church inside: a small chapel outside the city; yet working away, with tracts and living sermons. Live Seen Sang, the native preacher, is steadfast and useful. It is humiliating that such a body as the M. E. Church, South, dating its organization the same year (1844) the ports of China were opened, has at this day but three representatives at their post and ready to enter the "great door and effectual" that is about to be opened for the Christianization of one-third of the human race!

An event of great moral value, in this connexion, has been announced. Rev. Dr. Medhurst, the veteran missionary of the London Society in China, who has been engaged, in company with Dr. Bridgman and others, many years in translating the Scriptures into the Chinese language, has finished this task. His letter, announcing this, concludes with the following reference to existing troubles:

We cannot help considering it a remarkable providence that our Translation Committee should have brought their labors to a close just at the time when we may be called to "take up our carriages" and remove to a place of safety, or to enter upon the wider fields of missionary labor opening before us, far exceeding the most earnest expectations and warmest wishes of the friends of China.

The Pacific Mission was No. VI., but it has risen into the Pacific Conference, and reports at its first session (April last) $1200 00 missionary money. Do not coming events, plainly foreshadowed, point to the Pacific coast, the Mexican frontier, Central and South America, as the scene of future evangelical activities? And does not the position of the Church, South, demand of her to be early, if not first, in these vast and whitening fields? Our readers have not been heedless of republican, and social and commercial developments in these regions. Their intercourse with us is daily increasing. The necessity of a line of American steamers along the Western coast of South America from Panama to Valparaiso. A new life and liberality is being imparted by Californian demand and travel; dormant energies and resources developed; the model government of the United States proposed; the intolerance of half-civilized Romanism shaken off, and the people are waking up to commerce and constitutions. Look at New Granada, Central America, lately raised by our government to important international relations, and the opening valley of the Amazon. Shall we wait for others, at a distance, to pass over us to this work, and then follow after? Where are the men, and where are the means for preaching the gospel and extending the kingdom of God into all these regions!

In contemplating all this field, occupied in part and waiting occupation, the Christian soldier weeps as did the Macedonian—but for a different cause. He weeps not that there are no more empires to be conquered to his Lord, but so many. His measures their extent with his eye; it is almost disheartening. He remembers the word of promise that secures success, sees what has been done, thinks of the mighty co-working agency, and takes courage.

Here is work for the Church—here a call for large and systematized benevolence. Let the Missionary Collections of 1853 respond to the call.

"HOW MUCH, NOW, DO YOU CHARGE FOR YOUR PRAYERS?"

The incident related by our French Correspondent, in his interesting letter of this week, reminds us of one that occurred in this State. We tell it, as 'twas told to us. The two are so much alike, though far apart in place, as to give us refreshing assurance of having in this country genuine chips of the old Romish block. Sic semper, sic ubique. Popery has some fixed principles, unquestionably, and its disciples, find them where you will, understand them.

A few years ago the Station of Opelousas, La., was left without a pastor, (Methodist) and as this was in the interval of conference, the P. Elder of the District, acting as Bishop, had to supply it. This he did by transferring one of the preachers from Lafourche to the vacant post. The appointee set out promptly for his new "work," taking it horse-and-saddle-bags through that lovely, level, live-oak country, lying between, and inhabited chiefly by those whose politics, habits and religion remain pretty much as they were when the fathers of the present generation fell asleep. Many of them have never seen a Methodist preacher or a steamboat.

One evening our preacher, (Rev. T. J. L.) found himself near one of those snug, unprogressive-looking farms, of which there are not a few, and riding up to the main building, with its low roof and ample piazza, asked to stay all night. With a hearty and prompt politeness, characteristic of the Frenchman, he was welcomed. "You can stay—certainly, sare, certainly."

The installed guest was a man squarely built and of heavy eyebrows, and the outer and inner man were alike. Of few words, and they to the purpose, he may be classified in one word—sterling. To be put side by side with a Monsieur Parlez vous was just the condition to bring out all his points in bold relief.

As the evening wore on, and the itinerant got off his leggins and felt comfortable, mine host began to show symptoms of curiosity. Not being a Yankee, he could not come at it by the delicate hint—"What might your name be, Mister?" He tried it another way.

"You going to de Opelousas?"

"Yes."

"You be one doctor"—(looking interrogation points.)

"No; I'm no doctor."

Here a pause, in which mine host amiably soliloquizes, "Ah—ha."

"Oh—you be one lawyer."

"No; I'm no lawyer."

Pause; ah—h—a, drawn out.

"Yes; oh, you be one schoolmaster, den."

"No; I'm no schoolmaster."

Longer pause: n—h—h—a.

"Yes, yes—certainly: You be one steamboat capiting. You go to de Opelousas to meet him dare."

This last was uttered with confidence, as though he had hit on it row, but the same curt reply—"No; I'm no steamboat captain," knocked the shrewd conjecture all out of joint, and the polite inquistor again subsided into repose, followed by the usual a—h—h—a drawn out longer than ever. The silence was at last broken by the desperately direct query—

"Den, sare, what you be?"

"I'm a Methodist preacher."

The effect of this discovery was animating. The words of Job might have suited the Frenchman—"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee." He saw him now—a live one at that.

"Metodiste preacher! Ah——ha—. I hear of him. You be one Metodiste preacher! Ah——h——n. I got one Metodiste Bible here——."

Upon this a huge iron-ribbed trunk is opened, covered with an Attakapas cowhide, untanned, from which a musty copy of the English Bible is produced, and mine host continues—

"Metodisto Bible: I read him sometime—not much—sometime."

How this stray copy of the Bible got in there, perhaps none of the colporteurs could tell. And its close custody, and the declaration that it was read sometimes, is an interesting fact.

By and by it was time for family prayers and this Methodist preacher was of the straight-up-and-down sort. He came right up to the proposition—

"It is my custom always to hold prayers where I stay."

"Certainly, sare. You can pray as much as you please."

"But, I mean to hold prayers with the family."

"Ah—h—a."

The matter had to be explained a little further—that after the reading of the "Metodisto Bible," (we presume our friend omitted the singing,) all were to get on their knees with the preacher. If all were such preachers as this, few houses would now be in these lands where one chapter of God's word had not been heard, and one fervent, spiritual prayer offered up to the Father of all.

With true Gallic politeness, he mustered in his family and domestics, and at the proper time they came to their knees, like soldiers on drill, belt upright, but in good order.

Prayers over, mine host proceeds, like a prompt business men, to settle his accounts. That same trunk is opened, and he draws out his money-bag.

"How much you charge?"

"Charge! I never charge any thing for that."

"Nothing! Impossible!! Vy, sare, (measuring a little space on his little finger,) one Catolique priest come along here last week, and make a leetle prayer not so big—and he charge me fifty dollar, he gar!"

DEATH OF DR. CHAPMAN.—Dr. Nathaniel Chapman, one of the most celebrated physicians of the United States, died last evening at his residence in this city, at the advanced age of 74 years. He was born in Virginia, and received his medical education in Edinburgh. Having established himself in the practice of medicine in this city, he was in 1811 elected to the chair of Materia Medica, and in 1816 to that of Practice, in the Pennsylvania University. This latter post he filled until about three years ago, since when, owing to the infirmities of age, he has lived in retirement. [Phila. Courier.

A lady who lost her husband not long since by a railway accident in England, sued the railway company, and recovered about $70,000 damages. The damages were calculated on the basis of his professional income, and the average length of life demonstrated by insurance tables.

The city of Mexico contains a population of about two hundred thousand. Two-thirds of this population are said to consist of low Mexican half-breeds and Indians, whose morals and habits of life much resemble the blacks of the South. There seems to be a life and activity about the city much resembling New York.

A conference will be held in Munich this month with a view to put an end to the indescribable confusion caused by the variety of coins current in Germany. The two principal questions to be considered are these: In the Southern States of Germany they count in florins, in the others in thalers; in Saxony they have adopted the decimal system, in the other States of Germany the duodecimal. The object is to make a fusion of them two systems.

METHODIST PRESS.

The Advocate and Journal, under the head of its foreign summary, spanks of the Maine Law in England:

"The Temperance Society have succeeded in getting their cause before the House of Commons, and have presented facts and statistics which startled the members. Among other important facts, they show that Scotland is almost a nation of drunkards; that intemperance is the national sin; that no less than thirty thousand persons go to bed drunk every night in the city of Glasgow, &c., &c. Mr. Hume, a member of great influence, said he was ready to vote for the 'Maine Law,' which, it seems, occasioned much laughter. Yet who will say, that if society cannot protect themselves from so great an evil by any other means, it is not their right and duty to demand of their representatives to stay the plague by the most stringent enactments—nothing short of the Maine Law?"

THEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS.—The columns of the Richmond Ch. Advocate present the pro and con of this subject. Rev. G. W. Langhorne has been writing a series of articles on "Theological Seminaries to be Watched." He thrusts sore at them:

"One fact, and I am done. Much has been said on our conference floor, and through the press, about the dissatisfaction, if not disgust, of our Church, at the ignorance and vulgarity of our ministers—excepting of course the literati—and the eagerness with which 'educated young men' are sought after by our people. Many an humble, zealous, God-honored brother has writhed under these scathing invectives. For the encouragement of such I will give this fact. A Presiding Elder informed me that just before going to our last conference, a steward of one of our most intelligent small stations said to him, Brother ——, 'We have had several college bred preachers, and while we esteem them highly, we beg you will be so good as to send us zealous, plain, Holy Ghost preachers. These are the men we want!' Be encouraged, brethren! You are neither deserted of God or despised by the Church. Buckle on your armor, address yourself to God, your books, and your work, and Heaven will own and reward you."

This on first page: on second the editor quotes the remarks of Dr. Olin, found in his lately published biography. Dr. Lee says that in 1833-4 a good deal of interest was excited among American Methodists on the subject of Theological schools. There was a pretty general discussion of the necessity and merits of such a mode of ministerial training, and of the propriety of incorporating them into our ecclesiastical economy. The address referred to, in the extract, is Doctor O.'s inaugural at Randolph Macon College. The letter bears date September 4th, 1834, and was written to the Rev. Mr. Landon:

"I am sorry you have not sufficient light to approve of all the doctrines of my address. I will set you right on these points when I see you, if I think of it, and am hindered by no other cause. I fear this is not the only matter upon which you are in grievous errors. If I gather your meaning, you are against Theological schools. You ask my opinion. It is, that such institutions are not only desirable, but indispensable. We get along passably well when other denominations were wasting their strength in attempting to explain and inculcate the blind mysteries of Calvinism; but now, when they unite great learning and zeal to as much Arminianism as gives them recess to the popular mind, we must educate our ministry better, or sink. We may boast of preaching to the poor, but without a due intermixture of the rich and influential, we cannot fulfil our destiny as a Church. Nothing can save us but an able ministry, and this cannot be had but by thorough education. Think on this subject, my dear brother, in its tremendous bearings, and see if we do not need Theological schools."

REV. JAMES CAUGHEY.—The Canada Advocate, of the 29th ult., says of this stirring evangelist, who was to leave the next week:

"His labors in this city have been attended with glorious success. Hundreds of precious souls of all classes, of all shades of character, from the moralist to the vicious, the profane, the skeptic, and the infidel, have found redemption in the blood of the Lamb—while believers have been quickened and sanctified, and the Church greatly strengthened. Last Sabbath the power of God was manifested in a most wonderful manner in the salvation of souls—over fifty found peace in believing."

TRANFERS.—The Nashville Advocate has a letter from Bishop Andrew, in which the subject of transfers gets a touch of his pen that puts a new and noble face on it. We think the Bishop will have many offered to him:

"And if a man of more than ordinary promise manifests any disposition to transfer, every effort is made to retain him at home. Perhaps this may be all natural enough. But the result of its influence upon that important power—the authority to transfer preachers from one section of the work to another, which is more needy—is very unfavorable to the prompt and efficient extension of our work in the destitute regions of our country. Now it very often happens that preachers of talent and worth, who have been working all their lives in one region of country, till they have become comparatively stale and inefficient, would, by transferring to a new field of labor, exert a powerful influence for good, and become men of eminence and weight. Yet they prefer to stick to the old go-to-mill track till they have, to a great extent, lost their own interest in their work, and are barely endured by the people. O, for a little more steam on the high pressure principle, to start them from their moorings! And then there are very often young men of promise, who have grown up in conferences where the old men do nearly all the business; and these young men are completely overshadowed; whereas, if they were thrown into some of these new conferences, their business talents would be called into requisition and developed, and a brilliant career of usefulness opened up before them. I pity the young Methodist preacher who is afraid to leave the home and the conference that gave him birth. And who would rather stay about the old homestead, and poke about from one little picayune station to another, than to launch boldly into those vast fields which open before him in the newly settled country, where he might win the glory of planting the Church of God in regions hitherto destitute. Such a man soon becomes effeminate, and learns to inquire whether the station is a good one—will pay well—whether society is cultivated. And such are the men who usually rebel, if the Bishop should decree for them a poor and rough circuit, instead of a respectable station."

A BISHOP'S LABORS.—The Western Advocate shows that the Methodist Episcopacy is no sinecure. All do not travel as much as this one, but their absence from families and aggregate labors about the same:

"Bishop Ames left New York on the 6th of December, reached California in due time, and held the conference in that new State. He then proceeded to Oregon, held the conference there, and attended to other duties. He returned again to California, spent some time there, left on the 17th of April, and returned home on the 17th of May. We happened, as per accident, to call up his services during the last year, which we sum up as follows:

Number of sermons and addresses	71
Number of letters written	181
Deacons ordained	90
Elders ordained	41
Number of miles traveled	18,395
Number of conferences attended	7
Number of preachers stationed	597

This is hard work, but all hard work is not working to advantage. An Episcopal visit has been made to Oregon and California, it is true; but what then? Is a Bishop a mere courier—a fast traveler? Where is the oversight of the flock of Christ, the care of all the Churches, a survey of the land, and personal presence and services among the people, necessary to an estimate of the state and requirements of the Church? No time for it; no chance for it. For this something more is needed besides running against time, and merely grazing the land, touching it here and there, as railroads and steamboats run. This is hard on the Bishop, and hard on the Church. Give us Bishops enough to do the work of Bishops, and let others travel the express.

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

TIDE WATER MUSINGS.

Swiftly hurried the omnibus through that fair portion of the Crescent City, called Melpomenia—where wood-nymphs, water-nymphs, the muses and gods do dwell—carrying me on towards the "Old Third."

A change of omnibus at Canal street, and soon I was at the Railroad depot, which, some nineteen years ago, when my father took me on an excursion to Lake Pontchartrain, was a long shed. How much changed since nineteen years ago! Then it was a pleasant walk to the canals, out of town; and the Gas Works, which had just commenced binding together the different sections of New Orleans by its gas pipes, were beyond any of the streets. And still the city is marching on the swamps, and if the same progress is made for the next twenty years, may we not expect to find the houses of this great Southern mart stretching even to Lake Pontchartrain? It is probable.

Now we are on the wharf, and from the different boats ready to start come the waiters to obtain our baggage. "My name's Stephen, sir." The carpet-bag and umbrella are handed over, and thoughts of them immediately dismissed.

Now we are afloat. The Rigolettes are in sight. We enter the narrow pass, passing under the telegraphic wires, which stretch across, supported by two lofty masts. The sun was just declining when we reached Fort Pike, very artistically laid off with shell walks, bridges, &c. The fort has huge portholes, the range of whose guns sweep the entire entrance. Lying somewhat back are two houses. Had some nine-pounders been peering through the massive brick wall, and soldiers, parading, the scenery would have been considerably enlivened.

Ah! this air is exhilirating; it makes one feel like a new being. How full of delight is my mind!

There, now, is the supper bell! Just missed the first table. How anxious one, who for many months has not eared for this meal, when braced by the Gulf air, becomes about it!

Just before entering by the fort, far ahead a light-house fire streamed across the waters.

This was, I think, on Cat Island. Then off from Pass Christian, about five miles, is a large vessel, called the light-ship.

As we came within sight of Mississippi City, many lights were seen hurrying to and fro. "What are they?" "Persons are floundering,"—which don't mean plunging about in the water, but plunging a spear or harpoon into flounders, who, flat, with two eyes on same side of the head, lie close upon the sand.

The flounderer may be a gentleman of leisure, or a Simon Pure fisherman. In either case, he dresses "a negligée"—has a bundle of pine sticks tied to his waist, one lighted in one hand, and in the other he carries his murderous weapon.

At Mississippi City two hotels, each having long piers, and wharves, and bathing houses. In no place is intoxicating liquor sold. The license here, and wherever the Police Jury controls, is $1000, which, in most instances, amounts to an absolute prohibition. As drinking and swearing are inseparable companions, though I went about much, I did not, during a stay of one week, hear a single oath.

Kemper county has followed the noble example of Harrison, and "death to dark rum-holes" is the tocsin now rung in the air of my native State.

Here I found residences extending about five miles on the coast, each, or two together, with pier and bath house. Here were the finest plums I've ever seen, red and yellow; grapes, peaches, quinces, cantaloupes, and water mellons.....Mr. Editor, if you could have had in your "sanctum" a plate of such delicious plums as were handed me at the house of Dr. S., you would have written an editorial eulogy. Corn, also, was growing in many places. The ground is very poor, and but illy repays the amount of labor expended upon it.

Judging from the immense number and the luxuriant growth of grapes, with hardly any of them rotten, I would judge the soil well adapted to their extensive culture.

The Magnolia, with its dark-green and magnificent flower of the South, here mingled its shadow with those of the light-green pine and the varied oak.

Here, too, were the sweet bay and wild peach—the matted muscadine vine—the stubby black-jack—the huckleberry, and some flowers mingled their various hues with the many green shrubs that grow so luxuriantly in many places as to shut out the earth from view.

There is no depth to the City, (?) but about one mile from the coast, on the summit of a high and long-extended ridge, is a small settlement, dubbed "Buena Vista." And though no bloody battle has commemorated the spot, a bloodless victory has been conquered against that enemy of all mankind—intemperance.

As this is the vicinity where most persons reside, here, in one of the two stores, "dry goods" and "hardware," is located the P. O.

Whew! how hot it is riding through these pine trees, which have the singular property of giving but little shade, but very effectually keeping from us the generous sea breeze.

Standing in the door of the P. O., cast your eye eastward. You beheld a deep and wide valley, extending far away amid the fine forests. You are informed that in the centre of this valley is the Bernard Bayou, an inlet of the Bay of Biloxi.

On this bayou has been established the "Bernard Sawmill Co."

At the ferry the bayou is about 25 yards wide, and the width diminishes or increases as you go inland or outward. It has a depth of 25 feet, and is resorted to as the best place for catching red-fish, Spanish mackerel, &c.

As far as the eye can stretch up the bayou are seen sawmills and lovely whitewashed cottages; and far below, just at the spot at which you lose sight of the stream, yet another sawmill. On the opposite side of the bayou is a large foundry.

One thing struck me as being very peculiar: Here were many men at work, and yet the silence, the stillness, was such that one could have imagined the whole scene some panorama of a magic-lantern.

At "Buena Vista," which, with "Biloxi" and "Pass Christian," compose a circuit of the Mississippi Conference, this year served by the Rev. H. T. Lewis, there are Methodist and Baptist Churches. The latter is served by the Rev. Mr. Hempstead, whom I heard.

The object of his sermon was to point out the true Church of Christ, and give signs by which spurious Churches could be recognized.

He disclaimed any intention to wound the feelings of any one—a sense of duty constrained him to preach the sermon to which they would listen.

As he is a good man, no one could question the sincerity of his motives; but with the utmost respect for his piety, I think he did not mention the true Church of Christ, namely, all true Christians of every denomination, who will, in another world, be eternally united to their Head.

We may differ in opinions, but on the broad platform of "holiness to the Lord," we can agree—and not according to our views, but according to our works are we to be judged.

At the conclusion of his discourse, an aged Presbyterian, who sat near the door, arose and stated "he would preach in that house, that day three weeks, and one of the subjects he would mention, 'Except your righteousness exceed,'" &c. To the worldly-minded it was a scene of amusement; and if all of us would war against sin, instead of fighting one another, don't you think, sir, that the kingdom of our Saviour would more speedily be established!

With me, seat yourself in the gallery of my kind friend, Col. D., at whose house I sojourned; or, if you prefer it, wander with me "in twilight's witching hour," when—

"Still as a slave before his lord,
The OCEAN hath no blast;
His great bright eye most silently
Up to the moon is cast.

"If he may know which way to go;
For she guides him smooth or grim.
See, brother, see! how graciously
She looketh down on him."

Now, the tide is down, and we can have a delightful ramble in front of the pretty residences that line the shore. How exquisitely lovely the scene, and how like some soothing melody falls upon the ear the ever restless surging!

See! A cloud sails between the "fair queen of heaven" and ourselves. Deep blackness rests upon the waters near us, while far out in the Gulf is a glittering splendor, as if the moon, through some powerful lens, had concentrated the brightness of her glory there!

Thoughts of the gloom of hell, and the eternal light of heaven, flit through our minds.

Look up! How softly shine down upon us the stars—those eyes of Jehovah, ever seeing the gloom that enshrouds the world. Can Italy boast of fairer skies and lovelier nights?

How like a "dream-land" this is! The air off the Gulf seems immediately from the presence of Somnus, inducing a lulling influence; and then comes Morpheus, and lo! he leads us 'mid the unearthly beauties of a fairy clime.

'Tis Saturday night. A storm seems to be rising, and hearts grow anxious that the boat from New Orleans should come, ere it breaks in its fury.

For the first time in life my eyes are delighted with the sight of a "water spout."

A long, low, black cloud hangs over the Gulf, and from this, about twenty-five feet in length, and traveling with great rapidity, is the "water spout."

It roars, like the continuous rushing of mighty waters. It moves towards the land—it breaks. One part subsides into the waters beneath, and the other, with a tremulous, waving motion, shrinks into the waters above.

Invited by Bro. L. to take a voyage to Pass Christian, to which place he goes to tie a pair for weal or woe—we, about half an hour before supper, embark on the "Creole."

This is cheap traveling—15 miles in an excellent steamer, and having an excellent supper; and all for half a dollar! However, some of us were visited by "sea sickness," and the choicest viands would not have tempted us.

About 10 P. M. a summons came that the minister was wanted!

The groom had built a neat cottage residence, close to the water, into which the evening he had moved his furniture, here the marriage is consummated.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

is a practical illustration of the benef- of this "Sone." No indecorus mirth, by the fumes of liquor, marked the ; but there was plenty of coke and ; and free hilarity.

To show, further, the beneficial results of ber, here is a "temperance grocery," which no intoxicating liquor is sold. Here a temperance billiard room," plenty of ge-pop," and temperance drinks, but ing that destroys body and soul.

Morning comes, and we take a stroll to the Episcopal Church, passing by the "Mont- ery House," a beautiful place. On our t sport some negroes lolling on a bench, a huge African, and his merry, ringing and smiling, happy face, extort from the exclamation, "Don't think Mrs. ll pref saw that negro."

the Gulf Coast, like the Queen of Sheba, ll exclaim, "the half was not told."

e society of endeared friends—the hal- bliss of communing with nature—the exceeding the anticipation—all made to go by noiselessly, and so fraught with happiness.

friends must part, and though memo- magic wand will oft recall those pleasant spent at Mississippi City, yet nature vives, and—the warm woolings of this sunny day e along my frame and harmonize ntempered organ, that even sublime thoughts with some sweet sensations, like harsh tones ard deftly on a well-toned instrument."

ne, 1853. P. A. S.

A READER'S LETTER.

HALLO FROM HOME—VALUE OF A RELI- S PAPER—RESUME OF CONTENTS—I UNDER STENM—DESCRIPTION OF DEATHS LIGHTNING.

COCHRAN'S WELLS, Miss., 1853.

EDITOR:—This morning I had the ure of perusing the N. O. Ch. Advocate 21 inst. To a poor invalid at the it brings thoughts of home, the s, members, and friends of our own ssippi Conference.

a lover of the Bible, it well conducted ous paper must be always interesting. ost nearly always, something of the ses to, and the triumphs of, that book: eans used for bringing its influence to upon all classes of society, and the pro- of earth. The very first article in the alluded to, shows the small beginning the mighty progress of the "American Society." If the ratio of progression go on for the next 37 years in the same ion that it has the last, who can tell will be accomplished! The thousands es of the book of life in the various ges of the earth, going forth as angels ercy, bearing heaven's messages of love perishing races of mankind! And should the ratio not go on, not only in ase, but in a vastly increased propor- Are not the means at the command of hurch increasing? And does not be- feeling for those perishing for the of life increase, too! Both of the questions must be answered in the ative; but the last does not increase nsurate with the wealth which the ence of God commits to our steward- If it did, "Greenland's icy mountains, dia's coral strands"—China's teeming ons, and the sable sons of Africa, with e and America, would soon be envelop- the blaze of Gospel day.

next comes "Josephus," a writer on Jewish ity, and let me say, no one whose pen the Advocate, is more welcome and interesting to me. In reading his pic- of Jewish Ceremonies, do not our hearts gratitude to God, that we have the mple Gospel of Christ to guide us, and our lots are cast in pleasant places, we can read that Gospel and follow its ; where none, who spy out our liber- can tear the holy book from our hands mmit it to the flames, and place in its the legends of the Rabbins, or the more lives of the Saints! I hope "Joso- will long continue your correspondent.

next comes "Methodist," taking some ex- to "Woodsman's letter." "W." will, doubt, answer him satisfactorily. Yet let that while I, in the main, agree with ition, I think that he has mistaken dsman's" meaning. "Woodsman" not oppose revivals, nor the singing of religious songs and airs at revivals, but nonsensical doggerels that are alike ing to good sense and good taste. I no doubt but that "M." would object to ose "doggerels" himself. To have re- and to praise God aright in them, it ainly not necessary to sing those lines have nothing to recommend them but bad taste, lack of poetry, and their ing sound. Let me tell Bro. "M." that r "Woodsman," and have been with at a revival—heard him preach revival , talk to and pray fervently with the ers, and enjoy a good lively revival "Methodist," from his writing, is n of taste and piety; I know that "Woods- is, and I have no doubt but that they both agree perfectly as to what is right per at revivals.*

ing by several good articles—on the page here are your own spicy edito- brave plain, always to the point. you will blush, I will say no more them, only commend you for the ful eye you keep on the Roman priest- and the scathing, good humored retorts give to some of the presuming proposi- of the Church editors.

ist Advocate we have not only religious to cheer the heart of the Christian— —the triumph of the Cross of Jesus and souls made happy in his love— ed scenes, where the power of our Christianity is seen in its most powerful most tranquilizing forms, in view of we rejoice not with trembling, but certainly that the triumphing, tranquil ian has gone to swell the chorus of the regions;—we have also the summary and foreign news—the market at and abroad—the diplomacy and ru- of war, with every thing else of inter- connected with the history of this moving with here and there a pithy anecdote— racy extracts from the great luminа- of the Church, conveying in a few plain a precious truth.

mit me to say that the Advocate is the family paper for our latitude I know of, certainly it is the cheapest. I am glad of this impression among the preachers and people of Mississippi, as far as I have had opportunity of hearing expressions on the subject. I hope that from these your list of subscribers will very much increase.

In conclusion, let me relate a melancholy circumstance which happened on the plantation of an old friend of mine, Col. Wm. Porter, living seven miles from Jackson, Miss., on the Gallatin road. On Wednesday, 22d ult., about 3 o'clock, P. M., a thunder storm arose, with very heavy wind. Col. Porter's hands repaired to a house in the field for protection. When the storm had nearly passed, a thunder-bolt struck one end of the house and killed two negro men, four mules, and two horses. There were in the house at the time twelve negroes and the overseer, eleven mules and horses, all of whom, with the exception of one woman, who was the farthest off, were struck down senseless. One of the negroes killed was asleep on the loft near the open gable—he was thrown from the place to the ground; all his hair burnt off, and nearly all his clothes torn off and scattered in fragments; his nose and ears bleeding, but the skin was entirely whole. One negro was rubbing his mule. The mule was killed and the negro saved, but severely shocked. The mark could be seen where the electric fluid passed down his arm.

The house was sixteen by twenty-four feet, very strongly built. The shock moved nearly all its timbers. Considering the number of human beings and beasts that were there, in such small space, and the power of the electric charge, it is only surprising that more were not killed. You may rely on the truth of the above. I received the facts from Col. Porter himself. Death is near us when we think him far away. How solemn the admonition—"Watch therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." Matt. 24: 13.

ITINERIS.

* We are glad that one so well qualified for it puts this matter right—In justice to Wood-man and ourself. [ED.

The Amazon—Important Decree.

A late number of the Panama Herald mentioned that the Governor of Peru had issued a very important decree relative to the navigation of the Amazon and its tributaries in Peru, granting extensive and liberal privileges to foreigners settling in the valley of the Amazon. A subsequent number of the same paper gives a translated summary of the decree, which we republish below. We regard this decree on the part of Peru as a movement preliminary to a grand system of South American policy, that will speedily lead to the general occupation of the entire scope of territory drained by the Amazon and its tributaries—the most extensive as well as the most prolific on the face of the earth. This immense country, with resources adequate to the maintenance of half of the present population of the earth, has lain in idleness from the creation of the world to the present day. But the time has arrived when its illimitable powers of production are required for the uses of man, and its immense primeval forests must disappear before the march of civilization and commerce. Fifty years ago the valley of the Mississippi was less known, and its capacity of sustaining an immense population was less appreciated, than is the valley of the Amazon to-day. Half a century has sufficed to change the first from an unproductive wilderness to the heart of a great nation, and make it the fountain-head of the commerce of two continents. Under circumstances more auspicious than those that developed the resources of the Mississippi valley, what may we not expect of the Amazon within half a century to come! The Amazon valley is larger and infinitely more prolific than that of the Mississippi, while the demands upon its resources are stronger than they ever were at any one time upon the other. It is true that the inertness, stupidity and ignorance of the powers that have held the Amazon, have been and are a drawback upon the development of its resources, but that drawback will soon be removed by the adoption of a more enlightened and liberal policy on the part of the South American States whose sovereignty exteeds over the valley. The decree of the Peravian Government, an abstract of which follows, is the initiatory of that policy. The following are the terms in brief of the Peruvian decree: [Deltu.

Art. 1st. Declares, that in conformity with the treaty between Peru and Brazil, of 23d October, 1851, and during the time it is in force, the navigation of the Amazon, as far as the port of Nnata, at the mouth of the Ucayali, is open to the navigation, traffic and commerce of the vessels and subjects of Brazil.

2. Subjects and citizens of other nations, who have treaties with Peru, on the same terms as the most favored nations, are entitled to the same privileges as the Brazilians.

3. For the purpose of the two former articles the ports of Loreto and Nauta are selected.

4. In conformity to the law of the 20th November, 1852, no duties are to be paid on exports or imports from the said ports on merchandise or native produce, except the municipal dues required for the objects of local utility.

5. The exploration of the rivers that run into the Amazon will be made by government steamers, constructed and employed expressly for the purpose.

6, 7, 8 and 9, relate to the subdivisions of districts and the appointment of governors.

10. The Governor General has power to grant to all who desire to establish themselves in those localities, grants of land from 2 to 40 fanegadas of land, in proportion to the means and numbers of the settlers.

11. Governors can in the same manner grant from 2 to 4 fanegadas.

12. Larger free grants can only be had from the Government.

13. All grants made by Articles 10 and 11 are void, if the lands are not cultivated and settled upon within eighteen months.

14. In larger grants the time for selling and improving will be stated.

15. The Peruvian Government binds itself to give colonists who arrive at either of the above ports for the purpose of settling in the valley of the Amazon and its tributaries, free conduct to their destination, as also to grants of seeds and implements.

16. A national ship shall be employed to convey settlers and foreign emigrants to the point where they intend to settle.

17. In conformity with the law of the 21st November, 1852, cultivated land and buildings shall be exempt from taxes, and every other privilege conceded to the possessors of aqualtivnted lands.

18. The new settlers shall pay no contributions for the term of twenty years, nor clergy dues, and shall farther be exempt from the use of stamped papers, being permitted to use common paper for petitions and contracts.

19. All military and civil pensioners of government, not on actual service, can avail themselves of these privileges.

20. Government will facilitate the passage and establishment of clergy in the new settlements.

21. The new settlers can establish their own municipal regulations, subject to the approval of the Governor.

22. Also their judges, until such time as Congress can legislate upon the subject.

23 to 26 relate to the present Governors of the districts; the opening of roads from various points, etc.

WHALE FISHERY.—This business in the United States appears now to be confined in its enterprise to four States, and of these Massachusetts far overbalances all the rest in her share. Of the whole number of ships employed in the whale fishery in the year 1852, not less than 433 were owned in Massachusetts, Connecticut owning 73, New York 33, and Rhode Island 28. Formerly, Wilmington, Del., was engaged in the business to a limited extent, but the tendency of commerce to concentration has carried the fishing enterprises mostly to Massachusetts, particularly to New Bedford, which city had, in January last, no less than 307 ships and barks engaged in the whale fishery. For some years past the whole tendency of the trade seems to have been to centralize in New Bedford, that place having become the great oil market of the United States. All other whaling ports seem to suffer a diminution of their business in consequence, while New Bedford accumulates capital, increases her fleet, augments her importance in the eyes of the purchasers of oil, and continually extends her enterprises. Latterly a curious innovation has been introduced into the whaling business, the result of which is yet to be seen. By this new arrangement, whale ships do not return home with their cargoes of oil, but deposit them at Honolulu, or some other island port of the Pacific, where it is taken up as freight by some of the homeward bound California, India, or China clippers. This latter class of vessels has of late become so numerous, and of such greatly increased capacity that homeward freights are much in demand at very low rates. Thus the whale ship now is enabled to refit entirely at Honolulu with all that she requires for use, to come back there with her cargo of oil and bone, deposit it, take in fresh stores, and sally forth again. In this view of the trade, it may be a question worthy of inquiry whether our dealers in oil have not an opportunity of purchasing their supplies on advantageous terms at Honolulu, and bringing it hither in some of our own California clippers, instead of buying entirely at New Bedford. [Phil. Bul. 4th inst.

YOUNG MEN, NEVER DESPAIR!—Fifty-three years ago, on the 4th of July, 1800, Daniel Webster, then in his senior year at college, delivered an oration at Hanover, N. H., which is still preserved, and has been republished within the past year. Mr Mattoon, of Summerville, Ohio, who was in college with Mr. Webster, gives the following anecdote, described in the Congregational Journal:

"I was in his room," said Mr. M., "when a deputation called upon Mr. W., to ask him to accept the invitation: but there seemed to be an insurmountable obstacle in the way. He had no clothes suitable to the dignity of the occasion. Here was a dilemma, but this was removed by a proposition made by one of the deputation present, a merchant of the village. 'You deliver the oration, Mr. Webster,' said he, 'and I will trust you for a suit of clothes from the best cloth in my store. Afterwards we will have the oration printed, and I will depend on the proceeds of the sales for my pay.' Mr. W. turned to me—'Jack,' he said, 'what shall we do?' 'Prepare the oration,' I said. The oration was prepared and delivered; and so much were the citizens gratified, that a copy was urgently requested for publication. From the sales the debt due the liberal merchant was paid, and a considerable surplus left for Mr. Webster's own use.' [Phil. Sun, 4th inst.

SIGNERS OF THE DECLARATION.—Of the fifty-six signers of the Declaration of Independence, it is stated that nine were born in Massachusetts, eight in Virginia, five in Maryland, four in Connecticut, four in New Jersey, four in Pennsylvania, four in South Carolina, three in New York, three in Delaware, two in Rhode Island, one in Maine, three in Ireland, two in England, two in Scotland, and one in Wales. Twenty-one were lawyers, ten merchants, four physicians, three farmers, one clergyman, one printer, and sixteen were men of fortune. Eight were graduates of Harvard College, four of Yale, three of New Jersey, two of Philadelphia, two of William and Mary, three of Cambridge (England), two of Edinburgh, and one of St. Omers.

At the time of their deaths five were over ninety years of age, seven between eighty and ninety, eleven between seventy and eighty, twelve between sixty and seventy, eleven between fifty and sixty, seven between forty and fifty, one died at the age of twenty-seven, and the age of two is uncertain. At the time of signing the Declaration, the average age of the members was forty-four years. They lived to the average age of more than sixty-five years and ten months. The youngest member was Edward Rutledge, of South Carolina, who was in his twenty-seventh year. He lived to the age of fifty-one. The next youngest member was Thomas Lynch, of the same State, who was also in his twenty-seventh year. He was lost at sea in the fall of 1776.

Benjamin Franklin was the oldest member. He was in his seventy-first year when he signed the Declaration. He lived in 1790, and survived sixteen of his younger brethren. Stephen Hopkins, of Rhode Island, the next oldest member, was born in 1707, and died in 1778. Charles Carroll attained the greatest age, dying in his ninety-sixth year. William Ellery, of Rhode Island, died in his ninety-third year, and John Adams in his ninety-first.

THE SAFEST SEAT.—In these days of collisions, submersions and derailments generally, it is worth one's while to know where he can expect the greatest security in a railroad train. We expect that if any opinion should be given that the indicated car will be at once crowded beyond its capacity, but that result had better follow than that the safest car should go nearly or quite empty.

It is very well known that the car nearest the engine is exposed to the least dust, and that the rear car of a train is generally safer than the front car. The safest is probably the last car but one, in a train of more than two cars; that is, there are fewer chances of accidents to this than any other.

If it is a way train at moderate speed, or any train standing still, a collision is possible from another train in the rear; in which case the last car receives the first shock. Again, an engine and the front cars of a train will often go over a broken rail, or a cow, or stone, without derailment, while the last car, having nothing to draw it into the line of the train, is free to leave the track. Next to the forward car is probably the most unsafe in the train. The safest seat is probably near the centres of the last two or three cars next to the last. [Railroad Journal.

THINK.—Did you ever think? There are men who spend their lives without thinking or reflecting. When they speak, they utter but the most common-place ideas, which are in every body's mouth. Nothing new or startling comes from them. People may not present new truths, but they may produce old ones in a new garb. Reflection will enable them to do this. How few of all that live and breathe are really capable of imparting information and instruction. The reason is obvious. It is not because they have small minds, or are dull of comprehension. It is because they do not think. They never set themselves down to reflect and meditate. Are you of that number? Can you impart no instruction by your voice or pen? No wonder you feel ashamed of your ignorance. Let this be a moment of reflection; of deep, serious thought; so that the future, like past, may not be a blank in your history.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will be entered to be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

COMMENCEMENT. CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The Examination of the Students of this College will begin July 20th

On the Sabbath following the Annual Sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Speer, of Natchez

Monday, 25th the Joint Board will meet

Tuesday, 26th the Anniversary of the Literary Society will be celebrated.

Wednesday will be Commencement Day.

The friends of Education are requested to be present.

H. H. DAVIES

Jackson La., June 13, 1853

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

FALL SESSION.

The next Session of this College will begin July 13th.

FACULTY.

Rev. JAMES W. HARDY, M. A., President, and Professor of Experimental Science

Rev. SMITH W. MOORE, M. A., Vice President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.

OSCAR P. CASEY, M. A., Professor of Ancient Languages.

SEPTIMUS P. RICE, M. A., Professor of Pure Mathematics, and Rector of Grammar School.

Rev. H. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Mixed Mathematics.

THOS. H. SMITH, M. A., Principal of Grammar School.

SCHOOL EXPENSES.

Tuition	$25 00 Per Session.
Room rent and servant's hire	3 00 " "
Board and washing	50 00 " "

The College dues must be paid invariably in advance. jn25 4t30

JAMES W. HARDY.

La Grange, Ala., June 13, 1853.

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the weekly report of this institution from Friday the 8th to Friday the 15th inst. Admissions, 424, of different diseases; discharged, 276; deaths 104. Number of discharges from Yellow Fever, 5; number of deaths from Yellow Fever, 86; number of patients remaining 758.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Interments in the City of New Orleans for the week ending July 9, 1853:

Atrophia	1	Fever, Remittent	2
Apoplexy	3	Fever, Typhoid	3
Abscess	1	Fever, Uncertain	1
Brain, Congestion of	2	Gastro-Enteritis	4
Bronchitis	2	Hernia	1
Cholera Infantum	1	Hypertrophy	1
Consumption	11	Hydrocephalus	2
Cholera Morbus	1	Hyd. Pericardium	1
Colics	1	Inflammation	1
Cancer	1	Measles	2
Convulsions	5	Marasmus	2
Congestion	1	Meningitis	1
Dysentery	7	Peritonitis	1
Debility	2	Pneumonia	6
Diarrhœa	9	Rupture of	1
Drowned	1	Stillborn	6
Delirium Tremens	1	Stomach, Cancer of	1
Debilities	2	Scarlatina	1
Epilepsy	1	Sun-Stroke	1
Enteritis	4	Spasms	1
Encephalitis	1	Tabes Mesenterica	1
Enterocolitis	1	Tetanus Traumat	1
Fever, Pernicious	3	Trismus	1
Fever, Yellow	59	Uncertain	20
Fever, Congestive	4	Ulceration of Bowels	1
Fever, Bilious	1
Total			188

Of these, 52 were under ten years of age, and 23 colored.

Interments in the following Cemeteries.

Lafayette	37	St. Vincent de Paul	20
Hebrew	2	Potter's Field	18
Catholic No. 1	4	Cypress Grove	7
Catholic No. 2	11	Charity Hospital	45
St. Patrick	30
Protestant	7	Total	188

A. HERTZER, Sen. R. H.

Louisiana Interior.

Red River is falling slowly from Clarksville to the mouth, but there is sufficient water for the largest boats.

The Claiborne Advocate of the 29th ult. says: A destructive wind passed over portions of this parish on Wednesday last. A great many trees were blown down in the vicinity of this place, especially in the newly cleared fields, some of which have suffered seriously.

The dwelling-house of Col R. A. Stewart, of Iberville, was entirely consumed by fire on Wednesday morning. Several adjacent buildings lately constructed were also destroyed. The fire is attributed to carelessness on the part of a servant. No insurance.

The Baton Rouge Democrat, of the 7th inst., announces officially the following appointments by the Governor:

Directors, on the part of the State, of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad—A. B. James, Josiah Cole and N. C. Folger.

Directors, on the part of the State, of the Baton Rouge and Grosse Tete Plank Road—George S. Lacey, W. B. Robertson and Wm. J. Hogan.

Additional Delegates to the World's Fair at New York City—Hons. C. W. Clifton, Duncan F. Kenner, Cyrus Ratliff, W. H. Wilder, Jas. Bonner, Esq., and J. W. Breedlove, Esq.

The same paper says:

The Board of Swamp Land Commissioners have appointed Mr. Levi C. Pottees, of New Orleans, as engineer of the First Swamp Land District.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Fishing Squadron.

WASHINGTON, July 12.

Commodore Shubrick has received command of the Fishing Squadron.

New Mail Steamers.

WASHINGTON, July 12.

The Postmaster General has concluded arrangements for the transportation of the mails by the new steamers Hansa and Germany to Bremen. The steamers are owned by a Hermen firm.

Death of Eminent Men.

BALTIMORE, July 13.

Professor Caldwell, the oldest physician in the United States, died in Louisville on Saturday night. Samuel Appleton died yesterday at Boston.

Reception of the President.

BALTIMORE, July 12.

President Pierce had a grand reception in this city last evening. The military turned out in large numbers, and much enthusiasm was shown by the crowd. He leaves for Philadelphia to-day.

RESIGNATION OF BUCHANAN.—New York, July 9.—A dispatch received here from Washington, states that Mr. Buchanan has resigned the mission to England, and that Thomas H. Bayly and Henry A. Wise are candidates for the English and French missions.

PRESIDENT'S VISIT, NORTH.—Philadelphia, July 12.—President Pierce has met with an enthusiastic reception in Baltimore and in this city, as he passed on his way North.

MR. BUCHANAN.—Washington July 12.—The National Intelligencer of this morning states that the report of Mr. Buchanan's resignation is correct.

Opening of the Crystal Palace.—New York, July 14.—The President has arrived, accompanied by a brilliant escort.

The Crystal Palace was inaugurated to-day in the presence of an immense assemblage.

The opening address was delivered by the President of the Association, Theodore Sedgwick.

He was followed by President Pierce, Secretaries Davis and Cushing, and other distinguished personages.

It was the most imposing ceremony ever witnessed here.

A grand dinner will be given at the Metropolitan Hotel

The President returns to Washington on Saturday.

General News—Important from the East.

LIVERPOOL, July 2.

A dispatch from Paris, dated yesterday, contains later advices from St. Petersburg.

The news of the rejection of the Czar's last ultimatum by the Porte, reached St. Petersburg on the 24th June. The Emperor then gave an audience to the British and French Ministers, in which he made known his intentions, expressing himself to the two Embassadors in the strongest language, stating that even the destruction of his fleets would not prevent him from invading Turkey and obtaining reparation.

The fourth division of the Russian army was at once ordered to enter Moldavia.

The Russian force lining the Black Sea amounts to one hundred and sixty thousand men.

The Emperor complains at the conduct of the British Premier, and has issued peremptory instructions to his Minister at the Court of London to confine himself to official intercourse with the British Secretary of State.

TURKEY.—King Otho is arming a squadron for the protection of his subjects in Turkey, in case of war.

Private letters from Bucharest reports the receipt of dispatches from Moldavia of the 11th, and state that an extraordinary courier had been dispatched from St. Petersburg with another ultimatum, with notice to the Porte, that if it should not be accepted within eight days, the Russian army would cross the frontiers and commence hostilities.

PARIS BOURSE.—At the Paris Bourse, on the 9th instant, the receipt of the news from the East caused the securities to suffer seriously. The Three Per Cents declined 1 per cent. during the day.

EAST INDIA.—The latest advices from Calcutta report trade there as very dull.

CHINESE WAR.—Dates to the 6th of May have been received from Hong Kong. It was reported there that great success continued to attend the insurgents. It was stated that they had recaptured Nankin and were moving towards Pekin. Provisions were enormously high.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The U. S. Mail steamship Philadelphia, J. P. McKinstry, U. S. Navy, commanding, arrived here on Saturday evening from Aspinwall, with the California mails and passengers, which came from San Francisco by the Pacific Mail steamers Columbus and Golden Gate, which latter ship left San Francisco on the 16th ult.

Many of the Philadelphia's passengers crossed the Isthmus in twelve hours, and exceeded here within twenty-one days from California.

The Isthmus was healthy, and not a single case of sickness had occurred on board the Philadelphia.

From our exchanges we clip the following interesting summary:

The news from California, says the Placer Times, reaching our Atlantic brethren by to-day's mail departure, is rather more important than usual. The Golden Gate carries a good account of our agricultural prospects for the present season. The harvest has commenced, and from every part of the State the report is the grain product will vastly exceed that of 1852. All sorts of field crops are equally good. From every section of the Placers we hear of most satisfactory results; indeed mining has never been carried forward with such general success. Quartz mining has received a fresh impetus from the influx of capital, and will soon contribute largely to the gold product of California. In politics, both parties are awaiting the nominations of the conventions so soon to assemble.—The democracy make their State nominations next week at Benicia. For Governor, John Bigler and Major Roman are the prominent candidates, and the result of the county conventions is strongly indicative of the renomination of Governor Bigler. Commercially, the intelligence is not so favorable to interests abroad. The market is overstocked with many of the chief articles of consumption. Some lately arrived cargoes have been sold at a discount of ten per cent. from the cost. Consignees are instructed to hold on for higher prices. Shippers, however, fail to order them to draw for the freight, and this expenditure alone equals half a million per month, requiring that amount of goods, at least, to be forced upon the trade. It was very hot weather yesterday in San Francisco, decidedly the hottest day of the season. At Marysville, on the 14th, the heat was almost intolerable, and Sacramento fared little better. At all these points, however, and indeed throughout the State, general good health prevails for which it behooves all people to be thankful.

At Sacramento, on Thursday and Monday, the thermometer mounted as high as 102 deg. in the shade.

A marked improvement in business generally at Stockton, is remarked by the Journal.

Fifty thousand dollars freight to New York is paid monthly on shipments of gold from San Francisco.

DUELS.—Hon. Messrs. Gwin and McCorkle, members of Congress, after exchanging three shots ineffectually with rifles at thirty paces, were reconciled by the mediation of their seconds.

A fatal result followed the hostile meeting which took place on the morning of the 11th. Dr. A. B. Crane expired on Sunday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, at the Oriental Hotel. The wound, which was at first deemed not dangerous, proved to have penetrated the intestines, and mortification ensued. The deceased was from Alexandria, Red River, Louisiana, and a son of Judge Crane, of Mississippi. Dr. C. fought with Mr. Edward Toby.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.—Murder, lynching and robbery are the order of the day in California. Deeds of unheard of barbarity are almost daily perpetrated.

A Chinaman, who had stolen $400 at Drytown, was handed over to his own countrymen, who, after whipping him, under pretext of sending him to San Francisco, took him aside and shot him through the head.

A man named Collins died in Placerville last week, apparently in extreme poverty. He had evidently starved himself and declared he was penniless. On laying the body out for burial, twenty-seven ounces of gold dust were found in his pocket.

Joaquin is still uncaptured, and all attempts to discover his hiding-place have proved ineffectual. From his not having been seen lately, it is supposed that he has escaped to Lower California or Mexico. A well known member of his band, named Pedro, has been shot in a personal quarrel with a Spaniard, in Martinez village, near Columbia.

The San Joaquin Republican contains the following account of a criminal who was executed June 3:

"Jose Ilorella was executed in the outskirts of Stockton on Friday afternoon. An immense crowd witnessed the sad spectacle and the assertion of the majesty of the law. He confessed that he had committed an amount of crime in California sufficient to have condemned him to death fifty times. He said that he was a member of an organized band of robbers, to whose nest he offered to conduct the officers. He was about 27 years of age. Up to the day of his execution he affected an indifference to his fate, but was completely unmanned when he was led to the gallows. He had to be assisted to the cart, and trembled violently when the rope was placed round his neck. He confessed to the Padre and died without a struggle. The crime of which he was convicted was the murder of H. H. Jones, at a fandango, about a year ago.

A gentleman from Hangtown, says the California, reports that city in considerable excitement about some rich leads that have been struck on the hill. One claim is said to have paid $5000 in three days, and in another 4 buckets of earth are said to have yielded respectively $500, $400, $380 and $300.

IMPORTANT FROM BOGOTA.

The Panama Herald of the 30th says: Among the questions to be considered by the Congress, in extra session, is the proposed law relative to transit of specie across the Isthmus. According to the amended bill the Government is to have the power of charging from one to twelve rials per pound on all specie and treasure guarded across, for which they propose to hold themselves responsible. The project, it is expected, will become a law.

FULL COFFERS.—The Sub-Treasury in New York, the Express says, is now fuller than it ever was before, running up to eight millions. Unless the Government makes a great sacrifice in buying up the national debt, the surplus revenue will run over $20,000,000 when Congress reassembles.

It appears that the Postmaster General finds himself relieved from all responsibility in relation to the continuance of the Sunday mail between New York and Boston, the President of the New York and New Haven Railroad Company having positively refused to contract for that service, even if desired by the Post-office Department.

THE DARDANELLES.—The European Times says: "Let the Russians occupy the Dardanelles if they dare. If they do, they must be prepared to stand the shock of the united strength of Great Britain and France, and such a violation of the rights of nations must involve all Europe in a general war."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE OFFICE,
Saturday Morning, July 16, 1853.

Except in the article of Tobacco, and, within the last day or two, some movement in Flour and Grain, our market has presented an inanimate appearance during the past week. Cotton has been very quiet but with a rapidly diminishing stock, without any material change in prices. An impulse has been given to the demand for Flour, by the last advices from Europe, reporting a failure of the crops in the South of France, and the renewed danger of war on the Eastern question. Provisions have continued dull and Bacon has sold at low rates. Sribbing of any moment has been done in Freights. Exchanges have continued dull, without any alteration of moment in the rates. The Collins steamer Atlantic, with Liverpool dates to the 29th of June arrived at New York on Sunday last, but owing to an interruption in telegraphic communication, her accounts only reached here on Wednesday at noon. They reported an active demand in the Liverpool Cotton market, with sales for the four days preceding her departure of 34,000 bales, including 10,000 for speculation and export. Prices were quoted a fraction higher as follows: Fair Orleans 6¾; Middling Orleans 6 1-16; Fair Uplands 6¾ and Middling Uplands 6 5-16@6 15-16 ₩ lb. Flour had advanced 6d@7s ₩ bbl, and Ohio brands were quoted at 2os. On Thursday noon the Arabia's advices reached here by telegraph, bringing up our dates from Liverpool to the 2d instant. The Liverpool Cotton market is represented by those advices to have continued rather active, but with some irregularity in the rates. Though holders generally are stated to have been firm, the quotations indicate an advantage to buyers in the rates, which are given as follow: Fair Orleans 6¾@6¾; Middling Orleans 6⅝@6; Fair Uplands 6⅛, and Middling Uplands 5¾@6d ₩ lb. The sales for the week ending July 1st were 6000 bales, of which 2000 had been taken for speculation and 5000 bales for export. Breadstuffs had largely advanced, and Flour was quoted at 20s for Western Canal, and 24s 6d ₩ bbl for Ohio brands.

COTTON—We left the Cotton market, at the close of our last review, with a rather quiet appearance, the sales of Friday reaching barely 1400 bales, making up a total for the week of 6300 bales, mostly at full prices, indicating an advance of fully ¼ for the same time. On Saturday the demand was limited, and the sales reached barely 500 bales, without change in the rates. On Sunday morning the America's accounts were published, reporting sales in the Liverpool market for the week ending June 25th of 57,000 bales at a slight advance in prices, the quotations closing at 5¾d for Fair Orleans, 6d for Middling Orleans, ⅛ for Fair Uplands, and 5½d ₩ lb for Middling Uplands. This seemed to produce no effect on our market on Monday, when the sales reached only 250 bales. On Tuesday, again, the demand was limited, and only about 750 bales changed hands; but on Wednesday two or three buyers came forward and took some 1600 bales, prices remaining without any change of moment. The market was again rather quiet on Thursday, and only about 700 bales were taken, and yesterday the demand was still more limited, the sales not exceeding 300 bales, making an aggregate for the week of only 4000 bales. Prices have been rather irregular, and, in some instances, lower rates have been accepted by factors, though we do not find it necessary to change our quotations.

The receipts of the week are 1205 bales, against 2416 bales for the corresponding period last year, and in the total receipts at this port the increase, compared with last year, is 223,011 bales.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	6¼@7⅛	Middling Fair	11⅛@11¾
Ordinary	8¼@9	Fair	—@—
Middling	9⅜@10⅛	Good Fair	—@—
Good Middling	11 @11¼	Good and Fine	—@—

COTTON AND TOBACCO STATEMENT.

	Cotton—bales.	Tobacco—hhds
Stock on hand Sept. 1, 1852	9,832	16,754
Received since	1,656,673	69,804
" yesterday	544—1,656,517	42—69,846
	1,666,649	86,600
Exported in date	1,623,462	65,253
" yesterday	341—1,623,793	000—65,253
Stock on hand not cleared	42,256	33,347

TOBACCO—The movement in the Tobacco market continues active, under the influence of further unfavorable accounts from the West, and prices have still maintained an upward tendency. A telegraphic dispatch, dated the 14th instant, published in our issue of yesterday, says that "reports from Mason County, Ky., state that the Tobacco crop is almost a total failure; they say that if a good season should now commence, and continue favorable throughout, there could not be other than a short crop." The sales of the week, as far as reported, sum up about 4200 hhds, including 1200 on Saturday, 1100 on Monday, 200 on Tuesday, 750 on Wednesday, 450 on Thursday, and 600 yesterday, and embrace the following particulars: 8 hhds at 6½ and 9c at 6¼; 4 at 5½, 51 at 6¼, 8 at 6⅝, and 4 at 7⅛; 25 (R.) at 5½ and 22 at 6⅜; 8 at 6⅛ and 15 at 6½; 247 at 5⅜, 107 at 6, 105 at 6¼, 120 at 6⅜, and 50 at 7¼; 160 at 6½; 4 at 6, 50 at 8¾, 117 at 7, 8 at 8½, and 99 at 9; 37 at 6⅜; 20 at 6, 70 at 6⅜, 121 at 7¼, and 26 at 8; 128 at 6¼; 95 at 6⅜; 25 at 7 and 19 at 7⅜; 80 at 7 and 9 at 7½; 85 (old Mason County) at —; 16 at 5½; 20 at 6¼ and 63 at 6⅜; 20 at 6½, 1 at 6⅜, 4 at 7, and 46 at 7½; 021 at 6⅜; 46 at 6½; 15 at 6⅜ and 100 at 7¼; 115 at 8; 180 Admiral and Neosell at 6¼c round; 23 hhds (13 Admiral and 10 R) at 6¼c round; 221 at 6¾; 30 at —, and 32 at 6¼c ₩ lb.

Lugs	4¼@6¾
Leaf, inf. to Com	6¾@8
Fair to Fine	6½@7
Choice & Selections	7½@8¾

SUGAR—The receipts of Sugar have been trifling, and the transactions on a very limited scale during the week. Small lots from store have continued to sell at our last quotations, which we repeat:

Inferior to Com	2¼@3½
Good Common	—@3¾
Fair to Fully Fair	3¾@3⅞
Prime and Choice	4½@6½
Clarified	—@6¾

Week's receipts, 258 hhds—exports, 1122.

MOLASSES—The supply has been very light, and the principal sales have been on private terms. Retail lots have sold at 12@14c ₩ gallon for Fermenting, 16@18 for Reboiled, and 19½@21c for Sugar-house.

Week's receipts, 1181 bbls—exports, 601.

FLOUR—The demand for Flour in the early part of the week was very limited, and the sales up to Tuesday evening were confined to a few small lots, embracing barely 1000 bbls, mostly at $4 70@$4 75 ₩ bbl for Superfine St. Louis, $5 12½@$5 25 for ordinary brands of Extra, and $5 50@$5 75 for Choice Extra, prices being kept up by light receipts. The Atlantic's accounts, published on Wednesday, however, produced more inquiry, and on that day we noticed sales of some 1200 bbls at firm prices. The Arabia's advices were still more favorable, and on Thursday the sales reached 4000 bbls at a range of $4 70@$4 80 ₩ bbl for Superfine St. Louis, $5 12½@$5 37½ for Extra, and $5 75 for Choice. Yesterday but little was offering, and, as the demand continued, prices advanced considerably. The sales embraced about 1500 bbls, including 200 Superfine St. Louis at $4 90, 600, in in the horizon; but, although exhausted by hunger and fatigue, the Indians managed to drag their weary limbs to the city walls.

[CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

Those walls, of great breadth, were built of unburned brick, flat domed over with metallic particles resembling gold, and the tops of the highest buildings, which rose above them, were covered with the same glittering substance.

At equal distances on the walls were placed small shade of a peculiar shape, and in which stood a spectacl ss motionless as a figure carved in stone. They were men of a darkly bronzed hue, high and regular features, but rather small of stature; they were covered with ornaments of every kind and shape—large rings were pendant from their ears, and a species of coronet, composed of parti-colored feathers, adorned their heads. Their dress was a short tunic of cloth, embroidered around the edges with an Arabesque pattern, formed of the same metallic substance which so plentifully adorned the city, and a girdle of the same material encircled the waist. Their sole weapon was a lance, which they held poised, as if ready to use it against an invader, but, by hardly a glance did they seem sensible of the approach of the strangers until they stood before them.

At the signs made by the Indians to express their want of food and a desire to enter the city, the automaton nearest the gate raised a horn which hung beside him and blew a long shrill blast, which was immediately answered from within the walls by a similar sound, and in a few minutes another individual, resembling the sentinel in dress and general appearance, appeared at his side. In a few words of a strange but musical language he seemed to communicate to the new comer the wants of those below. Without demonstrating by word or look more curiosity than his companion this one disappeared but soon returned with a basket which was lowered to the Indians and which contained bread, and a variety of fruits, unknown, but most grateful to their tastes.

As they perceived on the part of the inhabitants no intention of admitting them within the walls they determined to pass the night where they were and await the morning's light to dictate to them their future course.

When night came on the city was illuminated in such a manner as to present the appearance of a great conflagration. The Indians supposed that immense piles of wood must have been fired in different places, at the same time, to produce the brilliant light which continued undiminished throughout the night.

The unbroken stillness which reigned around seemed both awful and inexplicable. Not a sound betokened the existence of a living being in a place which from its extent and appearance they conjectured to be filled with inhabitants. The warder still poised his lance in the attitude in which they first behald him, and as his garments glistened in the light which shone around his motionless form, their wild imaginations began to summon up all the dark and fearful images with which they were well stored. The warriors would rather have faced singly a hostile tribe than be exposed to enchantments which their fancies only waited for sleep in order to exercise their fearful power.

All that weary night they dared not close their eyes, but when the morning dawned the Prophet rose from his seat with a more cheerful aspect than he had worn since the city appeared to his astonished view. He suggested the necessity of renewed efforts in order to gain admission, and proposed circling the walls to discover some inlet, or at least finding a warder who might testify more of human sympathy than the figure before them. Ils told them that it would be impiety to seek any other passage across the valley than the one which lay through the city, for the Great Spirit had thrown those difficulties in the way in order to prove the perseverance and fearlessness which would be their passport to the happy "hunting grounds."

It was time to speak the language of encouragement for the spirits of the Indians were beginning to flag under the sufferings of body and mind which they had lately undergone.

Faith or credulity is the leading characteristic of the savage. They listened and believed, and had their path been enveloped in flames not an inch would they have swerved from it.

As they approached the gate, which seemed by its stupendous size to have been hewn from the gigantic trees of the adjacent forest, it was heavily thrown open, and an old man with a long white beard and a costume which, although resembling those they had already seen, far surpassed them in richness, emerged from the gate and approached the strangers. The warrior who stood nearest the entrance gazed with curiosity at the scene thus unexpectedly disclosed to view. He saw a confused mass of buildings glistening in the light of the morning's sun, but his attention was soon riveted upon a multitude of people who stood in a semi-circle around an open space directly in front of the gate. Not the slightest perceptible motion among them betrayed the existence of uctive breathing life, but with a fixed unwinking stare their eyes rested upon him. The warrior shuddered when he met their stony gaze, which chilled the blood within his veins, and when the old man, by a courteous gesture, invited the Prophet and his companions to enter, he shrunk back with an undefinable feeling of dread. While he hesitated his friends entered and the gate closed behind them. The heavy sound aroused him and he sprang forward to share their fate, whatever that might be, but too late. In vain he called loudly for admittance, no answering sound met his ear; in vain in his agony he appealed to the warder; a vacant stare was his only answer. For two most miserable days and nights he remained before the walls with every sense painfully and acutely strained to catch some token of the continued existence of his friends; but he was at last forced to the bitter conclusion that they had met with a fate within the city only the more dreadful from the mystery surrounding it. Sick at heart, he prepared to retrace his solitary road, but, before his departure, some degree of sympathy was testified by the warder, who, as if aware of his intentions, lowered to him a greater quantity of provisions than at any previous occasion.

His homeward journey was but a recapitulation of all previous difficulties, enhanced tenfold by his solitary situation. However, on his course he met with several wandering tribes of Indians, and remained long enough with them to recruit, in some degree, his failing strength, and to gain sufficient knowledge of their dialect to question them about the mysterious city. They had never heard of the existence of such a place, and, in fact, seemed to give little credence to his strange history.

His own tribe, however, were more credulous. The sagest among them decided that the city was merely a portal to the "happy hunting grounds" which lay back of the mountains. They censured severely the unfortunate traveler for his hesitation at entering the gate, which they pronounced a proof of his unworthiness to secure the reward he donbt gained by his bolder companions. Had their destruction been intended he was asked, contemptuously, why should he have been less unharmed? This unfastening conclusion soon forced itself upon the mind of the poor Indian, who passed the remainder of a scorned and wretched life in lamenting the unlucky hesitation which had forever barred against him the gates of his long sought paradise.

CHAPTER III.

The first white settlers of Calcasieu were a few Creole families from the adjoining parishes, who, in pursuit of a healthy location and pasturage for large herds of cattle, found these advantages combined in an eminent degree in the extensive prairies which cover nearly the whole of the parish. Mostly descendants of the "Acadiens," they preserve many of the peculiarities to that race, but frequent intermarriage has blended every distinctive trait into one general resemblance.

The torch of improvement which cast its lustre into every obscure corner of our favored land, has, until very recently, failed to excite or awaken this lethargic colony to a sense of their own ignorance. Indolence and a dislike to innovation have made them cling with the utmost pertinacity to the manners and customs of their ancestors. They cultivate their fields with the same primitive instruments of agriculture; they sow their grain on the same day of the month devoted to that purpose by their respectable primogenitors, and in no one essential point does the "habitants" of to-day differ from the "habitants" of sixty years ago. Even what men in general are most tenacious of, their patronymics, are to this primitive race a matter of so little consequence that not one-tenth of them actually know that they ever owned one. They are generally designated by their baptismal names, Pierre, Michel, etc., and some have received the appellation of the birth-place of their forefathers—Trieste, Corse, etc.

A stranger, ignorant of this peculiarity, sought in vain amongst the "Acadiens" for a Mons Fusilier, for whom he had transacted some business. Like Mons. Tonson, he was no where to be found; and a women at the last house, to whom he applied for information, positively asserted that no individual of that name had ever lived in the neighborhood. Tired, and angry at his unsuccessful search, he was in the act of leaving the door when the very individual he sought stood before him. "Ah!" he exclaimed, when the gentleman had explained his perplexity, "you would have saved yourself, my good friend, all this trouble, had you inquired for Mons. Jean: no one here knows me by my nom de famille." They re entered the house, and the woman, who had so stoutly denied all knowledge of "Mons. Fusilier," was then and there, for the first time, made acquainted with the actual name of the husband with whom she had lived many long years.

But there are hopes even for Calcasieu. The Yankee is abroad! Wooden clocks display their glories over every mantlepiece. Bright colored calicos have superseded the domestic cloth of the country—the fashions have not been more than three years out of vogue in the city when they adorn the person of the Calcasieu Belle: and the "Vacher" begins to find that something more than breaking wild horses and branding a certain number of calves is necessary to obtain him notoriety, even among his own people.

Lawyers and doctors hold themselves in readiness to promote the diseases and differences which, of latter years, have been of rapid growth. Mad politicians are scouring the country in every direction, swimming rivers, wading marshes, killing horses, and putting life itself in peril, for the unselfish purpose of enlightening the inhabitants upon the leading questions of the day, and obtaining their votes. "Sir," says one, "your taxes will be increased, your manufactures sacrificed, your cattle sold at half price, and your parish totally ruined, if you do not support my views."

Different changes are rung upon the same tune by the opposite party, and, although both language and subject are generally Greek to the "habitants," yet the few words he does understand—taxes, manufacture and cattle—find a ready and alarmed echo in his bosom. He gives his vote with the proud consciousness of having done "some service to the State;" and thenceforth struts a whig or democrat, as the case may be, but quite as ignorant of the principles he supports, as of the last Ukase of the Emperor of Russia.

The benefit to be derived from this new state of affairs belongs exclusively to the next generation. The present race, although aroused to the mortifying consciousness of their own deficiencies, are neither willing nor able to overcome habits which have "grown with their growth and strengthened with their strength." With a not unpardonable prejudice, they can see little advantage to be derived from an influx of strangers, who have overthrown their household gods, and desecrated by contempt all the time-honored superstitions which have become incorporated into their very faith. In some respects, however, the poor Calcasieu Vacher might teach a lesson to his more civilized brethren, in an active euger hospitality, which will make you welcome to his house for months, if you choose to remain so long; in an overflowing charity which will divide the last morsel with the beggar at his door, and minister to the sick stranger with considerate tenderness, which can leave him at least no reason to cavil at the want of refinement in his kind and gentle nurses.

The wave of civilization, if it destroys the noxious weed often conceals the precious pearl; and, I do not doubt that, in less than ten years hence, the doors of the Calcasieu "Vacher" will be as hermetically sealed, and the morsel as churlishly bestowed upon the poor suppliant as in the most enlightened communities, who new cast up their eyes in horror and astonishment at the mental darkness of this benighted people.

Calcasieu is emphatically the region of romance. Every hillock has its history, every bayou its peculiar legend, before whose extravagant coloring even the stories of the Arabian Nights become faded and lifeless. This predominance of the imagination over all other faculties of the mind, ultheugh common to most people in a semi-civilized state, is increased in the "Calcasieu" by his peculiar religious faith.

A mixture of Catholicity and Paganism, his worship seems strangely divided between the gods of the Pantheon and the saints of the Catholic Calendar. He honors St. Michael, but he places in his hands the thunderbolts of Jove; he worships the Virgin Mery, but he invokes her as the patroness of the waves, the "star of the sea," and she rises before his adoring imagination invested with many of the attributes of the Venus Anadyomene.

The oracle is not mute to him, it speaks in the whisperings of the wind, in the mutterings of thunder, in the flowers at his feet, in the stars overheid; he seeks his fate in the falling of a leef, and finds an omen in the transplantation of a sprig of garden parsley.

Entertaining these opinions, it is not surprising that the "habitans," between superstition and constitutional timidity, "should die a thousand deaths" before his time. In fact, there are so many acts to be avoided, as unlucky; so many places to be shunned as ill-omened, that this only surprise is, when and where he can shake off the incubus of fear which seems, in most cases, to poison all enjoyment. You uot only find him flying from even the semblance of danger, but, in his greatest haste, making a circuit of many miles to avoid even the spot where a crime has been committed. There is one cove on Lake Calcasieu, and, I verily believe, a night spent there would deprive the strongest minded "Vacher" in the parish of his slender portion of reason. Superstition, however, could add little or nothing to the actual horrors of the trugedy enacted at "Parricide's Cove."

CHAPTER IV.

The Paricide's Cove.

Among the fugitives who sought an asylum in the United States from the reign of terror which bathed France in blood, were found many Emigrés of nobles extraction, who, proscribed and hunted from spot to spot, had narrowly escaped the guillotine, beneath whose edge their friends had already fallen. Deprived of their estates, they found themselves in a strange land, compelled to depend for actual support upon the labor of head or hand, and the greater number taught, by habit and education, to regard manual labor as a degradieu to their "ancienne noblesse," preferred the scanty and precarious subsistence derived from the exercise of their talents as artists, teachers, etc., to the more hardy and independent tillage of the soil.

But this was not the case with the Marquis d'Auberval. With a morbid sensitiveness which sought to conceal his misfortunes from the inquiring eyes of his fellow men, he avoided the populous cities which had given a home to his countrymen, and carried his pride and poverty to the isolated portion of Louisiana, known by the name of Calcasieu. Here, at least, there were none to insult him by the display of superior wealth and splendor, which only recalled the memory of his more prosperous days.

He endeavored to combat these recollections by solicitous attention to the field and garden which he cultivated with his own hands, and which soon yielded a sufficincy for the wants of himself and his only son, then a boy twelve years old; but deficient in the peculiar philosophy which supports his countrymen under the pressure of adversity, he found that time instead of ameliorating his situation, had only driven the barbed arrow deeper in his soul. He would sit for hours on the bank of the lake near which he had placed his residence and dream of the "Belle France" he was never more to behold. The Court of Trianon with its gorgeous pagentry would pass before him until the contrast of his past and present condition would work his ill-balanced mind to a species of frenzy not many degrees removed from actual insanity.

Day by day he became more morose, and the simple peasantry avoided, with superstitious terror, the gloomy old man, whose stern eye fell upon them with a chilling influence, which their ignorance ascribed to some supernatural cause. The frantic ejaculations wrung from him by the agony of his soul, as he paced the beach, were regarded by them as many indications of his communion with an evil power, and the books which formed his scanty library were looked upon with awe as the agents or familiars by which he wrought his spells.

But every step which hurried from the path of the old Marquis, every eye which shunned his glance, grew lighter and brighter as the clear tones and ringing laugh of Henri d'Auberval fell upon their ear. Too young at the period of their flight from France to have retained any distinct recollection of their past grandeur, he could not even understand the sullen pride which denied his father all participation in the joys and griefs of those whom he looked upon as so immeasurably beneath him in the scale of creation. Henri was the first to assist in distress, the last to leave the feast of which he had been the pride; and the old man's stern eye grew still sterner, as he remarked the keen enjoyment with which his son joined in the rustic sports of the peasantry, and saw the last descendant of his noble line gradually assimilating himself in tastes and pursuits to the simple minded "habitans" of Calcasieu.

He forgot that Henri had grown up from youth to manhood among them, and that his own harshness had frequently driven his son to seek elsewhere the kind looks and tones which never greeted him at home. By some strange perversion of fancy he regarded him as a constant memento of his calamities, and drove him from his presence by violent bursts of passion which the wondering boy sought to avoid by frequent absence from his home.

Sometimes, indeed, of later years, he had endeavored to elevate Henri's ideas to the rank, of which fortune had deprived him, by a relation of the noble deeds of his ancestors, and the falcon eye of the young man would kindle and his noble form dilate, whilst he listened to the gallant exploits which had won for his ancient name an imperishable renown.

But when his father would depict, in glowing terms, scenes of that brilliant court which had once made his world, and when he descanted upon the charms of the star of his idolatry, his beautiful and unfortunate queen, Marie Antoinette, Henri would secretly wonder if her eyes could have been as bright and her smile as enchanting as that of Rosalie Vaudemont. And well might he wonder if that rare loveliness could be surpassed. No high born dame could boast a statelier bearing or more perfect form than nature, by some strange freak, has bestowed upon that obscure peasant girl. The clear olive skin warmed upon the cheek into a glow like that of the pomegranite blossom, the chiseled lips whose smile lent sweetness and softness to eyes of liquid light, had won for Rosalie the admiring title of "L'Etoile de Calcasieu."

She deserved the name, not only for her extreme beauty but for the gentle kindness which made her presence a sunbeam in every poor cottage. The old would bless the ready hand which assisted their infirmities, the soft voice whose sweet tones soothed their petulence, and the young deemed Henri d'Auberval, favored as he was by birth and nature, still more highly favored by the acknowledged preference of their fair Etoile. But Henri, while he responded earnestly and in all its sincerity to the loving and guileless heart which had made him its idol, shrunk with an undefinable feeling of dread from the terrible scene which would ensue when d'Auberval should discover an attachment degrading to his indomitable pride.

It was time, however, that his father should learn what was already known to the whole neighborhood, and in deep perplexity as to the manner in which he could couch the unpalatable information of the mésalliance which he contemplated, he one morning approached the library, where, at that early hour, he knew he should find the Marquis.

He attempted to shake off as unmanly the unwonted chill which seized him as he touched the latch, but when the door opened and he found himself face to face with his father, and on such an errand, too, when the cold gray eye looked up inquiringly from the book on which it had been fixed, Henri's resolution totally failed. In an incoherent and trembling manner he plunged at once into the midst of a subject which he had prepared himself to approach with delicate circumlocution. After a speech almost incomprehensible to himself, he paused in terror, expecting one of those fearful outbreaks of temper which he had nerved himself to encounter, but save that the harsh lines of his face became more rigid and his naturnl pulor more marked, the old Marquis sat unmoved, and silent as a figure hewn in stone.

At lost he broke silence, sud in a calm though constrained manner, pointed out to his son the inequalities of the alliance which he contemplated—he held out to him the hopes of a restoration to the country and rank of which he had been unjustly deprived, but whilst he blamed himself for the neglect which had driven his son to seek amongst other associates the sympathy and kindness he should have found with his father, he at the same time sucered at the ambition of the peasant girl, who, by her artful wiles, had almost won the long descended coronet of the d'Auberval's to deck her brow.

Henri had listened with almost self-reproach to the temperate remonstrances of his father, but at this lost taunt the blood of his passionate race boiled within his veins; he thought of his fair Rosalie, who, in her innocent and unselfish love, would have laid down her life to save him from a single pang, and he contrasted the devotion which met his lightest wish with the unfeeling harshness of the man who had made most wretched his childish years, and now required from him the sacrifice of his sweetest and best affections upon the altar of a ridiculous pride. What duty did he owe him? and under the influence of these feelings he made a short and ungry answer, and turned to leave the room, but, before he could reach the door, the Marquis sprung from his seat and laid a heavy grasp upon his arm.

"Listen to me, boy," he hissed, rather than spoke, through his clenched teeth, "if, with a madness which has no parallel, you persist in linking yourself to poverty and obscurity, may my curse and that of the noble ancestry you have disgraced pursue and cling to you, may the lot you have chosen eat into your soul, until famine and discontent shall induce you to wreak my revenge upon the miserable partner of your penury and folly; do not seek my presence, for, by the God who made me, I will have you and your base born bride scourged from my threshold like disobedient hounds."

Henri rushed from his father's presence into the open air, where, for some time, all was tumult in his mind; but by degrees, the fresh breeze, whilst it cooled his fevered brow, restored calmness to the turbulent passions which had been wrought to a temporary madness. He revolved in his mind a thousand plans for the future, which were rejected as soon as formed; the only one at all feasible was to persuade Rosalie to an immediate marriage, and assist her father in the cultivation of his little farm until more prosperous days would enable them to establish an independent ménage. Gradually these wandering visions assumed a more decided shape. He thought of the simple life of the "habitant," to which early habit had endured him; and unaccustomed to the superfluities of life, he felt a secret pleasure and pride at the prospect of being enabled by industry to supply the few wants belonging to the primitive state of society in which he lived. "What would be toil with Rosalie to cheer it?" And as his thoughts dwelt upon the beauty and grace which love whispered adorn a crown, but which his father considered unworthy of an alliance with the son of a destitute nobleman, they gradually assumed a more hopeful and joyous aspect. "Nay," he exclaimed aloud, "if all the wealth and power of our house in its most prosperous days were offered to me I would not exchange for them one radiant smile of thine, my sweet Etoile."

With a lighter step he left the spot, to carry his newly formed plans to his kind friends whom he knew would advance them, when his attention was suddenly arrested by the appearance of a brig which had entered the lake from the Calcasieu river, and which now cast its anchor opposite the place where he stood. A second glance revealed to him the taper masts and spars and the carved boar's head at the bow of "Le Sanglier," of Lafitte. A small boat was lowered from its side, into which two men entered, and, with a feeling of annoyance at the prospect of an intrusion, Henri hastened his steps to a cluster of cottages whose high peaked roofs were caught glimpses through the trees in which they were embowered.

It was, however, no matter of surprise to see a craft like "Le Sanglier" in the Calcasieu lake, which had been for many years the resort of contrabandists and pirates. The inhabitants, ignorant of the exact nature of the calling of these wild men, and by their poverty offering no temptation for the cupidity of the rovers, carried on with them a petty trade by which both were benefitted. They obtained provisions and other necessaries, and in return willingly made their houses receptacles for the valuables which the pirates were at times compelled to leave in places of greater security than their heated vessels afforded. Inquisitive strangers at that time rarely found their way to a place of such difficult access as Calcasieu, and the inhabitants therefore remained in ignorance of the value of threasures committed to their care, and which they never dreamed of appropriating to their own use.

D'Auberval, who from his window had watched the approach of the vessel, contrary to his usual custom advanced to meet the strangers who were now occupied in securing their boat. The eldest of the two, a man of middle age and strongly marked features, met the Merquis with an easy familiarity which betokened an old acquaintance, and giving orders in an authoritative tone to his companion, who turned in an opposite direction, the two proceeded arm in arm to the house and into the library, which d'Auberval locked to prevent intrusion.

Their conference was long and uninterrupted; but when they again emerged from the house, the puzzled look of the stranger proved it to have been unsatisfactory at least to him.

"You surely understand me, Lafitte," said d'Auberval.

"I certainly do," was the reply, "but it will need some hours to arrange the business; it is, however, hardly noon, and the Sanglier will not weigh anchor before dark. I will oblige you if I can."

The Marquis grasped his hand in acknowledgment, and Lafitte, springing into the skiff and calling to his companion to throw off the rope, waved his adieu as the boat drifted rapidly from the shore.

"Do you know, Manuel," said Lafitte, at length, to the young man beside him, "do you know the cause of that old Marquis' unwonted affability to-day? He has discovered his son's attachment for Rosalie Vaudemont, and, with all the pride of his mouldy ancestry in arms, he has determined to prevent what he styles a mésalliance—and how think you he expects to do it?" and the pirate laughed long and merrily at the recollection. "He wishes me to decoy the girl on my vessel and take her off, where, he does not care, if she is only out of his way. He offered me a diamond cross, an heirloom he called it, as a reward for my services; but the bait was hardly tempting enough, for Lake Calcasieu is too convenient and necessary a port for me to debar myself from it by indulging an old fool's caprice."

"What answer did you make him, Captain," asked Manuel.

"Oh, an evasive one, of course; had I refused he would have employed some surer means for the attainment of his wishes, and I wish to gain sufficient time to inform old Vaudemont of the peril of his daughter; Rosalie is a sweet creature and even I would not have her harmed if I could prevent it; et par Dieu, it would be to my loss to displease les bons gens de Calcasieu, for of course we could never show our faces here after such an escapade. So, hasten, Manuel, that we may find some means of communication with Vaudemont, and prepare for our departure this evening."

In happy ignorance of his father's machinations Henri returned home to make his final arrangements for his departure from the paternal roof, for Rosalie, moved by her lover's importunities and his peculiar situation, had consented to give him her hand that very evening. He avoided, as much as possible, his father's presence, although he could not help noticing the grim smile of satisfaction which played upon his thin lips, but the plensant confusion of his ideas at the approaching momentous event of his life, prevented his attaching any undue importance to such a chance circumstance.

The afternoon wore slowly away, and when night approached, Henri to while away the time which must elapse before the hour appointed for the ceremony, took his way to the beach, his favorite walk. The island of Blackberry, which rose opposite, with its trees and thickets, cast a chequered shadow upon the lake now silvered over by the light of a full moon. The waves, broken into white crests by the wind which played over its surface, gleamed like the fairy craft of an Undine and her Naiad crew, and the breeze, which came laden with the perfumes of the orange groves, it had rifled on its course, gave a tremulous motion to the lotus which raised its snowy chalice from the waves to drink the dew which sparkled on its brim.

Henri gave himself up to the sweet influence of the scene and to the happy visions which filled his soul, but the dreamy meditation into which he had fallen was broken by a heavy footstep, and looking up he beheld his father before him.

He attempted to speak of the beauty of the night and scenery, but the words died upon his lips as he remarked the scornful smile which met his attempts at conversation. The Marquis at last broke silence by inquiring of his son what meant the preparations he had seen him making that morning.

Henri would willingly have evaded a reply, but fearing to provoke him still more by hesitation, he rapidly informed him of his intentions, and though deprecating in a respectful manner his father's resentment he firmly declared his intention to abide by his chosen lot, even if his decision should cost him a parent.

Like a torrent escaped from its bounds the old man's bitter taunts and imprecations fell with rapid vehemence from his lips. Every epithet of abuse which his malignant passions supplied him with he heaped upon the heads of his son and the fair girl whom he loved. The drop of bitter blood, his only heritage from his father, began to spread in Henri's heart until a deep and deadly hatred usurped the indifference with which he had heretofore regarded his parent.

He still retained sufficient self-control to wish to put an end to this scene by leaving the spot, when, with a discordant laugh, his father arrested his steps.

"Do you see, vile boy," he cried, "that vessel whose sails are gradually sinking in the distance? It is the Sanglier, of Lafitte, and amidst his pirate crew you may seek the bride for whom you have won my curse. Aye, and listen to me, by my kind cure she has been placed among those tender companions; do not doubt but what she will be well cared for."

Henri knew his father too well to doubt for one moment his words. As if struck by some sudden blow he staggered a few paces back, but a demoniac laugh aroused him to some degree of consciousness. There stood his father pointing with outstretched hand to the pirate vessel, and seeming to revel in the torture of his victim. Reason deserted the mind of the unfortunate young man, he only saw before him the tyrant of his early years, the arch-fiend who had dashed the cup of happiness from his lips, and with a low cry he caught the hunting knife from his side and plunged it into the breast of the mocking demon before him.

One wild cry of anguish and sorrow rose upon the stillness of the night, and slowly and heavily the old man fell from the bank into the shallow waters of the cove beneath. The long, gray hair streamed out upon the sand, and the moonlight poured upon the rigid face and stormy eyes which looked up with a ghastly stare upon the murderer.

Henri cast one stupified glance upon the bloody form at his feet, and while the echoes of that death-shriek rung in his ear, with maniac wildness he tried to imitate it. The sound of his own voice in some measure aroused him, and throwing himself into a pirogue which was moored at the cove, he pushed it over the lake with a kind of undefined wish to gain the rapidly receding brig; but ever and anon across the waters rung that same wild shriek by which the maniac strove to answer the sound which rung in his ear. The terrified habitans listened with awe to what they conjectured to be the shrieks of some infernal spirit; but the dead body of the Marquis, and the disappearance of his son, told them next morning the terrible truth.

Time rolled on and the fate of the unfortunate Henri d'Auberval remained an impenetrable mystery, for Lafitte, when questioned on his return to Calcasieu, made evasive replies which baffled their curiosity. One old man, however, who several years afterwards visited Baritaria, had many a tale to tell of one of the pirates, the most daring and reckless of that desperate crew, and he said that had it not been for the singularity of gray hair which shaded an otherwise youthful face, he would have sworn that Henri d'Auberval stood before him.

The spot on which the murder was committed has ever been avoided by the peasantry as unholy ground, but at each recurrence of the "jour des morts," that most touching and sacred day in the Catholic calendar, the figure of a veiled nun might have been seen there from sunrise to sunset, unt few could recognize the once lovely and joyous "Etoile de Calcasieu," in the emaciated form and faded face, whose guiltless life was passed in expiation for the crime which had gained the "PARRICIDE'S COVE!"

There are three things a woman cannot do—to pass a bonnet-shop without looking in—to see a baby without kissing it, and to admire a piece of lace without inquiring how much it was per yard.

THE OLD STYLE REVIVED.—At the contemplated celebration of the Fourth of July at Springfield, Mass., it is said that a cavalcade of young ladies and gentlemen will be formed, dressed in old continental style, with cocked hats, broad laps, tights, kres-buckles, short waists, powdered hair, pillions, etc.

HIGHLAND MARY.—Highland Mary was Mary Campbell, from Campbelltown, in Argyleshire, and lived in Cellefield, in the humble situation of dairymaid to Colonel Montgomery. She also lived st one time as nursemaid in the family of Burns' friend and patron, Gavin Hamilton, where he visited her. Mary had gone to the West Highlands to make arrangements among her friends for the marriage with the poet, and her return to Greenock—where it was appointed they should meet—was seized with fever, of which she died, a few days before Burns even heard of her illness. This was the cause of their sudden separation.

Although Mr. Denham travels over some of the grounds touched upon by "Heather Jock," yet, as he relates incidents, many of them unknown to the general reader, we believe it will repay for the time lost in the perusal: "Most people, most people, most reading people," writes Thomas Denham, "are more or less acquainted with the bard's two beautiful effusions—"Highland Mary" and the address to "Mary in Heaven." Poor Highland Mary was a beautiful, interesting, and innocent young creature—for human loveliness, goodness and greatness,

"Can nestle in the lowly build,
As weel's in castle ha'."

And though brought up in humble circumstances, Mary had charms which attracted many wooers; and, says Allen Cunningham: "There was not wanting the temptations, etc., to allure." But nothing could win her young affections from the peasant poet—they were betrothed. Mary was to go home to the Western Highlands to make arrangements for their marriage. "And their adieu," says Cromeck, an author, "was performed in a striking, moving way. The lovers stood on opposite sides of a small brook, face to face: they laved their hands in the running stream, holding a Bible between them; pronounced their vows to be faithful to each other, and parted never to meet again!"

By way of continuation, Burns' own words are: "At the close of the following autumn, she crossed the sea to meet me at Greenock, where she had scarcely landed, when she was seized with a malignant fever, that hurried my dear girl to her grave in a few days before I even could learn of her illness." The Bible they made use of on this their final parting, was afterwards in the possession of Mary's sister, in two volumes, on each of which is inscribed a quotation from itself in Burn's handwriting. On the first, "And ye shall not swear by nome falsely—I am the Lord." On the second, "Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but perform unto the Lord thy oaths."

There is something exceedingly touching in this phrase of poor Burns' existence, and the pathos and deep feeling evinced in these two admirable poems can well attest how his sensitive heart must have writhed under the harrowing affliction which wrenched the tenderest, dearest chords. Long songs pall upon the ear, and 'tis customary to abbreviate them in singing; but I cannot see how one link of this sweet chain can be spared without marring its beautiful symmetry. May God ameud the taste that can mutilate "Highland Mary."

SINGULARITIES OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.—"Your language," said a learned philologist, in speaking of English, "is the most unphilosophical, and yet the most practical in the world. And no wonder! It is not a pure tongue which was gradually developed by a single race from the earliest dawn of society, but a compound of many elements, hurried by a rapidly advancing civilization into life and being.

"Foreigners on becoming partially acquainted with the English language, justly complain that it lacks uniformity—that there is no reliable philosophy on which they can depend for the correctness of an expression. Our own children, too, when an expression comes up which they are not familiar with, find the same difficulty. We become familiar with contradictory modes of expression, and do not notice them as do children and foreigners. When we sand the floor, we cast sand upon it, but when we dust the furniture, we remove dust from it. When we paint the house, we lay something on, but when we skin an ox, we take something off. We dress a child by overlaying it, and scale a shed by removing that by which it is overlaid. If it be proper to say—skin the ox, why is it not proper to speak of wooling the sheep, instead of sheering it? What would we think of a farmer who should talk of corning or grassing his fields, or appling his orchard—or his wife who should speak of feathering her geese, or blacking her knives, or dirting the clothes? Ilut we do that which is equally ridiculous, when we speak of dustiug the furnijure, skinaiag the ox, and scaling the fish, although custom has sanctioned these modes of expression, and Noah Webster recorded them in his dictionary.

"Yet, despite these irregularities, let any one familiar with the true character of our language reflect on the case with which it lends itself to every new phase of thought, surpassing, in this particular, any other longue. In this particular, English may, indeed, almost be termed a language of improvisation. In German, as in French, we frequently hear quaint and striking phrases, or old instances of slang, which strike the ear as novelties. But it will almost invariably be found on examination, that these phrases were stereotyped long ago. But the Englishman, and more particularly the Western American, dashes forth into the most singular and original figure of speech with the fullest confidence that he will be understood. It is this practical pliability which renders English, despite its difficulties and irregularities, so eminently a language of business and of progress.

WHERE IS THE WEST?—On Friday last, at 4½ P. M., Samuel Lawrence, Esq., was in Boston, having left Lasalle, Illinois, at 3 o'clock, Wednesday, P. M., preceding. He came by way of Chicago, looked in upon Cleveland, called at Buffalo, was sped over the plain by the "lightning express" train to Albany, and whisked over the Western and Worcester railroads to Boston! Once, and within the memory of the middle aged man of this day, Buffalo was considered quite "out west." Chicago, but yesterday, was "far-off land". Now, a merchant shakes hands and bids good-bye to his customers 180 miles west of that, and in two days and one hour and a half greets his friends in Boston. It is in fact only eleven hundred and fifty miles. [Boston Journal.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 54 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH-BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two "	5 00 "
For any three "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews,	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO., 79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y]

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to add pupils committed to its care in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition..... $200 00
Music on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French Language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PROVIDENCE, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs A J Wright & Co., Messrs J T. Donald & Co., Messrs Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs I D Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jall 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fa 6

JOHN DELMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
☞ No. 60 Magazine street, corner of Natches, New Orleans, La. jy1 1y

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr K would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19 1853, 6mo.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & CO.,
No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,
New Orleans.

Thesubscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety; Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish; Indin Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.

mh9 '52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand; and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable cams attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled them to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest additive strength and most melodious tones; which improvements together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establish

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 25. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 23, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 129.

[From the London Times.]

THE WORLD IS FULL OF BEAUTY.

There is a voice within me,
And 'tis so sweet a voice,
That its soft lispings win me,
Till I esire sturt to mine eyes:
Deep from my soul it springeth,
Like hidden melody:
And ever more it singeth
This song of songs to me:
The world is full of beauty,
As other worlds above,
And if we did our duty,
It might be full of love.

Faith and loving kindness
Passed coin 'twixt heart and heart,
And Bigotry's dark bliadness
And Malice would depart.
Men were more forgiving,
Were kind words oftener spoken,
Instead of scorn so grieving,
There would be few hearts broken.
Then Plenty round is smiling,
Why wakes this cry for bread?
Why are crushed millions soiling,
Gaunt—clothed in rags—unfed?
The sunny hills and valleys
Bloch ripe with fruit and grain,
But the lordling of the palace
Still robs his fellow-men.
O God! what hosts are trampled
Amidst this press for gold,
What noble hearts are sapped of life,
What spirits lose their hold!
And yet upon this God-blessed earth
There's room for every one;
Sugarner's food still ripens,
To waste—rot in the sun;
For this world is full of beauty,
As other worlds above,
And if we did our duty,
It might be full of love!

Let the law of bloodshed perish,
Wars, gore, and glory, splendor—
And men will learn to cherish
Feelings more kind and tender.
Were we true to each other,
We'd vanquish Hate and Crime,
And clasp the hand of brother,
In any land or clime;
If gold were not an idol,
Were mind and merit worth,
Oh! there would be a bridal
Betwixt high heaven and earth!
Were truth an uttered language,
Angels might talk with men,
And God-illumined earth should see
The golden-age again;
For the leaf-tongues of the forest—
The flower-lips of the sod—
The birds that hymn their raptures
Into the ear of God—
And the sweet wind that bringeth
The Music of the Sea,
Have each a voice that singeth
This song of songs to me:
This world is full of beauty,
As other worlds above,
And if we did our duty,
It might be full of love.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

REMOVE NOT THE OLD LANDMARKS.

Mr. Editor:—The present age is one of speculative, as well as real refinement. Every thing (even our religious experience,) seems to be undergoing a process of polishing, which gives it more of an artificial than real appearance. We fear that it is in a measure destroying the energy and usefulness of the Church. A desire to conform to the world, a spirit of worldly pleasing, opposes the old and well tried usages, the refinement of the age. Customs, which the experience of years has proved to be efficient in spreading holiness throughout the land, must at once be modified to suit the notions of the world. There is a dignity belonging to the Church and its service, that is distinct from the conventionalities of a false though highly polished state of society—a dignity peculiarly its own.

This worldly conformity has introduced formality—the bane of true piety and religious success—into the Church. Something like the lament of a professedly Christian mother, that her daughters would not learn to kneel gracefully. It has caused an opposition to revivals, deploring the din and confusion (for so they reproachfully term the cries of penitence and shouts of joy,) which attend them, as the effect of sympathy, or animal excitement. The birth throes of Methodism was a revival. God by his spirit stirred up the hearts of the Wesleys to seek for and spread scriptural holiness throughout the land. Under their ministry some of the most astonishing things occurred, which, though it surprised them, yet they never ventured to check. Nor could they, for these things had Scripture and reason for their support. If the consequences of sin be as fearful as the Scriptures represent it; if conviction and conversion of sin be true experience; then is there no impropriety in strong cries for mercy, or praises when mercy is received. The exercises of devotion have a strong tendency to excite the mind; so, when the foundation of the second temple was laid, the noise of the shout of joy could not be distinguished from the noise of the weeping of the people. On the day of pentecost, too, the excitement was so great that the charge of drunkenness was preferred. The speaking with tongues is not an effect of drunkenness; but confusion is.

These truly apostolic men, Asbury and Coke and Bredree, with their coadjutors—"men that turn the world upside down" by their preaching—spread this revival, with all its confusion, over this country; and by their successors in spirit it is maintained to this day. Revivals are fixed facts, and necessary ones, in the Church. Without them, no society could maintain its piety or its influence; it does not even its existence. In our periodicals there are regular "REVIVAL DEPARTMENTS," where the pious rejoice to see the accounts of Zion's prosperity. In what spirit must he be baptized who is afraid or ashamed of revivals?

But the Methodist Church has not the monopoly of revivals. God graciously pours out his spirit upon the Churches, and a gracious harvest succeeds in faithful cultivation.

Objections are sometimes raised to the means by which these revivals are carried on. So your excellent correspondent, "Woodsman," in one of his late communications, writes: "As a mere 'looker on in Vienna,' I studied this revival subject with interest, though I confess to my doubts of the propriety or scriptural warrant of some part of the proceedings." The "part" objected to seems to be a want of "more prayer" and "instruction," and too much "excitement-making;" also a certain "kind of hymnology and ndeaptandnm songs, which pervaded the meeting."

This reminds me of an anecdote of Mr. Dawson, as related by Caughey. An individual complained that "he lost all the good of the sermon by the noisy prayer meeting that succeeded." "I went into the gallery, and leaning over the front, saw the whole of it, and lost all the good of the sermon." "That is easy neeounted for," replied Mr. D, "you mounted to the top of the house, and on looking down the chimney, got your eyes full of smoke. You should have united with the people of God in the prayer meeting, if you desired to retain or obtain good." If Bro. "Woodsman" had gone up to the altar, he would doubtless have heard much earnest prayer and good instruction, which did not appear to a "mere looker on in Vienna."

The philosophy of revivals is not to be adduced by a speculative reasoning. The mode must be inductive; facts must be the basis of our opinions; and the past history of the Church furnish us with material upon which to build. Let us study this revival subject by the facts presented by "Woodsman." "The services were opened by announcing that thirty-three had been converted during the week past." It is fair to presume that the same means were used "during the week past" as at the time spoken of. At the invitation, "the altar was soon crowded with mourners"—a good sign of continued success. During the services, there were "interludes of manifested joy and sorrow." The mourner was comforted—their "sorrow was turned to joy." Here is success. If God sanctified the means to the conversion of souls, shall man doubt their propriety or "scriptural warrant!" What is a "scriptural warrant?" Is it a plain text of Scripture? If this be so, many things we do are without scriptural warrant. We think that if the means be not contrary to Scripture, or not sinful, and if they are blessed to the salvation of souls, they are proper and scriptural. But the more intelligent part of the community object to so much excitement. Well, suppose they do. Will they not object to any means by which souls are saved? We think so, "because the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God; neither, indeed, can it be;" and any thing that would bring souls to God, would be also objectionable. But the refined and intellgent of the Church "doubt their propriety and scriptural warrant." Not all. Intelligent Christians, both ministers and laymen, love to engage in a revival. If it be not so, then have we very little intelligence among us.

Revivals of this existing character are found in our colleges, and the educated faculty engage in them; in all our Churches we find them. We will not undertake a defence of those "adcaptandum songs," but will observe that, as a revival increases in interest, Hunter's "Select Melodies," and Pitt's "Zion's Harp," have always taken precedence of "the Songs of Zion," or the regular hymn-book. I have been in many revivals, and seen a thousand souls converted, but have yet to see one prove successful without these songs. As for their being "banished from the sacred precincts of our altars," and the Church collection substituted, I never expect, nor do I desire, to see it. When printed prayers and written sermons are substituted for the heartfelt supplication and extemporaneous teachings of our Church, then this thing might come to pass.

Meanwhile, Mr. Editor, would it not be as well for our periodical writers to cease insulting the memory of our fathers, and the prejudices of a large number of our most pious members, by their invectives against what affords consolation to many hearts. If our poetry is not exactly measured into feet, and our music governed by scientific principles, they nevertheless breathe a pure devotion, express glorious hope, and is not, we believe, unscriptural. God save the Church from formality.

GREENWOOD.

Caddo Parish, July, 1853.

"ALL FOR THE BEST."—Dr. Johnson used to say that the habit of looking at the best side of every event is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "for every bad there might be a worse, and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful that it was not his neck!" When Fenelon's library was on fire, "God be praised," he exclaimed, "that is not the dwelling of some poor man!" This is the true spirit of submission—one of the most beautiful traits that can possess the human heart. Resolve to see this world on its sunny side, and you have almost half won the battle of life at the outset.

THE GOLD HARVEST.—The total coinage of gold at the United States Mint, in 1852, was $52,240,000. The quantity of gold dust sent from California during the same time is calculated at about $12,000,000, deducting $240,000 for gold produced in Carolina and Georgia, the production of California would be $64,000,000. Supposing that Liberia and Australia yield $44,000,000—which is a moderate calculation—it would make the annual yield of gold from these three countries, independent of others, about 108,000,000.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

EVERY DAY LIFE.

Although the Talmud, or rather the Shulchan Orach, tells the pious Jew to rise from his bed with the right foot foremost, and then proceeds to give directions as to which stocking and boot is to have precedence, these "weighty matters of the law" are now but little attended to; but in his ablutions he is still as strict and precise as were the Pharisees (Matt. xv.: 2) when they said, "Why do the disciples transgress the traditions of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread;" or the people at Cana, who had "six water-pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews;"—John ii.: 6. This manner is now somewhat different; for it appears that at Cana they had two sets of three vessels each—unclean, clean, and holy, whereas the Jews of the Continent now ordinarily have something like our patent water-cooler, with a basin underneath, and here they have their hands and face three times. This is also done before every meal. While they are drying their hands, they repeat, "Blessed art thou, O Lord, our God, King of the universe, who hast sanctified us by the commandments, and hast bidden us to wash our hands." Then follows another prayer. No prayer must be offered before these ablutions, as it would be criminal to pronounce the name of God in an "unclean" state.

The females are absolved from any further prayers, but the men proceed to the synagogue—in the summer, at five; in the winter, about seven o'clock. To form a quorum—if I may be allowed to use modern phraseology—there must be at least ten males above the age of thirteen; otherwise there can be no public service. It is more than probable that Christ had reference to this custom, when he promised "Wheresoever two or three are gathered together," etc. The same prayers are delivered in public as in private, with a few trifling exceptions.

The principal feature in these morning orisons is the wearing of phylacteries. Of all the customs alluded to in the New Testament, this has perhaps undergone the least change; Christ's reproach to the Pharisees is just as applicable to the ostentatiously pious of this day: "They make broad their phylacteries"—Matt. xxii.: 5. The more modest, who do not pretend to such great sanctity, prefer them very small. The Jews call them Tephelin, which may be rendered aids or adjuncts of prayer. Deut. vi.: 8, "And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes"—is quoted in their support. They consist of a piece of parchment containing the following four paragraphs from the Pentateuch, bearing on this subject: Deut. vi.: 4-9; xi.: 13-21; Ex. xiii.: 1-10, 11-16. This writing is enclosed in a leather case, fastened to a long leather thong, which is wound seven times round the left arm, (next the skin, and near the heart,) then round the hand and middle finger. There is also another case, containing the same four passages of Scripture, but in separate compartments, likewise attached to leather strings, and surrounding the head like a bandlet. The Talmud contains the most minute directions to be observed in their preparation. They are worn at morning prayers every day in the year, Sabbath and Festivals excepted.

There is one part of the Jew's wearing apparel which I must not pass by here—the Arba Canphoth, or "four corners." It consists of two square pieces of cloth, attached to two bandages or bracce; one of these pieces falling on the chest, the other over the back. At each of the four corners are woollen threads, or "Fringes," tied in mysterious knots, according to prescription. Whenever they repeat Numb. xv.: 38—a part of the daily liturgy—they kiss these fringes, as that is the text authorizing them. All males, even small children, wear this Arba Canphoth, and must not go four yards without it. Your readers have doubtless, ere this, identified it with the Roman Catholic Scapulae, which it exactly resembles. These fringes are also attached to the four corners of a veil worn at public service by all males above thirteen, and without which they cannot be admitted to the reading of the law. This is called the Talith.

After having been at the synagogue about an hour, he returns home and takes his breakfast, which he can never do before prayers. Now he may pursue his usual vocation, until an hour or two before sunset, when the Mincha prayer (vespers) must be offered up, at the synagoge, if convenient; but should he be on the road, unable to reach any house before sunset, he will stop there, direct his face towards the east, and fervently repeat the Shemoneh Esrah, (or eighteen benedictions,) and then proceed on his way. After dark, or sometimes immediately after the Minchah, the Maarib, or evening prayers, are read. No conscientious Jew will ever omit his morning, vesper, and evening prayers, though he may hurry over them without understanding a word, which in fact is the case with ninety-nine hundredths of them, partly because they have repeated them so often, and no longer attach any meaning to the familiar sounds; and partly, also, because of their being in Hebrew—a language but imperfectly understood by the large mass of them.

While I am on the subject of prayers, I may as well state that the pious Jew scarcely does any thing whatsoever without offering thanks for, or praying for protection against it. Before drinking water, he will silently bless God, "through whose word all things are created;" for the different kinds of fruit he has another blessing; for wine, rain, rainbow, lightning, thunder, hail, war, or an eclipse of the sun, or seeing a prince or potentate, or viewing the beauties of nature, and so on, ad infinitum. These benedictions are found in their more comprehensive prayer books. The modern Pharisees daily say a hundred of these "occasional Blessings," as an act of supererogation. To read the Book of Psalms through in consecutive order, once a week, or even once a month, is also considered as highly meritorious. The other books of the Old Testament do not rank so highly, and are only read [in public] on stated occasions.

The Mezuzah (door-post) has been referred to in a former article. This is a small square piece of parchment, containing Deut. vi.: 4-9, enclosed in a tin case, which is nailed on the door-post of every room in a Jewish house. The pious kiss it reverently on entering or leaving a room. On consulting the text alluded to, your readers will find the authority for the Mezuzah.

The orthodox Jew does not shave; for the rabbinical interpretation of Lev. xix.: 27 inhibits the use of the razor, and in its stead, more majorum, they use the scissors. In every well regulated community there is a professional artist to perform this operation, known in Germany under the sobriquet of Zwicker. On a Friday afternoon he goes from house to house in the performance of his barberous duties. In Poland, Gallicia, and Palestine there are still many genuine Nazarites, though, for several years past, the progress-loving Nicholas, Czar of all the Russias, has been carrying on a fierce war against their long ringlets, as well as at the inordinate length of the Shubatz—a long gown worn by the Polish and oriental Pharisees.

But where are the ladies all this while? Why, you have not mentioned them once in this long medley about all sorts of matters! Well, madam, in my next you shall have an entire chapter devoted exclusively to your Jewish sisters: then, as Sterne would say, a chapter on births, and a chapter on deaths; a chapter on feast-days, and a chapter on fasts; a chapter on marriages, and a chapter on—what not all!

Meanwhile, good evening to you.

Louisiana. JOSEPHUS.

[From the Richmond Christian Advocate.]

METHODISM IN LIBERIA.

At the General Conference of the M. E. Church, in 1852, the position and relations of the Liberia Mission Conference was a subject of anxious thought. The question of putting them in a position of independence of American Methodism, and leaving them free to act for themselves in spirituals, as the Republic does in temporals, was discussed. If we remember rightly, for we speak from memory, it was proposed to elect a Bishop for Liberia. But the proposition was encumbered with difficulties. If they elected a white man, he might not be willing to reside in Africa, and if he did, his residence there would not comport with the doctrine of an itinerant general superintendency; and if he was a Bishop of the M. E. Church, he must exercise Episcopal functions in America as in Africa. The action of 1844, in the case of Bishop Andrew, was an unfortunate precedent in the way of such action. On the other hand, if they elected a colored man, he would be a Bishop here, as well as there, and the jurisdiction of a colored Bishop over their white consciences was a thing not to be thought of for a moment. As a compromise between these conflicting interests, it was resolved to extend to them, as to other conferences, the benefits of the home Episcopacy, making it to itinerate to Liberia. In accordance with this plan, Bishop Scott was put down in the list of Episcopal visitations of the current year, for Liberia. He has fulfilled his mission and returned safe; and on the main interests involved in the questions gives utterance to his opinions in the words below, as we find them in Zion's Herald:

"1. Is the question of a separate and independent M. E. Church entertained, to any considerable extent, among our brethren in Liberia? I think it is. Not that our brethren there have any objection to the doctrines or disciplinary regulations of the M. E. Church in the States, but simply because, being independent in regard to civil government, they think it might subserve their interests in Liberia to be independent in regard to Church organization also. And could they be fully satisfied that our Missionary Society would not withhold its aid, and that our General Conference would consent to the consecration by our Bishops of a man whom they might elect to the office of Bishop, my opinion is, they would form a separate and independent organization by the time of our next General Conference.

"I ventured to assure the brethren that it was my opinion that our Missionary Board would not withhold their aid so long as they were satisfied that that aid was needed, and faithfully and properly applied; and that our General Conference would consent to the consecration by our Bishops of a man of their own choice to the office of Superintendent or Bishop, provided there should be nothing in their church organization justly objectionable to that body.

"2. It is the general, and as far as I could learn, the almost universal opinion of our brethren in Liberia, both among the preachers and the people, that the superintendent of our missions there ought to be taken from among their own preachers. And they ask, why this may not be safe and proper, when the civil government is manned in all its departments with colored men? My own opinion is, in the hands of white men we never shall have a uniform, steady, and efficient superintendency."

No man is a gentleman who, without provocation, would treat with incivility the humblest of his species. It is a vulgarity for which no accomplishment or dress can ever atone. Show me the man who desires to make every one happy around him, and whose greatest solicitude is never to give just cause of offence to any one, and I will show you a gentleman by nature and practice, although he may never have worn a suit of broadcloth, or ever have heard of a lexicon.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

A PASTORAL TALK.

Mr. Editor.—Although I have frequently made part of the following talk in substance, to the people of my care, I fear it does not excite in them a response either present or prospective, in heart and life, in faith and works, in prayer and money, which corresponds with its importance. And as there is frequently more heed given to printed than spoken matter, with the hope that it may be prayerfully considered, I ask for it an insertion in the Advocate.

Dear Brethren: In view of my responsibility to the Lord of the vineyard, and emboldened by the love you have for me so frequently manifested, allow me tenderly and in all Christian love to invite your attention to some of the duties which I conceive immediately and imperatively press themselves upon you. Times of revival are coming. Already the waters are being troubled. The armies of the living God are in the field. Some fierce conflicts have been had. Some glorious, most glorious, victorious have been achieved. Dayton has sent by Heaven's telegraph the news on high, that scores are born to God, and that Israel has prevailed. Uniontown shouts back the response—just such a response as we might reasonably expect. They have conquered, and are still conquering. The heaven so faithfully wrought in must necessarily continue to work; nor will its effects cease until the whole is leavened. Marion, too, joins the revival chorus, and reports to Heaven 90 born to God. And now, my dear brethren, what is your duty in the premises? Signs there are, most certainly, in our congregations—specks of war; or what mean the swimming eye and trembling frame of the sinner? And occasionally methinks I see the old standbys of the Church drawing themselves up to their full height, standing forth in their proper place, lifting up their faith's eye with an unblanching firmness, as though they were trying their strength and power.

A word, brethren, as to your duty. What is your state of grace? Are you in favor, in full favor, with God? Does grace reign in your hearts? Is your heart fixed? Are you at peace with each other? Is there no jarring? no bitterness? Does brotherly love continue? Are you prepared, with minds and hearts enlightened and warmed, by praying and reading the word of God and other religious works, to enter heartily into the plans adopted to promote the glory of God and the interests of the Church? the monetary concerns of the Church, conference, and missionary contributions? (To the call for Sabbath School subscriptions you have properly responded.)

Brethren, don't leave these to accident. Get your consent to meet promptly the amount assessed to the different societies for conference collections. And then the missionary claims. Have you heretofore given enough for this religion-diffusing object? My brethren, have you given according to what you have? How much has God blessed you?

Thus, brethren, I have freely spoken to you of some of your duties. I cannot hopefully look for such a revival as we ought to expect, unless we do all our duty. But having done and purposed by grace to do all, I do most confidently expect, for Jesus's sake, such a revival as the circuit has never before witnessed. Your children, neighbors, and even sinners, look for a revival among you. May we have it? Will you, brethren?

Alabama. PASTOR.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

EASTERN TEXAS, July 2, 1853.

Mr. Editor:—It is something singular that all persons who are at all satisfied with their portion of country, claim for it a superiority above all other portions. This will of course apply to your correspondent, who thinks that a few reflections upon this section of Texas would not be objectionable to your readers.

The progress of events is slow but onward, and for the better. Sunday Schools and Churches are holding their own, and making some aggressive movements. Pure and scriptural religion is very prevalent, while sentimental and imaginative Christianity is under par. Yet we have evils to mourn over here, as well as elsewhere. Our laboring and faithful ministers are but poorly provided for, which makes the respect and courtesy always paid to them appear cold and formal. Still they remain buoyant, with purposes firmly fixed, pressing onward, with the sanguine hope that they will soon receive their reward where they will be beyond the necessity of the precarious, uncertain compensation in this practically money-loving, time-serving generation.

There is another evil here which deserves the especial attention of those in authority. Our class meetings are but poorly attended, and the discipline has not, to our knowledge, been brought to bear upon a single member for this neglect. Perhaps the preachers are as much to blame in this matter as any one else. I know of an instance where a local preacher has engaged to preach every Sabbath, not occupied by the circuit rider, at a Church where the society consists of a hundred members, thereby excluding any thing like a class meeting. We know not how far this evil extends; but if it is as prevalent throughout the connection generally as it is here, I will agree with our correspondent in his "small talk," that the stringent rules in the discipline enforcing the attendance upon class meetings should be abolished.*

We believe that, besides the Christian religion, there is no brighter prospect for Texas than the ascendancy of the star of Temperance. The Sons of Temperance once occupied a prominent position in this country. The Order has, however, become nearly extinct. But scattered throughout almost every community, there are many of these noble champions of a noble cause, who constitute the bone and sinew of society. The Temple of Honor is gaining ground in this State, and is calculated to produce an immense amount of good, and I am confident that it will have the prayers of every true lover of his country for its success. We have begun organizing the Social Degree, in connection with the Temple, which is quite fascinating to the younger members of the Order, and is acting very detrimental to the interests of the rum-seller.

W. F. W.

* This is a singular objection. [Ed.

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

MARRIAGE FEES—NEW PLAN OF CHEAP LIVING.

Mr. Editor:—In these days days when the cost of living, according to the most approved and respectable style, requires no small fortune, any plan which would materially lessen the expenditures without in the least diminishing the comforts and luxuries of living, would certainly meet with peculiar favor from the public. He who will devise and give publicity to such a plan, will be hailed as a benefactor of his race. All men desire ample means, if not ample fortunes; but all men do not have either to begin upon, nor are they likely to obtain either in after life, without some cheapened plan of living.

Now, we shall not attempt, in the plan which we are about to propose, to enumerate all the minutiæ of cheap living; but simply to give a man the right start: and who does not know that a good start is half the battle?

Just let a man begin at the proper place and the proper time, and the end may be secured. No time perhaps can be more proper than the time of his marriage, and the place is indicated by the first two words of our caption—marriage fees. A wrong start here might cripple, if it does not ruin, a man for life. And there is imminent danger here. The joy and exultation which a man feels when he finds himself possessed of the object of his love and long and anxious solicitude, are likely to melt away all the penuriousness of his nature, and to cause an abundant and, may be even, dangerous flow of generous affections; and under the influence of these affections and sentiments, a man will display an unguarded and unwonted liberality. This is perhaps verified, more frequently than any other way, in the presents and fees which are given to the officiating minister, or other functionary who has had the honor of performing the ceremony. Why, sir, we have known, before the introduction of the new plan, considerable sums of money thus lost entirely to the newly-married. Now, the best way to manage this matter is the following: First, make up your mind beforehand; then, lest your feelings should betray you into so great an indiscretion, leave all your money at home; and finally be sure to employ a minister, for they never charge any thing. All other functionaries of the kind have legal recourse, and would probably resort to it in case of necessity.

Besides, these ministers, particularly Methodist preachers, are already living upon large salaries, some of them even getting two or three hundred dollars! and are therefore to be regarded as a kind of public property. Now, sir, if a man wishes to make the object of his love happy, to rear a family in decency and splendor, and make a little useful that lazy and almost superfluous class of men—the preachers—just let him adopt the above plan.

I cannot claim the honor of having originated this new plan of cheap living; I found it in the country, to some extent, when I came here, and it has been patronized by myself and others in certain cases. A minister whom I know was called upon, not long since, to marry a gentleman of property. The preacher is poor, has a heavy family to take care of; (some of which are helpless orphans) he was busy, the distance was considerable, and the weather excessively hot. But busy as he was, and scorching hot as was the sun, he must attend to this urgent call. The gentleman is married, supper is over—it was dinner, I believe—and the poor preacher starts for home. But neither the necessities of the minister, his obliging kindness in promptly attending the call, his sufferings in so doing, nor yet the felicity of the nuptial hour, shakes the admirable firmness of our new convert to the above plan of cheap living. No, sir, when he finds his resolution failing him, he fortifies himself by reviewing the whole ground, and comes off victor over the power of a long established but mischievous custom. Such is one instance of the practical operation of our new system.

Hoping to have conferred a great favor upon the public, to have excited their interest in our new plan, and that we shall receive the award of honor to which we think ourselves justly entitled, we remain, yours truly,

ALABAMA PREACHER.

July, 1853.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

A STRANGE THING.

Mr. Editor:—Perhaps you may remember an article which was published in your paper about the 20th of April, headed "A little too much charity." Said article was obviously intended as a plain reproof of the Methodists of a certain village. Moreover, it is equally plain that the allusion in that article to a certain Episcopal preacher, was only incidental, and was made to give greater point and force to the reproof given by the writer to his Methodist brethren.

Again, the writer of that communication, if I remember aright, gives us no intimation of where his "village of charity" is located; and from the article itself, one could hardly guess whether the "village of charity" was in Texas, or Georgia, or Alabama. Yet there is a certain village in Alabama, which some suppose to be the one alluded to; and strange as it may appear, the Episcopalians in that village and the vicinity are much more annoyed by that article than the Methodists themselves.

Well, is it not singular that they should so readily conclude that the writer had reference to their quiet village. Surely, the statements made by him must have been peculiarly applicable to them. From their complaints about that article, and another over the signature of "Sigma," one might infer that their own preacher had been engaged in the business of proselyting. If not, it is very strange that Episcopalians should be so much annoyed by a reproof given to their Methodist brethren, especially as they are not wont to sympathize with us in our troubles.

But, sir, that which is the strangest of all strange things is, that Episcopalians in Alabama should consider their Church and their ministry slandered, when it is said that they are skilled in proselyting. Really, I had thought that their love of proselyting was known and read of all men; nay, I had believed that they themselves were fully persuaded that God had specially called them to the work of saving men from the awful sin of schism, by proselyting them from "the sects."

For one, I must confess that I had thought the Bishop of Alabama, and his clergy, were more actively engaged in proselyting from the sects to "the Church," than they were in calling sinners to repentance. Indeed, I think this impression is quite prevalent, and there is at least one good reason for the prevalence of this opinion, and that is this, wherever the Bishop or any of his clergy go, you may easily track them by the proselyting documents that are left behind. But I do not think it would be easy to teach them, by those books and pamphlets, which are suitable for calling sinners to repentance. My own observation leads me to the conclusion that these two classes of documents are in the proportion of—say 6 to 1—in favor of the former.

But here I must do them the justice to say, I have seldom, if ever, found any of their proselyting hooks in the dwellings of the poor. Nor have I found any thing else from them among those people. There are but few marks of their visitations among this class.

But from the complaints of persecution and misrepresentations which are heard in Alabama, it appears we were all mistaken. It is slander upon "the Church" and her ministry to suppose any of them capable of the vile sin of proselyting. True, they think the Temperance Society is as much of a Church as the Presbyterian Society, or the Methodist Society, but they would not proselyte from either. No, no. They have no desire to incur the terrible malediction which is found in Matt. 23-15.

A LOVER OF PEACE.

July 4, 1853.

"I AM A LOST MAN."

The newspapers inform us that these were the last words of Bugeaud, Marshal of France, and Duke of Isly. When he uttered them, he was just closing a brilliant, many would say, a useful life. He had led vast armies to battle. He had governed extensive States. He had been conspicuous in the councils of nations. The President of France made anxious visits to his death-chamber. The stern Cavaignac wept as he looked upon the dissolving frame of his old comrade; and the Convention was profoundly affected when the news of his death was announced. With all this accumulation of honor, he was, by his own confession, "a lost man." How mournful the contrast between the glory of his life and the deep gloom of its close!

From the same source we learn that Bugeaud had a pious mother. In the history of his eventful life, this seems to have been the only quarter in which good influence was exerted upon his heart. His mother's voice alone warned him of his danger, and spoke to him of eternity; all other influences led him astray. In the camp he heard of God only in blasphemy. In civil life he saw nothing but a desperate struggle for earthly place and power. In the saloons of Paris he heard wit mocking, and philosophy denouncing the religion of youth. The quiet voice that had warned him, and prayed with him, was, alas for him! unheeded and lost in the midst of these babbling voices of the world.

In the hour of death, however, these voices die away and are forgotten. The acclamations of a world could not have made the failing pulse of Bugeaud beat faster. Other tones were in his ears; for the accents we will not listen to when they admonish us, we are often forced to listen to when they accuse. The dying moments are often the time of resurrection for abused privileges and neglected gifts. They "stalk forth from the burial-place of memory," to foreshadow our doom, and convince us of its undeniable justice.

Thus we explain that fearful expression that fell from the dying warrior. He heeded a voice which he had long neglected and forgotten. Across the waste of years, through the storm of battle, it comes clear and distinct upon his failing ear. It asks for the fruit of early counsel; it seeks for the result of pious care and zeal. One comprehensive glance over his life satisfies the man that he has wasted it. His own conscience condemns him. In this he knows that he but anticipates the sentence of God, and he sinks into death, "a lost man."

The lesson of this sad incident is easily read. It is only another instance of the ease with which carelessness can turn our best blessings into curses. A mother's love and a mother's pious care are inestimable gifts of God's mercy. Indifference and impenitence can make them causes of our deeper damnation, and so change the soft voice that sung our infancy to sleep, that it will haunt our dying pillow with accusations that we can neither gainsay nor resist. [Rev. M. B. Grist.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, July 23.

REMOVAL.—The office of the Christian Advocate has been removed from 56 Gravier street to 36 Camp street—up stairs. Our friends who do us the pleasure of a call, either for sociality or business—to see us or to settle accounts—will find themselves in a comfortable sanctum: light, airy, and with room enough. Call and see us.

CURRENCY.—To those friends who inquire, "Shall I send you our current bills in payment for subscriptions, or wait till a New Orleans bill can be procured?" we answer, that while the latter would be preferable, yet we receive the bills of any specie paying Bank in their States respectively.

HEALTH.—The yellow fever, as the hospital and interment reports show, is on the increase in the city. The fresh immigration suffers mostly. The Howard Society, a noble fraternity of citizen gentlemen for giving attention to the destitute sick, is fully organized and doing duty. The City Council, on last Tuesday evening, put at their disposition $1000 from the Treasury.

BOOK STORE.—Carver & McGinnis have removed their excellent book store to 36 Camp street—a convenient, beautiful and business location. The experience and popularity of the two members of this firm, united in the 36 Camp street establishment, give an augury of large success, and well deserved, too. Mr. Carver is of the late Mobile firm—Carver & Ryland—and Mr. McGinnis is well known in this city, in this line of things.

CONFERENCE RESOLUTION.—The receipts for publishing Sunday School books, as they appear in the Visitor, show that the members of the Louisiana Conference are not, all, forgetful of the pointed and special resolution passed at the last session. We beg leave to stir up the minds of those concerned, by way of remembering an important interest. This is the resolution:

Resolved, That in view of the necessities of our Sunday School Library, we will make an effort to raise, as soon as practicable, five hundred dollars to assist in stereotyping and bringing out a hundred or more new works, now understood to be in readiness for the press.

METHODIST QUARTERLY, SOUTH, (July.)—The Editor's Review Table is even more than usually rich. Among the contributors to this number we notice the ever active pen of Rev. R. Abbey (Miss.) on the penalty of Church excommunication, for non-attendance on class meetings. He and "Small Talk," of the Advocate, ought to have a talk, face to face. We would like to have the pleasure of introducing them.

The editor gives an article on "Ecclesiastical Authority," in his own lucid and graceful style.

METHODIST QUARTERLY.—This (for July) should have been noticed before. The N. Y. Mirror speaks its opinion in this wise:

"It is remarkable that the Methodist denomination should be the one to present to the public the most profoundly philosophical of all the religious quarterlies. The editor, Dr. McClintock, has undoubtedly done more towards giving it this high character, than is usually done for a magazine by its editor."

CHEAP LITERATURE IN GREAT BRITAIN.—The Family Herland, chiefly composed of selections from American periodicals and newspapers, at two cents a copy, has a circulation of 300,000 a week. The London Journal, at the same price, has a circulation of 280,000 a week. Reynolds's Miscellany, also a two cent affair, sells nearly 100,000 weekly, and Dickens's "Household Words," (in which he rarely writes, but has contributors who copy his style,) has a circulation of about 50,000 a week, at four cents a number.

"GO THOU AND DO LIKEWISE."

MR. EDITOR:—I have just received through the Post-office the following anonymous note, with the money enclosed. How many there are among our people who could do the same, and never miss the money. Will not some of them, on seeing this, forward their subscriptions?

July 11. J. HAMILTON.

"Enclosed find $20—one-half to be applied to the education of young ministers, and the other to the ministers' sons."

FRANKLINTON, La., July 12, '53.

MR. EDITOR:—In the Weekly Picayune of the 4th instant, I saw an extract from the Marshall Republican, Texas, stating that cotton was in bloom on the plantation of Dr. G. Cole, on the 12th of June. I think the Piny Woods of Louisiana can beat that, as on Mr. G. Ellis's plantation, of this place, cotton was in full bloom on the 9th of June, three days earlier. Our crops of cotton and corn, generally, throughout the parish are in a most flourishing condition, and promise an abundant harvest. ROBT. BARRINGTON.

The Nevada Journal says that at the anniversary of the Nevada County Bible Society, on Sunday evening, May 29th, two hundred dollars were raised for the benefit of the Society. Also, that Bishop Soule, of the M. E. Church, South, preached to a large audience at that place, on the same day.

YOU CAN DO YOUR DUTY.

"Be not weary in well-doing," is an exhortation of no common significance and necessity; the best efforts seem at times to be productive of so little good that we are oft tempted to be discouraged.

How often it may be that the minister of Christ seems to labor in vain. He reads, writes, meditates and prays. He presents the truth of God, with as much clearness and force as his gifts allow, and endeavors to trust God for his blessing; but to mortal eye the seed falls "by the way-side and on stony ground."

Let us, then, in view of these discouragements, contemplate a passage in the moral and psychological history of a minister of Christ. The morning breaks brightly—it's the morning of the holy Sabbath. The church-going bell rings out its solemn tones, and calls the worshipers to the house of prayer. The preacher of Christ listens with attention and feels that it calls him again to his holy work. But it wakes up in his mind a train of most important reflections. And it may be he thus soliloquizes to himself: What can I do? Can I preach more acceptably than for many Sabbaths past? No. Are the people more susceptable and likely to become pious? No. Perhaps less so; they are nearer death and daily growing harder and more worldly-minded. Have I any new terms to offer? any new or stronger motives to present? No. Is it probable, then, that your sermon, to-day, will lead any sinner to Christ? It does not so appear. Why preach at all, then? why weary and wear yourself with study and toil? why not pursue some more pleasing and hopeful path to usefulness and success? Such, perchance, is the train of thought that passes in review in the pastor's mind, and by possibility, "almost persuaded" him to turn away from his holy trust. But the lessons of God's truth furnish him an answer and a deliverance from his dilemma.

"Offer the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in the Lord." Do you ask, brother minister, what, in the midst of discouragements, and a seemingly hopeless future, you can do? You can do your duty. Yes, and that is all that a righteous God requires—all that a good conscience can demand.

Do your duty, and you do enough—angels could do no more. Leave the result of your faithful toils with God, "for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts; for as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth, it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent." You have been called of God, and anointed by the Holy Ghost for the holy work; see that you do it "with all thy might," and trust the result to God. It is his cause and far more dear to his honor and to his purposes than it can be to you. We are not to be hindered or stopped by unpropitious indications. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand, for thou knowest whether shall prosper either, this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

"Be ye patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain." And remember 'tis written, "they that sow in tears shall reap in joy." J. B. W.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

"He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." This is the witness, the evidence, and the only satisfactory evidence for the millions that Christianity is true and of God. Theologians classify the several forms of Christian evidence under the designations of external, internal, and collateral evidence.

The external evidence arises from miracles performed, and prophecies fulfilled by the agents claiming to have a revelation from God. Now, to ascertain whether such agents claiming to have revelation from God, whether they wrought miracles, or whether they uttered prophecies, and whether those prophecies have been fulfilled, requires an acquaintance with books and a knowledge of history quite beyond what the masses have yet attained, even in the most favored and advanced state of civilization.

The internal evidence is suffered to arise upon a consideration of the contents of the Bible—its just and exalted delineations of God and their consonance with the teachings of nature. The excellence of the moral lessons and their general tendency to promote the highest good of man and their vast superiority over the teachings of the wisest and purest sages. But this requires a mental discipline, a closeness of observation and a maturity of mind far in advance of the millions under the highest types of civilization.

The collateral evidence is gathered from cotemporary history, the agreement of the Bible with the authentic history and chronology of past nations and ages. Its agreement with the geography and natural productions of the several countries with which it is or claims to be conversant.

Every one must see, how much study, how much examination and careful comparison there must be before satisfactory conclusions. Besides all this, the infidel has subtle objections and difficulties, drawn from what he claims to be inaccurate statements in the Bible in relation to natural history—chronology, and even morality. How is the unlearned man to meet all these difficulties, and have in his own mind, a personal and a satisfactory conviction of the truth of our holy religion?

If all this study and learning (which are really impossible to the toiling millions) is necessary to attain satisfaction upon this most momentous question, then we give it as our conviction, that Christianity is radically defective in its primary elements. It must have a greater adaptability to the mental and moral wants of man, or it must be voted sadly defective. But God be thanked it is perfect in all its parts, wanting nothing; it proposes to give an internal test in the minds of all who will seek for it, in the exercise of believing prayer, of its truth, which shall have all the certainty and satisfaction of a demonstration—"If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." The spirit itself shall bear witness that we are the children of God.

Sustained and satisfied with this internal and personal conviction of the truth of the gospel, the believer can laugh and scorn all the assaults of the infidel. It is not necessary for his comfort in Christ, or conviction of his truth, that he should be deeply read in history, that he should be conservant with all the objections of the unbeliever, or even to be able to make satisfactory answers; he need not be skilled in all the niceties of logical argumentation—not at all. He has the spirit of God in his heart "crying Abba Father." He knows that his Redeemer lives. He has peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and rejoices in hope of the glory of God.

The doctrine then of the witness of the spirit is one of primary importance, and essential to the spiritual comfort and support of millions. A doctrine and an enjoyment without which the mass of our race would be forever in doubt as to the truth of our holy religion, and doubting would be forever in painful suspense and apprehension in regard to their future destiny. J. B. W.

CONVERSION.

The turning of an immortal soul "from darkness to light and from the powers of Satan unto God" is an event of the very highest order of the moral sublime. If it should be attempted to celebrate such an event in a manner commensurate with its overwhelming and everlasting importance, the concentrated blaze of a thousand suns would not be glorious enough for the illumination and the shout of all the saints of God not triumphant enough to proclaim the joy of the blessed hour.

Let us, for the better appreciation of such an event, contemplate for a moment the concomitants, the surroundings and result of such an occasion.

The Son of God, clad in a habiliament of clay, has come down to earth, and bled to win a mortal's love—the blessed Bible has taught the will of God, and from all its thousand pages poured light on the path to heaven—the Gospel has sounded forth its spirit-stirring notes of warning and invitation, and the Holy Spirit has accompanied and applied all their agencies of salvation with soul awakening power. The individual sinner, who has thus been plyed with all this Divine Machinery of Mercy, feels that he is a wretch undone and cries in the bitter of his guilt-troubled soul, "Oh, wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? God be merciful to me, a sinner." But Satan, who "seeketh whom he may devour," is nigh with all the subtilty of infernal machination to quell his fears, or else sink him into the shades of deep dispair—and the host of God are nigh, and on bended knees cry, "Oh, now let thy will be done on earth—open his lips and his mouth shall show forth thy praise." Angels are waiting to rejoice over one sinner that repents. How momentous the interest that hangs upon this eventful moment, destinies it may be of everlasting rapture, or endless woe. But grace, all sufficient grace, meets his need. The penitent despairs of any other righteousness, save that of Christ the Lord's, and looks a look of faith and lives—a sinner saved by grace.

"Faith tends its realizing light:
The clouds disperse, the shaddows fly.
Th' invisible appears in sight,
And God is seen by mortal eye."

Perhaps in a flood of celestial splendor the vision of God's countenance reconciled bursts upon the soul; or, perchance, in rays as wild and gentle as when morning light appears. Perhaps in tones of loud sweet harmony the voice of God seemed to say: go in peace and sin no more; or it may be in a small still voice, he whispered: come unto me and I will give you rest. Nor does it matter whether in a moment as sudden as the lightning's flash from the dark bosom of the cloud, the light of God flamed upon the sin-benighted soul; or whether with the gentle march of morning o'er the eastern hills the light, first faint and gradual, rose and brightened into day. Can I say, whereas I was blind I now see; it does not matter whether the Master said to me, "receive thy sight, thy faith hath saved thee;" or whether he anointed my eyes with clay and bid me go and wash in the pool of Siloam, and come seeing. I see, that is the great fact. I have realized a great and blessed change. Let me rejoice, and not repine, that it was not done unto me as unto another. Is it not lawful for him to do what he will with his own? Perhaps, reader, the time's long past and the scene is afar, but hallowed, forever hallowed in the blest memories of the past will be the hour of your espousals to God. J. B. W.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

RIGHT OF COMPLAINT.

MR. EDITOR:—I have already spoken in your columns of pamphlets of which Bishop Cobb, or his "assistants," or both, circulate in this State. I have recently obtained four of them, in spite of the loaning system practiced; and as they are complaining of being persecuted by the circulation of "Reasons," I will give your readers a specimen or two of the manner in which those persecuted people speak of and treat Methodism. The tract from which I extract is entitled "Methodism, as held by Wesley." It had reached a second edition ten years ago! Its object is to show that Methodism, as it exists in this country, has no authority from Wesley; in short, that it has no authority from God or man! This pamphlet is no private enterprise, but is advertised for sale at Church Tract Depository in New York. Perhaps, upon reading the extracts, and remembering that these lambs have been circulating this and kindred documents for the last ten or fifteen years, some sympathizing Methodists may change their opinions. But to the extracts:

"But higher and vital ground is taken. It will be proved that Methodism is not a Church. Wesley is the witness. It will be proved that Methodism has no sacraments; no ministry; no divine warrant." Wesley is the witness. In love, too, are the pages written; and with a deep desire for the success of truth only, are they put forth; and with earnest prayer for the approbation and the blessing of God for that which is truth."

Speaking of Dr. Coke's ordination as Superintendent, or Bishop, of American Methodists, he says:

"The act was done in Mr. Wesley's 'chamber.' It was done as a favor to save Dr. Coke, in America, from the established and growing power of Mr. Asbury. It was done conditionally, to be 'known or not known,' as circumstances might demand. It was done privately; for Charles Wesley says: 'I was then in Bristol at his elbow; yet he never gave me the least hint of his intention.' It was all considered—the arrangements were all made, (even to bringing on other ministers to aid in the affair,) and the act was carried through by Dr. Coke, and for his own personal benefit. So much for the origin of those appointments." "Wesley cut of the way, they made themselves a ministry; and they made for themselves sacraments; and they called themselves a Church. Were they a Church? If they were, then may the Abolition Society at length become a Church; then may the Moral Reform Society become a Church; then may the Temperance Society become a Church. Nay, then may any number of men and women, who have been some time for any purpose united, appoint some thing they call a ministry, arrange some thing that they call sacraments, and then stand out to the world as the Church of Almighty God."

Are not the people who write, publish and circulate such things clandestinely, in circumstances to complain of bad treatment!

July 16. SIGMA.

PROTESTANTISM IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

The N. Y. Independent furnishes the following information from what it endorses as unquestionable authority:

Rev. Mr. Crowe, an English minister of the Baptist denomination, who resided for several years in the English settlements at Honduras, and afterwards for a long time in the city of Guatemala, and who has for some years past been traveling in England and Scotland, and on the Continent, in behalf of his missionary plans in the city and country of Guatemala, is now in this city on his way thither. The accounts which he gives of his missionary life there, are exceedingly interesting and instructive; and the field which he opens in that country to the efforts of Evangelical Christians is not uninviting. Mr. Crowe is not connected with any Missionary Society, but during his residence at the South supported himself by teaching; at the same time circulating the Spanish Scriptures, wherever he could find opportunity, and distributing Spanish tracts and books on the themes of personal religion. He held his own there, against the strenuous opposition of the ecclesiastics, for nearly four years; and was at last expelled from the country not by regular process of law, but by an illegal and violent seizure of his person in the streets of the capital.

His wife has ever since remained in Guatemala; and he is confident that his own return is now practicable, and that he can resume his evangelical operations there to a greater extent even than before, and without being interrupted. The Liberal party in the State will be with him. The Aristocratic party, or "the Serviles," as they are called, will of course be opposed to him, being under the control of the priests. But ever, as liberal ideas prevail and extend, the introduction of the Gospel will be more and more easy, and a readier hearing will be given to it among the people. Mr. Crowe contemplates also the establishment of a colony, composed, so far as possible, of pious English or American families, within the limits of Guatemala, and thus the further conciliation of the Government, who are very desirous of such immigration. The country and the climate he describes as eminently favorable to this colonization; the earth producing its fruits with tropical luxuriance, and yet a mild and salubrious climate being always attainable within short distances, on the rich table-lands. His impression is, that in addition to the natural exports of the country, cotton may be produced there, cheaply and abundantly.

THE WRATH OF MAN WORKING THE GLORY OF GOD.—Before the Punjaub came under British control, the Rajah who governed there would not permit the Gospel in any form to cross the frontier; but no sooner had British troops passed over the Sutlej, than missionaries followed, and erected the standard of the Cross. So, too, no access was granted to Birmah Proper, till the proclamation was published, annexing the lower part of it to the British Empire, when missionaries can at once traverse it, through its length and breadth.

[From the Drawing Room Companion.]

SLANG PHRASES.

It is a fact that cannot be disputed, that cant phrases have become the order of the day. The English language literally groans beneath these expletives, which have grown out of the vulgar taste. They may be called moral excrescences, which should be exercised by the hand of propriety. The mania for cant terms in expression has spread far and wide, and infected old and young, until there are but very few persons who can relate the most simple event without interlarding the narration with phrases that must shock every truly refined mind.

The evil seems to be steadily on the increase, and one cannot walk the streets without hearing the most juvenile portion of the community employing terms but ill adapted to their childish lips. It is the duty of the press, and of parents, to endeavor to check this growing appetite for what is monstrous and unbecoming. Elegance of language, as well as elegance of manners, is necessary to entitle any person to the distinction of "lady" or "gentleman."

We admit that many persons of good sense, and of very good taste in many respects, have been betrayed into the habit; but that furnishes no excuse for the continuance, and does not go to prove that cant phrases are necessary or proper.

So far from assisting to express an idea, facilitate the process of narration, or conversation, they actually have a contrary effect, and render the process more slow and difficult. They are like extra weight placed upon a horse intended for speed, which weighs down and wearies the animal. The human speech should be noble and dignified, and worthy to express the thoughts of immortal beings. Low ideas are always attached to cant phrases, which must inevitably exercise a degrading influence upon the mind. Low conceptions are as detrimental to improvement, as wet and heavy plumage to a bird that would take a lofty flight.

Those who would be really refined, fashionable and elegant, would do well to remember that in all works of fiction truly valuable, it is only the coarse and vulgar who make use of low and inelegant phrases. The really good, learned and polished, are made to employ chaste, simple and elevated language, in order that the contrast between the high and the low may be strikingly apparent. It is intended by the author of such productions, that we should imitate the first and shun the glaring defects of the second.

To illustrate the cant phraseology of the day, we will take the liberty to introduce our readers to the Stout family, which comprises four persons—Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Stout, Josephine and Napoleon Stout. Josephine is old enough to excite some attention among the beaux, and Napoleon has reached that period in his existence when he thinks himself entitled to a "stand up" dicky of the most lofty pretensions, bears' grease and cigars, and when his heart beats fast at hearing the footsteps of some young miss, just emancipated from short clothes.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Stout had been reared in an atmosphere of cant phrases; and they had inhaled it until they were fully and hopelessly impregnated with the malaria. Their courtship, even, was conducted on cant principles; for, when Mr. Stout asked his bride elect if she would "hook on for life," she promptly answered that "she'd be blest if she did'nt!" When Josephine made her advent to bless the connubial state of the couple, Mr. Timothy pronounced her a "trump," and Mrs. Timothy declared, with equal earnestness, that "she beat all creation." When Napoleon made his début upon the stage of his life, his male parent averred that he was a "tenrer." When both were old enough to play about the house, one was "up to snuff," and the other was "a brick." In their juvenile disputes, Josephine branded Napoleon with the infamous epithet of "small potatoes," the latter retorted smartly, and with equal severity, that she "didn't know beans." When Napoleon was obstinate and obstreperous, his mother warned him that he "would catch it," to which he finally learned to reply, as his intellect expanded, with a significant gesture well understood by fast young men, "over the left, old woman," which unparalleled precocity pleased his father to such a degree that, in the exuberance of admiration, he was impelled to make the impressive remark that Napoleon was "hard to beat." This encouraged the lad so much that he instantly assumed an attitude, a la Napoleon, and mildly recommended the senior Stout to "go it boots!"

We feel that we cannot better illustrate the subject before us than by subjoining the following conversation which transpired a few days since in the Stout family:

"I declare to goodness! I really think Mr. Rustle is making up to our Josephine!" said Mrs. Stout, after the gentleman referred to had passed the previous evening at their house, staying to a later hour than usual.

"You'd better believe it," rejoined the young lady, playfully.

"You may bet high on that!" added Napoleon, who was in the act of lighting a real Havana.

"How do you like the 'cut of his jib,' Timothy?" resumed Mrs. Stout, turning to her husband.

"I don't greatly like his 'rig,' but Josephine thinks he's 'some,'" was the reply.

"Whether you like him or not, it's my opinion he'll make a 'tip-top' husband," continued the mother.

"'Put her through,' mother," said Josephine, blushing.

"Go in lemons!" suggested Napoleon, smoking through his nose; a remark, by the way, so ambiguous that it certainly must have puzzled other parties to guess at his meaning; but in the present case, it seemed to be invested with perfect lucidity.

"Napoleon, I advise you to 'shut your hopper!'" eloquently retorted the young lady.

Mr. Stout proceeded to inquire if Mr. Rustle was a man of property; and was assured by his better half that he had a "pocket full of rocks." The husband and father then remarked to the effect that he had been more favorably impressed with Mr. Goodwin, a young farmer in the neighborhood, than with the gentleman under consideration. Miss Stout manifested a different opinion on the subject, emphatically declaring that he "couldn't come in."

"He's over that way," said his brother, making a gesture over his shoulder with his thumb.

We will not extend this conversation further, for fear that we may weary the reader's patience by the repetition of phrases so common. Suffice it to say, that such expressions dragged into almost every conversation of the Stout family. Their cant vocabulary appeared to be so extensive, that it comprised all the folly and stupidity of the past and present; and, indeed, they seemed to entertain the idea that to use such phrases skillfully and liberally was an accomplishment. But this bliss of ignorance, thoughtlessness, was finally interrupted by the visit of an old friend of Mr. Stout, whom he had not seen for many years.

Mr. Thompson was a man of strong, good sense, and had the rare faculty of expressing himself in an appropriate and elegant manner. A gentleman so accomplished could not remain long in the family without being shocked; and he was perfectly astounded at hearing, every hour, such an avalanche of coarse and unrefined forms of expression, which obviously originated among the lowest classes of people.

Taking liberty of an old acquaintance, he ventured to remonstrate with Mr. and Mrs. Stout in regard to the impropriety of such language.

"You wrong both yourselves and your children," he remarked. "The latter are already imbued with ideas that associate them with the profligate and the vile, and which will forever prevent them from expressing themselves correctly."

"Mercy on me, if I don't believe the gentleman is right!" exclaimed Mrs. Stout. "But I never thought of the subject in that light."

"The habit has been one of such long standing that it will be a terrible 'muss' to get out of," observed Mr. Stout, thoughtfully, unconscious that he had used a cant word, even when he meant to have spoken sincerely and to the point.

"But do your children use no such words!" asked Mrs. Stout earnestly.

"Never," resumed Mr. Thompson. "Having been properly taught the English language, they do not feel the need of such phrases; they regard them with as much repugnance as I do."

"It beats the dickens!" added the lady, sentimentally. "How strong the force of habit is. Now, I could easily leave off such things, but it would be different with husband and children. 'As true as I'm alive.' I don't think they ever could mend in that respect."

"My eyes! you're cutting it fat, mother!" exclaimed Napoleon. "You've used two of 'em since you began to speak."

Mr. Thompson smiled, and said:

"Yes, yes, the force of habit is strong, Mrs. Stout."

"'There's no getting round that,'" suggested the senior Stout.

"My conscience, Mr. Thompson!" cried Miss Josephine, "I hope you don't think I'm addicted to language that I cannot leave off just as easy as nothing."

"'That's high!'" vociferated Napoleon, exultingly. "The more you try, the worse you make it! 'Jerusalem crackets!' 'your highfalutin' stuff, common among the 'snobs,' aint worth a copper."

"Bless me, Napoleon, how you do run on. I never heard the 'beat of you.'"

"I thank heaven!" exclaimed Mr. Thompson, emphatically, "that my children are not infected with this moral leprosy which disfigures human language, and detracts from the dignity of the human family. My friend, I hope you will make a strong and long continued effort to repair the mischief which your example has wrought. Be never weary in this work of reform, and ever bear it constantly in mind that your children never can appear to good advantage in elegant and refined society, until they can speak correctly; or, at least, in a manner not to offend ordinary good taste. There are circles to which the slaves of such habits cannot by any means gain admission, because their influence would be deemed pernicious. I trust you will not be offended at my plain dealing, for I speak from the most disinterested motives. Let Josephine and Napoleon visit me at the city, and I will do all I can to eradicate ideas so degrading, and to instill others of so much more value that they shall never regret the exchange."

In justice to the Stout family, we will say that they did make some faint efforts to profit by the suggestions of Mr. Thompson; but without any particular results. Mr. Stout resolutely declared, after a few trials, that he "couldn't come it;" Mrs. Stout endorses this opinion, by adding that it was a "hard case," and Miss Josephine rendered the idea still stronger, by rejoining that it "wasn't nothin' else;" while the bold Napoleon concluded, finally, to "let her slide;" so that no perceptible change took place in the Stout family.

BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.—The C. C. Advocate, June 15, says:

"The San Francisco Baptist Association convened at the Pine street Baptist Church, in this city, on Friday last, and organized by the election of the Rev. O. C. Wheeler, of the 1st Baptist Church of Sacramento City, Moderator; Dr. J. S. Skinner, of the 1st Baptist Church, Secretary; Theodore Adams, Esq., of the Pine street Baptist Church, Treasurer; Rev. Wm. Rollinson, pastor of the Pine street Church, Corresponding Secretary. The Association is represented by delegates from three Churches in this city, one from Sacramento, one from San Jose, one from Stockton, one from Placerville, one from Sonoma, one from Santa Rosa, one from Santa Clara, one from Refugo Church, El Dorado; one from Napa, with some seventy delegates, making one of the most respectable Conventions that has ever assembled in our rapidly growing State. Four hundred members are enrolled in the Churches."

THE WORLD OPENING TO THE GOSPEL.—Less than fifty years ago the whole of the East was closed against efforts to disseminate the Gospel. A tract in Persian, contrasting Mohammedanism with Christianity, which was found in Calcutta, filled the Government with alarm, and they sent immediate orders to Serampore, whence it had issued, for all remaining copies of it to be delivered up, and no more of a like kind to be sent forth. If such things were permitted, it was feared that India would be set in a blaze, and the British swept into the sea. But within thirty years, millions of tracts have been put into circulation in India itself, and no one interposes any hindrance.

THE THRONE OF GRACE.—The righteous Lord sits upon that throne; but his face has no frown upon it; his voice has no terror in it. On whatever part of that throne you cast your eye, you see inscribed with grace in all its variety of application to your circumstances. There is grace to blot out your trespasses, though they be "red like crimson." There is grace to purify your hearts, though they be full of all uncleanness. There is grace to subdue your enemies, though they "come upon you as a flood." There is grace to console you amidst all your sorrows, though they be great, and multiplied, and protracted. There is grace to guide you through life, to cheer you in death, and to carry you to heaven; and, as surely as God sits upon the throne of grace, so surely will he listen to the prayers that you prefer at his footstool, and uphold the character which he himself has enstamped upon it, by freely tendering and imparting to you whatsoever you ask in sincerity and faith. [Rev. Dr. A. Thomson.

A GROGGERY IN DAVID'S TIME.—The Rev. Mr. Pierpont, in his address at the Tabernacle, was sure that there were groggeries in David's time, in the lanes and alleys of Jerusalem, with little red curtains before the windows. He was confident there was a description of the dram-seller in the tenth psalm, which he read with great effect. It is commended to such as are in the trade:

Verse 6. He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved; for I shall never be in adversity.

7. His mouth is full of cursing, and deceit, and fraud: under his tongue is mischief and vanity.

8. He sitteth in the lurking places of the village, in the secret places doth he murder the innocent; his eyes are privily set against the poor.

9. He lieth in wait secretly, as a lion in his den; he lieth in wait to catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net. (His shop.)

10. He croucheth and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones. (His strong liquors.)

11. He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten; he hideth his face; he will never see it. [Temperance Union.

CAN'T! COS HE SUNG SO!—Leaning idly over a fence a few days since, we noticed a little four year old "lord of the creation" amusing himself in the grass by watching the frolicsome flight of birds which were playing around him. At length a beautiful bobolink perched himself upon a drooping bough of an apple tree, which extended to within a few yards of the place where the urchin sat, and maintained his position, apparently unconscious of the close proximity of one whom birds usually consider a dangerous neighbor.

The boy seemed astonished at his impudence, and after regarding him steadily for a minute or two, obeying the instinct of his baser part, he picked up a stone lying at his feet, and was preparing to throw it, steadying himself carefully for a good aim. The little arm was reached backward without alarming the bird, and Bob was within an ace of damage, when lo! his throat swelled, and forth came nature's plea: "A link—a link—a-link, bob-o-link, bob-o-link! a-no-weet, a-no-weet! I know it—I know it! a-link—a-link—a-link! don't throw it!—throw it, throw it," etc., etc., and he didn't. Slowly the little arm subsided to its natural position, and the despised stone dropped. The minstrel charmed the murderer. We heard the songster through, and watching his unharmed flight, as did the boy, with a sorrowful countenance. Anxious to hear an expression of the little fellow's feeling, we approached him, and inquired:

"Why'll'n't you stone him, my boy? you might have killed him and carried him home."

The poor little fellow looked up doubtingly, as though he suspected our meaning, and with an expression of half shame and half sorrow, he replied:

"Couldn't, cos he sung so."

Who will say that our nature is wholly depraved, after that; or ever that music hath no charms to soothe the savage breast? Melody awakened humanity, and humanity—mercy! The angels who sang at the creation whispered to the child's heart. The bird was saved, and God was glorified by the deed. Dear little boys, don't stone the birds. [Clinton Conrant.

AN EXQUISITE STORY BY LAMARTINE.—In the tribe of Neggdeh, there was a horse whose fame was spread far and near; and a Bedouin, of another tribe, by name Daher, desired extremely to possess it. Having offered in vain for it his camels and his whole wealth, he hit at length upon the following device, by which he hoped to gain the object of his desire. He resolved to stain his face with the juice of an herb, to clothe himself in rags, to tie his legs and neck together, so as to appear like a lame beggar. Thus equipped, he went to wait for Naber, the owner of the horse, who he knew was to pass that way. When he saw Naber approaching on his beautiful steed, he cried out in a weak voice, "I am a poor stranger; for three days I have been unable to move from this spot to seek for food. I am dying, help me, and Heaven will reward you." The Bedouin kindly offered to take him up on his horse and carry him home, but the rogue replied, "I cannot rise, I have no strength left."

Naber, touched with pity, dismounted, led his horse to the spot, and with great difficulty set the seeming beggar on its back. But no sooner did Daher feel himself in the saddle, than he set spurs to the horse and galloped off, calling out as he did so, "It is I, Daher: I have got the horse, and am off with it." Naber called after him to stop and listen. Certain of not being pursued, he turned and halted a short distance from Naber, who was armed with a spear. "You have taken my horse," said the latter. "Since heaven has willed it, I wish you joy of it; but I do conjure you never to tell any one how you obtained it." "And why not?" said Daher. "Because," said the noble Arab, "another man might be really ill, and men would fear to help him. You would be the cause of many refusing to perform an act of charity, for fear of being duped as I have been." Struck with shame at these words, Daher was silent for a moment, then springing from the horse, returned it to its owner, embracing him as his guest, where they spent a few days together, and became fast friends for life.

GENERAL CASS.—During our recent visit to Detroit, in company with a number of friends, we called on the venerable statesman and patriot, Lewis Cass. We found him at his old mansion, in excellent health, enjoying a good old age, with all the comforts of life blooming around him. With a nation's respect and esteem, he feels that it is better to be right than to be President. He lives not exactly in a log cabin, but in the same plain and substantial old brown frame house erected on his farm soon after the war of 1812. In looking on this mansion there was, however, one melancholy reflection. She who, for the last forty years, has been the life and light of that mansion—the hope, the comfort, and the joy of its lord—is no more. The old statesman is left to tread the path of life, with the evening shades gathering around him, unsustained by that strong hand which was his hope and prop in the morning of his life. Long may he live to enjoy a nation's gratitude and esteem, and to give that Republic, for whose establishment his father perilled his life, the benefits of his counsel and advice. [Indianapolis Sentinel, July 4.

SIX-PENNY SAVINGS' BANK.—It is stated that the experiment of a Six-Penny Savings' Bank, in New York, though only a few days old, exceeds far beyond the most sanguine expectations of its managers. Deposits as small as five cents are received. Hundreds of mechanics, and the poorest persons, have already availed themselves of this opportunity to "lay something by for a rainy day."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY:

[From the S. S. Visitor.]

THE PET LAMB.

MESSRS. EDITOR:—Let me tell the thousnnde your children readers something of my own little friend.—Mary Evelyn, daughter of S. M. and Mary Ellis—who died 13th of May in New Orleans, aged 6 years, 5 months, and 7 days.

Such was her name in baptism, but she was much better known among all her school friends, and old ones, too, as "Pet Lamb." When she began talking, the first word was ma, and this she called in such a way of her own, m-a-a, that they gave her the evening pet name she ever afterwards bore. Until I heard this account of it very lately, I had supposed it was suggested by her soft, lamb-like looks, and her innocent, lamb-like ways. The good Shepherd has taken our pet lamb to his bosom!

I knew the pastor of the Felicity street church, of which her parents are members, and opportunities, which were not neglected, of becoming well acquainted with this one of the flock. There is much benefit in the friendship of a good child. It is one of those "communications" with human beings that are not evil. There is nothing tempting here—no, not in any kind of degree. It acts kindly upon the sentiments. It leaves no stain upon the character. The female frame, the gazelle eyes, the soft curls of this Pet Lamb are among my sweet memories.

She entered the Sabbath School before she could spell or read, and luved to go. Two years since she had learned, by oral teaching, the whole of the Wesleyan Catechism in full.

Pet Lamb not only said her prayers, but she knew how to pray: she knew the nature of prayer. To her standing prayer she added for a year or two, to add new words suitable to what might happen each day. If she had spoken or done wrong to her parents or brothers and sisters, she asked the Lord to forgive her. On the Wednesday evening before her death she had been out later than usual, and got her feet wet. Her mother was preparing to go to the week-night meeting. "Ma, don't leave me." "O, yes, my dear Lamb, ma must go to Church and try to get good." "Well, then, please let mo say my prayers before you go." Afterwards she said, "My dear mother, I put n new word in my prayer to-night. I prayed to the Lord to bless you at the meeting."

That was the Pet Lamb's last prayer. The next morning the scarlet fever, which has been so fatal among us, had fastened upon her. Soon she was delirious, and in a few days she died. Little children ought never to forget their prayers. When they little think that a prayer may be the last. And what a comforting reflection to weeping mothers, who have taught their children to pray, that their last prayer was for them!

There is evidence convincing me that the innocence of this child was tender, easily and sensibly burdened, and that she found relief in telling it before the Lord. Even so may young hearts can Jesus make himself precious, by giving "rest."

I would not have any of my young friends suppose that Pet Lamb was not a child like themselves. She was a very child. No old head on young shoulders—no unnaturalness. She had childish ways—loved to play and run out joyously when pleased—had her high-chair at the table, and the last doll baby. She was, in not out of fashion in the nursery. She was as happy and smiling as those little children that never pray—and a great deal more so.

Pet Lamb was so much loved by her teacher that, for the Sunday School celebration that takes place next month, they had given her a poetry-speech. She had got it nearly by heart. And one day when the fever had turned her cheeks very red and made her eyes vicious, her mind was running on it and she repeated distinctly one verse. It was:

> Once, on a sunny summer's day,
> As I was in the grove at play,
> Two little birds lit on a tree,
> And went to singing merrily.—

Though she had learned the next verse, yet she did not repeat any more. The fever returned and her mind wandered away, but her eyes sparkled as though she saw the two little birds and heard them "singing merrily."

Blessed Sabbath School that fills the thoughts of dying children with such visions as these!

I need not tell you how placid and angelic that pale face looked—this white veil covering it so lightly and the jessamino flowers strewn around. I never saw death so beautified before. The wicked think of death as a fright, a monster, n cruel enemy—and to the wicked so it is. But death cannot harm whom Jesus loves. The Pet Lamb slept as sweetly in his arms as ever in her mother's.

So died Mary Evelyn Ellis. One half of her life had been spent in the Sabbath School. Long before reaching her seventh year she was more matured christain than many are at twenty! Little children, bo like tho "Pet Lamb."

Your friend, H. N. M.

New Orleans, June 15, '53.

THRILLING SITUATION FOR A MOTHER.—A few days since a daughter of Mr. Isaiah Sawtelle, of Belgrade, Maine, about two years old, fell into a well eighteen feet deep. The mother was informed of the accident, but when she arrived the little one had sunk to four feet water. She ran to a neighbor's, twenty rods or more, for assistance, but found none. Returning, she secured the well-pole to the bottom, and brought the child to the surface, the little thing clinging to the pole with its hands. The mother raised it a few feet, when its hold relaxed and it again sank. Again she lowered the pole, which came in contact with the little hands, it was taken in a death grasp, and the child thus drawn twenty feet to its mother's arms. Notwithstanding it was apparently dead at the time, by proper exertions it was restored to life.

SINGULAR OCCURRENCE.—About ten days since two negro boys belonging to Robert A. Mayo, of Powhatan, about one mile below Richmond, were drowned in James River. The last Southern Argus states that they came to their death in the following singular manner:

They had taken a dog down to the river with the intention of drowning him. When they reached the water, one of the twain went into it with the animal, and, to drown him more effectually, got upon his back. The dog attempted to escape from the hands of the boy, and while doing so dog and boy got deeper into the water, where the dog got away, leaving his murderer to his fate. The other negro on the bank, seeing his comrade about to drown, plunged in to his assistance, and vainly essayed to rescue him. The boy both perished by drowning, while the dog safely reached the shore, and went back to the house. Such an incident we do not remember ever to have heard or read.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

COMMENCEMENT. CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The Examination of the Students of this College will begin July 20th.

On the Sabbath following the Annual Sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Speer, of Natchez.

Monday, 25th, the Joint Board will meet.

Tuesday, 26th, the Anniversaries of the Literary Societies will be celebrated.

Wednesday will be Commencement Day.

The friends of Education are requested to be present.

R. H. RIVERS.

Jackson, La., June 13, 1853

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

FALL SESSION.

The next Session of this College will begin July 15th.

FACULTY.

Rev. JAMES W. HARDY, M. A., President, and Professor of Experimental Science

Rev. SMITH W. MOORE, M. A., Vice President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.

OSCAR F. CASEY, M. A., Professor of Ancient Languages.

SEPTIMUS P. RICE, M. A., Professor of Pure Mathematics, and Rector of Grammar School.

Rev. D. B. ROSS, M. A., Professor of Mixed Mathematics.

THOS. B. SMITH, B. A., Principal of Grammar School.

SCHOOL EXPENSES.

Tuition	$25 00 Per Session.
Room rent and servant's hire	3 00 .. ..
Board and washing	50 00 .. ..

The College dues must be paid invariably in advance.

jy25 4t*p* JAMES W. HARDY.

La Grange, Ala., June 13, 1853.

UNIVERSITY OF NASHVILLE.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third Annual Course of Lectures in this Department will commence on Tuesday, the first of November next, and continue till the first of the ensuing March.

PAUL F. EVE, M. D., Principles and Practice of Surgery.

JOHN M. WATSON, M. D., Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.

A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D., Surgical and Pathological Anatomy and Physiology.

W. K. BOWLING, M. D., Institutes and Practice of Medicine.

C. K. WINSTON, M. D., Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.

ROBERT M. CORTER, M. D., General and Special Anatomy.

J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D., Chemistry and Pharmacy.

WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D., Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for students on the first Monday in October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures will be given by the Professors, commencing also on the first Monday in October.

The students will have free access to the State Hospital.

Fee of each Professor, $15; Matriculation ticket, $5; Dissecting ticket, $10; Graduation fee, $25.

Good board can be obtained in the city at from $2 50 to $3 per week. Further information may be obtained by addressing the Dean.

jy23 5t J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D., Dean.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 1853.

SONG OF EMIGRATION.

[This excellent production is from the pen of the celebrated Mrs. Hemans; it is true to the life, and every sentiment is worthy of commendation]:

> There was heard a song on the chiming sea,
> A mingled breathing of grief and glee;
> Man's voice, unbroken by sighs, was there,
> Filling with triumph the sunny air.
> Of fresh green lands, and of pastures new,
> It sang, while the bark through the surges flew
>
> But ever and anon,
> A murmur of farewell—
> Told, by its plaintive tone,
> That from woman's lips it fell.
>
> "Away, away, o'er the foaming main!"
> This was the free and the joyous strain.
> "There are clearer skies than ours afar,
> We will shape our course by a brighter star;
> There are plains whose verdure no foot hath pressed,
> And whose wealth is all for the first brave guest."
>
> "But, alas! that we should go."
> Sang the farewell voices then.
> "From the homestead warm and low,
> By the brook and in the glen"
>
> "We will rear new homes under the trees that glow,
> As if gems were the fruitage of every bough;
> O'er our white walls we will train the vine,
> And sit in its shadow at day's decline,
> And watch our herds as they range at will
> Through the green savannas all bright and still"
>
> "But, alas! for the sweet shade
> Of the dowering orchard trees,
> Where our first childhood played
> 'Midst the birds and honey bees"
>
> "All, all our own shall the forest be,
> As to the hound of the roebuck free;
> None shall say, 'hither no further pass!'
> We will track each step through the wavy grass
> We will chase the elk in his speed and might,
> And bring proud spoils to the hearth at night"
>
> "But, oh! the gray church tower,
> And the sound of Sabbath bell,
> And the sheltered garden bower,
> We have bid them all farewell."
>
> "We will give the names of our fearless race
> To each bright river whose course we trace;
> We will leave our memory with mounts and floods,
> And the path of our daring in boundless woods;
> And our works to many a lake's green shore,
> Where the Indians' graves lie alone before."
>
> "But who shall teach the flowers,
> Which our childhood loved, to dwell
> In a soil that is not ours?
> Home, home, and friends, farewell!"

HEADS OF THE WORLD.—At present in this year of our Lord, 1853, there are eighty-three sovereigns of republics, empires, monarchies, principalities, duchies and electorates. Of these, the number of governing Presidents is eighteen, all of which, outside of the United States, Presidency, are Central and South American offices, with the exception of Liberia. There are six Emperors, including his sable highness Faustin the First; sixteen Kings, counting as one of the "heads of the world" Jamaco, King of all the Mosquitoes Under this "head," also, come the Kings of Dahomey and the Sandwich Islands. Of reigning Princes there are ten, Grand Dukes seven, Dukes ten, all of which are petty German States, and nearly all of which are very insignificant. Under this head also comes one Elector and one Landgrave. Of Queens we have five, including Ranavalona of Madagascar, Pomare of the Society Islands, and others scarcely more civilized. We have one Pope, two Sultans (those of Borneo and Turkey), two Governors, of Entre Rios and Corrientes; one Viceroy, of Egypt; one Shah, Persia; one Imaum, Muscat; one Ameer, Cabul; and one Director, of Nicaragua.

The word "tariff" is taken from a fortress which is situated on the Straits of Gibraltar, a promontory which, from its position, is admirably adapted for commanding the entrance of the Mediterranean sea, and watching the exit and entrance of all ships. It was the custom of the Moors to watch from this point all merchant ships going into or coming out of the Midland sea; and, issuing from this stronghold to levy a certain fixed scale of duty on all merchandise passing in and out of the Straits, and this was called, from the place where it was levied, "tariffa," or "tariff," and in this way we have acquired the word.

COLD WATER IN RAILROAD CARS.—A silver urn, with iced water, is carried through the cars of the Boston and Worcester Railroad, at proper intervals of time, by a lad especially employed for that object—the urn being strapped to the boy's shoulder, so that passengers, with a silver goblet with which they are furnished, may help themselves. The little water-bearer, whose presence is so grateful to travelers, is a constant attendant upon the train to which he is attached, and, valuable as the refreshment is which he bestows, he is not allowed to take any pay from the recipients.

A MAMMOTH SHIP.—A new packet ship, named Calhoun, intended for the Liverpool trade, was launched at New York on Saturday. She is said to be the largest merchant ship in the world, having capacity for carrying 2000 tons of freight, and accommodations for 1000 steerage passengers.

STEAM YACHT NORTH STAR.—The steam yacht North Star, Capt. Edridge, with Com. Vanderbilt and party on board, arrived at St. Petersburg on the 21st ult., after a passage of six and a half days from Southampton.

General Intelligence.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Interments in the City of New Orleans for the week ending July 16, 1853:

Apoplexy	4	Fever, Puerperal	1
Abscess	1	Fever, Continued	2
Anæmia	1	Fever, Typhoid	1
Cerebritis	4	Fever, Bilious	3
Contusion	1	Fever, Nervous	1
Consumption	14	Gastro-Enteritis	2
Croup	1	Hydro-Pericarditis	1
Cramps	1	Intestines, Ulceration of	2
Convulsions	7	Measles	2
Cholera	3	Marasmus	0
Cholera Infantum	3	Meningitis	0
Dentition	2	Old Age	2
Diarrhœa	14	Pertussis	1
Debility	1	Peritonitis	2
Drowned	6	Pneumonia	1
Dysentery	9	Scrofula	1
Delirium Tremens	8	Stillborn	8
Erysipelas	2	Tethes	6
Enteritis	3	Trismus	0
Fever, Yellow	204	Unascertain	7
Fever, Congestive	8	Uterus, Cancer of	1
Fever, Pernicious	1	Ulcer Phagedenic	1
Fever, Typhus	1
Total			344

Of these, 65 were under ten years of age, and 21 colored.

Interments in the following Cemeteries.

Lafayette	61	St Vincent de Paul	34
Hebrew	4	Potter's Field	30
Catholic No 1	4	Cypress Grove	6
Catholic No 2	12	Charity Hospital	115
St Patrick	101
Protestant	13	Total	344

Of the deaths from Yellow Fever, one hundred and five occurred in the Charity Hospital:

A. HEARSE, Sec. B. H.

From the above statement it will be seen that the Yellow Fever is on the increase. By reference to our published accounts it appears that the deaths from this disease for the week ending Saturday, the 2d inst., were 25, and for the week ending the 9th, 59, while during the past week the number has been nearly quadrupled.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the weekly report of the above institution, from Friday, the 15th, to Friday, the 22d inst., at 12 o'clock M., carefully prepared for the Crescent by Mr. Hy. Vanderlinden, the obliging clerk:

Admitted	531
Discharged	282
Died	213
Number remaining in Hospital	760

Of the 213 deaths, 180 were from Yellow Fever—an increase of 91 over the preceding week.

Louisiana Interior.

The Louisiana Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and Blind has just concluded its first session. The next session commences on the 5th of next October. The Baton Rouge Advocate says:

We are also gratified to learn from them that there is room for the reception of a few more pupils in the mute department, (the blind department not being yet open) at the commencement of the session. It may not be generally known that this is a school free to all the deaf and dumb of the State between the ages of ten and thirty years, without charge for board and tuition. We are also authorized to announce that all who may be brought to the Institution between the above ages, at the commencement of the next session, whether application shall have been previously made or not, will be received.

The Crops, etc.

IN LOUISIANA.—The Opelousas Whig says:

For several days we have had a superabundance of rain. The cotton crop must be injured materially by it, as it will cause the forms to fall off, and leave the plant in a condition to be destroyed by rust, when the warm sun comes out on it.

The young cane will produce finely and in great abundance.

The Capitolian Vis-a-Vis of the 13th says:

We have had an abundance of rain for the last three weeks; it, however, has been much wanted, and its effect is shown in the beautiful appearance of our crops. We have never seen the cane look finer or more promising than at the present moment.

The Shreveport Democrat of the 14th says:

The corn crop of this section will be full, though probably not quite equal to the crop of last year. The constant rains for the last two weeks, which to some extent have been hurtful to the cotton crop, have proved beneficial to the corn.

There is some uncertainty as to the prospect of the cotton crop in this and the adjoining parishes. The grass-worm, said to be the certain forerunner of the caterpillar, has already made its appearance on many plantations. Should the planters escape this calamity there is a prospect of a fair average crop, but there is no hope of such a crop as that of last year.

THE VICKSBURG AND SHREVEPORT RAILROAD.—The Bastrop North Louisianian, of the 9th inst., says that $10,000 have been subscribed by citizens in that town to the Vicksburg, Shreveport, and Texas railroad, making nearly $40,000 subscribed to the road in all in the parish of Morehouse.

Mr. Coleman, President of the road is visiting every parish on its line of route, for the purpose of soliciting subscribers. He obtained the above amount in Morehouse by his personal exertions.

The Ouachita paper says that it is almost reduced to a certainty that every parish along the line of the road will vote a subscription of from $100,000 to $200,000 to aid in its construction.

THE SMALLEST STEAM ENGINE IN THE WORLD.—Mr. Benjamin J. Warner, the London Watch Manufacturer, has sent to this country, for exhibition at the World's Fair, the working models for two steam engines. The smallest one, an oscillating cylinder engine, stands upon an English fourpenny piece, (size of half a dime) with room to spare. The cylinder is but one-sixth of an inch in diameter, the length of stroke three-eighths, and diameter of the piston is that of an ordinary needle. The other is a beam engine, composed of more than two hundred pieces. The length of the stand is three and a quarter inches, length of beam two and a quarter inches, diameter of cylinder three-eighths of an inch, and the length of stroke seven-eighths of an inch. Both of these engines are screwed together with the delicacy and precision of the work of a watch.

LIGHTNING RODS.—The Scientific American, in some remarks on this subject, gives the following as the essentials of an effectual rod:

"A thick iron or copper rod extending above the highest part of a house, continuous in its connection, perfectly insulated, kept separate and distant from any large metallic body, and terminating in a moist part of the earth, such as a pool or well, is a perfect lightning conductor."

The same journal says that copper is preferable to iron, though it is somewhat more expansive. Where the chimneys of a house are not near together, branch-rods pointed with gold should run from each to a common stem.

A JOURNEY ROUND THE WORLD.—The English papers tell us that a Swedish frigate arrived at Plymouth, England, a few weeks since, from a voyage round the world. She sailed from Sweden in October, 1851, and having touched at Rio Janeiro and La Plata, passed through the Straits of Magellan in February, 1852. Sailing circuitously through the Pacific, she visited Gallipagos, Panama, the Sandwich Islands, Otaheite, San Francisco, the Friendly Islands, and Sydney. She was then steered towards the Indian Ocean. Leaving Australia, she directed her course to the Carolinas, the Ladrones, Canton, Manilla, Singapore, Batavia and the Mauritius. On the 20th of April, 1853, she reached the Cape of Good Hope. Having sailed thence, she stretched away to St. Helena. On the 4th of May she took her departure from that island, and reached Plymouth on the 8th June.

SIGNAL ORDERS ON SHIPBOARD.—English papers describe an important innovation in the management of the new and gigantic screw three decker, the Duke of Wellington. The introduction of a telegraphic communication from the poop to engine-room has allowed the usual commands of "stop her," "ease her," "go ahead," etc., to be dispensed with. An index of figures is placed on the top-rail of the poop, and, being always stationed there, the master is enabled to work his orders to the engine-room silently and effectively. This valuable improvement originated with Captain Crispin, who has applied it to practical purposes on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert.

A DUTCH STEAMER EXPECTED.—Letters from the Hague bring the intelligence that the Dutch government have determined to send to New York the war steamer Amsterdam, containing some contributions from Holland for the Crystal Palace. The Amsterdam is probably now on her passage, and may be expected soon at New York.

Opening of the Crystal Palace.

SCENES AT THE PALACE.

The great centre of attraction, the Crystal Palace, was the scene of much excitement all day, and the spectacle presented, in that neighborhood, was one of the most stirring character Nothing like it was ever seen in New York before.

Towards noon, the main avenues leading to the Palace—especially Broadway and the Bowery—presented a lively scene. "All creation" seemed to have turned out in holiday attire, en masse—some to gain the most advantageous position to see the President and the procession, as they marched along the route, but the greater number en route for the World's Fair.

The side walks of the Sixth Avenue looked like one solid mass of human beings, men, women and children; some standing and some sitting—some in horizontal attitudes, en stoops and piazzas, and many ensconced upon awning posts and the eaves of the houses above. These were the "masses" who had no tickets of admission, and couldn't get in, but they seemed to enjoy, even under a broiling sun an outside look at the Palace, quite as much as the more fortunate few, inside.

THE INTERIOR.

In the interior of the Palace the spectacle, at about twelve o'clock, was most animated. People came crowding in through the several entrances in hundreds, all eager to get possession of the seats nearest the platform, in the centre, the place assigned to the "distinguished visitors." The special police, however, managed to maintain admirable order, and, though the crowd grew denser and denser every minute, no confusion, to speak of, was visible.

The colossal statue of Daniel Webster and the equestrian statue of Washington, which are placed immediately under the dome, attracted much attention. The crowd seemed, indeed, to gather the thickest at this particular point.

THE INAUGURATION.

After the opening prayer by the Rev. Bishop Wainwright, the following anthem (composed for the occasion, was sung by the New York Sacred Harmonic Society, accompanied by the National Guard Band, and members of other societies:

> "Here, where all climes their offerings send,
> Here, where all arts their tribute lay,
> Before thy presence, Lord, we bend,
> And for thy smile and blessing pray.
>
> "For thou dost sway the tides of thought,
> And hold the issues in thy hand,
> Of all that human toil has wrought,
> And all that human skill has plann'd.
>
> "Thou lead'st the restless Power of Mind
> O'er Destiny's untrodden field,
> And guid'st him, wandering bold but blind,
> To mighty ends not yet revealed."

Theodore Sedgwick, Esq., President of the Association, then arose and remarked in substance as follows:

He first returned thanks to the President for attending the inauguration. He was glad that the exhibition had secured the support and approbation of our own Government, though mainly relying upon its own energies. He paid a compliment to Daniel Webster, (pointing to his statue near him) who, among the first, had lent his influence and name to this enterprise. [Cheers.] He then dwelt upon the importance of bringing before the American people the genius and industry of the Old World, inasmuch as the exhibition of them would diffuse like tastes among our own people.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

The President, who looked very pale and indisposed, replied in terms as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen—I return you my most warm and cordial thanks for the honor you have done me. I come to be present at the inauguration of this building, and to express the respect I entertain for this great Industrial Exhibition, designed and calculated to promote all that belongs to the interests of our country. You, sir, and the gentlemen associated with you, have laid claim in all you have done to thanks that will be enduring.

Whatever short-comings you have spoken of there may be, I can only say that they appear not here, and, so far as I have learned, they appear not at all. Everything around reminds us that this is a militarian age, and that science, instead of being locked up, appears before the admiration of the world, and has become tributary to the arts, manufactures, agriculture, and all that promotes social comfort. [Applause]. Sir, if you had achieved no other object but what you have done in bringing together citizens from all parts of this Union, you would have fulfilled, perhaps, one of the most important missions that can be imposed upon any of us in the way of strengthening that Union.

But you have done more; you have nobly alluded to it. Your Exhibition has brought here men most eminent in almost every walk of life, from every civilized country on the face of the globe. And thus you have done more, perhaps, than any of us in promoting that great object, dear to you, dear to me, dear to my venerable friend near me (alluding to Bishop Wainright) to promote peace among men. [Great applause]. Sir, I have not the voice to address you, and return you my thanks again for the honor you have done me. I must conclude.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARABIA.

We have files of London papers by this arrival to July 2, but the news they bring is not important.

The debate on India has terminated in favor of the government by a much larger majority than was anticipated—322 against 140, in the proportion of more than two to one.

A repeal of the tax on advertisements has once more been carried in committee of the House of Commons.

The Times' correspondent writes, that in quarters usually well informed, the opinion of a pacific solution of the Eastern question now prevails.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Chronicle states that the Porte, encouraged by the presence of the English and French fleets, had followed up their rejection of the Russian ultimatum by a demand of armed intervention, addressed to the other four great powers of Europe.

The Washington arrived off Cowes on the 1st of July.

ENGLAND.

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.—The Duke of Newcastle has brought the affairs of Jamaica before the House of Lords in a masterly and comprehensive speech. It appears from this, that Sir C. Grey is recalled—that the late Governor of Guiana, Mr. H. Barkley, is to succeed him with a salary of £5000 a year—that the British government is prepared to pay off the half million of debt owing by Jamaica, by raising money at a lower rate of interest—that some changes are to be introduced into the legislative council—and that a sinking fund is to be formed, by which the debt will be altogether cancelled in a few years. These are striking changes, and cannot fail to alter the whole complexion of the dispute which now exists between that colony and the mother country.

TURKEY.

NO DECISIVE MOVEMENT.—The letters from Turkey brought by the Europas contain no facts of importance with which the public is not familiar. Indeed, their date, the 15th, is antecedent to that of the accounts already published.

From the Danube no certain intelligence is to be reported, although rumors are rife, and belligerent operations are again positively announced by telegraph. According to calculations based on the assumption that the rejection of the Russian ultimatum would have to be reported to St. Petersburg, and that the Czar would at once order the immediate advance of troops, such order should have reached the Russian commander in Bessarabia yesterday, or should come into his hands to-day. It is not, however, certain, that the commander had not received instructions to act on the news from Constantinople, supposing it to be unfavorable, in which case the Pruth may have been crossed by this time.

A novel dental operation was performed at Allentown, Pa., by two of the resident physicians, one day last week. It was the extraction of three teeth from the mouth of a large rattle snake. Before the commencing the extraction, chloroform was administered until Mr. Snake was wrapped in gentle slumber, when the teeth were drawn without difficulty.

AN EDITOR'S TRIALS.—The Springfield Republican, in giving an account of the parade of the "Antique and Horribles" on the 4th inst., mentioned that one of the horses used by the inspecting officer was "broken down." The owner of the horse writes an indignant letter to the editor, in which he states that he has known the beast for upward of forty-seven years, and he was never yet broken down.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival Wednesday of the steamship Mexico, J. S. Thompson, master, from Indianola, we have Galveston papers as late as the 16th.

In reference to the crops, the Civilian says: "Our Texas exchanges, from Red river to the Rio Grande, speak of refreshing rains, and represent the crops as highly promising. The complaints made a few weeks ago appear to be entirely forgotten."

The Bastrop Advertiser of the 9th inst. says if nothing supervenes to destroy the cotton crop before it can mature, the planters of this county will make more cotton than they can possibly secure. Showers of rain have of late been frequent, and the weather most favorable to the growth of crops. There will be at least double the crop of last year. The corn crop, too, never looked finer. The only question will be, as it was last year, how to dispose of it at remunerative profits.

The Advertiser understands the wheat crop in the upper country, in the vicinity of Georgetown, is very abundant. A gentleman from Virginia, and one who knows what good wheat is, who has been lately through that section, says it will compare both in quantity and quality, with any he ever saw in Virginia. What can we not produce in Texas?

The Southwestern American of the 8th inst. says the crops in Bell county are fine. The seasons have been good, latterly. The wheat crop is fair, and mostly harvested. A great many new farms have been opened. Emigration has not ceased. The last twelve months have quite doubled the population.

The Austin State Gazette of the same date says that city and the surrounding country was visited on Thursday last with a very heavy rain. The ground is now soaked so that corn crops cannot suffer for rain before they are fully matured.

The editor of the Bastrop Advertiser had an interview not long since with Capt. Hoddenman, of Cincinnati, in relation to the inducements presented to the enterprising for navigating the Colorado river. Capt H., from what he has seen of this river, has no reason to doubt but that it may be navigated with immense profit, both to those who will engage in the enterprise, and to the country. He thinks it, as a natural river, fully equal to the Arkansas, upon which he was engaged in the early period of its navigation. He has no doubt but it would at this time be in successful navigation, were it not for the obstructions at its mouth.

The Gonzales Enquirer learns that a few days since, as Mr. Miller, of Peach Creek, was riding, not far from home, a large panther suddenly sprang upon him from the branches of a tree, dragged him from his horse and scratched his shoulder and face quite severely. After a short but vigorous struggle, Mr. M. obtained some advantage over his savage assailant and struck him several times with his gun, whereupon his panthership concluded that he had enough of the fight and decamped, leaving our worthy friend master of the field.

The Republican informs us that the measles has prevailed for several weeks past in Marshall and vicinity, as well as other parts of Harrison county. Some deaths have occurred.

The Victoria Advocate of the 2d instant says the crops in that and the adjoining counties bid fair to be unusually good this season.

The Marshall Republican of the 2d instant says every thing seems to be pushing up. The corn looks exceedingly bad. There will be nothing like the yield anticipated. A favorable fall may bring out the cotton; from present indications, however, it is fated to believe that the crop will be quite short.

FLORIDA CROPS—COTTON.—An unusual quantity of this staple has been put under culture. More seed has been put in the ground this year than in any two successive seasons previous. The excessive drouth during the spring will shorten the crop somewhat, but not enough to inflict any serious loss on the planters, or injure the quality and texture of the cotton.

COAL.—A short crop of this article is anticipated throughout the State. The drouth has so affected the plants that not more than half a crop will be made, and we shall have to look abroad for our grain this year.

TOBACCO.—Very little tobacco has been planted, and most of that for private use, except in Gadsden county, where the crops look well, and a full one is looked for.

The lumber business on the St. Johns and at Jacksonville is very prosperous, and many new mills are being constructed.

POSTAGE ENVELOPES.—The New York Journal of Commerce says:

The Postmaster General has authorized Mr. Nesbit, the contractor, to leave the points of the envelopes without any device for the present, reserving the right secured in the contract, of having them ornamented at any time hereafter that he may deem it expedient. The Department has also authorized the contractor to manufacture a quantity of envelopes of a larger size than those hitherto used, together with a quantity a size smaller.

Our New York and Philadelphia exchanges are complaining bitterly of the high prices of beef in the markets of those cities. The Philadelphia Ledger of the 9th attributes the scarcity and consequent high price to the number of cattle and quantities of other stock driven from Illinois and Missouri and other Western States, and says:

Before the discovery of the gold mines, there was no market for this Western stock, except at New Orleans, or here in the East.

These being the chief causes of the high price of beef, there is no prospect of its cheapening while the causes continue; and the best informed stock-raisers and dealers in the West see no chance of any change, from reduced exportation, for four or five years at least. From the same cause, horses and mules also are dear, and will probably remain dear for years to come. Cattle, horses and mules, in fact, are products of slow growth: they cannot, like grain, be brought into the market within the year; but a scarcity in them having once occurred, several seasons are required to supply the deficiency.

BANKS IN THE UNITED STATES.—By a tabular statement in the money article of the New York Herald, it appears that there existed in 1852, 940 Banks in the United States, with an aggregate capital of $310,785,211; their circulation was $169,173,124; specie $51,683,974; and loans $486,857,236. The article says further:

This is very good so far as it goes. It shows that, after all, there has not been such an enormous expansion as is generally supposed. It shows that in 1852 the line of discounts was less than in 1836, sixteen years before. That capital and circulation were larger, but by no means so large as they should have been in view of the immense increase in the commercial operations of the country, our increase in population, and the great addition to the amount of property created within that period. On the other hand, the expansion in private credits has been very great, which is not shown by bank returns. The metallic currency of the country has largely increased in volume, and the circulating medium is much more valuable than it used to be. The banks of several States in the Union have, within the past three years, been prohibited by special acts of the Legislature from issuing or circulating bills below the denomination of five dollars, which has called into active circulation a very large amount of gold and silver. This has reduced the power of banks in influencing prices by contracting or expanding the paper currency. [Exchange.

A MONSTER CHERRY TREE.—The N. Y. Evening Post says there is in the town of Shawangunk, Ulster county, on the premises of John Bruyn, Esq., a cherry tree of such size, beauty and productiveness as cannot, perhaps, be excelled in our country. The tree measures thirteen feet in circumference around the trunk, immediately under the limbs, and fifty feet across the extreme point of one limb to that of another immediately opposite. It cannot be less than forty-five feet in height. It is in full bearing, and is estimated to produce a wagon load of fruit in one season.

THE CHOLERA IN CUBA.—The accounts from the interior of Cuba are quite disheartening. On one plantation they have lost 280 negroes from cholera. The Chinese have also suffered terribly. In some instances the whole number taken on the estate have been swept off.

FATAL MISTAKE.—The Louisville Journal of the 12th says:

A few days since several of the hands of crew on the steamer Franklin Pierce, while aground in the Ohio river, tapped a cask of whisky, as they supposed, in the hold of the boat, and drank pretty freely of its contents. The liquor made them dreadfully sick, and two of the party died in convulsions. One of the others was not expected to live at the last accounts, and a fourth, who fortunately drank a small portion of the liquor, recovered. He was brought to this city yesterday on the Republic.

The Franklin Pierce was on her way to this port and Cincinnati, with a cargo for New Orleans, and grounded at Harricans Island. These men were stealing the whisky from the hold to drink; and instead of whisky, as they supposed, the barrel being thus marked, they imbibed some poisonous drug, which brought a speedy retribution upon their heads.

DEMOLITION OF BROCK'S MONUMENT AT QUEENSTON.—The celebrated land mark on the Queenston Heights, Canada, erected in memory of Sir Isaac Brock, who fell on that field October 13, 1812, was on the 9th inst. felled to the ground. An ineffectual attempt had been made to blow it up the day before. It was found necessary to use a second blast, which shivered the shaft into atoms. It was done by direction of the British Government, who will erect a new and beautiful monument in its place.

A cow in Johnsonville, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, within seven days, gave 375 quarts of milk, from which fourteen pounds of butter were churned. In addition to this an abundance of milk and cream were used by the family. This same cow, the present spring, raised a calf that at the age of five weeks, weighed 187 pounds. During the time the calf was with her, she also made fifteen and a half pounds of butter. She had no extra feed, her feed being pasture and five quarts of meal per day.

VISITORS AT OLD POINT.—Ex-President Tyler and a number of distinguished guests are at Old Point, and it is stated in the Norfolk Argus that orders have been received at the Navy Yard to get in readiness the steamer Engineer, for the purpose of conveying President Pierce and his family from Washington to Old Point Comfort, probably next week. The White House is at present in utter confusion, in consequence of the renovation and repairs it is now undergoing; and it is the intention of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, it is said, to remain at Old Point until the repairs are finished.

BIRTH PLACE OF HENRY CLAY FOR SALE.—We learn from the Richmond Enquirer that the farm known as "Clay Spring," in Hanover county, Va., and upon which the orator and statesman Henry Clay was born, is offered for sale by its present owner, Mr. William B. Dabney.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE OFFICE,
Saturday Morning, July 23, 1853.

The past week has been a quiet one in our market, made so in a great measure by want of supplies, and particularly with regard to Western produce. Flour, Corn, Bacon, Lard and Whisky have advanced, and Tobacco has sold at very full prices. The Cotton market has also been firm, notwithstanding the moderate demand for that staple. Telegraphic communication has been interrupted except at short intervals throughout the week, and later accounts from Europe by the Franklin and Europa have been prevented from reaching us. Advices by the former came to hand yesterday at noon, and were published in the evening papers. Her accounts embrace Liverpool dates to the 5th instant, and represent the Cotton market firm and buoyant, with a slight improvement in the rates for Middling qualities. No quotations were given. The sales of the three business days preceding the Franklin's departure were 25,000 bales, of which 6000 were taken for export and 5000 for speculation, leaving about 14,000 bales for the trade. Flour continued in good request, and prices maintained an upward tendency, notwithstanding a large increase of imports. Western Canal was quoted at 26s 6d@27s, and Baltimore brands at 28s 6d ₱ bbl. Corn had also further advanced, and closed on Tuesday at 81s for Yellow and 82s@82s 3d ₱ quarter for White. Lard was in demand, and prices had advanced 1s ₱ cwt. The transfers Cotton market had been more active. The sales of the 4th inst. are stated at 1750 bales, and of the 5th at 800 bales, the closing rates being 62@97 francs for extremes.

COTTON—The Cotton market opened on Saturday morning with a rather languid appearance, and during the day barely 800 bales found purchasers. On Monday there was rather more animation in the demand, and about 1800 bales changed hands without any change of moment in prices. There was less inquiry on Tuesday, and the sales were limited to 600 bales, and on Wednesday and Thursday together, only about 2000 bales were taken. Yesterday there was still less animation, and only about 400 bales changed hands, making the total business of the week 5600 bales. Prices are without any material alteration, and we still quote as below.

The receipts of the week are 1960 bales, against 2198 bales for the corresponding period last year, and in the total receipts at this port the increase, compared with last year, is 222 773 bales.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	—@—	Middling Fair	11½@11¾
Ordinary	8¼@ 9	Fair	—@—
Middling	9¾@10¾	Good Fair	—@—
Good Middling	11 @11½	Good and Fine	—@—

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A MOCK EPIC.

The reader will be amused, in spite of himself, at the ingenious quaintness and simplicity of the following fiction, of dialogues and at the same time we well told:

From the Knickerbocker Magazine.

It would have been quite easy on the part of Mr. C. Cockin Simpkins that excluded the following stirring "poem" from the columns of "The Quiz Library Gem" We take an early occasion to do justice to the talents of the author, C. K. Pepper, Esq., who writes us that he has given the hydraulic measure because, next to hydrostatics, he considers it the most effectual:

"CHAPTER: A COLLISION BETWEEN A ALEGAITER AND A WATER-SNAIR: TRITCHED BY THE WATER-SNAIR: DEATH OF THE ALEGAITER:"

"There is an land on a river lying,
Which runs into Gastonaly, a warm country
Lying near the Tropicks; covered with sand;
Near and there a symptom of a Wilow,
Hanging of its umbragious limbs and branches
Over the clear stream meandering far below.
This was the House of the new sliest Alegaiter,
Where such a his other element consign'd:
Near he would set upon his eg, a sleep
With I ey observant of his said other pacing
Objects: a while it kept a going on so;
Fearless of danger was the hapy Alegaiter!
But a last! in an evil our he was forced to Wake: that dreme of His was two sweet for him.
I see rising the sun arose with unusual splender,
Which also did our Alegaiter, coming from the water,
His scaile a-flinging of the rais of the sun back
To the fountain-head which tha originly sprung.
But having had nothing to eal for some time, he
Was sleep and gaged. In a short time, widely,
Unfolding soon a wealth of pert-white teth,
The rais of the sun soon shot his sinister ey
Discovers of their mutooal splender and warmth
The Evil One (which I see) was now come;
Evidently a good chans for a water-Snaik
Of the large Specie, whitch soon apeared
Into the horison, near the bank where repose'd
Calmly in slepe the Alegaiter before spoken of.
About 60 foot was his Length (not the 'gaiter)
And he was aperiently a well-proportioned Snaik.
When he was all ashore he glared upon
The Hand with aproval, but was soon
Astonished with the view and lost to wonder' (from Wade)
(For just then he began for to see the Alegaiter.)
Being a natural Enemy of his'n, he worked hisself
Into a fury, also a al position.
Before the Alegaiter well conild ope
His eye (in other words, preceve his danger,)
The Snaik had enveloped his body just 19
Times with 'foulds voloconinus and vast' (from Milton)
And had tore off several scails in the confusion,
Besides spreding him awfully onto his stomic.
Just then, by a fortitate turn in his stairs,
He ceased into his mouth the careles tale
Of the unrelenting water-Snaik! Cross desperate,
He, feeling that his tale was fast squeesed
Terrible, while they roaled all over tha Hand.

* * * * * * * * *

It was a well-conducted Afair: an noise
Disturbed the harmony of the Seen, except
Once when a Wilow was shaped into by the roaling.
Each of the combateace had'nt a minit for holering.
So the conflict was naterally tremenjous!
But soon by grate fource the tale was bit complete-
Ly off: but the eggsertion was too much
For his delicate Constitution: he felt a compression
Onto his chest, and generaly over his body:
When he escpred his brething, it was with grata
Difficulty that he felt inspir'd once more.
Of course this State must sufer a revolcotion.
So the Alegaiter gave but a yel, and eggsire'd.
The water-Snaik realed hiself off and survay'd,
For my 10 minits, the condition of
His fo: then wondering what made his tale hart
He study went off for to cool."

CALCASIEU AND ITS INHABITANTS.

BY M. A. W.

CHAPTER V.

The Creole habitans are generally extremely loquacious, but any allusion to the pirates who formerly infested the laks they will take refuge in a stolid silence and a "je ne sais rien" kind of air, which is not surprising when we consider their close connection with the buccaneers. It is also generally known that one or two of their most venerable compatriots have not always led the quiet and monotonous life of a "vechar" of the prairies; but as the reputation of a pirate would not at the present time be the most respectable heritage for their children they preserve a prudent silence upon the former events of their lifs, and only when "en boisson" do they condescend to claim the acquiescence of Lafitte and Black Beard.

Hackberry, on Lake Calcasieu, was a stronghold of John Teach, or Téche, better known by the name of Black Beard. He made it a deposit for his valuables and a place of concealment for the prisoners whom he did not wish to destroy. It is hardly possible to realize that lovely island with its embowering trees, its thickets of the Acacia Farnesiana, which perfums the air with a rich and pungent odor, could have ever been the scene of the wild orgies of the most abandoned set of miscreants who ever polluted the earth.

There, according to popular tradition, Black Beard caused one of his men who had displeased him, to be stripped, his body smeared with honey, and well secured to a tree, where he left him, to be destroyed by musquitoes and other insects. Certainly if the musquitoes of those days resembled in numbers and venom the present generation, which every East wind brings from the marshes, the poor wretch must have had but a short lease of tortured life.

Lafitte was better known in Calcasieu as a contrabandist than as a pirate. The few acts of violence which he committed within the cognizance of the inhabitants seem to have proceeded more from a desire to secure his own authority against the insubordination of his lawless crew than from a wanton and unjustifiable love of cruelty. He found Calcasieu a escret and profitable market for the disposal of slaves and contraband articles which he brought here in great numbers and quantity, and which were purchased by the wealthy planters of the adjacent parishes, at a little more than a quarter of their actual value.

He has left some traces of his frequent visits to this place. The trees under which he buried his treasures are still to be seen with their appropriate marks, although the money has long since vanished. One spot on the Calcasieu river known by the name of "L'Ile d'Argent, (Money Hill,) abounds in these landmarks, and, more labor and time have been vainly spent there in digging for chimerical treasure than would have sufficed to cultivate one of the most extensive plantations in Louisiana.

It is, probably, owing to tha unforgotten wealth of the buccaneers that the imagination of the Calcasieuite so deeply imbued with images of golden splendor; In a miserable havel, in want of the commonest necessaries of life, he consoles himself for the abject poverty of his mélange by the unbounded extravagance of his fancy. The thirsty traveler will turn with disappointment from the deceitful mirage which leads his weary steps astray, but the Calcasien, on the contrary, seems to find the shadow of a substance a sufficient consolation for the actual evils which address themselves to his every sense. He shuts his eyes to the stern reality and passes his life in hopes that the discovery of some buried hoard may convert into actual viands the unsubstantial enjoyments of his Barmecide feast. If ynn speak of him of the sterility of the soil which he half cultivates, he will answer you by the story of a brig which lies at the bottom of Black Bayou, filled with gold and jewels, which is to be discovered by some beautiful maiden, and at her signal rise from the waters and deposit its treasures at her feet; or you will hear of the golden cannon of Spanish doubloons concealed by the pirates on some inaccessible island, to which, however, some patron saint may direct his steps.

The beggar who dreams himself a king differs in nothing from the actual monarch, save in the shortness of his reign; but the Calcasien has discovered the rare art of prolonging the dream through the whole period of a needy existence. The secret lies in his indolence, which finds it easier to imagine the possession of a plentiful meal than to work hard to obtain one. Give him a tree to shade him from the summer sun, a cracked fiddle to "attune his soul to harmony," an innumerable quantity of shuck cigars, and a sturdy wife to plow the fields, and you have before you the picture of a contented philosopher in all the enjoyment of the dolce far niente of life. His pleasure can only be increased by becoming the listener to some wonderful legend, for a tale of the marvelous, filled with all kinds of supernatural incongruities, is the "Open Sesame" to his heart. He will rejoice with unutterable satisfaction at the triumphs of Jack, the Giant Killer, and equal, if not surpass, that doughty hero, in the relation of his own encounters with the evil spirits, "white, black and gray," whom, he positively asserts, are the cause of every misfortune under the sun. The very idea of natural causes he rejects as an impiety or absurdity not to be listened to, and in truth he finds it most convenient to lay the weight of his own misdemeanors upon this invisible gentry, the scape-goats of his every sin of omission or commission. They sometimes assume the shape of a wolf to devour the sheep which he had neglected to secure in their fold, or bring a scarcity of the grain which his indolence had refused to cultivate.

Argument is worse than useless against this cherished belief. His father or grandfather were the witnesses or victims of supernatural visitations, and how can he be so undutiful as to doubt their word. "Ah," he will exclaim, "you are incredule," but you have never heard the tronbles which want of feith brought upon L'Amirand."

CHAPTER VI.

L'Amirand was a native of France, who, however, had past the greater part of a long life in Calcasieu. Like his countrymen, in general, he was skeptical upon every subject which could not present itself in a tangible, or at least a reasonable form. He never applied to the conjurors for charms to cure his own distempers or those of his beasts, and in fact classed that very respectable community and their caballistic words under the comprehensive titles of "betes et betises." They vainly threatened him with manifestations of their potent displeasure—he would laughingly reply, "If you bring the charbon among my cattle to-morrow, and cure my wife of her scolding propensities, I will believe every word you say."

In pursuance with a yearly custom he visited the Gulf shore one autumn for the purpose of hunting and fishing, but old age had brought with it such an increase of corpulence that he was compelled to take with him an assistant in the person of a Catalonian—solemn, superstitious and vindictive. A more uncongenial companion the mirth-loving old man could not have chosen; but at last, from the peculiarities which at first excited his impatience, he contrived to extract an unfailing fund of amusement—of amusement, too, adapted to his peculiar taste. He related to the credulous Spaniard all the most extraordinary events which had occurred at the place to which they were bound. The great flood which had swept off all the inhabitants, whose voices were heard at midnight on the anniversary of their deaths, moaning around their homesteads and petitioning the stranger for christian burial. He told him also of the pirate Johnson, who, stained with the most attrocious crimes, had chosen a residence on a wild and uninhabited part of the coast, there dug his grave, and when he found death approaching had rolled himself into it, and his bleached skeleton was found years afterwards with the fingers clasped and raised towards heaven, as if imploring that mercy which in life he had never shown.

With these and similar tales the tedium of their voyage was beguiled, and L'Amirand chuckled inwardly at the effect they produced upon the Spaniard, who, with staring eyes, sat in trembling silence, only interrupting the narrator by extravagant ejaculations of horror. He regretted from the bottom of his soul having undertaken a journey which would bring him to the theatre of these awful events, and perhaps inflict upon him visitations of a nature which he had dreaded and avoided all his life. When the boat touched the shore he threw a terrified glance around as if he expected the musquite bushes to disclose some extraordinary spectre; but, as if to confirm his fears, they had hardly proceeded ten paces towards the camp when they beheld at their feet a human skull which had been swept in by the tide.

"Ah, voila," cried L'Amirand, "camarada, here is one of your countrymen, see how grave and silent he is. So saying, he irreverently kicked the skull towards his companion, who sunk on his knees and offered to every saint in the celendar petitions for this repose of the soul whose unquiet tenement had not even found rest at the bottom of the sea.

L'Amirand stood at a little distance eojoying the dismay and genuflections of his companion, when an idea struck him which he hastened to put in execution. He ordered the Spaniard to a point of land at some little distance, from whence he affirmed he could see and destroy more game than on any other spot on the coast. With some reluctance the man obeyed, and no sooner had he turned his back than L'Amirand seized the skull, which he carried to his camp, and with the help of a long pole, a sheet, and some pine splinters, arranged a very respectable apparatus of terror. When he had completed his preparations, he placed the spectre in a conspicuous place and imposing attitude, and sauntered off to rejoin the Spaniard, to whom he excused his delay by mentioning the trouble he had found in securing his boat on the marshy bank.

It was dark when they returned to camp, and L'Amirand purposely drew back in order to give the Spaniard the advantage of the first look at the ghastly spectacle. No sooner did it meet his eyes than with an appalling shriek he fell prostrate to the ground in strong convulsions. He was raised by the old man, who now deeply regretted the unfortunate consequence of his practical joke, and who now attempted to soothe his victim by a relation of the means he had employed to produce tha illusion.

"You will be acoursed for this implous deed," said the Spaniard, solemnly. "The vengeance of the dead is terrible; it will pursue you standing or sitting, sleeping or walking, and as you have desecrated these remains so will your own skull be denied Christian burial, and kicked like a foot-ball by every passer-by."

There was something decidedly unpleasant in this last malediction; for, although a skeptic, L'Amirand had not yet arrived at that point of philosophical indifference which could contemplate with "sang froid" such a contemptuous treatment of the seat of reason. He tried to laugh off the whole affair, and by degrees his companion seemed to have forgotten the transaction. They remained for a few days only at the Gulf, and on their return home, L'Amirand avoided all mention of the subject to his wife and children, for he knew their censure and loquacity would know no bounds; and, to tell the truth, he began to think the story did not redound much to his own credit. The Spaniard, whom he had engaged as a laborer on the farm, was also silent, for reasons best known to himself.

One dark, cold and rainy night, a few weeks after his return home, L'Amirand, ou his return from the well, was thrown on the ground by an invisible hand, drenched with water, rolled in the mud, and so severely beaten that it was with difficulty he could reach tha house. None could imagine who had been guilty of this assault, for, with the exception of the conjurers, his natural enemies, the old man was generally beloved. They, too, were not in the parish, and although he looked ruefully at the Spaniard, the concern expressed by the latter disarmed his suspicions. Moreover, he had been the first to meet him at the door on that memorable night.

Groaning in body and spirit, tha old man laid down on his bed, but about midnight he was pulled violently on the floor, and the same invisible hand bestowed so many twitches and pinches upon his face that his cries soon aroused the household. When lights were brought nothing was to be seen but the visible marks of the intruder's fingers on his bruised and angry visage, and his poor wife in the last atage of terror, who had concealed herself under the bed clothes during tho engagement.

This scene was but the commencement of a series of petty persecutions, which seemed to be pursued regularly and systematically, and at last included the whole family in their operations. Their clothes were burned, their noses tweaked, their hair pulled, stones thrown at them from mysterious hands, strange whisperings heard in their ears, and every morning the most doleful and haggard faces assembled at the breakfast table to hear and relate the annoyances of the past night.

L'Amirand could bear it no longer; from a corpulent, jolly old man, he had dwindled away to a shadow of his former self; his wife, equally corpulent and equally jolly, was in the same predicament; his daughter's beauty was spoiled, and his sons were afraid to move a step in the dark. He assembled a council of his neighbors, who immediately proposed keeping a vigil with them that night to discover the cause of the nocturnal visitation. At the head of these bold spirits was a pompous dictatorial Creole, who expressed loudly his opinion that it was all nonsense, the effects of imagination, and if there was anything in it he was the man to find it out. Towards midnight, however, his loquacity deserted him, and he was seen cowering around the fire place with the rest of the company. Terrified glances were cast around, when, suddenly, a loud yell was heard at the door. The intrepid band waited no louger; with the bonetter at their head, they precipitated themselves through the shutterless window, and rushed across the prairie at race-horse speed, leaving the haunted family to their unearthly visitants. They had not proceeded very far when they perceived they had brought with them the cause of the disturbance in the shape of a hound belonging to their gallant captain, who had raised his well known voice to intimate to his master his presence at tha door.

L'Amirand, thus deprived of the assistance and support of his friends, began to tax his own brain for the cause of these visitations. He bethought him at last that as he had lost two wives in the house, it was probably their perturbed spirits who were giving him all this trouble. At the instance of his family he sent for holy water, with which he sprinkled the apartments; but this, instead of laying the ghost, only seemed to lend fresh vigor to their persecutions.

At last, when he had actually given up to despair, the Spaniard very demurely inquired if he had ever thought that all these pranks might have been the revenge of the skull at the sea shore.

"C'est Cela!" exclaimed L'Amirand, eagerly. "You have discovered the secret; I will give you twenty dollars, my good friend, to take to Opelousas, where you will have masses said for the soul of that 'pauvre diable.'"

The Spaniard willingly departed, and it is needless to add that from that day the whole family were freed from the persecutors; but a great change had taken place in the cherished prejudices of L'Amirand. He had been fairly driven from his stronghold of skepticism by a sad experience, and he now rushed to the extreme of credulity. At the most extravagant and absurd propositions he would only shake his head and say mournfully: "I did not once believe those things, but I was punished for my want of faith; I now donbt nothing for I would not willingly renew the miseries of a haunted house."

CHAPTER VII.

There are but few remarks to be made upon the face of the country, or natural productions of Calcasieu. The soil is, in most places, sterile, although there can be found no prospect more pleasing to the eye than the vast prairies which border on tha lake.

In the spring or summer their green and undulating surface, diversified by flowers of every hue, from the brilliant Phlox to the modest Verbena, convey to the mind a refreshing sense of coolness and verdure. Here and there a little oasis of trees remove the monotony inseparable from a level and uniform surface, while large herds of cattle, grazing in every direction, are the animated accessaries to this landscape of quiet and dreamy loveliness.

"The Acacia Farnisiana is generally found on the banks of streams. Like most of the species, it is of a gnarled and crooked growth, but when in bloom its pendant branches, with its feathery leaves and golden balls of a rich and pungent odor, give it the first place among the indigenous productions of the country. An aquatic plant, the Lotus, is also remarkable for its beauty and singularity. The name Lotus has occasioned such a diversity of opinion, and has been applied to such a variety of plants, that it is necessary to specify the one to which I have reference belongs to that class of plants mentioned by Herodotus; to describe it, it is only necessary to transcribe his words:

"There is a species of the Lotus, which grows in the Nile, resembling a rose. The fruit which grows from the bottom of the root is like a wasp's nest, and it is found to contain a number of kernals, tha size of an olive stone, which are very grateful, either fresh or dried."

The snowy chalice and graceful growth of this singular flower fully justify the poetical idea of the Egyptians, who represented the dawn of day by a young boy sitting or sleeping "on the flushed bosom of a Lotus flower."

The kernels of the fruit are, in Calcasieu, employed for medicinal purposes, and are considered a sovereign remedy for nausea, heartburn, oto.

The Marsh Mallow (Althea Officinalis) is found here in great quantities, covering miles in extent with its showy blossom; and the Tarragon (Solidago Odora) with its spicy odor and aromatic taste, form no inconsiderable part of the luxuriant vegetation which borders on the lake.

Further in the interior the natural productions become scanty, and the country assumes a wilder and sterner aspect. Towards the East, "la grand prairie" stretches out its desolate and arid waste, unenlivened, for thirty or forty miles, by a single tree, or even shrub, to form a landmark to guide the bewildered traveler. Surrounded on every side by interminable marshes, he is compelled to follow a narrow and winding ridge, so low as to be hardly discernible from the adjacent bog. The slightest deviation from this course will leave him in a morass, over which, in wet weather, might well be inscribed the "Lasciato ogni esperenza" of Dante.

I never traverse this desert without ceasing to wonder at the little intercourse kept up by the Calcasien with his neighbors. The few New Englanders who have found their way to this "ultima thule" seem to regard impassable roads as a mere trifle, but they would carry to the Deserts of Arabia the same go-ahead and energetic spirit which would care nothing for any difficulty that would not impose an insuperable barrier to their further progress. The shy and indolent Creole, however, feels little or no inclination to overstep the limits which would bring him in contact with a race distinct in language, manners and habits, from himself. He could not live contentedly out of Calcasieu, and in fact resembles many of the plants of his native prairies, to which the scorching rays of an unclouded sun are necessary to produce development, and even to ensure vitality.

I cannot take a final leave of Calcasieu and its Inhabitants without expressing an earnest hope that when the Catholic or Protestant Propagandist have completely civilized and converted Africa and every tribe and kingdom of "heathenesse," they will recollect that in their very midst, at their door, is to be found a society of many hundred souls, the greater number of whom have never seen or entered a place of public worship—to whom the tidings of salvation have been handed down from generation to generation in so garbled a form, as rather to resemble the mysterious fragments of an incomprehensible legend, than a soul-inspiring truth. Among those in particular of European parentage are to be found many of capacious and powerful intellect, quick wit, and an ardent desire for improvement—to those instruction would lend but the necessary and final touch to the uncut gem, which, ill-set and unpolished, still betrays, through every disadvantage, its natural lustre.

POETRY, PUNNING, AND PIETY.—When the Hon. Mrs. Norton was applied to, on Hood's death, for a contribution to the fund then raised for his destitute widow, and headed by Sir Robert Peel with the munificent donation of £50, promptly sent a liberal subscription, with the following lines, (never before published:)

"To cheer the widow's heart in her distress,
To make provisions for the fatherless,
Is but a Christian's duty, and none should Resist the heart appeal of Widow Hood."

Poetry, punning, and piety, all of the genuine sort, are not often thus happily united.

JAPANESE MARRIAGES.—A very singular custom at the marriage of the Japanese is, that the teeth of the brids are made black by some corrosive liquid. The teeth remain black ever after, and serve to show that the woman is married or a widow. Another circumstance is, at the birth of every child, to plant a tree in the garden or court yard, which attains its full growth in as many years as a man requires to be mature for the duties of marriage. When he marries the tree is cut down, and the wood is made into obesis and boxes to contain the clothes and other things which are made for the new married couple. The Japanese may marry as often as they please; marriages with sisters are prohibited, but they can marry any other relative.

NAILS GROWING IN THE FLESH.—A late writer in the Ohio Cultivator gives the following remedy:

Cut a notch in the middle of the nail every time the nail is pained. The disposition to close the notch draws the nail from the sides. It cured mine after I had suffered weeks with its festering.

Throughout the whole of Virginia, where internal improvements have thus far penetrated, there has been a great advance in the price of lands. In many counties, particularly of the West, the advance has been from 50 to 100 per cent.

AN EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERY.—The attention of men of science, in Paris, has been drawn to no extraordinary discovery made in a neighboring department. A grave digger, in throwing up some earth, came upon a body in a state of perfect preservation. On examination it proved to be that of an individual buried thirty seven years ago. He had died from the effects of the bite of a mad dog. The shroud and the coffin had fallen to dust, but the body remained intact. This is the third exhumation made within twenty years, of bodies of the victims of hydrophobia, under similar circumstances; and it would really seem that they are beyond the reach of decomposition. The registry of deaths was consulted, and no mention of the embalment of the body was found.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The N. Y. Tribune of the 9th inst. contains the following description of this edifice. It is the most satisfactory we have seen. The Tribune says:

"The edifice starts in its delicate beauty from the earth like the imagining of a happy vision. Viewed at a distance, its burnished dome resembles a half-disclosed balloon, as large as a cathedral, but light, brilliant, and seemingly ready to burst its bands and soar aloft. In every sense the Crystal Palace is admirable. To us on this side of the water it is original. Nothing like its shape, materials, or effect has been presented to us. If it were to contain nothing, it would alone be an absorbing attraction, and he beyond all else in New York, an architectural curiosity.

The building is two stories high. The first is in the form of an octegon, the second of a Greek cross. The centre of this is a dome 148 feet high. The four corners of the octagon are furnished each with two towers seventy feet high. These towers support flagstaffs, adding to the lightness of their appearance. The construction of the building is similar to that of the original in London, as far as the connection of iron columns, girders, and so forth, go; but the principal parts of the rest, the dome included, is fashioned by the architects, Messrs. Carstensen and Gildermeister, who devised the plan of the whole structure as well as the details. The main building covers 173,000 squire feet, galleries included; and the additional builing 33,000, being 200,000 feet in all. The additional building is composed of a first and a second story gallery 21 feet broad and 450 feet long, lit from above, the sides being quite closed up, so as to form a suitable place to exhibit pictures and statues. This additional building is connected with the main building by two one-story wings, which contain the refreshment rooms, and the mineralogical department under the charge of Professor Silliman, Jr.

There are twelve stairways, the ballustrades of which are light iron tracery in accordance with the general spirit of the designs. The stairways are at each point of the compass, on the sides and under the dome. The great circular windows, facing at four points, add much to the charm of the effect.

Walls, properly speaking, the building, has not, being enclosed with glass sustained by iron pillars. This vast mass of crystal occupies 45,000 squars feet.

The cast-iron weighs 1,200 tons, the wrought, 200. Each pena of glass is 16 by 38 inches. The prevailing style of the architecture is Moorish and Byzantine in its decorations. The ceilings are painted in octagons, in blue, white, and cream-color. A portion of the ceiling will not be finished and will reveal the rafter and girders, which is a drawback on the general effect.

The decorative artist is Mr. Greenough. The offices of the directors and artists are in imitation of satin-wood, their appearance being very neat.

The entrances of the Palace are three, all alike, one on the Sixth avenue, one on Fortieth and one on Forty-second street. Each entrance is forty-seven feet wide, the central nave is forty-one feet wide, and the aisles fifty-four feet. Within, at the entrance, the visitor sees an arched nave forty-one feet wide, sixty-seven feet high and three hundred feet long. The dome is one hundred feet across. The building, though not nearly so large as that of London, is superior in architectural beauty. It is a magnificent ornament to the city, and should be purchased by the Council as a permanent property. Various orations could be fitly celebrated in it. The work assures a national renown to the architects, Messrs. Carsteasen and Gildermeister.

The contributors will amount to about six thousand. Six thousand specimens of the superlative genius and industry of all nations. What a world of detail, of division of labor, of thought, anxiety, toil, enthusiasm, invention, is here concentrated! How many eyes have strained, fingers plied, muscles swelled, nerves quivered, to produce this multitudinous and multiform array of outworkings! What a complexity of interests is here to be exposed! What a congeries of national rivalries, honorably undertaken in witness of the new and beneficent ideas of the time, in opposition to the State hostilities of by-gone history! In this read the brightest contribution to the Crystal Palace, for a richer offering than gold or jewels, is the heart of the age throbbing with love.

U. S. PUBLIC DEBT.—A Washington correspondent of the New York Courier, in a recent letter, furnishes the following items of interest in relation to the United States debt:

The amount of public debt, five per cent. of 1843, redeemable on the 1st of July, is estimated at $2,500,000. The amount of this stock outstanding on the 1st July, 1853, was $4526, and the portion redeemed since that date, according to returns, including Saturday last, has been $2,020,000. About $1,600,000 of the outstanding stock is held by the Comptroller of the State of New York, as securities for bank issues. The interest will cease upon the whole of it, whether paid off or not, on the first of the coming month. It is probable that a large amount of the other stock has been redeemed during the past half year, but the Treasury declines to furnish information on the subject. Taking no account of these secret redemptions, the account of the public debt after July 1, 1853, will stand:

Miscellaneous	$1,615,735 50
Loan of 1842, 6 per cent., redeemable Dec. 31, 1862	8,198,680 00
Loan of 1846, 6 per cent., redeemable Nov. 12, 1858	4,999,139 81
Loan of 1847, 6 per cent., redeemable July 1, 1868	25,656,000 00
Loan of 1848, 6 per cent., redeemable July 1, 1868	15,735,000 00
Loan of 1850, 8 per cent., Texan indemnity, Jan. 1, 1865	5,000,000 00
Total	$60,005,161 00

The semi-annual interest payable on these loans, inclusive of that due on the stock of 1843, subject to redemption, is $2,012,693. Nearly the whole of this will be paid in New York, making the total payments for that day, for Government account, from $3,000,000 to $4,500,000.

ANOTHER SLAVE CASE IN CINCINNATI.—Several weeks since we published a statement that a couple of slaves were manumitted by Mr. Orville Thomas, of Louisiana. Recent occurrences induce us to state again the following facts: Mr. Thomas was on his way to the East, and when he arrived here he was told that he would lose his slaves. He then resolved that he would anticipate their designs, if they had any idea of leaving him, and, on the morning he left, he called them before him, and told them they were free, and that he would have their papers made out on his return. They were taken by surprise, and did not seem to express any great degree of joy upon the announcement in which they were so much interested being made to them. On Tuesday morning Mr. Thomas returned, and, as he was about entering the Burnet House, he was met by his boys, who requested the privilege to be taken back again. They protested that they would prefer returning with their master to Louisiana, than to remain in Cincinnati and have their freedom. We afterwards learned that the result was just what Mr. Thomas expected, for he did not believe they could take care of themselves. He received them, and Wednesday morning the party left on the Tishamingo for Louisville, en route for home. [Cin. Gazette, July 8.

HAIR.—A writer in a late number of the London Quarterly Review furnishes the following information on this subject: "London imports about five tons of human hair annually. Black hair comes mainly from Brittany and the south of France, where it is collected principally by one hair merchant, who travels from fair to fair, and buys up and shears the crops of the neighborhood damsels. A traveler in Brittany describes the peasant girls as attending at the fairs with their beautiful tresses, perfectly willing to sell out. He saw several girls sheared, one after another, like a sheep, and as many more standing ready for the shears, with their caps in their hands, and their long hair combed out and hanging to their waists. By the side of the dealer was placed a large basket, into which the successive crops of hair were thrown, each tied up in a wisp by itself. For a head of hair about twenty sous in money is given, or a gaudy handkerchief. This hair is the finest and most silken that can be produced. Light hair comes from Germany, where it is collected by a company of Dutch farmers, who go over to England for orders once a year. And who know from what source come those pendant tresses gleaming in the gas-light, with which our blooming Eves, aptly entangling their snaky coil with their own, tempts our eligible Adams."

INTERESTING MISCELLANY—Interesting Statistics—A gentleman who keeps the run of facts, figures and babies, has just laid before "an inquiring world" the following statistics:

The whole number of languages spoken in the world amount to 3064, viz: 587 in Europe, 937 in Asia, 276 in Africa, and 1364 in America. The inhabitants of our globe profess more than 1000 different religions. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is about 33 years. One-fourth die previous to the age of 7 years, one-half before reaching 17 years of age, and those who pass that age enjoy a felicity (?) refused to one-half the human species. To every 1000 persons, only one reaches one hundred years of age; to every one hundred only six reach the age of 60, and not more than one in 500 live to 80 years of age.

There are on the earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants, and of these 333,333,333 die every year, 91,324 every day, 3730 every hour, 60 every minute, or 1 every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer-lived than the single, and above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Tall men live longer than short ones! Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to being 50 years of age, than men, but fewer afterwards.

The number of marriages is in proportion of 175 to every 1000 individuals. Marriages are more frequent after the equinoxes—that is, during the months of June and December.

Those born in the spring are generally more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day. The number of men capable of working or bearing arms is calculated at one-fourth of the population.

Some of these statements are rather singular, and yet many of them are susceptible of an easy solution. That marriages take place more frequently in June and December, than other months of the year, was just what we have always suspected was the case. Those who marry in June, do so because they can't help it; while those who connubialize in December do so, doubtless, to guard against the chilly pillows which distinguish the frost-bitten months of winter. The matches which come off in June are commonly love-matches, and are brought about by green fields and the contagious influence of boblinks and yellow birds; whilst those which happen in December are brought about; in a degree, by mixing plain mathematics with the market value of flannel under-garments. [N. Y. Dutchman.

A SOUTH CAROLINA GOLD MINE.—We had the pleasure of meeting and conversing with Mr. Dorn, a few days past, when on a visit to Greenville, and of learning from him some particulars in relation to his valuable gold mine in Abbeville. Much as we had previously heard of the incalculable value of this property, we were astounded at some of the facts stated by Mr. D. It may be as well to state that Mr. Dorn is a plain unostentatious gentleman and a man of truth, which is better than all his wealth. Therefore his statements may be implicitly relied upon.

Mr. D. informed us that he had within the last eighteen months, with a small force, taken from his mine some three hundred thousand dollars; that he had traced the vein a mile and a quarter on his land; that it was fifteen feet wide and we forget how many feet deep; that there was gold most frequently discoverable from the surface to the rich vein below. Mr Dorn has got as much as $1,000 from one bushel of dirt, and has been, if we recollect aright, offered a million or two dollars for one-half of his mine, which he very wisely declined taking. His mine is manifestly worth an indefinite number of millions, and the poprietor is unquestionably the richest man in America; perhaps the richest, and, ladies, a good-looking and agreeable bachelor, also! We trust Mr. Dorn will not fail to attend the Ladies' Presbyterian Fair at this place, bringing with him the products of a bushel of that dirt for the benefit of the church, and we know several of our beautiful girls envy one of whom would alone be a fair exchange for his hand and gold-mine. [Greenville Mountaineer.

THE WAY RAILROADS ARE BUILT IN GEORGIA. The way railroads are made in Georgia has an air of novelty. The contract for the railroad from Brunswick to Thomasville, 136 miles long, and the road from the latter place to Albany, Georgia, 58 miles more, including iron, equipments, and all, is only $13,000 per mile. Collins & Alexander, whose trade is making railroads in the South, are the contractors. They contract for these large jobs by the wholesale, and retail them out to planters and others on the line. These planters subscribe for so much stock; give their notes, payable when the road is made, and then generally contract, under Collins & Alexander, on sections nearest their plantation, to furnish cross-ties, and do what grading is to be done; and this work being thus done by their negroes, pays their notes when due, with little or no outlay in money. The same firm have contracted to build a road, 28 miles long, from Thomasville to Tallahasse, Florida, where there is already a road to St. Marks, on the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. These roads are to be completed by July, 1855.

A CITY WITH TWELVE THOUSAND INHABITANTS DESTROYED.—In the foreign news by the Atlantic, it is stated that, on the first of May, the city of Shiraz; in Persia, was destroyed, with twelve thousand of its inhabitants, by the shock of an earthquake. This is the second city in Persia, and in former years had a population of 40,000 persons, but an earthquake in 1824 nearly destroyed it. It was formerly a place of great beauty, and is celebrated by the Persian poet Hafiz, who was a native of Shiraz, for its beauty and fertility. Since the earthquake of 1824, it has greatly declined in both, most of its public structures having been ruined by that calamity.

A farmer's daughter in the State of Maine was visited by a rustic youngster, who finding it difficult to keep up conversation, asked the girl, after an embarrassing silence had prevailed for some time, if she knew "anybody that wanted to buy a shirt?" "No, I don't," she replied, "have you got one to sell?" "Oh, no!" said he, "I only asked to make talk."

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, ... 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews ..... 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
70 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y]

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial, and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition..... $200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PROVIDENCE, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jel1 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe8

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
☞ No. 66 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jy2 1y

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for treatment of ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19, 1853, 6mo.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,
New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DORMAN. W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 26. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 130.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

MARRIAGES.

Much has been written about the odium resting upon unmarried females in the Jewish commonwealth, and with perfect truth; but I always thought it strange that this should be deemed so extraordinary as to call forth so much scribbling, since I have never discovered much difference in public opinion on this subject even among Christians. I believe, as a general thing, a Christian maiden is no more averse to becoming a matron than whilom was her Hebrew sister. The Talmud, it is true, has some very fierce denunciation against all—male and female—who live in "single blessedness;" and I have been told of a rich old [Jewish] bachelor, who died in great agony, for no other reason than because he had neglected to comply with the commandment in Gen. ix: 7.

In former times the Jews married their children very young, and generally betrothed them as soon as they were born. These practices, however, have now pretty well passed away. In most countries on the Continent the Jews still labor under many restrictions, and perhaps the laws relating to marriage are the most tyrannical. Jews are limited to certain towns and villages where they have lived for ages; and in these communities only a limited number of families can reside; and not until the head of one of these dies, or emigrates, can a marriage take place, or a new one be formed. These laws, I suppose, are based on the wise maxim laid down by Monsieur Malthus.

One of the most important personages connected with matrimonial matters is the Shadchon, (vulg, anglicè, coupler.) He is easily coaxed or dreaded by the anxious mammas of marriageable daughters; for you must know that the various arts of that intricate science, styled husband-catching, are not of such modern origin as many of your readers would perhaps imagine; although the modus operandi may vary somewhat in different climes. The Shadchon has a list of all marriageable males and females within his bead, (a district often of a hundred miles round,) with their probable fortunes, and knows pretty well who will suit who. He is always up and doing, proposing a match to the parties concerned, and carrying on all the minor negotiations. He or she (for women are often engaged in this profession,) ascertains what dowry the lady is to receive—for never has it been heard of in Israel that a man, however poor himself, married a wife without a dowry. After all the preliminaries are settled, the gentleman, perhaps for the first time, pays a visit to his intended. If this visit results to their mutual satisfaction, which is usually the case, the engagement is entered into, and the betrothal is celebrated in the presence of the parents and relatives of both parties; contracts are drawn up, stating the amount the lady is to receive, how much the husband will settle upon her, etc. A china cup is then dashed to the ground, and pieces of it sent to all the friends. The sending of wedding cake is now an improvement upon this custom. The origin of this ceremony is somewhat doubtful; but the usual reason assigned is, that those who disturb the union and harmony of the betrothed couple, should be thus cut to pieces. Others think it is done to remind them that Israel is still in captivity, and thus to prevent an undue excess of joy. Every body then congratulates by saying Masel tov, ("Good star"—good luck,) and on the following Sabbath the bridegroom—for so he is styled immediately after betrothal—is called up to the reading of the Law, with the omiuous Hachathan (the groom) appended to his name. In the synagogue of his joy he then has Mishebeirach ("blessings") said for all his friends; and until the day of his wedding he has no more ceremonies to go through.

As the civil authority gives him quite enough to do now. He must procure authenticated certificates of the birth and marriage of his and his wife's grandparents and parents, his parents' certificate of vaccination, as well as his own; and certificates of death in case of the above-mentioned relatives as may have departed this life. Owing to the great difficulty of procuring all these documents, years some times elapse between the betrothal and the wedding. These requirements must be attended to by Christinn, as well as Jew, in most parts of Germany. When every thing is in order, the day is fixed, which is usually a Wednesday, for widows and widowers on Thursday. There is also a great prejudice against marrying in the wane of the moon.

The bridegroom must fast till he receives the benediction, (consecration) usually about noon; then confess his sins, and pray for forgiveness as he assumes his new responsibility. The day is thus very sad till after the ceremony is over. There is a custom—now but little observed, however—of putting a veil over the couple, and throwing several handfuls of wheat over them—a typical wish of fruitfulness.

After this the matrons take the bride in hand, dress her for the approaching ceremony, and cut her hair very short, and hide it beneath a cap or bonnet. And never more must her hair be seen—not even the faintest trace of it—by any woman. They then proceed to the synagogue, usually with music, and here the Rabbi ties the final knot, after repeating a prayer, and then pronouncing the seven blessings. Some times he preaches a sermon appropriate for the occasion. The ceremony is concluded by handing the cup of consecrated wine round to the nearest relatives of the married couple. The exchanging of the rings, giving away the bride, and the bridesmaids and groomsmen, is almost the same as practiced here among us.

The parties then return to the house of the bride; where a sumptuous feast is provided, which is often prolonged till midnight, and some of the guests do get a little drunk, it is considered rather as a meritorious act than otherwise; though, I am glad to say, that these questionable acts of supererogation are getting to be of very rare occurrence. In the midst of their mirth the different guests cause "blessings" to be said by the Hazan, or reader, for their various friends present, who again reciprocate the compliment. If a Rabbi is present, he may be called upon to deliver some Talmud Torah, or extempore exegesis of some Scripture passage. He will get up and take a text, it matters little as to its appositeness, and start various difficulties, which he settles to his entire satisfaction, by quoting various Talmudical authorities. His audience profess to be greatly edified, and though they may understand never a word, they think it very pious merely to listen to the Rabbi, and pay him for his effort.

There is yet another functionary claims our attention on these occasions, that is a species of Merry-andrew, well known as "the fool." He is a great favorite at all Jewish merry-makings; being a tolerable fiddler, he plays the accompaniment to his own verses, which he strings together, and chants off by the hundred, like a genuine improvisatore, though they often be innocent alike of Syntax and Prosody. His wit is usually of the kind known as low, but I have met some who could set the table in a roar, and five minutes after be as pathetic as to draw tears from every eye. It is customary for every relative or guest to make a present to the bridal pair, a laudable custom which originated in a desire of delicately befriending the poor, by giving them in this manner the various articles of household furniture, etc., which they may need. It has now become a national custom, and the rich must take these donations, as well as the poor. The fool arrays these presents by his side, and holds them up one by one, all the while descanting on the virtues of the donor, the gift, and the donee.

Another time-honored and very laudable custom is to distribute the tenth part of the lady's dowry among the [Hebrews] poor, who assemble in great numbers on these occasions from every part of the land. "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord," is a verse much more believed in and acted upon by the Jews than by most Christians. Every pious Jew will keep a strict account of his annual income, and give the tithe to the poor. Many of these poor Jews stroll about the country, from village to village, and present themselves at the houses of their brethren, where they invariably receive alms in money. I have known even some of these very beggars piously give away their tenth. In every Jewish community they have benevolent societies, on a large scale, to succor the needy, and particularly the wandering stranger.

To return from this digression, and finish this long article, I am obliged to acknowledge that there is but little of the romantic in a Jewish marriage, seeing that Cupid is quite a subordinate character to his mightier brother Plutus. But, on the whole, I think they turn out as well as those who are preceded by a five years courtship.

Louisiana. JOSEPHUS.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

INSTRUMENTAL CHURCH MUSIC.

MR. EDITOR:—Your correspondent, "A Reader," in your paper of 9th July, will allow me to make a brief rejoinder to his article on Church Music, which is a reply to a former article of my own.

The point in question is this: I had stated that there was "no direct Scripture authority for instrumental music in public worship; or, indeed, in any other kind of worship. Singing is recognized as a part of public and social worship, (I said) but no other kind of music is." Your correspondent thinks I must be mistaken in this, if I "admit the Old Testament to be Scripture." He then cites Num. 10: 10, and several places in the Psalms, where various kinds of instrumental music was enjoined as a part of public worship, and in relation to which it was said, as quoted by your correspondent, "For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob."

He supposes, then, that these quotations "prove that it was proper in old times, and not only so, but was required to be done by the Lord of the sanctuary."

Your correspondent will allow me to suggest that he has inadvertently fallen into a very common error in relation to the supposed authority for the regulation of Church worship, to be found in the Jewish ceremonies and ritual observances. These ritual services furnish no authority whatever for Christian worship. If we conform to them in some instances, it is because we find authority elsewhere. A little reflection will perhaps show the correctness of these remarks.

First. If Christians are commanded to use these instruments of music, then how can we, without sin, habitually and wilfully neglect them? This is universally done in all Christendom. I presume no Christian considers himself bound by the "law of the God of Jacob" to use them. Then, if your correspondent is right, he and all other Christians are wrong.

Secondly. If we find our license to use these instruments in the fact that such customs prevailed in the Jewish ceremonies, under the sanction of Heaven, then we may practice any other like customs for the same reasons. This will lead where no Christian will be willing to follow. The avenger of blood may slay his brother; we may sacrifice with bulls and goats, as they did, and do many other very unchristian things.

Thirdly. Though these Jewish ceremonial services can be but dimly understood and but partially appreciated at this late day, yet we know that they were "a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. Gal. 3: 24. They were lighted tapers, to be used in the early dawn of twilight, to light slowly but securely along the tottering infant Christian, up and up, into the light of Christ's proper religion. But once in noonday sunlight, we have no further use for the dim, flickering taper.

The Old Testament is "Scripture," though very little of it is Scripture precept. In fact, none of it which relates to the visible or external modes or forms of worship is precept for Christians. It is worthy Scripture history and Scripture doctrine, and informs us what precepts were given to the Jews in the infantile ages of the Church; but we are not thereby to infer that they are precepts for us. If we do this, look a moment and see what inconsistencies we will be carried into. Divine precept must be obeyed.

I was well aware, when I wrote my former article, of these instances of, or allusions to, the use of horns and other instruments in the Jewish worship. But it is seen they form no barrier to my expression that "there is no direct Scripture authority for instrumental music in public worship." Of course I meant, and was, I presume, understood to mean, authority binding upon Christians at this day. I still think I was correct in that remark.

The relation of the Jewish ritual service to Christian worship, may be seen explained at some length, by a correspondent of the Methodist Quarterly Review, in the January number (1852,) of that journal, in an article on the "Jewish Sacrifices."

This distinction is not, I think, sufficiently understood by Christians, and especially by Christian teachers. A free interchange of suggestion, among us, is perhaps of no disadvantage. Many things were commanded or allowed among the Jews that are neither commanded or allowed among us.

God began, at the beginning, to teach the world Christianity. He first taught A B C, and then proceeded on and on, step by step. With the Jewish dispensation he carried the world through the primmer, and then introduced the science and practical workings thereof. This custom was not known in the Church for more than eight hundred years after Christ.

SCHWARZERD.

THE POWER OF PATIENCE.

The patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit. Eccles. vii 8.

The lion was caught in the toils of the hunter. The more he tugged, the more his feet got entangled, when a little mouse heard his roaring, and said that if his majesty would not hurt him, he thought he could release him. At first the king of beasts took no notice of such a contemptible ally; but at last, like other proud spirits in trouble, he allowed his tiny friend to do as he pleased. So one by one the mouse nibbled through the cords, till he had set free first one foot and then another, and then all the four, and, with a growl of hearty gratitude, the king of the forest acknowledged that the patient in spirit is some times stronger than the proud in spirit. And it is beautiful to see how, when some sturdy nature is involved in perplexity, and by its violence and vociferation is only wasting its strength without forwarding its escape, there will come in some timely sympathizer, mild and gentle, and will suggest the simple extrication, or by soothing vehemence down into his own tranquility, will set him on the way to effect his self-deliverance.

Even so, all through the range of philanthropy, patience is power. It is not the water-spout, but the nightly dew which freshens vegetation. They are not the flashes of the lightning which nature our harvest, but the daily sunbeams, and that quiet electricity which thrills in atoms and which flushes in every ripening ear. Niagara, in all its thunder, fetches no fertility; but the Nile, coming without observation, with noiseless fatness overflows, and from under the retiring flood Egypt looks up again, a garner of golden corn. The world is the better for its moral cataracts, and its spiritual thunderbolts; but the influences which do the world's great work, which freshen and fertilize it, and which are maturing its harvests for the garner of glory, are not the proud and potent spirits, but the patient and the persevering; they are not the noisy and startling phenomena, but the steady and silent operations. They are the Sunday schools, which line upon line repeat the gospel lesson, and keep alive in our youthful millions some fear of God. They are the good and loving mothers who begin with cradle-hymns, and who try to make the sweet story of Jesus as dear and as memorable as their own kind voices. They are the weekly Sabbaths which softly overflow the land, and which, when they ebb again, leave every where the freshness and the fertilizing elements conveyed in their heaven-descended tide.

Patience is power. In a thirsty land, one farmer digs a pit, and as no water fills it, he opens another; and as that also continues, like the well in Dothan, dry, he commences a third in a spot more promising; and a fourth, and many more, till he has tried all his territory without success; and then, chafed and chagrined, he abandons all effort in despair. His neighbor chooses a spot, and begins. No water flows, but he is not discouraged. The spade and the mattock he exchanges for the drill and the auger; and, after hammering through the flinty rock for days and weeks, at last the long sought fountain gushes, and at his threshold he secures a perennial spring, which neither feels the summer drought nor dreads the winter's cold. And so, on behalf of some right object, one man is anxious to enlist the good feeling of humanity; and he brings his project before one influential mind after another, and he is mortified to find how drily it is received by this celebrated philanthropist, and how many difficulties are started by another, till he is ready to declare that benevolence is all a sham, and every patriot a hypocrite. But, strong in faith and patience, another takes the Artesian auger. He knows that deep under our hard humanity there are tender feelings and kind sympathies. Or, if it be the Church on which he seeks to operate, he knows that under all its callousness and formalism, there circulates a conscience; there flows a fresh current of principle and love, fed from the crystal river, and he is resolved to reach it. He takes the Artesian anger. "One thing I do." Preserving his temper amid all rebuffs, and persevering amid all impediments, he keeps urging this one object; and at last the vein is struck, the fountain flows. Charles sees the Bible Society organized, and Carey is sent to India. Raikes sets his Sabbath schools agoing, and Naysmith the City Mission. Sadler sees infant emancipation become a popular movement, and Agnew finds the Church at last roused to the claims of the Sabbath day.

[Dr. J. Hamilton.

THE UNFORGIVING MAN

ASKING FORGIVENESS OF GOD AS HE FORGIVES OTHERS

"And forgive us our sins, for we always forgive every one that is indebted to us."

Conceive a revengeful, unforgiving man repeating this prayer, which you all, I hope, repeat daily. Conceive a man with a heart full of wrath against his neighbor, with a memory which treasures up the little wrongs, and insults, and provocations he fancies himself to have received from that neighbor; conceive such a man praying to God most high to forgive him his trespasses as he forgives the man who has trespassed against him. What, in the mouth of such a man, do these words mean? They mean—but, that you may more fully understand their meaning, I will turn them into a prayer, which we will call the prayer of the unforgiving man: "O God, I have sinned against thee many times from my youth until now. I have often been forgetful of thy goodness; I have not daily thanked thee for thy mercies; I have neglected thy service; I have broken thy law; I have done many things utterly wrong against thee. All this I know, and besides this, doubtless, I have committed many secret sins, which, in my blindness, I have failed to notice. Such is my guiltiness, O Lord, in thy sight. Deal with me, I beseech thee, O Lord, as I deal with him. He has been very ungrateful to me, though not a tenth, not a hundredth part as ungrateful as I have been to thee; yet I cannot overlook such base and shameful ingratitude. Deal with me, I beseech thee, O Lord, as I deal with him. I remember and treasure up every little trifle which shows how ill he has behaved to me. Deal with me, I beseech thee, O Lord, as I deal with him. I am determined to take the very first opportunity of doing him an ill turn. Deal with me, I beseech thee, O Lord, as I deal with him." Can any thing be more shocking and horrible than such a prayer? Is not the very sound of it enough to make one's blood run cold? Yet this is just the prayer which the unforgiving man offers up every time he repeats the Lord's prayer; for he prays to God to forgive him in the same manner in which he forgives his neighbor. But he does not forgive his neighbor; so he prays to God not to forgive him. God grant that his prayer may not be heard, for he is praying a curse on his own head. [Hare's Sermons.

From the New York Musical World and Times.

MRS. GRUMBLER'S SOLILOQUY.

"There's no calculating the difference between men and women boarders. Here's Mr. Jones, has been in my house these six months, and no more trouble to me than my grey kitten. If his bed is shook up once a week, and his coats, cravats, love-letters, cigars and patent leather boots left undisturbed in the middle of the floor, he is as contented as a pedagogue in vacation time.

"Take a woman to board, and (if it is convenient) she would like drapery, instead of drop curtains; she'd like the windows altered to open at the top, and a wardrobe for her flounced dresses, and a few more nails and another shelf in her closet, and a cricket to put her foot on, and a little rocking-chair, and a big looking-glass, and a pea-green shade for her gas-burner.

"She would like breakfast about ten minutes later than your usual hour; tea ten minutes earlier, and the gong, which shocks her nerves so, altogether dispensed with.

"She can't drink coffee, because it is exhilerating; bromn is too insipid, and chocolate too heavy. She don't fancy cocoa. 'English breakfast tea' is the only beverage which agrees with her delicate spineter organization.

"She can't digest a roast or a fried dish; she might possibly peck at an egg, if it were boiled with one eye on the watch. Pastry she never eats, unless she knows from what dairy the butter came, which enters into its composition. Every article of food prepared with butter, salt, pepper, mustard, vinegar, or oil; or bread that is made with yeast, soda, milk or saleratus, she decidedly rejects.

"She is constantly washing out little duds of laces, collars, handkerchiefs, chemisettes and stockings, which she festoons up to the front windows to dry, giving passers-by the impression that your house is occupied by a blanchesseus—then jerks the bell-wire for an hour or more, for relays of hot smoothing-irons, to put the finishing stroke to her operations.

"She is often afflicted with interesting little colds and influenzas, requiring the immediate consolation of a dose of hot lemonade or ginger tea; choosing her time for these complaints when the kitchen fire has gone out and the servants are on a furlough. Oh! nobody knows, but those who have tried, how immensely troublesome women are! I'd rather have a whole regiment of men boarders. All you have to do is, to wind them up in the morning, with a powerful cup of coffee; give them carte blanche to smoke, and a night-key, and your work is done."

FANNY FERN.

YEAR OF CHRIST'S BIRTH

Of Dr. Kitto's clear, satisfactory method of stating a question, and giving to it what answer can be rendered, we observe no better example than the following, which, we doubt not, will interest our readers:

"How long ago was our Lord born?"

Some will smile at this question, and will answer it by another question—

"Does not the date of the present year answer that very plainly? Eighteen hundred and fifty-two years since, of course."

"Then in what year was our Lord born?"

"In the year one, of course," some will answer.

"In the year 0, of course," others will affirm.

Then, here, to begin with, is a year's difference, seeing that some count one at the moment Christ was born, while others do not count one till the first year of his life had expired.

But there is greater difference still. A marginal note at the head of our English New Testaments informs us that Jesus was born in the "fourth year before the account called Anno Domini," by which account, therefore, it would seem that the year of our Lord which we call 1852, is really 1856, leaving us to infer that the person who first calculated the year of Christ's birth was mistaken to this extent. Nor should this surprise us, seeing that it was not done until the sixth century—a most unscientific and uncritical age. It was not until then that the usage of counting from the birth of Christ began, and it was but slowly that it acquired prevalence; so that, although with differences, it was generally established in the eighth century, it cannot be said to have become universal in Christendom until the fifteenth.

Lately the whole question has been re-examined by Continental and English scholars with much care; and although the precise year of our Lord's birth is still uncertain, a reasonably near approximation has been attained. The safest process, indeed the only attainable one, is to find, as nearly as we may, the year of Rome in which the event occurred. For this there are certain data in the Gospels and in Josephus, which, without leading us to absolute certainty, will not allow us to go far astray. We will endeavor to state this very briefly. As a preliminary, it may be well to remind the reader that the first year of the present vulgar era coincides with the year 733 of the building of Rome (A. U.)

According to Matthew ii: 1, Jesus was born in the reign of Herod the Great, and not long before his death. Now Herod died in the year of Rome 750, just before the passover. If, then, we make an allowance of time for the purification, the visit of the Magi, the flight into Egypt, and the remaining there till Herod was dead, for all which not less than six months can well be required—it will follow that the birth of Christ cannot in any case be fixed later than the autumn of the year of Rome 749, being four years before the present era.

Again, Luke (iii: 1, 2) says that John the Baptist entered upon his ministry in the fifteenth year of Tiberius; and, further on, (iii: 23) that Jesus was "about thirty years of age" at the time of his baptism by John. Now if, as is quite likely, John commenced his ministry at the same age as Jesus, we may, by reckoning back thirty years, ascertain the time of John's birth, and, consequently, that of Jesus, who is known to have been six months younger. Now, reckoning from the death of Augustus, in the year of Rome 767, the fifteenth year of Tiberius, who succeeded him, commenced August 29, A. U. 781; and going back thirty years, we find that John must have been born not earlier than August 29, A. U. 751, and our Lord of course not earlier than A. U. 752—a result differing by three years from that obtained from Matthew. But Tiberius had been associated with Augustus in the empire certainly two years, and probably three, before the death of the latter; and if, as may be well presumed, Luke reckons from this the commencement of the reign of Tiberius, the date deduced from his statement coincides entirely with that drawn from Matthew.

Further, in John ii: 20, the Jews say, "Forty and six years was this temple building." Now, Herod commenced the temple in the eighteenth year of his reign, coinciding with A. U. 732; if, therefore, our Lord was—at the time of his first passover, forty-seven years after, as is probable—thirty and a half years of age, this would carry back the year of his birth to the autumn of the year of Rome 748.

Moreover, a tradition preserved by the Latin fathers, on a point wherein authentic information is easily obtainable by them, makes the death of Christ to have taken place in the consulship of C. Rubellius and C. Rufus, that is, in A. U. 782. If, therefore, the duration of our Lord's ministry was three and a half years, making his age thirty-three and a half at the time of his death, this takes us back to the same date of 784 A. U.

From the concurrence of all these data, it would appear that the birth of our Lord cannot have taken place later than the year of Rome 749; but it may have been a year or two earlier, if we suppose the period of six months too short to cover the interval between the birth of Jesus and the return of the family from Egypt, on hearing of Herod's death. Some think that it could not have been less than one, two or three years. Taking all things into account, we suppose it could not well have been less than between one and two years. The uncertainty on this point seems to be the sole remaining difficulty. And the result is, that the birth of our Lord cannot well have been less than four years anterior to the present era, and may have been a year or two more. Upon the whole, we do not feel satisfied with less than a year more, and this would throw back the true date five years before the present era, so that the present year of 1852 would be actually the 1857th year since the birth of our Lord.

[Daily Bible Illustrations.

From the New York Recorder.

LETTER TO A LIQUOR SELLING CHURCH MEMBER

FROM SOME OF HIS BRETHREN.

DEAR BROTHER:—We, the undersigned members of the body of Christ, would most respectfully request you, in a plain, Christian-like manner, to stop at once the sale of intoxicating liquors, and engage no more in the deadly traffic, for the following plain, and it would almost seem, self-evident reasons:

1. It is a reproach to Zion.—In the sacred Scriptures she is represented as the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, and all her citizens are required to touch not, taste not, handle not any unclean thing. Now, public sentiment, as well as the divine oracles, have long since set down and condemned all intoxicating liquors as unclean things, poisonous in their nature ruinous to the best interests of mankind, and destructive to their immortal souls. Hence, no professed Christian can engage, at the present day, in this trade without bringing a terrible reproach upon our beloved Zion.

2. It is, therefore, a great grief to all who love the Lord our God—and in a special manner it is a grief to us who are connected with you to the Church of Christ, because it can in no sense be considered other than an awful stigma upon us as a Church, both in the eyes of the converted and unconverted. No one thing seems to hinder our prosperity as a Church so much as this trade of yours in intoxicating drinks.

3. It is a great stumbling block in the way of sinners.—Whenever our pastor, or any of us, personally warns and invites the unconverted to turn from the wicked way, and accept of the offers of salvation and eternal life at once, and almost universally, your traffic in intoxicating liquors is referred to, and many endeavor to take shelter behind it, and they seem almost unapproachable, and quite beyond the power of Gospel truth. Your pretensions to deal in it only for medicinal purposes only heighten the contempt and increase their sneers at the idea of becoming Christians, when those who profess religion can engage in such kind of trade and traffic.

4. It is, therefore, a great hindrance to the successful labors of our pastor, and is a terrible blot upon our own Christian character. Public sentiment and divine truth have long since fixed it so, and no excuse of yours can remove it. Very few have strong confidence in the Christianity of one who, in this day and age of high moral sentiment, can profess religion, and at the same time engage in this abominable traffic. Where is the man who, on a dying bed, will send for a rumseller to come and pray with and for him in his expiring moments? Even the youth in our streets say, "How can a man sell liquor when he belongs to the Church and goes to the communion?" Oh, brother N., put it away, and do it at once. If you knew how great a stain it is upon your Christian character, you would not hesitate a single moment.

5. It brings an awful denunciation upon your own soul from Him whose right it is to denounce and destroy. In the divine word, Jehovah has said, "Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also;" "the cup of the Lord's right hand shall be turned to thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory." Habbakuk ii: 15, 16.

Now, brother N., we, whose names are hereunto annexed, fully believe that the foregoing reasons are every way sufficient, when fully understood, to induce any true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ to put away at once, wholly and entirely, the sale of intoxicating drinks. Although it may be attended with some sacrifice, yet in your case this cannot be, since you claim that you do not continue in the trade for the sake of the profit accruing therefrom. Still, if it be a sacrifice of any kind whatsoever, and you are unwilling to make that sacrifice for the sake of Christ's cause and the salvation of souls, it is highly necessary for you, as well as all others, to examine well your hope, since Jesus has said, "Except a man forsake all that he hath, yea, his own life, he cannot be my disciple." You may say that you keep it and deal in it only for medicinal and mechanical purposes. But this is, by many, wholly disbelieved; and besides, if this is your honest intention the trade is wholly unnecessary on your part, since others deal in it whose whole business is to supply the medical demand, where it can be obtained for such purposes without reproaching Zion or offending one of Christ's little ones.

In closing this communication, we desire to assure you, dear brother, that you shall have our earnest prayers to our heavenly Father that he may, by his grace strengthen you, that you may be able to comply with the request we, your brethren, do most sincerely make.

GRACE,
MERCY,
JUSTICE,
TRUTH.

A CITY WITH TWELVE HUNDRED INHABITANTS DESTROYED.—In the foreign news by the last arrival, it is stated that, on the 1st of May, the city of Shiraz, in Persia, was destroyed, with twelve thousand of its inhabitants, by the shock of an earthquake. This is the second city in Persia, and in former years had a population of forty thousand persons, but an earthquake in 1824 nearly destroyed it. It was formerly a place of great beauty, and is celebrated by the Persian poet Hafiz, who was a native of Shiraz, for its beauty and fertility. Since the earthquake of 1824, it has greatly declined in both; most of its public structures having been ruined by that calamity.

From the Night Watches.

ON THE FAITHFULNESS OF GOD—A MEDITATION.

"Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds." Psalm xxxvi: 5.

It has been well said that "the universe around us is a parable of grace." "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so doth the Lord compass his people!" But firmer than even those types of immutability in the kingdom of nature is the word of a covenant-keeping God in the kingdom of grace. These mountains (nature's best emblems of steadfastness) may depart, and the hills be removed, "but," says their almighty maker, "my kindness shall not be taken from thee!"

We can look upward to the stars of night, and see the "faithfulness" of God "established" in the material heavens—"This day they stand as thou ordainest!" But these are feeble types and symbols of brighter constellations in the spiritual firmament—the declarations of an unchanging God—"Thy word is forever settled in Heaven."

What a gracious assurance amid our own unfaithfulness, "The Lord is faithful"—that the unfaithfulness of the believer never alters, and can never alter, the faithfulness of God!

My soul! anchor thyself on this rock of the divine veracity. Take hold of that blessed parenthesis which has been to many a tossed soul as a polar star in its night of darkness—"Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them even unto the end." He loves them in life—loves them in death—loves them through death—loves them in glory!

Art thou not at this hour a monument of God's faithfulness? Where wouldst thou have been had not the magnet of His grace kept thee, and drawn thy fugitive affections towards himself? From how many temptations has he rescued thee—laying hold of thee on the precipice, when about to plunge headlong down—employing some times constraining, at others restraining grace—making this thy brief history, "Kept by the power of God," and overruling all—ALL for his own glory, and thine own good?

I love to think of thy faithfulness, O thou "tried stone," "laid in Zion!" Thou wert tried by the law—by justice—by men—by devils, and yet thou wert faithful! Thou hast been tried by prophets and apostles; by martyrs and saints; by youthful sinners, aged sinners, and dying sinners—and thou hast been found faithful by all and to all, and thou art faithful still!

My soul! never suppose, amid the faithlessness of earth's trusted friends, that thou art doomed to tread thy way in loneliness and solitude; there is more than one Emmaus journey! The "abiding" friend is left! He is always the same! "He fainteth not, neither is weary!" His faithfulness is a tried faithfulness! His word is a tried word! His friendship is a tried friendship! He is always "better than his word!" He pays with usury!

"O! who could bear life's stormy doom,
Did not thy word of love
Come brightly bearing through the gloom,
A peace branch from above!
Then sorrow, touched by thee, grows bright,
With more than rapture's ray,
As darkness shows us worlds of light
We never saw by day!"

When I think that at this very moment the eye of that faithful Saviour-God is upon me—"I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety!"

COINCIDENCES.—A London paper brings to mind the following curious coincidences: On the 18th of June, 1815, the English and French were engaged in a desperate conflict at Waterloo; on the same day of the same month in 1853, the English and French fleets were at anchor off the Dardanelles, engaged in a common cause. On the 14th of June, 1807, Napoleon conquered the troops of Alexander of Russia at Friedland, and the two monarchs at the subsequent interview at Tilsit, took counsel as to whether, together, they could not humble the naval power of England. Forty-six years later, day for day, the navies of England and France are united to resist the encroachment of the Muscovite. The brother of Alexander and the nephew of Napoleon do not act in concert, but in hostility. That a half a century, however, should produce such changes, is not surprising; but the coincidence of dates is striking.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The south-western portion of the building is assigned to France, the Zolverein, &c.; north-western to Italy, Denmark, Russia, &c.; south-eastern to Great Britain. The galleries are distributed in the same way. Among the valuable works of art in the Crystal Palace is Thorwaldsen's famous group of "Christ and the Apostles." Each figure is the size of life, and the whole is an admirable study. South Carolina sends to the Crystal Palace a cast iron Palmetto tree, made at Charleston. It is exactly copied from nature, and is a beautiful piece of work.

In a country grave-yard, in New Jersey, there is a plain stone erected over the grave of a beautiful young lady, with only this inscription upon it:

"Julia Adams, died of thin shoes, April 18, 1839, aged 19."

One stone, more conspicuous than the rest, has this singular inscription upon it:

"Here lay the body of John Jones, who never held an office." "An honest man."

LONDON GRAVE-YARDS.—Lord Palmerston stated that two hundred and six grave-yards had been closed within the limits of London, and the remainder would be closed as soon as possible.

Pride not only lifts men up but above themselves, so that they should not know who have forgotten them.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, July 30.

LABORERS WANTED.

How many mistake the object for which they were created. Instead of spending time, talents and energies as duty demands, to enhance the condition of untold millions, who are buried in moral gloom, and who never enjoyed the first scintillation of light emanating from the Sun of righteousness, they pervert their best gifts to the deepest degradation that sin can cause.

How many come upon the stage of action, live and pass away, without the least effort to leave the world in a better condition than they found it. Suppose the many splendid and guilty actors, that figure so brilliantly on the pages of history, had lived to do good to mankind, and to honor their God, how different would the world be found to-day!

Cæsar should have been a Paul, and leading his legions into Italy, should have converted them to "the faith once delivered to the saints." Voltaire should have written Christian tracts. Hume should have been a Fenelon. Rousseau should have been a Howard, and flying from the Baltic to the Euxine, like some angel of mercy on an errand of love, should have died like Mills in an old age of charity.

These were young men when their influence was at its zenith, and it was exerted in blasting the prejudices of millions in opposition to the religion of the Bible. How awful will be their personal responsibility at the bar of God!

Many systems of religion have tried to better the condition of man. Paganism, Mystical Hindooism, and Iron-footed Rome—all have tried it, and each has spent mind and money enough to have redeemed the world, in trying to build up a corrupt system of religion; and that system, when built up, be it howsoever great, has sunk and fell under the weight of misapplied and perverted energies. The Bible is the only remedy for man in his sunken condition. But nine-tenths of the human race are destitute of its sacred pages!

How great the warning to the young men of our country, who live in the blaze of Gospel day, to spend, if but a moiety of their time in enlarging the bounds of Christianity.

Why do not more of our young men, gifted both intellectually and morally, enter the vineyard of Christ, and by laboring to secure the salvation of souls, add "stars to their crowns?" Many shrink from duty because possessed of an idea that the ministry is not a popular profession. We admit its unpopularity with men of the world; but no man, I care not howsoever degraded, morally, will fail to reverence a pious, dignified minister.

Admitting, as we do, that the ministry, in the main, is unpopular with worldlings, would you not prefer the esteem and high commendations of good men, although few, than the unmeaning applause of all the world beside?

Then what is to compare with the gratulation afforded us in the approbation of Christ, and in the reflection that we have done something to improve the condition of our race?

We call upon young men to cast to the "four winds" their meaningless prejudices, and be willing to work. Be willing to yield a hearty response to the cries that come up from every quarter, even in our own highly favored land, for the bread of life.

No literature is comparable to the Bible. No work is calculated to expand the mind, enlarge the heart, and ennoble the feelings of man like that of the ministry.

BEATRICE. By CATHARINE SINCLAIR, author of "Modern Accomplishments," "The Journey of Life," etc.

The talented and fascinating authoress remarks, in the first paragraph of the preface, that "the object of this narrative is to portray, for the consideration of young girls now fast emerging into society, the enlightened happiness derived from the religion of the Protestants founded on the Bible, contrasted with the misery arising from the superstition of the Romanists founded on the Breviary." This paragraph well presents the object of the book, which is kept steadily in view, in all its chapters and pages. The scene is laid in Scotland, and the parties immediately brought under review are composed of two noble families—one Protestant and the other Roman. The authoress has doubtless read the best Protestant and Romish writers, and skilfully works up the materials thus gathered into a most deeply interesting and instructive narrative. It shows, in most forcible terms, the practical working of the Jesuitical dogma, that the end sanctifies the means. How this dogma sanctions and commands the most unmitigated hypocrisy, unblushing falsehood, and unnatural cruelties; how the Jesuits secretly intrude themselves into every place of power and influence, and everywhere carry the blight of social and domestic happiness—obtruding between the confidence of husband and wife—parent and child. Let me make a short extract: "It is grand," said Sister Martha, perceiving the train of her own thoughts, "to be one in so great a scheme. We have every thing to gain by proselyting, and nothing to lose. Sir Allan McAlpine's conversion will be 10,000*l.* a year to our community, and Lady Anne's above 30,000*l.* That is very encouraging. Besides those pupils in the governess department, there are above two hundred of our scholars out in every imaginable capacity, who do our work well, and are warranted as 'perfect treasures.' Several are in bookseller's shops, recommending our own publications as the best antidotes to Romanism; but the system of family espionage answers best—therefore we go out as Protestant sick-nurses and nursery maids. Several act the part of being converts to Protestantism, and those ladies who fancy they have been the means of converting another, are so flattered at their own success that they often afterwards become an easy prey to our emissaries."

We do most heartily recommend this book to every Protestant family in the land. We doubt not its earsful perusal would be of infinite service to the cause of truth, piety, and domestic happiness. J. B. WALKER.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

BATON ROUGE, LA., July 22.

MY DEAR W.:—I arrived here yesterday morning, just too early for breakfast on the boat and too late for breakfast on shore. This description of time is complete enough, only that our good friend and brother Crenshaw looked to the comfort of our company in that respect, and all others to the end. We had a good many questions to answer about yellow fever, but nobody stood away from us as though we brought it along.

Of this place—it has a name, and the name its meaning, Red Stick. This, Gayarre tells in his history of Louisiana, was given it of old from a huge cypress that stood on the hill before the town had taken full possession. Said tree was tall, very; and its stem straight enough for a giant's walking cane, and the bark was red, after the species. Thus comes Baton Rouge. Said tree was a big one, too, if traditionary history may be credited, for a ship builder offered a wager that he could construct two water crafts out of it—one of fourteen and the other sixteen tons! Mark, I neither saw the tree nor wrote the history.

Two days here have been very pleasantly and not unprofitably spent, in part, attending upon the Annual Examination of the Baton Rouge Female Seminary, under the superintendence of Mrs. Read—one who has long and successful experience in this department of education. The music classes, under Miss Dodson, diversified the exercises delightfully, and the literary and mathematical exhibition was alike gratifying to listeners and creditable to the excellent Principal and her assistant, Miss Cobb. Not the least striking, and certainly not the least pleasing thing to be remarked, was moral culture, as here attended to. Several of the young ladies, in the more advanced classes, are firm Christian professors and members of the Church. How does piety polish our daughters "after the similitude of a palace."

Mrs. Read is a Methodist, and the Conference have done well in recommending her Female High School to public patronage. In the absence of Conference Institutions, at places where needed, it is at once duty and policy to encourage those that come nearest to them in discipline and teaching, and moral bearings. Here, as usual, is a nun's school—school kept by "the Sisters," guided of course by "the brothers." Whatever is not taught those entirely committed to their charge, "Ave Marias" are taught; and doubtless those pupils whose parents have imposed restrictions on the teacher's religious influence, yet more of this than is bargained for. Some Protestant parents have their children in this nun's school! Even so. It cannot be ignorance, and must therefore be set down to a little too much charity!

It is a gloomy place, worse than a graveyard or hospital dead-house, and yet I could not forbear a visit to the penitentiary. It contains 250 or 300 human beings. Rogues of all hues, murderers, perjurers, here do congregate. Pest-house is a feeble image. Every man has a history, and what a history! Once innocent—once some mother's joy, some father's hope. These are the wages of sin, in part. What will they be when it is finished?

Every convict has a downcast look. Heads shaved and dress parti-colored, they all have a family likeness. No sounds heard but those of hammers, planes, saws and looms. No conversation allowed. It was a relief to hear the crowing of a solitary Shanghai chicken that had the courage and the conscience to utter a full, free note.

The former Chaplain is acquainted with the cases of many. Passing the shoe shop, where half a dozen were employed, he directed my attention to a ball headed man, not more than 50 years old. He was driving pegs into a shoe, and doing it neatly, and barely turned his eyes towards us. "That man," said he, "is in for the third time." He worked out his first term and married a decent woman in the southern part of the State. For the old sin, stealing, he got back; broke out and joined Gen. Houston's army in Texas. Just before the battle of San Jacinto he was taken up for horse stealing and condemned to be shot. But soldiers were scarce, and he promised to fight bravely if spared. He did fight well next day. Soon after being taken up for new crimes, he revealed under trial that he was an escaped convict—was brought back from this military episode and wore his sentence out, and for the second time was released. Would it not seem that he had learned by this time to be honest? Nay, he had not got from the penitentiary to the river—a few hundred yards—before he was caught at old tricks, and a few hours after liberation was once more in durance vile. Here he is pegging shoes for a third term of six years.

The same day we called, four "representatives," as they are some times facetiously named, arrived from Orleans Parish. One was an old customer. He was put in for fourteen years; staid one; broke out and ran at large thirteen years; was taken up the other day, and has just returned, at the end of them, to make up the thirteen. I could but say, "Poor fellow; the devil is a hard master."

As we were departing, the bell rang, and immediately all work stopped. The convicts marched to their cells, taking up, as they passed along, a pan of mush boiled in molasses. This was supper, which they eat sitting on the door of the narrow, gloomy, solitary cell. The turnkey passed along, each entered and closed the door after him. Such a jarring of iron doors, after the reluctant and melancholy disappearance within—the bolting, the dull, heavy locking—and then the awful silence that follows the last door shut, created a sensation of horror and grief at human woes and what sin hath done, such as I never felt before.

I will not prolong this letter beyond a paragraph which I clipped this morning out of the Capitolian Vis-a-vis, a spirited newspaper of this place. Brulé Landing is about five miles below this place, on the other side of the river. It is headed—

"PRIESTLY INSOLENCE.—Quite an excitement was raised at Brule Landing, on Sunday week, in consequence of the pastor of the Catholic Church there (Father Lucas) slapping a young man's face. The particulars, as furnished us, are as follows:

"The young man, who is a nephew of Father Lucas, was engaged in the choir of the Church to sing bass, for which he was to receive a certain salary. Being in want of some clothing, he called upon the Secretary of the Church, who promptly gave him an order on the Treasurer for thirty dollars, which was paid him. Father Lucas, upon hearing of it, became offended, and, after Mass, slapped his face, and called upon some young men, who were standing by, to 'thrash the dirty hog' for him. This excited the indignation of some ladies that were present, and they called upon the young men to thrash the priest. However, it was not done.

"On Sunday last, Father Lucas attempted to justify himself by quoting (as he stated) from the Mosaic Law, 'That if the servant offend the master, he shall be taken before the priest and there punished"—or something to that effect. Although we have searched through the entire Mosaic Law, we are unable to find the quotation. This explanation was received by his congregation with hisses, as it should have been.

"This is certainly a new kind of slavery, where one white man (and that, too, a minister of Christ, who preached humility and forbearance,) has the privilege of beating another, simply because he pays him wages. But these long-coated gentlemen seldom practice what they preach; and, when it suits their convenience, can easily forget what is in ONE portion of the Scripture, when they attempt to justify themselves by quoting ANOTHER."

The facetious editor of the Comet remarks upon the above, that he trusts Father L. will not so trespass again upon the "peace and dignity" of the State, till he finds the text for it.

JACKSON, LA., July 25.

All astir here for Commencement. Besides the Centenary College, two or three literary institutions of the village hold anniversary exercises about this time. The College is enjoying a large and unprecedented measure of prosperity. In all its departments about 260 students are numbered. And they are from all parts of the State, and from adjoining States—a collection of young men of order and studious habits. I regret to find the President, Dr. Rivers, heavily afflicted in his family, his excellent wife having been an invalid for months.

Our Sabbath, yesterday, passed off with the usual privileges, and to-day is the meeting of the Board of Trustees and Visitors. I omitted to say that the Boards of Examination, appointed by the State and College, have reported favorably of the examinations they have witnessed and conducted among the under graduates. M.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

MR. EDITOR:—At the recent meeting of the "Ministerial Education Society" of our conference, the following By-Laws and Regulations were adpted for the government of the Board in its future action. As they are of interest to other portions, I send them for publication in your paper, and shall also have some fifty copies struck off on letter sheet—copies of which may be had of the Vice President, Bro. Hutchinson, Bro. Dorman, or myself—for the information of ministers or applicants. J. HAMILTON.

BY-LAWS, Etc.

1. No person shall be a benificiary of the Society until regularly received by the Board as such.

2. All applicants for aid shall come well recommended by the Quarterly Conference of the Circuit or Station in which they live. Such recommendations shall include a statement of the applicant's piety, capacity, and health, as also the fact that the conference is satisfied of his call to the ministry, and his suitableness for it, and be duly signed by the President and Secretary of the Conference.

3. All applications for aid shall be made in writing, accompanied by a statement of the applicant's age, general constitution; also the educational progress made by the party, and his intention to devote himself to the work of the ministry. It must also state the extent of the education desired, and the applicant's own means.

4. No beneficiary shall be received under 18 years of age, nor over 26.

5. Each beneficiary of the Society shall furnish the Board with an annual statement from the Quarterly Conference of the Church of which he is a member, of his continued worthiness; and from the President of the institution he attends, of the proficiency he makes in his studies.

6. No person shall become a beneficiary of the Society without distinctly declaring his intention to devote himself to the work of the ministry as long as the providence of God shall permit. And any one failing to enter upon it, or who shall discontinue it, except from providential hindrances, shall repay the money he has received, at the discretion of the Board.

7. All beneficiaries of the Society, whose board is paid by it, shall attend some Methodist institution within the bounds of the Conference or the State.

8. All beneficiaries who have commenced under the auspices of the Board, shall continue their studies, without remission, until their course is completed, except by permission of the Board.

9. No married man shall be received upon the funds of the Society, and any one who shall marry, while on them, shall be discontinued, and required to refund at the discretion of the Board.

J. Hamilton, R. A. Baker, and C. C. Calloway were appointed a committee to act upon special cases, and receive applications, until the next meeting of the Board.

They who are not made saints in a state of grace, shall never be saints in glory. The stones which are appointed for that glorious temple above, are hewn and polished and prepared for it here; as the stones were wrought and prepared in the mountains, for building the temple at Jerusalem. [Leighton.

WOODSMAN'S EXPLANATION.

The inference has been drawn from a paragraph of a communication written from Tuscumbia, that the author is opposed to the revival feature of our Church economy. However much that paragraph may have touched the sensibilities of the advocates and friends of Methodism in various parts of the connection, it cannot have exceeded the grief which Woodsman feels, that an impression of this sort should have been made.

The paragraph alluded to was perhaps ill advised, and calculated to express what was foreign to the meaning of the writer. It was not designed to cast any invidious reflections upon revivals in general, nor upon the particular one to which it refers. So far as I observed, that meeting was conducted with the usual propriety which characterizes periods of great religious interest, and no unkindness could be intended towards those who were engaged in conducting it, or who participated in its unquestionable benefits. It is admitted on all hands, that there are some things, often tolerated in our revivals, to which exceptions are taken by the best and most enlightened members and ministers of the Church. No one pretends to defend all the irregularities and excesses practiced on such occasions; but, on the contrary, the good and spiritual have ever deplored them.

It does not follow that one who condemns these objectionable and unnecessary features of revival meetings is guilty of repudiating Methodism and revivals together, any more than it follows that Paul renounced the Gospel, when he wrote, "Let every thing be done decently and in order." My respect for the discrimination of those who have placed me among the opposers of revivals will not allow me to suppose them guilty of such an illogical and unfair conclusion. The ground of this charge must, therefore, lie in the particular things to which exceptions were taken, or in the fact of their expression. There can be no doubt that scriptural instruction is one of the prominent means of bringing souls to Christ, and that the penitent seeker, more than any thing else, needs to be led to the Cross, and to be schooled there in the doctrine of the atonement, "For faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Whether the Scriptures be presented in sermons, in hymns, or in exhortations, is not important; but faith must come by the hearing of the word. Then, further, if prayer is important, it is all important. Revivals are sent in answer to prayer; souls are converted in answer to prayer. These are the two great instrumentalities, and so far as the exercises confuse or prevent their employment, those exercises are objectionable. "What is it, then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also. I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." This is it—let not the spirit and the understanding be dissevered—let neither be neglected. What God hath joined together let no man put asunder. This violent divorce of the spirit and the understanding, of which some of our revival proceedings afford extravagant illustrations, is without scriptural warrant, and comes within the clear proscription of the word of God.

Excitement of the right kind is not objectionable. A sinful man, when enlightened by the Scriptures, when convicted of sin, when he looks eternity in the face, and when he sees damnation written in legible characters upon his sinful heart, must be the subject of an agitation only less than the movings of hell itself. When he beholds the Lamb for sinners slain, for the first time sees the bow of hope painted upon the cloud of heaven's wrath, by the rays of a self-illuminated Cross, and more than all, when the Spirit heralds the glad news of the soul's acquittal, there must be—there is a rupture of which the loudest shout gives but a faint indication. For the production of such excitement we need not resort to mere excitement making. The word of God faithfully applied, the use of instructive evangelical hymns, such as hold the doctrines and promises of the Gospel in equable solution, and the earnest, effectual prayers of the righteous, will not fail to bring it about, at the same time that sympathy and animal emotion—excrescences which frequently deform and hinder a genuine spiritual work—will cease to mar and vitiate its results.

Concerning the hymns noticed in my Tuscumbia letter, my convictions of their literary merits, of their scriptural character, and of their effect upon enlightened piety and vital godliness, were honestly acquired, and are sincerely entertained. That there are good and profitable hymns, besides those in our authorized edition, is not a matter of debate, and when those of another character were condemned, only an uncharitable carelessness could have stretched my meaning to the inclusion of these.

It may be shown that, besides preserving a pure hymnology, there are reasons for the use of the hymn-book even in revivals. In politics and in religion, songs exert a marked influence upon the principles of the one and the faith of the other. By their use, political unsoundness may be generated in the State, and heresy may creep into the Church. We must, then, have an orthodox hymnology, and in order to do this, our hymns must be subject to the sanction of Church authority. Those vagrant and straggling hymns, which have no such authority, in some cases may breathe the spirit of Wesleyan Arminianism, but in other cases they may be pregnant of doctrinal mischief and theological error. Not for convenience only, but to guard against these evils, we have a collection published for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and, to employ no stronger language, it would be safer to use it.

To assert that it does not abound in revival hymns, is a reproach greater than many will feel disposed to cast upon the memory of the Wesleys, whose productions it chiefly embodies. If those hymns were efficient in the revivals of which they, under God, were the master spirits, they will meet the wants of those revivals in which the Church of their planting is now interested. In the expression of these views, nothing fundamental to revivals has been traversed. The evils of which mention has been made have long since penetrated the conviction of the wisest and truest friends of revivals; and if I am alone in the public expression of these opinions, I am far from singular in entertaining them.

Revivals, with all their defects, are truly the life of the Church. Methodism is a revival missionary Church. Without revivals she dies, and her glorious peculiarities die with her; her aggressive forces are paralyzed. But we dishonor the principles we contend for, when it is assumed that the life of the revival element depends upon a few hymns not found in the regular collection, and the unprotested toleration of confessed irregularities and excesses. If these are inseparable from the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, let us have the one rather than be without the other; but if all things can be done decently and in order, let them be so done. WOODSMAN.

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

SMALL TALK.

And so, Bro. Mc., you think we ought to do as Bro. Williams, and append our names to our articles, where we propose changes in our economy. In most things, we think, we would be safe in taking your advice, but must beg leave to dissent from this arrangement. Anonymous articles are all the go now, in all our leading journals, and we think there is wisdom in the plan. It calls out much of the youthful talent of the age—it permits a youngster to speak his opinions out, for the benefit of older heads, without being considered presumptuous. Of course, all articles involving personalities ought to have the writer's name. We cannot see the necessity for them, under ordinary circumstances.

Speaking of Bro. Williams's article—really, Mr. Editor, we should be sorry to have our name appended to such a proposition as it contains. We know Bro. W. somewhat, and are proud of our acquaintance. He is a whole souled, generous Methodist. He pays his money, without stint, for the Church. He is, withal, a devoted Christian gentleman. Judge, then, our surprise, on reading his article. He says some good things about the necessity of allowing a more liberal sum for the support of our ministry. He says, truly, that money has depreciated in value very much within a few years past. You are led to expect he is going to make a proposition worthy of himself and indicative of a liberal soul. But, after such a grand prelude, how beautifully falls upon the ear his suggestion to raise the salary to one hundred and twenty-five dollars! This matter has been agitated, for some time past, in various portions of the Church. It has been spoken and written about extensively. And all this has been because the preachers lacked twenty-five dollars of receiving their support. Truly, this is a new illustration of the proverb, "What a great fire a little mutter kindleth." And a time-honored rule must be changed, and a dangerous precedent set, for the sake of securing twenty-five dollars to each preacher. Much has been said about preachers locating for want of a support. Is it possible that a member of the conference could reconcile it to his conscience to locate for the sake of twenty-five dollars? Is this the great cause of so many locations? Come, now, Bro. W., think of it again. A liberal, good man, such as I know you to be, will not insist on a proposition so illiberal. Let the magnanimity in your nature display itself to greater advantage. You know it is impossible for a minister to make himself comfortable on that sum. How much do you spend yourself? There, that is the point, if I do say it myself. That is the argumentum ad hominem. We repeat—would we could pour the sound into the ear of every Methodist—how much do you spend yourself? And have not your ministers a right to be comfortable, as well as yourself? Have they not a palate as sensible to pleasant food? Have they not an eye for the decent in raiment? Many of them have been tenderly brought up, amid plenty. Many of them have talents which would secure them honor and wealth. Is the ministry a sort of house of correction, where the inmates must be put on low fare, and worked hard, for the crime of preaching the Gospel? Not long since, a brother went to his new charge, and the stewards prepared to assess his salary. They proposed a certain sum. The brother knew it was not enough, but his arguments failed to convince the board. Finally, says he to one, who seemed most active in the opposition, and whose family was about the size of his own, "Do you spend no more than this?" This was a stumper. The brother did think he had more right to be comfortable than a preacher, but it would have been too bad to acknowledge it downright. So he stammered out as well as he could, "N—n—n—no—no." "Well," says the minister, "neither can I, and neither will I try. Give me more, or find another preacher." They gave him more. Besides, a minister ought not to be expected to live on an income which supports one in another calling. He does not study the mutations of trade. It would injure the tone of his preaching and curtail his usefulness, were he to busy himself cracking financial nuts, instead of visiting his flock or preparing his sermons. More hereafter. COMMON SENSE.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

[Correspondence of the N. O. Ch. Advocate.]

SAN JOSE, June 18, 1853.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE:—I have now been a little over three weeks in various portions of the lovely and far-famed San Jose Valley, whose beautiful scenery and fertile soil have astonished many, and been a topic for most who have written from our side of the world. If many who regard the descriptions given as highly colored and overwrought, could explore the valley from the San Francisco Bay Southward, and mark the towering bulwarks that bound it on either side, with the spreading plains from six to ten miles wide, stretching eighty or ninety miles in the distance, doted with fields of waving grain, now white to the harvest, while the larger tracts of yet uncultivated territory fill the eye of the husbandman, and promises a rich reward to the tiller's toil, they would doubtless say the half has not been told. The unsettled state of land titles greatly impedes the settling of all our valleys; yet very many families are coming into them, and preparing permanent homes; among these are many from the Southern States. The numerous acres of wheat and barley everywhere seen, have assumed a rich golden hue, the reapers have put in the sickle and are preparing the ripe shocks for the garner.

I had intended extending my remarks, and being more definite, particularly in reference to the Southern portion of this, together with other smaller valleys contiguous thereto, but must defer it. This much I will now say—those who come to California to settle their families, would do well to look at these Southern valleys before locating elsewhere. That a railroad will connect cars with the other States, is no longer problematical, and at no distant day. It will evidently, to my mind, intersect this State south of the point from which I now write.

But items of news relative to the prosperity of our branch of the Church will doubtless be of more general interest to your readers than any others that we can give. The Lord is with us on the San Francisco District. Our first round is not yet completed. At each point visited the indications of good have been a source of joy and gratitude. The Q. M. for San Francisco and Santa Cruz Circuit was held in a settlement some thirty miles below this. The house occupied stands alone in the valley, surrounded by many acres of unenclosed wild oats, of spontaneous growth, as tall and flourishing as those found on the most carefully cultivated farms of the Mississippi Valley. Until recently the visits of preachers to that point were not frequent. Most of the people were out on Saturday morning, and continued their attendance up to the close of the meeting on Monday night. Many rejoiced, six joined the Church, South, on probation, and one by letter. A local preacher, formerly of Texas, supplies the work, and has a pleasant and useful year in prospect. His field of labor includes some of the loveliest of our land.

The San Jose Station, with the adjoining circuit, appointed a camp-meeting to be held near the city, beginning Friday night, 10th June, but for various reasons it was postponed. At that time, however, the Q. M. began in the Church. Through the indefatigable labors of Bro. Wynn, the present pastor, and the commendable liberality of the people, a neat and commodious brick Church was erected during the past year. For some time past, even at the ordinary Sabbath exercises, it has been well filled with respectful and attentive hearers. God is now visiting them in power and great mercy. Services have been continued during the week—prayer meeting in the morning and preaching at night. Congregations continued large, attentive and serious. Several who have long heard and withstood the calls of the Gospel, have joined the Church and professed faith in Christ; among the number is an aged man, whose locks are white. The majority of the converts, however, as is usual in revivals, are young persons. It has been a time of refreshing, indeed, to the Church, such as they have not before enjoyed in this country. It reminds us of other days, and makes us feel that we are not forsaken of God, or far from the better land. Seldom have I witnessed a more deeply interesting scene than in prayer meeting on Thursday morning, the 16th, when seven penitents were happily converted to God. Since the meeting began twenty-six have joined the Church, and most of them have been happily converted. A gracious influence pervades the community, and we trust this is but an earnest of what we are to enjoy before the close of the year.

The preachers in my bounds are enjoying health, and in earnest about their work. Though some may become home-sick and abandon the field hastily, and regardless of results, others realize their obligations to the Church that sent them, and are endeavoring religiously to discharge those obligations.

I will add one other item to this communication, which may be of service to some. I regard the valleys of this State, near the sea coast, as among the healthiest portions of our continent, as a general thing. They are not the place, however, for consumptive persons, or lung diseases of any kind. They very soon end in death. Of fourteen funeral services performed within the last twelve months by the pastor of our Church in this place, nine deaths were from diseases of this class. Of all attended by the Presbyterian clergyman of the place, in the same length of time, all but one have been of diseases of this sort. They are nearly all persons who come here diseased. The mountains in the interior offer a more suitable climate for such persons, changes being less frequent, and the temperature more uniform.

Bishop Soule is still in the mountains, visiting the various prominent points and preaching to crowds. W. R. GOREA.

P. S. Contrary to previous calculations, I remained at the meeting at San Jose until the 20th, and have not before, since coming to California, addressed such large congregations within doors as were present on Sabbath, especially in the evening. The results of the meeting are not to be estimated by the number who joined the Church. We expect you to hear from that point again before the year closes. W. R. G.

San Francisco.

WASHINGTON AND NEW ORLEANS TELEGRAPH. We learn by a dispatch from E. G. Hydo, Esq., that transfer books for the stock of the Washington and New Orleans Telegraph Company have been opened in the city of New York, and stockholders have now a regular market for their stock.

The Washington Monument has attained a height of one hundred and thirty-four feet.

Recently there was received a block of granite from Braddock's field, contributed by its present proprietors, designed for insertion in the column.

The first regiment of light infantry, militia volunteers, of Boston, have notified the Board of Managers that they intend to forward a stone of similar material for a like purpose.

The united naval forces at Beska Bay, within a very few hours of the Turkish capital, are: French, thirteen vessels and 844 guns; British, eighteen vessels and 776 guns. The Turkish fleet at the Northern extremity of the Bosphorus consists of thirty-five vessels, two of them being three-deckers, three two-deckers, ten frigates, four corvettes, eight brigs and eight steamers, four of which are of large dimensions.

THE CHINCHA ISLANDS.—Orders were received at the Chincha Islands, May 31, from Lima, to clear all American ships from the Islands, with cargoes of guano, without going to Callao. This is a wise regulation of the Peruvian Government, as it tends to reduce the cost of guano on shipboard, by relieving the vessels from the loss of time in returning to Callao for clearance.

Captain Lee, of the schooner Elizabeth, which left Caicos, Turk's Island, on the 30th ult., and arrived at New York on the 16th inst., reports that Caicos had been visited by severe rain storms, which had destroyed large quantities of salt at that port and the adjacent Islands.

THE ROUTE TO MOBILE.

For the last few years a new spirit seems to have pervaded the mercantile and commercial community of New Orleans. The blind reliance upon natural advantages and the necessities of trade, which for so long a time checked the enterprise and retarded the growth of a city, by nature intended for the emporium of a greater trade than that which now flows through New York, has given place to broader and more enlightened views.

Prominent among the plans which have sprung out of this altered state of things is the system of railroads intended to link our city with every State and every county throughout the South-west, and to drain into our market the richness of their products and afford to them in return the most valuable of our imports. Not more than three years ago it was predicted in one of the publications of this city that a large portion of the present trade of New Orleans must in any event be drawn off to other seaports. Part of Eastern Tennessee must henceforth send its business to Charleston over the Georgia Railroad. The Selma, Tenaessee and Ohio roads must, from the date of their completion, draw off all the trade of Alabama, one-third of the trade of Mississippi, and about the same portion of the trade of Tennessee. Some steps have already been taken to avert consequences so pernicious to the wealth and prosperity of the city by the construction of railroads into Texas and through the heart of Mississippi to Eastern Tennessee; but hitherto nothing has been accomplished likely to prevent the realization of the prediction with regard to Alabama and the Atlantic States. Railroads have been run around us in every direction, intended to draw the legitimate business of our city to Baltimore, Charleston and other rival points, and we have been content to lay supinely and watch their progress without a single effort in self defence.

The immediate opening of a new and more expeditious route from this city to Mobile is an object so full of interest to our citizens and to the trading public, that the subject cannot be too frequently pressed upon those who have undertaken to carry it through. The present route by the Lakes and Gulf coast is one requiring a great length of time, and is liable to so many annoyances, as to have become a source of complaint that cries loudly for a remedy. The distance is now one hundred and sixty miles, requiring nearly twenty hours to make the passage, whereas by the contemplated railroad route the length of rail will be only about one hundred and thirty-three miles, which, by express trains, may be traversed in from four to six hours (more or less), according to the speed of the locomotive. This would effect a great reduction of time; and as in this fast age time is money, the immense capital saved is this way would be alone sufficient to build the road. The road would also pass through a very extensive country, heretofore remaining uncultivated from the difficulties of bringing its products to market, and in this way would add immensely to the supply and cheapness of vegetable food fit for the table—a desideratum so much and so long needed in this city. This road will unite the Gulf shore, offering a ready means of ingress and egress to and from the city to the seaside resorts. [N. O. Crescent.

A SEVERE RECKE.—We would the following from the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, of July 9, were gentler; yet we cannot suppress it:

INGRATITUDE.—So it is true that Mount Vernon has been sold to speculators. An old man peddles canes at ten cents a piece by the door of Washington's tomb; and pretty soon a whirligig and swing will be erected in the grounds, a saloon opened in the venerable mansion, and along the piazza, through which, with slow and dignified step, the best man of his age used to walk for recreation, there will be a line of smokers and tobacco-chewers, with their feet up, guzzling mint juleps and talking politics. Will the speculators be good enough not to disturb the sarcophagi, in which are the remains of Washington and his wife, for their contemptible purposes in getting operations. We hope they won't put them to Barnum.

Sell Mount Vernon! It is akin to that mean spirit which leaves the resting places of our great men unmarked and almost unknown. It is akin to that disgraceful neglect of all gratitude, all gratitude, which has characterized our National Legislature. This bragging country of ours which glorifies itself over its increasing wealth, enterprise; and ever-extending limits, has permitted its old revolutionary soldiers to die in hovels, or starve on beggarly pensions; to rot there, grown old, feeble, blind, to sleep on the cold charity of the almshouse. Is Westminster Abbey, our St. Paul's—where are they? Where the monuments to our patriots, our statesmen, our generals? Briars and thistles overgrow their graves, or hide the mouldering tablets that mark the spot. If a commission for a foreign Consulship or Post-office were open at the head of each, and the whole land a swarm of office-seekers set upon the hunt with such prizes in prospect, not one in a thousand could find them. The paltry spirit of economy refused a memorial to Clinton; and a Legislature who could not understand or appreciate anything that did not belong to party, deny the tribute which public gratitude demanded at their hands. Congress haggles and debates about the compensation which some of the more patriotic of that miscellaneous crowd may attempt to make to an old soldier, and squanders thousands in mileage on useless, and worse than useless members.

Well, we don't mean to get out of temper; but this exhibition of the remains of Washington, and the sale of ginger-pop in his mansion, is something to get angry about.

We saw a venerable man to-day who had seen and talked with Washington. His recollection of his stately presence, and had heard the music of his lips. We were glad to take the hand which had been clasped in that of the great Chief, to listen to the interesting incidents of his life at Philadelphia; to know how he lived, what was the manner of his home life; how he looked, talked and acted. We seemed to be gazing on one of the few solitary links that connect this generation with a great age, soon to pass away. When the venerable face of our informant was lighted up with the memories of his youth, which were thus called to mind, and his heart discharged itself of its burden of love and devotion to Washington, we could understand something of that character which impressed itself so indelibly on the age in which he lived and on the men who were his contemporaries.

Congress quarrels, and wastes the Public Treasure at the Capitol, under the shadow of the Monument that begs its way slowly towards the skies, and but a few miles distant from the scene of his death and burial. Alas for gratitude of republics! The grave of Washington is unmarked—almost obliterated. Jefferson lies amid the rank grass and the brambles; the graves of the Generals of the Revolution are many of them, forgotten; and the country which they have established and made renowned has consigned to obscurity the memories of the men whose lives were marked by her ingratitude.

SECRETARY GUTHRIE.—The New York Herald in speaking of Secretary Guthrie, says:

Secretary Guthrie is, perhaps, the plainest Kentucky farmer-looking man, that was ever at the head of the Treasury Department. He is as if he had lived in the Western backwoods all his life, and had just come over the Alleghanies to see something of the wonders of civilization on the seaboard. He might pass for David Crockett redivivus. His little eye, his strongly-marked agricultural countenance, his peculiar, raw-boned, Herculean figure, his heavy, angainly gait and drowsy somnolescent style of conversation, would hardly warrant the presumption that he is one of the most distinguished lawyers of Kentucky, where law is a general study of ambitious young men and the readiest passport to political preferment. But he is a singed cat. He speaks familiarly of subjects of which one might think he had never heard, and here, in New York was not a more disconcerted by the splendid things around him than a Camanche Indian. Not a whit.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED--Wednesday evening, July 20th, by the Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, Mr. J. G. CLEVELAND to Miss ELIZABETH REYNOLDS, all of Jacksonville, Ala.

MARRIED--Thursday evening, July 21st, at the residence of Mr. E. L. Woodward, by the Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, Mr. WILLIAM WHITE to Miss HANNAH FRANCES, daughter of Mr. E. L. Woodward, all of Jacksonville, Ala.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion $1 00
Each subsequent insertion 50
One Square, one year 15 00
One Square, six months 10 00
Two Squares, one year 25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines--ten words make a line.
No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

Receipts to July 30--1853.

☞ Please see that the money sent is duly acknowledged.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
By Rev L Patterson—
Rev J W Staley 1 50
Cr. by 4 50
"No name to the letter" 50
Reuben Jordan 1 50
John Hunter 1 50
C W Sayers 1 50
Mark Jackson 1 50
By Rev L M Wilson—
S D Crum 1 50
J B Dudley 1 50
By Rev J J Hutchinson—
Rev E L Sims 1 50
A Norwood 1 50
J H Hutchinson 1 50
Less 50c.
By R L Pixley—
Rev M E Kercheville 1 50
John Perkins 1 50
Richard Cole 1 50
On account 4 50
Cr. by 1 50
By Rev J W Ellis Jr—
Ben Long 1 50
Reuben Reocher 1 50
W T Chapman 1 50
Cr. by 50c.
By Rev J W Ellis—
J J Crawford 1 50
J Ashcraft 1 50
J Pharr 1 50
W A Smith 4 50
W S Burks 1 50
W A Sinclair 1 50
J McGrath 1 50
J J Tamplin 1 50
T J Brannam 1 50
J Melarland 1 50
Sig H W McCraw 1 50
J Gentry 1 50
Cr. by 9 50
By Rev W H Turnley—
J Bonnecraft 1 51
T Casey 1 50
T T McCollum 1 50
T T Ormood 1 50
J J Wood 1 50
T T Richmond 1 50
Roy Gaulden 1 50
Alonzo Zeagler 1 50
Unknown money 7 05
Cr. by 35c.
By Rev J D Worrel—
T Rhoe....(less) 1 50
Rev G Watson Jr (loss) 1 50
By Rev W Murrah—
John Billups 1 50
J Reave 1 50
Sol Johnson 1 50
T J Price 1 50
T T Harper 1 50
T Dumas 1 50
T T Martin 1 50
T J Turnipseed 1 50
T J Moore 1 50
Less 5 00
H Wynn 1 50
By Rev T Burpo—
H Champbliss ..(less) 1 50
By Rev A P Powell—
Wm H Blair ..(less).. 1 50
By Rev W C Turner—
T J Brown 1 50
Cr. by 50c.
By Rev Geo F Ellis—
Sol Jno Massey ..(less) 1 50
By Rev B F Pilly—
J O Bale 1 50
T T Crawford 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev E S Smith—
T J Davidson 1 50
On account 50
By Rev J S Hughes—
T J Mordecai 1 50
Reuben Vail 1 50
Wm K Mitchell 1 50
Cr. by 50c.
By Rev J E Newman—
T J Kirkland..(less). 1 50
By Rev J W Broxson—
T H Powell 1 50
Rev N D Barnett 1 50
Felix Ashley 1 50
Geo Powell 1 50
T Jones 1 50
On account 0 00
Less 3 50
By Rev F Walker—
J Rivers.....(loss)... 1 50
By Rev N Hopkins—
T J Hatch 1 50
T T Freeman 1 50
Rev C Stridar—
On account 4 50
By Rev L P Golson—
J T Miller.....(less)... 1 50
T J Townsend 1 50
T J Jones 1 50
By Rev W H Ardis—
Joel Hamiter 5 00
John Perry 1 50
John Norton 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev J W Laney—
Rev S B Price 1 50
Jno Agee 1 50
T Mask 1 50
Wm H Pope 1 50
T J Pope 1 50
T J Boatwright 1 50
Less 9 00
By Rev O R Blue—
Samuel McGehee 1 50
T P Hemphill 1 50
Less 3 00
Rev O S Hurt—
On account 17 00
By Rev A McBryde—
Rev Solomon Cornegay ..(less)... 1 50
By Rev J W Shoreo—
T J Pike 1 50
On account 3 50
By Rev W H Ellison—
Rev Geo W Carter 4 00
T W Turver 1 50
W B Beal 1 50
By Rev H J Hunter—
T J Shannon 1 50
W P Mannon 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev J T Roper—
T C Taylor 1 50
Sam'l Davis 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev W W Thomas—
T J Cross 1 50
John Leach 1 50
Rev Churchwell 1 50
T C Dean 1 50
T H Rencher 1 50
Cr. by 2 50
By Rev D B McDonald—
Rev Wm Ross 1 50
Jno Gill 1 50
Rev W Wilson 1 50
T H Rember 1 50
Cr. by 1 50

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
By Rev John Pipes—
F M Carey 1 50
John Glover 1 50
By Rev H C Thweatt—
W H Pugh ....(loss)... 1 50
By Rev W N Manley—
Judge Chaplin ..(loss)... 1 50
By Rev L A Reed—
W P Lithejohn 1 50
R Edington 1 50
Ed Zaring 1 50
Miss L Hymes 1 50
On account 4 50
By Rev B S Watkins—
B L Carr 1 50
J B Bryan 1 50
R Bryan 1 50
J Vaughan 1 50
Mrs E M G Turnley 1 50
Cr. by 3 50
By Rev B Klinnear—
W M Gray 1 50
Cr. by 1 00
J H Irwin, NO 1 50
H H Keene, N Y 4 00
J S Branon 1 50
Rev W H Rogers—
On account 10 00
By Rev R L Childers—
W J Wiltbel 1 50
Mrs D Alkman 1 50
A S Austin 1 50
By Rev R Trippett—
B Burns 1 50
J G Wiseman 1 50
R M Beachem 1 50
Cr. by 50c.
By Rev R C Goodgion—
Mrs H Bolin 50
V H Lockley 1 50
J M Holloway 1 50
C L Matlock 1 50
L D Matkins 1 50
Less 7 50.
By Rev H L Green—
Mrs S M Cloud 1 50
Z Day 1 50
Wm Germian..(less)... 1 50
By Rev S J Graves—
F A Rainer 1 50
B E Ellis 1 50
John Murphy 1 50
Cr. by 5 50
By Rev Z Thompson—
J B Beard 1 50
Wm Morris 1 50
L T Wade 1 50
John H Martin 1 50
S L Chamblin 1 50
Less 7 50
Robt Holmes 1 50
By Rev R Randle—
Col A P King 1 50
Rev W B Scott 1 00
Martin McLeroy 1 50
Cr. by 3 00
By Rev L Parker—
Rev Thos Stringfield.. 3 50
Mrs Kirkpatrick 1 50
Rev Alex Sale 1 00
By Rev P M Goodwyn—
Jas Fisher 1 50
J A McCoy 1 50
Mrs M J Mills 1 50
Less 4 50
By Rev R J Harp—
Mrs E A Chapman 1 50
Scuddy Perkins 1 50
M D Stampley 1 50
R G Darden 1 50
Less 1 00
By Rev R Babington—
J M Burris 1 50
T C Bickham 1 50
D Hughes 1 50
J G Glovar 4 00
Miss Mary Glover 1 50

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
By Rev T W Castles—
J B Fields 1 50
P E Holleman 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev F E Green—
W W Connerly..(less).. 1 50
By Rev H J Harris—
T S Golsen...(less)... 1 50
By Rev J D Forter—
J W Mason 1 50
J T Abel 1 50
Less 3 00
Jas Parker...(less)... 1 50
J L Rush 1 50
Less 50c.
By Rev G T Vickers—
Saml Rutledge 1 50
J W Rutledge 1 50
J J Rutledge 1 50
J S Jones 1 50
Less 1 00
By Rev G L Crosby—
Nimrod McGrire 1 50
Wiley Tomber 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev E G Cook—
G Robinson 1 50
Lucy A Hlaud 1 50
City Hospital 1 50
Cr. by 50c.
By Rev J N Bradshaw—
Saml Peers 1 50
R Sturdivant 1 50
Less 3 00
H Hubbs....(less)... 1 50
C Poole 1 50
Rev H J Woodward—
On account 5 00
By Rev A Lasor—
Mrs P Pierce 1 50
M Myers 1 50
Mrs Lucy Swain 1 50
By Rev N A Chavers—
J B Bolan 1 50
J B Jones 1 50
Less 1 50
By Rev E F Dowling—
Thos Farrow ..(less)... 1 50
By Rev H L Peel—
H F Renalbe 1 50
A Cooke 1 50
Less 3 00
By Rev P W Hobbs—
M Anderson...(less)... 1 50
By Rev J H Davidson—
R J Gill 1 50
Eli Mercer 1 50
Mrs F Tilly 1 50
J P Morton 1 50
Less 1 00
By Rev W R Wilson—
W G Coons 1 50
W B Ratliff 1 50
Cr. by 2 00

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.
Jno G Hester 1 50
By Rev J W Sheldon—
W T Brown 1 50
Rev W Lovesque 1 50

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.
By Rev J B Rahb—
Col J D Julian 1 50
H C Klug 1 50

ARKANSAS CONFERENCE.
Mrs S W Cottrell 1 50
Rev John Holding 1 50

UNIVERSITY OF NASHVILLE.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third Annual Course of Lectures in this Department will commence on Tuesday, the first of November next, and continue till the first of the ensuing March.

PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.

JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.

A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy and Physiology.

W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Institutes and Practice of Medicine.

C. K. WINSTON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.

ROBERT M. PORTER, M. D.,
General and Special Anatomy.

J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy.

WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for students on the first Monday in October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures will be given by the Professors, commencing also on the first Monday in October.

The students will have free access to the State Hospital.

Fee of each Professor, $15; Matriculation ticket, $5; Demonstrating ticket, $10; Graduation fee, $25.

Good board can be obtained in the city at from $2 50 to $3 per week. Further information may be obtained by addressing the Dean.

J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D., Dean.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb., 1853.

General Intelligence.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Interments in the City of New Orleans for the week ending July 23, 1853:

Apoplexy	5	Fever, Yellow	420
Ascites	1	Fever, Congestive	10
Brain, Congestion of	10	Fever, Malignant	4
Bowels, Strangulation of	1	Fever, Intermittent	7
Consumption	10	Gongrene	1
Convulsions	8	Gastro-Enteritis	1
Cholera Morbus	1	Irritation	1
Cerebritis	1	Hepatitis	52
Cramps	2	Liver Chiborrls	1
Dysentery	4	Meningitis	1
Debility	9	Marasmus	3
Diarrhea	8	Old Age	1
Delirium Tremens	2	Pertussis	1
Dentition	4	Sun Struck	6
Dropsy	2	Still-born	8
Drowned	3	Skull, Fracture of	1
Erysipelas	1	Sarcoma of Stomach	1
Epilepsy	2	Tetanus	1
Enteritis	4	Trismus	3
Fever, Cerebral	5	Tabes	1
Fever, Pernicious	6	Uncertain	31
Fever, Bilious	4	Worms	3
Fever, Typhoid	9	Wound	2
Total			617

Interments in the following Cemeteries.

Charity Hospital	172	Catholic No. 2	15
St Patrick	135	Germna Hebrew	5
Potter's Field	34	St Vincent de Paul	62
Cypress Grove	10	Protestant	12
Lafayette	107
Catholic No. 1	5	Total	617

A. HESTER, Sec. B. H.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report from Friday midnight to Saturday midnight: Admissions, 60; discharges, 51; deaths, 14. From Saturday midnight to Sunday midnight: Admissions, 50; discharges, 135; deaths, 33.

H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Charity Hospital, July 25.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report for the twenty-four hours ending at midnight on Monday, 25th inst.:

Admissions 80
Discharges 31
Deaths 31
Twenty-seven of which were of yellow fever.

H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Charity Hospital, July 26, 1853.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at Midnight on Tuesday 26th inst: Admission, 92. discharges, 36. deaths 20, 26 of which were of yellow fever.

H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Charity Hospital, July 27, 1853.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Wednesday, 27th inst: Admissions, 62; discharges, 24, of which 11 were yellow fever; deaths, 28, of which 26 were yellow fever.

H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Interments in all the Cemeteries in the City, for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock P. M. on the 27th instant: 124—of which 100 were Yellow Fever.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Thursday, 28th instant: Admissions 102; Discharges 34; Deaths 42, of which 40 were of yellow fever.

H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Interments in all the Cemeteries of the city, for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, P. M. on the 28th instant: Yellow fever 89; Other diseases 16—Total 105.

We have already announced the death of the Hon. Samuel Appleton, of Boston. He was a wealthy merchant, well known both in public and private life. The Boston Transcript says: "He has lived a most useful and honorable life, and although for many years he has been withdrawn from the active scenes of business, yet his charities have been poured out with a lavish hand, to cheer the hearts of the afflicted, to aid in movements for the welfare of society, and to build up institutions of learning. His charitable donations for many years have exceeded $25,000 per annum. While he was distinguished for great generosity of character, and his charities were extended with great liberality, he had remarkable practical wisdom, and his gifts were bestowed with a discriminating and sound judgment truly surprising."

OUR MINISTERS.—The Washington Union of the 16th says:

It is understood that the Hon. James Buchanan, whose appointment as Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States at the Court of St. James has already been announced, will soon proceed to London to assume the duties of his mission. We learn also, that the Hon. Messrs. Soulé, of Louisiana, Gadsden, of South Carolina, Borland, of Arkansas, Green, of Missouri, and Hedinger, of Virginia, having nearly completed their preparatory arrangements, are about to proceed to their respective destinations to enter upon the duties of the several missions confided to their charge.

The cholera is still carrying away hundreds of slaves in Cuba. Its ravages have been more fierce in the sugar estates of the district of Cardenas, especially in Banguises, where nearly all of the largest and most flourishing estates are located. One planter has lost 140 slaves, and several others, it is said, have suffered to a still greater extent. The malady, says the New York Express, is supposed to have been caused by the introduction of a lot of Coolies on the Poniha estate.

The proper officers in the Treasury Department are busily engaged in investigations to enable them to determine whether to regard the recent efforts to introduce half made sugar from Cuba into the port of New Orleans as fraud, or to pass the article on the payment of lawful duty on sugar. Sixteen cargoes in all, imported by the celebrated New Orleans refiners, Belcher & Co., have been seized and await the decision of the Department.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—We select the following account of the great Exhibition from the New York Express of the 21st inst.:

Every day reveals a gratifying progress in the Exhibition. Stalls that were empty when we last visited that building, were "swept and garnished," decorated and filled with handsome fabrics. Exhibitors were as busy as ever, and everything around bore evidence to a steady advance. We have more than once expressed our faith in the ultimate success of the New York Exhibition, and every time we visit it we find fresh grounds for adhering to that faith. The additional building will probably be completed in two weeks more, and then the picture gallery—which will, no doubt, prove one of the most attractive features of the building—will be fitted up. The fountains at present in course of construction in the main building, will be completed in a few days, and will operate powerfully in cooling down the atmosphere in the interior of the building, though, as for that matter, in consequence of the uninterrupted circulation of the air, the Crystal Palace, even as it is, is decidedly one of the most delightful places in the city.

The English Department is rapidly regaining lost ground, and presents a very brilliant appearance. The richness of the fabrics exhibited attracts universal attention. It is very far, however, from being complete as yet. Manchester, London, Leeds, Birmingham, and all the great manufacturing towns, are fully represented.

The American Department is of course by long odds the most advanced in preparation. The display of carpets, plate, porcelain, and more particularly machinery, is very fine. All the most prominent of our New York merchants and manufacturers are fully represented, as also are all the great cities of the Union—Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and a host of other cities and towns—Philadelphia in particular makes a very fine show. The American contributors of sculpture, paintings, etc., will deservedly occupy a prominent position.

The Italian department from the first was one of the principal attractions of the Exhibition, and is in every respect one of which a land which boasts of being the "Mother of the Arts" may be justly proud. It does not occupy so much space as the departments allotted to other nations, but then it must be borne in mind that a large amount of its contributions, particularly its statues and paintings, ornament every part of the building, and were thus arranged for the purpose of giving effect to the whole Exhibition.

France of course stands pre-eminent in silks and fancy articles, though at the same time we think that America (that is, as far as it is possible to form an opinion, in the imperfect state of the departments of the two nations,) will prove a formidable rival to it, in the latter branches in particular.

The Belgian, Mexican and German departments are still in an imperfect state. Two weeks more, however, will effect a great change for the better. The Exhibition at present is only in the bud.

CRYSTAL PALACE, July 20.

Number of single admissions	3009
On season tickets	1200
Amount of cash receipts	$1479

WASHINGTON NATIONAL MONUMENT.

CRYSTAL PALACE, New York, July 20, 1853.

Amount of cash on hand	$223 21
Contributions received this day	58 69
Total	$281 90

Louisiana Items.

The Shreveport South-Western, of the 20th, says:

Red river is at a stand, with sufficient water for the largest class of boats to ascend to this port. We learn from Capt. Applegate that there is a slight rise above.

From the same paper we clip the following in regard to the crops:

Cotton and corn in this parish are daily improving, and all that we now ask is a few more weeks of favorable weather. The prospects in Claiborne for cotton, corn and potatoes, are unusually favorable. In DeSoto the crops are flourishing. In Harrison county (Texas) the corn crop will prove abundant; while the cotton is greatly improved, presenting a healthy and thriving appearence. Planters generally are in fine spirits.

We clip from the Democrat (Shreveport), of the 21st, the following interesting items:

We are informed by Mr. T. C. H. Smith, one of the main contractors on the New Orleans, Shreveport and Galveston line of telegraph, that the whole line will be in working order by the 1st of October next. From Galveston to Houston the line will be in working order in about three weeks. Before the close of this week the posts will be put up beyond Mansfield, in the direction of New Orleans, and beyond Marshall in the direction of Galveston. They expect to reach Austin and San Antonio by the first of January next. Their intention is to push on to the Pacific as rapidly as circumstances will justify.

Col. N. D. Coleman, the able and very efficient President of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, reached here on Monday last, with a view to the necessary final arrangements to commence operations on the work. Col. Coleman brings the most cheering accounts from the parishes lying on the line of the road. At Lake Lafouchein, in Morehouse parish, the sum of $33,000 was subscribed; at Bastrop, in the same parish, $11,000; at a little place called Downsville, in the parish of Union, there was a small sum subscribed—the amount not recollected. At Vienna, in the parish of Jackson, the citizens took stock to the amount of $10,000; Homer, $4,000. This is in addition to a liberal subscription taken some time since. At Minden, on Saturday last, $20,000.

Col Coleman informs us that there is no doubt about the success of the parish subscription in Ouachita, Madison, Ilienville, and other parishes, and that the people of Vicksburg will vote a subscription of $150,000, just as soon as they are authorized by act of the Legislature. The people of Vicksburg are unanimously in favor of this route, and will spare, no efforts to push forward the work as rapidly as possibly.

MOBILE ITEMS.—An election was held on Monday for the purpose of ascertaining the will of the real estate owners in relation to the proposition for issuing city bonds of $1,000,000 in aid of the Grand Railroad. The result was 425 votes for the measure and 33 against it.

The Tribune says:

This shows a singular degree of unanimity on the subject, and we are satisfied that, but for a misunderstanding in relation to the condition of the bonds, the minority would have been smaller.

MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD.—We are glad to learn that a contract for constructing the Mississippi Central Railroad has been made with Messrs. Henly, Holman, Sims & Co. The essential terms of the contract are, that they shall construct and equip the road for $16,600 per mile—to be paid as follows: one-fifth in stock in said road, two-fifths in the bonds of the Railroad Company, bearing six per cent. interest, and maturing thirty years from their issuance, and the other two-fifths in money—the road to be completed by the 1st of January, 1857, and the contractors to have all the profits thereof up to that time, if it is finished before—the contractors to pay the interest accruing on the bonds for either two or three years. The contractors are a strong company—most of them have great experience in building railroads.

The name of Leroy Sims is enough to satisfy all that the work will be pushed forward with energy. It is needful that some four or five thousand dollars of stock shall yet be taken to enable the Railroad Company to comply with their part of the agreement. While the location of the road on the extreme eastern part of our county renders it less valuable to our citizens than it would have been had it been located near the centre of the county, yet it is easy to see that it will be of great value to our people, and what is more, there can't be a reasonable doubt of its affording a fine investment for money.

We sincerely hope our citizens will increase the private subscription of this county at least one hundred thousand dollars. Let it be remembered that we have yet something to do to enable the contractors to complete their undertaking. [Lexington Advertiser.

STRANGE INFATUATION.—The Richmond (Va.) Mail says:

Some ten years ago there resided in this State a gentleman, his wife and two daughters, who were as much respected as any family in it. Blessed with a competency of earthly goods, and surrounded by hosts of friends, their happiness seemed as near perfect as human beings could expect to enjoy. Six years since this family left here for the South, where the husband and father took to drink, and in two years became a bankrupt and a sot. Next, the wife and mother became a drunkard, and now we understand the two girls are the inmates of a low brothel in a city on the Mississippi river. What a commentary on the free use of ardent spirits! In six years a whole family of respectable people reduced from affluence to the deepest depths of degradation. And yet how many cases of a similar nature are to be met with every day.

FRIGHTFUL CATASTROPHE—Three men swept over the Falls of Niagara.—The New York papers bring us some additional intelligence, received by telegraph, of the frightful accident which occurred on Tuesday, the 19th inst., at the Falls of Niagara. The first dispatch, dated at the Falls at 9 o'clock in the morning, says:

Three men, belonging to a scow, which came down the river last night, got into a skiff alongside the scow, and it is supposed fell asleep, when the boat got separated from the scow, and was hurried on by the current with fearful rapidity towards the Falls. This happened about 9½ o'clock last evening. Two of the men, one named Andrew Hanaman, the other a stranger, were hurled at once over the foaming sheet; the third, Joseph Abie, caught hold of a stump in his fearful passage, and has clung to it ever since.

The excitment here is intense. We have no life-boat, and common boats are swamped as soon as they touch the rapids. A life-boat has been sent for from Buffalo. Parties on shore have succeeded in floating a box of refreshments to the poor fellow, who can be plainly seen from the shore.

Citizens and visitors throng the banks of the river to witness the efforts making for the rescue.

A second dispatch, dated 12 o'clock, M., says:

The man is still in the rapids, apparently drooping. The life-boat was sent on from Buffalo; but, sad to say, proved too light, swamped immediately it was launched, and was lost over the rapids. Unfortunately, but one boat was sent. The situation of the unfortunate man grows more and more critical, and it is questionable whether he can sustain himself until another boat arrives.

A third dispatch, dated 6½, P. M., says:

The man went over the Falls at 6 o'clock. A raft had been floated to him, which he was on, when they floated another life-boat to him, and as he was getting ready to jump into it the boat struck the raft and swept him off into the rapids. He attempted to swim to a small island, but failed to reach it. He raised himself up to his full height, gave a shriek, waived his arms wildly, and disappeared.

OPENING OF THE FIRST RAILROAD IN AFRICA.—Accounts from Alexandria, Egypt, of June 21, state that the Cairo and Alexandria Railway had been partially opened. A letter, dated the 21st, says:

"The first railway ever constructed in Africa has been for twenty-five miles from Alexandria, traversed this day by locomotives, and in the land of the Pyramids one more monument has been added to the abiding splendor of the past. There is to be a more formal opening in a few months, when the first section of the Nile's is completed."

Weather and Crops.

The Red River Republican of the 23d inst says:

The corn crops in the uplands are better than they have been for years; indeed, they are superior, generally, to those on the lowlands, which, though fair, we hear no one brag of. The season is said to have proved better for stubble than seed cane. The cotton crop is a late one, and its condition at this time is precarious One thing is certain; a good crop cannot be made this year; it is yet uncertain whether it will be only indifferent, or bad.

The Capitolian Vis-A-Vis of the 27th says: "We are visited almost daily with gusts of wind and showers."

The North Louisianian of the 16th inst. says:

Since the issue of our last the weather has been unusually and very uniformly warm; we had some very heavy showers of rain in the early part of the week; from what we can learn the drouth had been so long prior to the late rains that the corn crop will scarcely come up to an average; cotton has also suffered severely, and no matter what may be the character of the weather from this out, the yield must be comparatively small. The health of our parish is good, in fact, never better.

The Ouachita Register of the 19th inst. says:

The weather is very fine, and the crops in this Parish are looking very promisingly. Much, however, will depend upon the Fall, as the crop is much later than usual.

The Caddo (Shreveport) Gazette, of the 21st, says:

Among other evils to which cotton is heir, we have recently heard of its being attacked, on some plantations, by the grass worm. This does not constitute a serious evil, as it does not continue long after the grass has been eaten.

The Louisiana State Paper of the 23d instant says:

Mr. Augustus G. Cobb, on the 21st inst., presented us with an open pod of cotton from his field. It was a regular simon pure, old fashioned boll.

ARMY WORM.—It is with extreme regret, says the Catahoula Advocate of July 16, that we learned, by conversation yesterday with Mr. James Aul, manager on Col. Tew's Wallace Ridge Plantation, that the army-worm has made its appearance in vast numbers, and is committing its depredations with fearful impress.

The St. Landry Whig, of the 23d inst., says: We still have rain every day. The late rains we have had, have left a slimy deposit on the prairies, which we are afraid will prove injurious to health. The showers that are now falling, may remove it, and wash it into the streams where it can do us no hurt.

The rains appear to be very general. Notwithstanding so much water has fallen, the journals of the State speak favorably of the growing crop. We are inclined to the belief that a change of opinion among them must soon take place.

The cane may not be injured by these protracted rains, nor is it certain that the maturing corn will be materially damaged by them, unless it be caused by accompanying winds, but cotton must suffer "beyond all doubt."

It is a plant which requires for its maturity and productiveness, dry weather, and not such as we have had for three weeks back. At present, the forms are falling off in showers, while the germ of disease is taking hold on the plant.

It is quite small, almost everywhere, and this is the season when it should be developing itself, instead of being inundated with rain.

The Greensboro' (Ala.) Beacon, of the 23d inst., says:

On Wednesday night last a very abundant rain fell in this place, and, we judge, in this vicinity generally. It was the first really plentiful rain that we have had here since the last of March. As we now write, (Thursday morning) the indications are very strong that we shall have more in the course of the day. A few days of very wet weather would do great injury to the cotton; in fact, we had heard considerable complaint even before the heavy rain of Wednesday night.

The Selma (Ala.) State Sentinel, of the 22d inst., says:

For the last week we have been blessed with rains in the greatest abundance, there being now almost daily two or more good showers, though we regret to say these showers have not been general, as we learn, in some sections, the crops are suffering severely for the want of rain. In some places, however, they will benefit the crops, while in others they are too far advanced to receive but little benefit.

From a letter to the Savannah Courier, of the 19th inst., we extract the following:

With regard to the cotton crop, I hardly know what to say. I am of the opinion, however, that genial showers of rain until the middle of next month, and a favorable Fall, as to frost and gathering, will insure us tolerable fall crops. Without this conjunction of circumstances, however, we may expect a short crop, far behind those of the two last years.

THE NEW YORK CRYSTAL PALACE EXHIBITION. There were 2,685 persons admitted to the exhibition on Tuesday the 19th, on pay tickets, and 1,800 on season tickets. It is said that $35,000 worth of season tickets have been sold, and that the receipts so far have averaged $1,500 per day. The Evening Post urges that the exhibition be opened on Sunday afternoons, in order to attract the crowds from the drinking saloons and gambling houses in the vicinity; but the suggestion will hardly be adopted. The Tribune says:

The Crystal Palace is resonant with the hum of industry; it is putting on its exhibition dress by degrees. There is, however, a great deal to see, and as it will bear many visits, persons will be safe in attending now. Enough is shown already to prove that, although the United States made, artistically, a poor figure at the London Exposition, at this one they will do themselves credit.

The Italian department has yet much to do to put it in proper order. Many cases, however, will be opened for it in a few days. The Dutch Department also requires arrangement to present it to the public. As for the French, it is so far from full that we shall not attempt to prophesy its splendor—though some articles, especially the magnificent Porcelains, now make a liberal display. There are also a number of pianos in that department. The British Department has a good deal exposed, but any quantity of things almost yet to be set forth. The silverware of this department is beyond all praise. Among other things is the prize-work which obtained £200 from the Goldsmith's Company, London. The American Department has already some splendid contributions in carvings, especially buffets, and sideboards that are as ponderous as beautiful. So, too, various compartments devoted to wearing apparel—fancy and useful—clothes, hats, boots, etc., merit all praise.

In machinery, England and America will both be strong, but the machine arcade now building, can only, on its completion, develop these resources. Some American coaches of the last patents are attracting crowds, from their lightness, beauty and richness. We met, coming, the Philadelphia Hope Hose, a mass of silver, veneering, japanning, carving, and painting—handsome enough for a royal state coach. Some frames of looking-glasses of a size reaching from floor to ceiling, and decked with a Raphalesque fullness of design in alto-relievoe—French, English, and American—are among the most remarkable things in the Palace.

A few days more and we trust to be able to present in regular and clear order the various contributions which now are on the road, or lie about the floor uncovered or half taken out of boxes, or, if out, are in such confusion as to defy description.

The celebrated American clipper ship Sovereign of the Seas, Captain McKay, arrived in the Mersey, Liverpool, on Saturday evening, 23d inst., from New York, having made the run in a shorter time than was ever previously accomplished by a sailing ship. She departed from New York in tow of a steamer, at 11 P. M., on the 18th ult., and consequently made the trip in about fourteen days. It is said she ran from the Grand Banks to Cape Clear, a distance of 1668 miles, in 135 hours, being an average of 296 miles per day. On one day she made 344 miles, and on two others 340 each. She has been 228 days at sea since she was launched, and has made an average of 180 knots per day.

TRADE AND SPADE.—By Charles Mackay.

Between two friends to-days of old
A bitter strife began,
A father Spade and brother Trade
Disputed man to man.
"You're vain, undutiful and proud"
Said Spade, with flashing eyes,
"You earn your thousands while I starve;
You mock my children's cries;
You ride in state with lordly looks
You dwell in bower and hall,
You speak of me reproachfully,
And prosper on my fall.
So from this hour, in shine or shower,
We'll learn to live apart,
I hailed the earth ere you were born—
I rest you from my heart."

And Trade (of temper in his pride,
He uttered words of scorn),
"You do not know the ways of men.
Amid your sheep and corn
You doze away the lazy day.
Nor think how minutes run
Ho, put your shoulder to your work,
And do as I have done
You've all the earth to yield you wealth—
Built corn and pasture land,
I only ask a counting-house,
And room whereon to stand
And from this hour, in shine or shower,
I'll learn to live alone
I'll do without you well enough—
The world shall be my own"

And thus they wrangled night and day,
Pull like angry men,
Till things went wrong bel ween them both,
And would not right again,
But growing wiser in distress,
Each grasp'd the other's hand;
"'Twas wrong," said Spade, "to rail at Trade;
He loves me in the land."
And Trade as freely owned his fault;
"I've been unjust," he said,
"To quarrel with the good old man.
Who grows my daily bread
Long may we flourish, Trade and Spade,
In city and in plain!
The people starve while we dispute—
We must not part again"

And all the people sang for joy,
To see their good accord.
While Spade assembled all his sons
And filled his pleasant board;
And busy Trade sent fleets of ships
To every sea and strand,
And built me mills and factories
O'er all the prosperous land.
And so we'll sing God save the Queen
And long may brother Trade,
For sake of both the rich and poor,
Unite with brother Spade.

LATER FROM RIO DE JANEIRO—Arrival of the U. S. Frigate Congress.—The frigate Congress, commanded by Commodore Geo. F. Pearson, and bearing the broad pennant of Commodore Isaac McKeever, arrived at New York on the 20th inst., in thirty-seven days from Rio de Janeiro, which port she left on the 12th of June.

She has been absent three years and three months from the United States, and has been the flag ship of the Brazil squadron during the whole of that time. The only ships of war left on that station are the sloop-of-war Jamestown, left at Buenos Ayres, and the steamer Water-Witch, on a survey of the river La Plata.

The fever had subsided at Rio when the Congress left. Affairs at the river remained nearly the same as at last date. War still existed, but a temporary truce had been declared between the besiegers and the city.

The Congress returns, after her prolonged absence in good order and condition, and her officers and crew in fine health.

THE REVOLUTION IN BUENOS AYRES.—A letter dated Buenos Ayres, May 30, mentions the failure of the negotiation attempted by the Brazilian and Bolivian Ministers, and adds:

On the 3d of June all merchant vessels will have to leave this port, loaded or not, and it is reported that no extension of the time will be granted. The Congress of Santa Fé has sanctioned a Constitution; also, a custom-house laws with facilities of deposit, similar, we believe, to the one now in force here, and another, acknowledging the free navigation of the rivers. The town of Buenos Ayres is named as the Capital of the Confederation. If the town does not accept the Constitution, then another place will be named. A commission has been appointed by Congress to present the Constitution to this Government, but we have no hopes of its being accepted.

The Baltimore and Ohio Road earned last month on its main stem $190,900, against $133,883 the same month last year. The Washington Branch $30,600, against $36,782. The slight falling off in the latter is attributable to the absence of Congress and political Conventions at Baltimore. The proportion of freight trafic on the main stem is $142,600 to $48,300 for passengers.

The proposed vote of the city of Memphis, on the proposition to subscribe $150,000 to the Tennessee and Mississippi Railroad, has been postponed until the 13th day of August. This has been done in order that the thirty days' notice required by the order of the Board may be given, otherwise the vote would have been illegal.

RAILROAD AT BASTROP.—The citizens of Bastrop, Parish of Morehouse, are agitating the subject of a railroad from that point to Vicksburg, Miss. They are to hold a meeting on the 5th of August to deliberate on the subject, and Col. Coleman, of Vicksburg, is to attend and address them.

RAILROAD TAX.—The Police Jury of the parish of Natchitoches, on the 6th inst., came to the conclusion that it had no power to reduce, or otherwise change, the amount of tax ($250,000) voted last year as subscription to the Opelousas Railroad. [South Western.

Professor Schouw traces the history of the diffusion of the cotton plant and cotton with a tolernble degree of

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

From the Knickerbocker.

RAPPING IN THE CARS.

The car was full of passengers,
I can't recall the number,
But I had just awakened from
An unrefreshing slumber,
When a lady who sat facing me,
Directly met my eye,
But turned away immediately,
And smiled—I knew not why.

When youthful folks, who strangers are,
Are seated face to face,
In the silence of a railroad car—
And grave and formal place—
Their wandering eyes will sometimes meet
By some strange fascination,
And they cannot keep their faces straight,
Though dying with vexation.

Simpletons there doubtless are,
Whose mouths are always stretching,
But the guileless mirth of maiden's eyes
And dimpled cheeks is catching;
First she laughed, and then I laughed—
I couldn't say what of;
Then she looked grave, and I looked grave,
And then she laughed at that.

She endeavored to repress her mirth,
But couldn't hold it half in,
For, with face concealed behind a book,
She almost died a-laughing.
She pouted when she found her lips
Determined on a smile,
But 'twas very plain the pretty rogue
Was laughing all the while.

Thus happily the moments flew,
To me, at least, of course,
Though when she saw me smiling too,
It made the matter worse.
And when, at last, I left the car,
I caught her laughing eye,
And had one more good grin before
I tore myself away.

"Miss Ian" I sought in saddened mood,
And with feelings of regret;
Those brilliant eyes, I felt assured,
I never could forget
And when arrived, valise in hand,
I paused—I can't tell why—
Before a mirror on a stand,
And cared what curious eye.

My cravat was turned half-round or more,
And shocked was I to find
That my hat was badly jammed before,
And the rim turned up behind!
Then while in haste my room I sought,
I swore along the stairs
That I would not again be caught
A-capping in the cars.

A CHEERFUL HEART.—I once heard a young lady say to an individual, "Your countenance to me is like the rising sun, for it always gladdens me with a cheerful look." A merry or cheerful countenance is one of the things which Jeremy Taylor said his enemies and persecutors could not take away from him. There are some persons who spend their lives in this world as they would spend their lives shut up in a dungeon. Every thing is made gloomy and forbidding. They go moaning and complaining from day to day, that they have so little, and are constantly anxious, lest what they have should escape out of their hands. They always look upon the dark side, and can never enjoy the good. That is not religion. Religion makes the heart cheerful, and when its large and benevolent principles are exercised, man will be happy in spite of himself.

The indnetrione bee does not stop to complain that there are so many poisonous flowers and thorny branches on its road, but buzzes on selecting its honey where he can find it, and passing quietly by the places where it is not. There is enough in this world to complain about and find fault with, if men have the disposition.

We often travel on a hard and uneven road, but with a cheerful spirit, and a heart to praise God for his mercies, we may walk therein with comfort, and come to the end of our journey with peace. [Dewey.

Why not be polite? How much does it cost to say—"I thank you"? Why not practice it in home? To your husband, your children, your domestics? If a stranger does you some little act of courtesy, how sweet the smile of acknowledgment! If your husband—oh! it's a matter of course! no need of thanks.

Should an acquaintance tread on your dress, your very, very best, and by accident tear it, how profuse you are with your "never minds—don't think of it—I don't care at all." If a husband does it he gets a frown; if a child, he is chastised.

Ah! these are little things say you. They fall mightily upon the heart, let us assure you, little as they are.

A gentleman steps at a friend's house and finds it in confusion. "He don't see anything to apologize for—never thinks of such little matters." Everything is all right—cold supper—cold room—crying children—perfectly comfortable. Goes home where the wife has been taking care of the sick ones, and working her life almost out. Don't see why things can't be kept in better order; there never were such cross children before." No apologies accepted at home.

Why not be polite at home? Why not use freely that golden coin of courtesy? How sweet they sound, those little words, "I thank you," or you are very kind?" Doubly, yes thrice sweet from the lips we love, when heart smiles make the eye sparkle with the clear light of affection.

Be polite to your children. Do you expect them to be mindful of your welfare? To grow glad at your approach? To bound away to do your pleasure before the request is half spoken? Then with all your dignity and authority mingle politeness; give it a niche in your temple. Only then will you have learned the true secret of sending out into the world really "finished" gentlemen and ladies.

A SHARP BUSINESS LETTER.—A cotemporary publishes a letter from one of a class who think that there is nothing valuable but trade in the world. It purports to come from a "cute" merchant, who writes, in reply to a boyish epistle from his son at boarding-school, to his master, for reasons which he thus characteristically explains:—

"Sir—My son's of 10th inst. came duly to hand, and cont's noted. Sorry to hear he's been stud'g Latin, &c. What's use? I never studied any such thing—nothing but Webster's Sp'g Book and Daboll's Arith'k and P'r Richard's Alm'k; yet got along well enough—am Bank Direct'r, Memb. Chamb. Com., &c. &c., &c. Latin?—better look into McCulloch—some use in that. Learn Dr. and Cr., ct. per ct., car'cy, exch., bank facil., mon'ze, &c.; that's the commodity of true knowledge—the best mid'se for counting-room—always in dem'd—always available in market, when y'r Latin and y'r Greek wouldn't fetch a cocmarkee, as my captain says.

"But to point. My son is now 14 y'rs old—can in want of another clerk—must have finished his education by this time, surely: would have let him stand for another half year, though, but for the Latin, and high rates of tuition at a board'g-sch'l. Please ship him on board of Delaware, with invoice and bill of lad'g, of bales &c., consigned to Merx & Co., N. York. P. S.—Send bill, and will remit by return mail. Stocks rather heavy. Sh'd be glad to send you lot of damaged Java at 7 cts. per lb.—very cheap, and good enough for board'g-sch'll. Please advise."

When humor joins with rhythm and music, and appears in song, its influence is irresistible; its charities are countless, it stirs the feeling to love, peace, friendship, as scarce any moral agent can. The songs of Beranger are hymns of love and tenderness; I have seen great, whiskered Frenchmen warbling the "Bonnie Vialla," the "Soldats au pas, an pas," with tears rolling down their moustaches. At a Burns' Festival, I have seen Scotchmen singing Burns, while the drops twinkled on their furrowed cheeks, while each rough hand was flung out to grasp its neighbor's; while early scenes and sacred recollections, and dear and delightful memories of the past came rushing back at the sound of the familiar word and music, and the softened heart was full of love and friendship, and home. Humor! its tears are the alms of gentle spirits and may be counted, as sure they may, among the sweetest of life's charities—of that kindly sensibility, and sweet and sudden emotion, which exhibits itself at the eyes, I know no such provocative a humor; it is an irresistable sympathizer; it surprises you into compassion; you are laughing and disarmed, and suddenly forced into tears.

AN AMUSING INCIDENT.—The Journal of Commerce tells the following story:

"One incident in the procession, trifling in itself, occasioned a good deal of amusement when Gen. Pierce had got as far up as the head of Wall street, his horse became restive, and came in collision with the animal rode by Gen Sandford. As the President was riding with his hat in hand, the hat received the brunt of the shock, and suffered severely, being badly stove in and indented. The General was too much engaged to notice the catastrophe, and soon put on the hat in its unfortunate condition, and retained it in its place for about a block, exciting roars of laughter among the boys.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Perseverance, Captain Forbes, arrived from Indianola via Galveston, Tuesday.

The ship Forest City, from New York for Indianola, arrived at Pass Cavalle on the 11th inst., with 176 troops.

The S. W. American says the citizens of Belton are rapidly repairing the damages of the flood. They are building on the high grounds. A court-house is in contemplation, and will be erected during the year.

The Indianola Bulletin says:

The brig Matagorda, of which we spoke in our last as being aground in trying to get up to Port Lavaca, is still there at the present writing, having been in that situation, within five or six miles of her destination, for just ten days!

The same paper contains the following:

There is a constant stream of young lawyers and doctors pouring into Texas. We say to all such abroad, stay away—Texas is literally flooded with men in these professions—not one-half of them succeed to any reasonable extent. We want farmers and mechanics—men who produce something to live upon.

The South-Western American announces the death of ex-Governor Payne. He expired at Waco on Wednesday, the 6th inst. His remains will be conveyed to the North in charge of Gen. D. W. C. Clark.

The Galveston News says:

The Telegraph says Major Neighbors has entered upon his duties as Indian Agent for the Government, and intends visiting the Texas tribes this summer, having about $16,000 to distribute among them. This amount, we are persuaded, must be greatly increased, as from all accounts the tribes are nearly in a state of starvation, owing to the great scarcity of game.

They must be supported, or nearly so, by the Government, or they will be compelled to steal and pillage for a subsistence. The sooner the Government acts upon this view of the question, the better. But in order to provide for tribes permanently and economically, there is not a doubt that the Government should set apart a suitable territory expressly for them. By adopting this measure at once, millions of dollars would be saved, and the Indians made more comfortable, and their improvements in the arts of civilized life greatly promoted.

THE CROPS.—The corn crops in Gonzales and De Witt counties are reported as in excellent condition.

The Victoria Advocate is informed that cotton is opening in that vicinity, and that the cotton crops are looking remarkably well.

The Palestine Advocate says they have been blessed with an abundance of rain. Crops are now in a flourishing condition.

The recent heavy rains, says the Houston Telegraph, have raised several of the streams in that vicinity unusually high. The Brazos, however, has been raised but a few inches. It is evident, therefore, it says, that the rains have not extended far into the interior.

The Gonzales Inquirer fears the late heavy rains will have a tendency to injure the cotton crops of that county. Old planters say they will produce worms, and cause the stalks to grow too rapidly. The corn is all matured and consequently can experience little or no injury.

Throughout Western Texas, says the Indianola Bulletin, the crops are promising; the abundant rains have guaranteed a heavy yield of cotton, and the corn crop is about matured, and the season, altogether, may be considered a good one. Such is the general tenor of its correspondence and advices from the interior.

The San Antonio Ledger of the 19th says:

Since our last issue copious showers have fallen for several days successively. Our planters now rejoice in most complete abundance. No more is needed to insure the best crops ever produced in this region of country. On the Gaudalupe, Cibolo, Salado, San Antonio, Medina and many smaller streams, the yield of corn will probably average fifty bushels or more to the acre. It is estimated that the county of Medina, which was first settled some six years ago, will have about 90,000 bushels for the market.

ARRIVAL OF THE PAMPERO.

The steamship Pampero, Capt. Flanders, arrived at this port on Sunday night, having left San Juan on the 17th inst. She connected with the Pacific steamer Sierra Nevada, which left San Francisco at one o'clock, P. M., on the 1st inst., bringing down 700 passengers and a large amount in gold.

Left in port at San Juan, British mail steamer Trent, two sloops and a schooner.

The British men-of-war Espeigle sailed from San Juan on the 16th toward the Bluefields.

Steamship Northern Light left for New York an hour or so previous to the sailing of the Pampero, with 600 passengers and $650,000 in gold an freight. The Irish Exile, Patriok O'Donohne, was among her passengers.

The health of the towns on the Isthmus is reported good. Transit across excellent. River in fine stage, and roads in good order.

The following summary is from the Alta California of the 1st of July:

Since the last steamer, the news from the interior has been of the most encouraging character. From all parts of the mines we hear the most favorable reports, and the miners are generally represented as doing better than at any time previous. A great many water companies have got their ditches in operation, so that many miners are now successfully at work where it has previously been impossible to do anything.

In the vicinity of Mokelumne Hill they are expecting the water from the Mokelumne river about this time. This ditch is one of the largest and best in the State, and extends through one of the richest mineral counties. The confidence which the near introduction of water has inspired the people with, is such that there are almost as many buildings in process of erection as there are already built. This will give some idea of the prosperity of the place.

In the vicinity of Murphy's the miners are more successful than in any district of which we have been informed. There are a good many claims paying in the way claims used to pay in '49. They speak there of the pounds taken out daily rather than of the ounces. The Union Water Company's ditch supplies all that section with water, and is giving returns to its stockholders that might sound like fabulous tales if told in round numbers.

At Columbia and vicinity, the miners are doing better than ever, being now supplied with water from the ditch of the Tuolumne County Water Company. This ditch is also paying large dividends on the cost.

Sonora is probably improving as fast as any town in the State. It is now expected that a large part of the emigration from the States will come through there, and the citizens of that vicinity are making strong efforts to build a road through to Walker's river, which will lessen the distance very much for the emigrants.

SAN FRANCISCO NEWS.—Mr. Wm. O'Donohue, one of the Irish Patriots and Exiles in Australia, has escaped and arrived at San Fracisco on the 22d of June. He has published an account of his escape.

The Convention for the revision of the Charter of San Francisco has conended its labors.

At a meeting of the business men it was resolved that money sould be collected and lawyers employed to try the constitutionality of the present license laws, which not a very severe taxes on labor and enterprise.

The question of what signals should be used at the Golden Gate to enable vessels to find the entrance, at all times in safety, has attracted considerable attention.

Some immigrants have arrived from New Mexico, and a few have arrived over the northern route.

The light-house at the Farallone Islands has been commenced.

SACRAMENTO NEWS.—The Assessor of Sacramento has completed his valuation of property for the years 1853 and 1854, and exhibits as follows:

Real Estate, $3,050,173; Improvements, $1,221,390; Personal Property, $2,241,787—total, $6,513,350.

The assessment from the formation of the city has been as follows:

1850-51, $6,174,480; 1851-52, $5,835,908; 1852-53, $6,377,889; 1853-54, $6,513,350.

THE NORTHERN SACRAMENTO—FROM YREKA. We take the annexed paragraphs, mining and miscellaneous, from the Mountain Herald:

Part of the command at Fort Jones, in Scott Valley, will leave this place for the immigrant trail about the 1st of July next. They will be stationed, we presume, about the lakes from the Humboldt to this place, to protect emigrants from the Indians.

The crops in this vicinity promise well. Wheat, barley and oats all promise a good yield. Vegetables are yielding well. The market is now supplied with green peas, radishes and other vegetables, with a fair prospect of soon having an abundance of those substantial vegetable pills called potatoes.

LARGE GRAIN.—Mr. Larkin, of this place, has shown us oats grown on the farm of Mr. Boles, the stalk of which measured in length six feet seven and a half inches; number of grains growing on one head, 114; the head was twenty inches long.

Also, wheat 6 5½ high; length of head six inches.

He has also some barley grown on a ranch below the town which was finely filled and quite heavy.

We have as good a grain growing country as there is upon the face of the earth, and the time is fast approaching when our market will be supplied with bread raised on our own soil.

SISKIYOU.—The Mountain Herald of the 18th of June says that the emigrant road from the Humboldt to Yreka is the nearest and best way into the beautiful vallies of Shasta, Scott, and Rogue river.

The crops in the vicinity of Yreka promise well. Wheat, barley, and oats will yield handsomely. The market is now supplied with green peas, radishes and other vegetables.

Part of the command at Fort Jones, Scott Valley, will leave this place for the emigrant train about the 1st of July next. They are to protect emigrants from the Indians.

Oats six feet seven and a half inches in length, wheat six feet five and half inches in height, and barley finely filled and heavy, are among the agricultural specimens of of Siskiyou soil.

SUPPLIES FOR EMIGRANTS.—On the 21st inst., Mr. Wm. Nellis passed through this place with a train of seventeen horses and mules, in the care of four men. Their destination is Big Meadows, beyond the forty mile desert. Mr. N. had thirty-seven hundred weight of assorted merchandise packed upon his mules. On the same day, the 21st, Mr. Robinson one of our enterprising merchants, fitted out three different trains for Carson Valley, with assorted merchandise, intended as supplies for emigrants from the States. [Republican.

SHASTA.—Mr. Gerard M. Roach is shortly to commence the manufacture of brick, and many of the citizens are to erect fire-proof brick buildings.

A Mr. Robert Carey is announced in the Union as having arrived in Sacramento from New Mexico, with a drove of 1700 sheep.

The party, after leaving Taos, struck due north to Fort Larumie, which they reached on the 16th of March, having crossed the Arkansas river sixty miles above Bent's Fort. From the last mentioned point they proceeded on the emigrant trail to Fort Bridger, a distance of some 400 miles, and struck into Hudspeth's Cut-off at Bear river, which brought them out at the junction of the Salt Lake and California road.

Mr. Carey found it impossible to come directly from Taos to Salt Lake, on account of the snows which had fallen, the winter at Taos having set in as early as October. The party, therefore, in order to strike the South Pass out, were even on this route detained twelve by the snow.

The weather at Fort Laramie had been mad was intensely cold. Buffalo, driven by stress of elements to the Fort, were shot in great numbers, and Mr. Carey's party also killed many of them, besides goats, deer and antelope.

GREAT FIRE—ROUGH AND READY DESTROYED. The flourishing mining town of Rough and Ready, in Nevada county, was almost entirely destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning last. The loss is estimated at $60,000.

OREGON.—Gold has been found on the Santiam river. There was considerable excitement in Portland in regard to it.

Very good coal has been discovered near St. Helens.

Gen. Lane has been elected Delegate to Congress by about 1000 majority over Skinner.

[Telegraphed to the Baltimore papers.]

NEW YORK, July 19.

The steamer Franklin, from Havre and Southampton, arrived this morning, bringing 86 passengers and Liverpool dates of the 6th inst.

MANIFESTO OF THE RUSSIAN EMPEROR—INDICATIONS OF PEACE AT ST. PETERSBURG—THE CROSSING OF THE PRUTH—New York, July 19, P. M.—The Franklin brings 300 tons of merchandise. Among the passengers, in addition to Princess Murat, are Hon. Neil S. Brown, of Tennessee, late Minister of the United States to Russia, Mrs. Commodore Hall, Miss Hart, and Countess de Ooguy.

The Franklin left Cowes at 6 o'clock A. M. on the 7th.

The report that the Russians had crossed the Pruth is confirmed.

The Emperor, however, had issued a decree declaring his intention to occupy the provinces.

RUSSIA.

The latest telegraphic dispatch, dated Vienna, July 5, states that the Pruth was passed by the Russians at Devva, by a corps destined for the occupation of Walachia, and at Skouliany by a corps which was to invade Moldavia.

Gen. Oortschakoff was to arrive at Bucharest on the 6th.

PEACEFUL APPEARANCES.—A letter from St. Petersburg, dated June 25, says: "To judge by the aspect of society here, there can be but little intention of involving the State in war at the present moment. It is true it is far enough from here to the Danubian principalities for our troops to have passed the frontier, and we to be living here in blissful ignorance of the fact. A number of high officials have received leave of absence, in pursuit of health and pleasure, and every thing at court betokens profound peace. There is at least an absence of war and war's alarms.

"But the old Russian party is working away beneath the surface, and is endeavoring to work up an interest for the orthodox faith in Turkey. It is this party—the old Russian—the Sclavonian, properly speaking—that Prince Menschikoff leads, as Count Nesselrode, the so-called German party."

TURKEY.

Letters from Constantinople, under date of June 2, say: In a month more the Porte will be able to have on foot 250,000 men.

M. DeBruck, of Austria, is actively engaged in the work of conciliation, and is endeavoring to have his Government as mediator.

There are extensive movements in operation among the English and French. Every day the discharge of cannon announces some new arrival.

The English steamer Retribution left this morning to take up a position with the Turkish fleet at the mouth of the Black Sea, and two Admirals are momentarily expected.

Important intelligence has been received from Servia, which states that the Prince offers 45,000 men—of whom 15,000 are for the protection of the fortress of Belgrade, and 30,000 for that of the frontiers of the principality.

Gold is being coined in great abundance at the Mints in Turkey, and four machines are at work day and night.

Four ships are being fitted out for immediate service at the Arsenal.

The Redifs of Constantinople have received orders to muster.

Sanitary intendance has been abolished at Quarantine.

The English Embassador received a dispatch on Friday, the 17th instant, brought by hand, and on the following day a courier left.

The correspondent of the Trieste Zeitung writes that the Turkish fleet in the Black Sea numbers 1060 guns, and the Russian fleet in the same sea 1500.

According to the Turkish accounts 40,000 volunteers have already reported themselves.

The Turks are laboring hard, erecting block houses on the heights which command the entrances to the Bosphorne from the Black Sea.

The late Samuel Appleton, of Boston, was worth one million of dollars. By his will he leaves to his widow specific bequests amounting in value to $200,000. He makes forty-two other bequests to nephews and nieces and others, amounting in all to $320,000 more; among which may be mentioned $5,000 "to his friend and pastor, Rev. Ephraim Peabody," and $5,000 to the servants living in his family at his decease, to be distributed among them in the manner and according to proportion, to be fixed upon by his widow. He then bequeaths to his executors manufacturing stocks of the value of $200,000, to be by them distributed for scientific, literary, religious, or charitable purposes. The residue he also bequeaths to his relatives.

Arrival of Steamer Europa.

Halifax, July 10.—The steamer Europa has arrived, bringing Liverpool dates of July 9.

ENGLAND.

Parliamentary proceedings were uninteresting. Lord Clanricarde's motion for information concerning the Turkish question has been postponed as premature in the present state of negotiation.

A Dublin paper says that Smith O'Brien was residing at New Norfolk; John Mitchell at Richmond, and Doherty at Hobart Town—all well.

MARKETS.

Liverpool, July 6.—The Arctic's news had no effect on the cotton market. Prices of fair and middling grades were slightly better, but lower grades were not so firm. The sales of the week amounted to 65,750 bales, of which speculators took 3,500 bales, and exporters 12,000 bales. The quotations were: Fair Orleans, 6¾d., Middling, 6¼d., Fair Mobile, 6¾d., Fair Uplands, 6¾d., Middling Upland and Mobile, 6d.

Sugar and teas quiet, coffee dull.

Tobacco unchanged.

The Manchester market was unchanged.

At London, U. S. stocks were dull at a slight decline. U. S. 6s, '68, 107½ to 108¼ ex-dividend.

Havre July 5.—Sales of cotton for the week, 8,100 bales. Stock, 130,000 bales.

Havre, July 6.—Cotton is active. Sales to-day of 3,000 bales at firm rates.

Carolina rice is wanted at an advance, the market being bare.

The accounts from the French agricultural districts are rather better.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

London, July 6.—It is now hoped that the peace of Europe may be maintained by a Convention of France, England and Austria, through which the demands of Russia may be satisfied in substance, if not in form.

Athens, July 2.—The American Envoy insists menacingly on the immediate revocation of the sentence against Mr. King.

The Paris Bourse closed on Friday—Three per cents. 76f. 50c.; Four-and-half 102f.

RUSSIAN MANIFESTO.

The following extraordinary and highly important Russian Manifesto reached London on the 6th:

MANIFESTO.—"By the Grace of God, we, Nicholas I., Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, Czer of Poland, etc., etc., inform all people:

"Be it known to our beloved faithful subjects, the defence of our faith has always been a sacred duty of our blessed ancestors, from the day it pleased the Almighty Enthers, for the maintenance of our holy obligations with which it is inseparably connected, has been the object of our constant care and attention. There, acting on the ground-work of the famous treaty of Kain, adjd., which subsequent solemn treaties with the Ottoman Porte fully confirmed, have ever been directed toward upholding the right of our Church.

"But to our extreme grief in latter times, notwithstanding all our efforts to defeat the inviolability of the rights and privileges of our orthodox church, the numerous willful acts of the Ottoman Porte have infringed upon these rights, and threaten finally the entire overthrow of all that ancient discipline so precious to the orthodoxy.

"All our efforts to restrain the Porte from such act have proved vain, and even the word of the Sultan, solemnly given us by himself, is soon faithlessly broken. Having exhausted all the means of conviction, having in vain tried all the means by which just claims can be peacenably adjusted, we have deemed it indispensable to move our armies into the Provinces on the Danube, in order that the Porte may see to what his stubbornness may lead. But even now we have no intention of commencing war. In occupying those Provinces, we will hold a sufficient pledge and guarantee for ourselves for the re-establishment of our rights, under any circumstances whatever.

"Conquest we do not want. Russia does not require them. We seek to vindicate those rights which have been so openly violated. We are even yet ready to stop the movements of our armies if the Ottoman Porte will bind itself solemnly to respect the inviolability of the orthodox church; but if obstinacy and blindness will it otherwise, then, calling God to our aid, we leave it to him to decide the quarrel, and in the full confidence in the right hand of the Almighty we shall move forward on behalf of the orthodox faith.

"My success would render the Government more unpopular than at present with the Muscovite party, which is not now attached to the former by any good will.

"Given at Peterhoffe, twenty-sixth day of June, in the year of the birth of Christ one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, and our reign the twenty-eighth.

"Sealed at Senate, St. Petersburg, the twenty-sixth of June, 1853.

"Signed, NIKOLAI."

A JAIL IN INDIA.—Bayard Taylor, correspondent of the New York Tribune, visited the Agra jail, Northern India, and, among other things, gives this account of the "exercises:"

Here were hundreds of men seated at their looms, weaving carpets, singing the multiplication table in thundering tones. "Twelve times twelve," sang the monitor, in a shrill solo; One hundred and forty-four," burst out the chorus, in all sorts of voices. We went into the blacksmiths' shops, where the prisoners, by a refinement of punishment, were made to forge their own fetters, themselves fettered. "Seven times sixteen," sang the solo, as he raised his hammer; "One hundred and twelve," was roared in answer, drowning the clang and bang of the iron. In the women's department there was a shrill tempest of vulgar fractions; the cooks recited astronomical facts while mixing their rice. Even the hardest cases confined in solitary cells were going through their "a-b-abs," through a hole in the door, to a monitor standing outside.

Commodore Shubrick carried his sailing orders for the fishing grounds with him; but an accident to the Princeton may detain him a short time. It seems that the crown plates of her boilers were blistered on her trip to Portsmouth. Naval Engineer Watson was dispatched to make an examination of her boilers. She was heaten forty-eight hours between Norfolk and Portsmouth by the Fulton. It is impossible to get respectable speed out of her. The defect is believed to be in the construction of her boilers, which are of Lamb & Summers' patent, but not improved, by a naval engineer. It will probably be necessary to put in new boilers before she can be sent on a long voyage; so it is not likely she will go to China, as anticipated. No other steamer is to be had for that purpose, except the Saranac, which cannot be got ready for sea before the first of October. It is not known whether Mr. Walker will submit to the vexatious delay ere starting for China.

THE IRON TRADE.—According to a calculation in the Pittsburg Post, the iron manufacturers of this country have a sure demand before them of nearly $300,000,000, for fabrics to be turned out from their manufactories—a demand that will require all, and more than all, their capacity to supply fast enough. The calculations upon which the statements are based, is the extent of railroad now in course of construction. With one hundred tons per mile, single track, it will require 1,300,000 tons of iron rail to complete the thirteen thousand miles of railroad either in progress or which will be in progress ere long, including the Pacific railroad. At $50 per ton, this would require an outley of $65,000,000 for single tracks alone. But many of these roads will be double tracks, besides turnouts, etc. Then follows a vast outlay for cars, locomotives, and other iron works about such roads, to say nothing of ocean steamships, iron buildings, machinery, etc.

During the first six months of the present year twenty-three thousand vessels passed, in the day time, the light-house on Staten Island, at the entrance to the harbor of New York. The largest number recorded in any one day was 281 vessels, and the smallest in the record is 19, which was on the 17th of June. This would make about fifty thousand vessels in the year, including those passing in the night time, of which no record is kept.

There are 990 miles of railroad now in actual and profitable operation in the State of Georgia. In addition to these, the city of Savannah has just surveyed a road to Florida, having its western terminus at Pensacola, a distance of three hundred and eighty miles. Savannah will build to its western border, two hundred and ninety miles. $5,600,000 have been enscribed. Besides these roads three more are in contemplation, and will certainly be built.

LOUISIANA CROPS.—The Farmerville Enquirer of the 15th says:

We have no cause to complain for the want of rain in this section. Up to the first of this month, we had a drouth of some four weeks, when it commenced raining, as the farmer says, a good season, for eleven successive days. If we should have no more rain this season, good crops of corn will be raised, and fair crops of cotton; but the fear is, that we will have too much rain, as at the time of writing it is cloudy and threatening rain. Cotton as yet is not injured materially, but it can't stand the rain many more days.

Georgia.—We are informed from various sections that the prospects of the crops are brightening; the rains which has fallen for the last two weeks has brought them out astonishingly, indeed, if the seasons continue as favorable as they have been for ten or a dozen days past, our county will nearly, if not quite, make enough to supply the wants of her people. We have been informed by several farmers, that corn which was absolutely yellow half way up the stalk, and looked two weeks since as if it was lifeless and dying, now presents an entirely different appearance; the yellow has disappeared and the stalk looks as green and flourishing as could be desired. The cotton, too, seems to be doing finely. With good seasons all may yet turn out well; but it is best not to holler till we get out of the woods.

We notice that different counties in the State begin to render more cheerful accounts of their crops. [Sandersville Georgian.

Florida.—The Charleston Mercury of the 21st says:

A gentleman who reached this city yesterday from Marion county, Fla., informs us that the crops promise a most abundant yield. Corn is ready for harvesting, and cotton is growing most luxuriantly. He brought with him a stalk of long staple cotton, which is ten feet two inches high, and when standing covered a space of twenty-seven feet in circumference. It had upwards of three hundred bolls and squares on it, and our informant states that stalks with from three to four hundred bolls, are no uncommon occurrence in his field, which is of pine land, and has been cultivated eleven years successively.

MOBILE ITEMS.—The Mobile Advertiser of Saturday morning furnishes the following items of Local news:

We understand that an Agent of the Post-office Department is now in our city, with the view of making arrangements for conveying the mails from hence to Montgomery and the intermediate landings by steamboat.

Notwithstanding the late rains, the rivers still keep low. The Alabama is navigable to Montgomery, and opposition between the boats running to that point has had the effect of reducing freights to 25 cents per barrel. The Bigbee last week rose 2 feet at Gainesville, but the boats could reach no higher than Demopolis. The chance of reaching the former landing for this season is exceedingly small.

The weather, which, for a week past has been more or less showery, yesterday became clear and almost autumn-like, for in other words, sunshiny and sultry to such a degree as to drive well-nigh every one into a shady nook or corner.

The Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for the State of Mississippi, assembled in this city on Wednesday last, and adjourned on yesterday. We are informed that the representation was unusually large and respectable, and that the proceedings have been marked by great industry, unity, and good feeling. A proposition was made during the session, to remove the place of the meeting of the Grand Lodge, from this city to Jackson, but it was voted down by a very large majority. We are told that, at the close, a resolution was passed very complimentary to our city and citizens. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

M. W. G. M.—J. K. Conaelly, Hernando.
R. W. D. G. M.—R. Fletcher, Jackson.
R. W. G. Warden—O. H. Grinnell, Columbus.
R. W. O. Secretary—J. B. Dicks, Natchez.
R. W. G. Treasurer—S. A. Puterson, do.
R. W. G. Chaplain—C. Parrish, Clinton.
R. W. G. Reps. } N. G. Bryson, Vicksburg.
} A. M. Fante, Jackson.
W. G. Guardian—J. E. Forney, Vicksburg
W. G. Conductor—T. H. Jett, Warrenton.
W. G. Marshal—H. F. Cook, Vicksburg.

[Vicksburg Whig, 21st inst.

ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTHERN RAILROAD BETWEEN JACKSON AND BRANDON.—We regret to learn that on Saturday afternoon a portion of the trestle work of the Southern Railroad, east of Pearl river, fell down. There was nobody injured. For some time past a large number of hands have been engaged in repairing that trestle work, and while engaged in raising one of the new frames, something gave way and knocked down about one hundred and fifty feet in length of the work. It will be repaired as soon as possible, and will probably in four or five days be in a condition to permit the passage of the trains. [Vicksburg Sentinel, July 19.

NEW YORK CLOTH TRADE.—Woollens are selling in New York freely at an advance of 20 to 25 per cent. over prices at the corresponding period of last year, owing mainly to the enhanced rates of the raw material, dye-stuffs and labor. Heavy cottons, such as brown sheetings and shirtings, and prints, are active at an advance of about 5 per cent. The market is bare of printing cloths, and the mills generally are working on orders. The sales last week amounted to 14,000 pieces, 60 by 64, which is considered the standard commands, at 6c. In British and Continental goods there is a fair amount of business doing. Prices remain much the same—Black silks are tending upwards, as are also most styles of China goods.

LARGE CROP OF WOOL.—The clip of wool this year from the flock of Elisha Newell, Esq., of Johnstown, Rock county, Wisconsin, yielded him $3,000. He has six hundred and forty acres under cultivation, and his receipts the year, including his wool, will amount to about $7,000. Mr. N. was the second settler on Rock Prairie. In 1837 he was living on the prairie, under his wagon cover.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews. 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews .. 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.
Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.
79 Fulton st., New York Entrance 54 Gold st.
☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board.
lodging, washing, and English tuition..... $200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French Language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan30 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, La.
☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.
REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co, Messrs I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Hoge & Foster, Attorneys at Law New Orleans.
jel1 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 0

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
No. 58 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jy2 1y

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,
☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.
Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.
N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Disease.
March 20, 1853. 0mo.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & CO.,
No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,
New Orleans.
The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.
They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.
Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:
Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety: Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind-Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil; Varnish; India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.
jm8 '52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.
CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel) furnished if desired.
An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled him to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.
MATHEMATICAL IN

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. HOWMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 27. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 131.

THE SABBATH DAY.

[The follwing lines are by Mrs. P. Farmer, of Southwest Louisiana, descriptive of the way the holy day is kept there. Ed.]

It is the Holy Sabbath day—
I hear the matin bill,
And anxious crowds are hurrying past,
Their prayers and beads to tell.

I see the Chapel and the Cross,
But cannot worship there,
Where man to graven images
Bows down in humble prayer.

It is the Holy Sabbath noon—
How close the Chapel gate,
But open wide is the saloon,
Where dice and billiards wait.

The sparkling bowl is circling fast,
And those who knelt in prayer
Before their Saints at morning Mass,
Now kneel to Bachus there.

It is the Holy Sabbath eve—
A sound has met mine ear:
It is the merry dancer's feet,
And music light I hear.

Now on the light fantastic toe,
They trip the hours away;
Thus closes out the bill of fare
For this most holy day.

Good pious orthodox are mum,
And what to me looks queer,
They give with no unsparing hand
To missionaries here.

And bid them hie to foreign lands,
While good men for them pray,
And teach the Sandwich Islanders
To keep the Sabbath day.

SABBATH EVENING.

How calmly sinks the parting sun!
Yet twilight lingers still,
As beautiful as dreams of heaven,
It slumbers on the hill;
Earth sleeps, with all her glorious things,
Beneath the Holy Spirit's wings,
And, rendering back the hues above,
Seems resting in a trance of love.

Round yonder rocks the forest trees
In shadowy groups recline,
Like saints at evening bowed in prayer
Around their holy shrine;
And through their leaves the night winds blow
So calm and still—their music low
Seems the mysterious voice of prayer
Soft echoed on the evening air.

And yonder western throng of clouds,
Retiring from the sky,
So calmly move, so softly glow,
They seem, to Fancy's eye,
Bright creatures of a better sphere
Come down at noon to worship here
And from their sacrifice of love
Returning to their home above.

The blue isles of the golden sea,
The night arch floating high,
The flowers that gaze upon the heavens,
The bright streams leaping by,
Are living with Religion—deep
On earth and see its glorious sleep,
And mingle with the starlight rays,
Like the soft light of parted days.

The spirit of the holy eve
Comes through the silent air
To feeling's hidden spring, and wakes
A gush of Music there!
And the far depths of ether beam
So passing fair, we almost dream
That we can rise and wander through
Their open paths of trackless blue.

Each soul is filled with glorious dreams,
Each pulse is beating wild,
And thought is soaring to the shrine
Of Glory undefiled!
And holy aspirations start
Like blessed angels from the heart,
And bind for earth's dark ties are riven—
Our spirits to the gates of heaven.

PROTESTANT WORSHIP AT ROME.

A letter from the Rev. Edward Lathrop, pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle Church in New York, dated at Rome, says:

"It is a most gratifying fact, that amidst the gross darkness that prevails here, there is one spot at least from which the light of a pure Christianity emanates. In the house of the Hon. Mr. Cass, Charge d'Affaires of the United States, public worship is regularly held every Lord's day. The officiating minister is the Rev. Mr. Baird, son of Dr. Baird, of New York, who is well known for the interest he has so long manifested in behalf of the Catholics of our own and of foreign countries. If I should remain in Rome another Sabbath, I expect to enjoy the privilege, through the invitation of Mr. Baird, of preaching to the little company who are assembled from time to time in the 'upper room,' which has been appropriated to religious worship. It is certainly on occasion of no little interest to stand in a spot where, centuries ago, the greatest of the apostles was 'not ashamed' of the gospel of Christ, and to be permitted, though very imperfectly, and in much conscious unworthiness, to preach that same gospel, which now, as then, 'is the power of God, and the wisdom of God.'"

THE SHORT ARGUMENT.—This short and pointed argument cannot be too prevalent:—"The Bible must be the invention either of good men or angels, bad men or devils, or of God. It could not be the invention of good men or angels, for they neither would nor could make a book, and tell lies all the time they were writing it, saying, 'Thus saith the Lord,' when it was their own invention. It could not be the invention of bad men or devils, for they would not make a book which commands all duty, forbids all sin, and condemns their souls to hell to all eternity. It therefore draw this conclusion, that the Bible must have been given by divine inspiration."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

DEMONS — BIRTHS — ABRAHAMIC COVENANT — FIRST-BORN.

If you should ask a Jew whether he believed in demons, apparitions, etc., he will in all likelihood answer in the negative. Now, let me see how this denial agrees with the real state of things; and for this purpose I must conduct you to the domestic sanctum—the bed-chamber; and there in the cradle you behold, fresh from the hands of his Maker, a new-born infant: with all nations and in all ages the object of most tender solicitude. I shall not here expatiate upon the numerous superstitions which the people of Israel have, in common with all mankind: such as not allowing a child to be handed through the window, to look into a mirror, and a thousand other trifles; but I would point out to you four pieces of paper, pasted upon the four walls of the room, on each of which is written the 121st Psalm, (which shows Jehovah to be the ever vigilant Keeper of Israel,) with divers Cabalistic signs and characters to keep off the Shedim (Deut. xxxii: 17) or evil spirits; for the demons are supposed to have much power over an infant during its season of "uncleanness." Lev. xii, et seq. Lelah, the demon of night, is the most malicious, and hovers round everybody during the night to disquiet their slumbers, and make evil suggestions in the manner of Milton's Satan. It is for this reason that the Jew is legally "unclean" in the morning till he has three times washed hands and face. Before these ablutions are performed, he must not pronounce the name of the Deity, touch the phylacteries, or any other sacred object.

The male child is supposed to be peculiarly susceptible to demoniac influence in the interim of his birth and his admission into the "Abrahamic Covenant;" and the friends of the family usually sit up till very late on the night preceding the ceremony, and say various prayers, to prevent the child from being "bewitched."

On the eighth day the child is received into "the congregation of the Lord"—Gen. xvii, et seq.—on which occasion he receives his name, still in the old oriental style—say Shimeon bar Yitzchack, or Simon son of Isaac. This may be called his religious name, for it is only used in the synagogue. For the ordinary purposes of life, he has an appellation more befitting the time and place of his sojourn. Although Moses is silent about the office of sponsor, the Talmudists have discovered that this formed part of the ceremony as enjoined to Abraham. This office is looked upon as both highly honorable and meritorious, and the poor Jew, after having thus honored his immediate relatives, selects some wealthy brother for his child's godfather, who then defrays all the expenses of the day—which are generally very considerable—and has the welfare of the child at heart ever after.

The prophet Elijah is considered the patron saint—if I may so express myself—of this institution, though I am sure I never could discover any thing in his history that seemed to designate him as peculiarly gifted with social qualities. Mal. iii: 1, is referred to in support of the theory. The Jews have many stories of his appearing bodily, even in these latter times, to assist in the performance of the holy rite. The following may serve as a specimen: Once upon a time there was a very poor man, who had been so abundantly blessed with male offspring as to have exhausted the stock of sponsors in the town, it being a law that no man can stand godfather to more than one child of the same family. He was reduced to a great strait, and on the seventh day he was still without a sponsor. As a last resort, he went to a miserly brother in a neighboring town, and was refused. Very much dejected, he turned his face homeward, in despair of finding what he so much wanted, when he fell in with another Jew, very poorly clad, who asked him for the cause of his distress; and on being told, he kindly proposed to take the affair upon himself. The other asked him for his name, which the stranger, however, refused to tell. He then gave him a Groschen, (two cents) and told him to go and buy the necessaries for to-morrow's feast. The other stared, but ere he had time to make any further inquiries, the newly-found sponsor had disappeared. Wrapt in meditation, our poor friend went to the baker's to buy one cent's worth of bread, and one cent's worth of butter, as a treat for his wife—the stranger's slender donation being all the money in his possession. You may conceive his astonishment when he received a whole handful of silver coins in change. He at once perceived that Elijah Hatcheh (the prophet) had taken compassion on his distress, and that he was now a "made man." He went home full of joy, and prepared a splendid feast: and next morning Elijah made his appearance in due time, but still incog., for that is his invariable rule. As soon as the services were over, he left again in the same mysterious manner. As the ladies are so generally neglected in the Hebrew ritual, I must not omit to state that a boy has a godmother, as well as a godfather—the former being generally the wife of the latter. A female infant, however, has no sponsors.

The Brith Milah (covenant of circumcision) is a season of great rejoicing, and the feast following the ceremony of the morning is pretty much the same as that of a wedding, as described in my article on "Marriage." The Hazan chanting his blessings, the Rabbi delivering his extempore harangue, and the fool rattling off his doggerel. To assist at any of these ceremonies, though by your mere presence, is a great Mitzveh, or meritorious act. On the third day after, the ladies of the congregation meet at the house of the neophyte, and bathe him in the manner prescribed in the Law. At the expiration of a month (Lev. xii: 4) the mother, if well enough, goes to the synagogue for the first time again, and in the afternoon the boys or girls (as the new-born may happen to be) repair to the house, and formally receive him into their little republic, by bestowing a name upon him. This is exceedingly curious, and regarded as a great frolic among the little folk. They are usually accompanied by their teacher. When every thing is ready, they surround the cradle on every side—the largest standing at the head and foot: the teacher takes a Hebrew copy of the Pentateuch, and repeats the two or three first verses of each of the five books of Moses, as well as the last verses of Deuteronomy: then Genesis xlviii: 48. "The angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads, and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac; and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth." The children repeat all this, verbatim, after the teacher. Then they take the cradle, with the child in it, and lift it up as high as they can—sometimes three yards from the ground—saying at the same time: "Hologriash, what is the childs name? His name is * * * * *." This lifting and naming is repeated three times. Then the children are treated to a collation of fruit and cake. The ostensible object of this very singular and unaccountable ceremony is the naming of the child: for, although a boy receives his name three weeks earlier, he is not called by it till after the Hologriash—the term by which this custom is known. I may as well warn your learned readers that they need not consult Gesenius or Parkhurst for this outlandish word, as they will not be likely to meet with it there. I am unacquainted with its etymology.

If the first child be a male, the father must redeem him (Vide Ex. xiii) thirty days after. He invites a priest, i. e. descendant of Aaron, and some friends or relatives. He acquaints the priest in a formal manner with the fact, that his wife has presented him with a male child, and offers it to him for the service of the Lord; or, in its stead, the price of redemption prescribed by law—Num. iii: 47—about three dollars. The priest chooses the money according to his formula, and may either keep it or return it again to the parent. This ceremony is called Pidyon Haben, (redemption of the son.)

The thirteenth chapter of Exodus and the fifteenth of Deuteronomy also consecrate the first-born of "clean" animals to the Lord; and now that there are no longer any sacrifices, this is usually a great burden. If a man should have a first-born male calf, lamb, or goat, he must not make any use of them whatever—cannot kill them, nor give them away to a Gentile; and there is no Jew who will take it off his hands. He generally takes good care not to possess an animal who might put him to such trouble; but in spite of all caution, he some times comes to own a first-born. He keeps it for a while, then perhaps takes it some dark night, and leads or carries it several miles to a neighboring village, fastens a slip of paper on its back, indicating it to be a bechor, (first-born) and then leaves it within the premises of some wealthy brother. He is now clear of his responsibility, and returns home with a heavy load off his shoulders. Should the new possessor suspect or find out the author of this trick, he will in all probability send the animal back again. If not, he will try to rid himself of it in the same manner. Thus the animal is shifted about till at last it finds rest in the cemetery of some large congregation. In Central Germany the Jewish cemetery at Frankfort-on-the-Maine is the place of refuge for all the bechorim within hundreds of miles round. There they live unmolested, and well provided for, till they die a natural death.

Now, this certainly is not a very dignified subject to demand so much attention, but I venture to say that none of your readers ever heard of it before, for I do not recollect ever to have met with it in any of the numerous books treating on Jewish Ceremonies; and they cannot but be surprised to learn that such customs as these should be so strictly adhered to in this second half even of the Nineteenth Century.

JOSEPHUS.

Columbia, S. C.

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

SMALL TALK.

Yes, we say, a minister ought not to be expected to live on the same amount with men of other callings, other things being equal. He has many things to purchase, every year, as a result of his removals, which they already have. From the fact that his mind is accustomed to act, steadily and continuously, in other directions, he is without that skill in economy and driving advantageous bargains, which so many of them possess. And would the Church have it otherwise? Would the Church have a minister who is as remarkable for keenness in trade as he is for heart-searching sermons? Besides, he has not the time. Trading and money-making are in the line of their business. His is to gather sinners into the fold, and then educate them for heaven. Shall he spend the precious time which is necessary to visit his flock and prepare his sermons, and keep his heart in tone to preach successfully, in casting up accounts and seeking opportunities to turn a penny to good account? He who attends to all his duties, as a minister—does all his work, and does it well—will find very little time and very few opportunities to do any thing else. Was not that an excellent arrangement by which the Levites were exempted from ordinary business, and the onus of their support devolved upon the Church? A minister has not a little company to entertain. He has books to purchase he must take periodicals, if he would keep his mind stored with fresh knowledge, and be prepared to preach acceptably and usefully. Not a few little expenses and not a few disadvantages are his, from which others are free.

"Now, is the present allowance at all adequate to meet his expenses, pay his doctor's bills, his drug bills, his post-office bills, none of which is taken into account in assessing his "table expenses?" Now, suppose we notice a few of the items which are expected to be purchased with his hundred dollars. We will mention only such things as we suppose a respectable preacher—one who has any regard for decency—is necessitated to purchase. We speak not now of a thousand little conveniences and comforts which he is as much entitled to enjoy as any one else. Let us see. He must have—

Two summer coats	$20 00	Two pr. summer pants	$ 10 00
Two winter coats	30 00	Two pair winter pants	10 00
One hat	5 00	Two pair boots	10 00
One pair shoes	5 00	One overcoat	20 00
Cravats	5 00	Underclothes, Shirts,	20 00
Two summer vests	5 00	Postage bill	4 00
Two winter vests	10 00	Unavoidable charities	15 00

All this is but a rough estimate. We have put the articles at their minimum prices; yet this amounts to $163. Now, add his other little expenses, with the books he is compelled to purchase, and it would not fall short of $200.

Now many, very many, cannot get along with so few articles as we have mentioned—many cannot get them at the low prices we have mentioned. Many, with their utmost economy, cannot move in respectable society, without going far over the amount just mentioned.

But how do our preachers manage to live as they do, if this be so? Some of them hardly live at all. True, there is not much complaint among them, because (God bless them!) they rather suffer than complain. But if we had an autobiography of them, there would be records of sleepless nights, and bitter tears, and agonizing reflections, and of silent enduring, which might mantle the cheeks of our rich membership with shame, and awaken a healthier tone of feeling in their hearts. Their money runs out of their pockets, and they run in debt. The prospect for paying is gloomy. They go to the pulpit dispirited from anxious thought, and dread to see one of their creditors in the congregation. A few receive extras enough to help them out. A few others become local itinerants. Many locate entirely. And who can blame them? They are told to hold on and trust to Providence. And all the while, the particular interferences of Providence in their behalf are instrumental in encouraging the parsimony of the Church. So long as he trusts in God, and God does for him what the Church should do, so long will the Church leave God to do it, and excuse themselves. I knew not that we have any right to look for special interferences, under such circumstances. They may relieve the preacher, but they injure the people. More again.

COMMON SENSE.

LIGHT READING.

There is a species of literature that is everywhere to be met with under the well known name of light reading. Scott was its Coryphæus, and his success has tempted a thousand imitations—

"In one weak, washy, everlasting flood."

You meet it in various shapes and disguises, the two-volume novel, the two-shilling romance, the fashionable monthly, and the trashy tale in the literary newspaper.

Far be it from me, in the spirit of fanatical bigotry, indiscriminately to proscribe all fiction, when Christ employed it for purposes of instruction, or to refuse to the overtasked mind an innocent or rational recreation. But I must be allowed to say, that, like some of the medicines of the pharmacopœia, this sort of reading requires a great deal of caution. It is best to err on the safe side, and to take too little rather than too much. I knew a lady who completely used up her stock of sensibility by devouring novels at the rate of fifty or a hundred a year; and when she came to her dying-bed, (and it was a most awful one,) her complaint was that she could not feel.

There are some things, as Sue's Wandering Jew and Mysteries of Paris, which, I am not ashamed to confess, I know only by reputation; and that reputation is sufficient. If for "every idle word" we speak, we are to give an account in the day of judgment, what is to be done with the idle words we read—much more with what is really reprehensible? Miss Edgeworth's tales are probably among the best; yet so good a man as Robert Hall confessed that it was sometime before he could get rid of the benumbing effect they had upon his personal piety. The reason is obvious: there is no religion in them.

Novel-reading, loose poetry, and theatrical entertainments should be shunned by all who desire to cultivate that spiritual-mindedness "which is life and peace"—life to the soul, and peace to the conscience. Nor let any one denounce the sentiment as narrow-minded or puritanical. The heaviest censures upon recreations of this sort come from their authors themselves.

Goldsmith, himself a popular novelist and play-writer, gave this advice about the education of his nephew: "Above all things, never let your son touch a novel or a romance. How delusive, how destructive, are those pictures of consummate bliss! They teach the youthful to sigh after beauty and happiness that never existed; to despise the little good that fortune has mixed in our cup, by expecting more than she ever gave; and in general—take the word of a man who has seen the world, and studied it more by experience than by precept—take my word for it, I say, that such books teach us very little of the world."

Add to this testimony the pregnant facts, that Moore kept his voluptuous lines from the sight of his own daughter, and that the tragedian Macready has never allowed his children to frequent, and even, if I am not greatly mistaken, to see the inside of a theatre. Are not these men good authority?

But we are not left to theory and inference alone. Schiller's robbers tempted so many youths to the highway, that the government had to forbid the representation. Courvoisier, who murdered his master, was an admirer of Paul Clifford. Lovett, who was executed at Louisville, was an imitator of Jack Sheppard. Poor Spencer, who was strung up to the yard-arm, learned his lessons out of the Pirate's Own Book. The error of the unhappy woman who figured in the Richmond tragedy, which terminated in her own disgrace and the death of her lover, was traced by her father to her passion for French novels. [Watchman and Observer.

THE BETTER LAND.

A father and mother were living with their two children on a desert island in the midst of the ocean, on which they had been shipwrecked. Roots and vegetables served them for food; a spring supplied them with water, and a cavern in the rock with a dwelling. Storm and tempest often raged fearfully on the island.

The children could not remember how they had reached the island; they knew nothing of the vast continent; bread, milk, fruit, and whatever other luxury is yielded there, were things unknown to them.

There landed one day upon the island four Moors in a small boat. The parents felt great joy, and hoped now to be rescued from their troubles; but the boat was too small to take them all over together to the adjoining land, so the father determined to risk the passage first.

Mother and children wept when he embarked in the boat with its frail planks, and the four black men were about to take him away. But he said, "Weep not! It is better yonder; and you will all soon follow."

When the little boat returned and took away the mother, the children wept still more. But she also said, "Weep not! In the better land we shall all meet again."

At last came the boat to take away the two children. They were frightened at the black men, and shuddered at the fearful sea over which they had to pass. With fear and trembling they drew near the land. But how rejoiced they were when their parents appeared upon the shore, offered them their hands, led them into the shade of lofty palm-trees, and regaled them upon the flowery turf with milk, honey, and delicious fruits. "O! how groundless was our fear!" said the children; "we ought not to have feared, but to have rejoiced, when the black men came to take us away to the better land."

"Dear children," said their father, "our voyage from the desert island to this beautiful country conveys to us a still higher meaning. There is appointed for us all a still longer voyage to a much more beautiful country. The whole earth, on which we dwell, is like an island. The land here is, indeed, a noble one in our eyes, although only a faint shadow of Heaven. The passage hither over the stormy sea is—death; that little boat resembles the bier, upon which men in black apparel shall at some time carry us forth. But when that hour strikes, then we, myself, your mother, or you, must leave this world. So fear not. Death is for pious men who have loved God, and have done his will, nothing else but a voyage to the better land."

"Expectant of eternal peace,
The Christian feels Death's terrors cease;
And, led by God's paternal hand,
Mounts upward to the better land."

THE JUG WITHOUT A BOTTOM.

On the bridge that crosses the Grand Rapids we met a hale old man and his wife, with eleven sons, seven daughters, and thirty-seven grand-children, with numerous horses, carts, wagons, oxen, cows, calves, sheep, and furniture of antiquated appearance; among which were to be seen cradles for babies, cradles for grain, spinning wheels, pots and kettles, and almost every thing requisite for a settlement such as fifty blood relations will make in the Grand river country. After the train stopped, we made some inquiries, and asked the old gentleman what use could be made of a bottomless jug, which was carefully stowed away among his domestic equipments, and received the following reply:

"Why, sir, I am a man of many years, and have worked other people's land all my days, and paid four to nine bushels of wheat per year for doing it—and have all the time used a jug with a bottom to it, by which all my profits have been wasted, and I got sick of feeding both landlord and rum-seller—so I sent seven of my boys to Mexico to fight for their country. They all got safe, and brought seven sections of land, that, please God, will be mine without rent. And now that old jug you see there shall hold all the whiskey and rum that will be used in my whole family while I control them. Old General Taylor told my son John that a jug without a bottom was the best kind of a jug to put liquor in, and I believe it."

THE OLD ATHEIST!

Dead! and of all his wealth not sufficient to bury him with proper decency. Died, doubting to the last—poor old gray-headed Atheist!

Years ago his home was a palace. His daughters were beautiful; his sons stately and noble. He gloried in his unbelief. "His eyes stood out with fatness." It seemed hard to the poor Christians, and one was tempted to say, "It is better with the wicked than with the good."

But by those wet clods, on which the rain drips dismally, lies his pine coffin. And the sexton strikes it with his shovel, and coarse jests profane the "garden of God."

"Poor old Atheist!" One daughter lies broken-hearted in an early grave. One in a foreign land wanders under the weight of his curse. The youngest son, the "old man's darling," rots in jail; the other died drunken.

All were Atheists. Prosperity kept them company long. Their ships sailed in safety. Their orchards were never blighted. Sickness tainted not their beauty; care and disappointment left their hearts alone.

But to thy where are they, with the wealth and glory of prosperity?

Ay; it is true.

"The mill of God grinds late—but it grinds to powder."

SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATED BY LAYARD'S DISCOVERIES.

We may remark, that it is the peculiar character of the Assyrian bass-reliefs to bring whatever subjects they illustrate directly and completely before the eye. The prime object of the artists would seem to have been, not to charm the fancy by cunning effects, but to instruct the understanding by the commandment of plain facts. The absence of all idea of perspective, indicates at the first glance the very infancy of art; but the admirable composition of some of the groups, and the perfect execution of many of the details, dissipate at once the notion that we are contemplating the works of a rude and uncultivated people. The Assyrian sculptors composed historic on the bas reliefs, and took the shortest way to the reader's mind. The value of this exactness in dealing with details is strikingly manifest in the case of the bass-reliefs, which illustrate the moving of the bulls into their appropriate sites in the palaces. In one of these bass-reliefs a man is sculptured, giving instructions to his workmen through a speaking trumpet, a mode of conveying sound supposed to be of modern invention, now ascertained to have been familiar to the subjects of Sennacherib. In another stone we find the Assyrian workmen as well acquainted with the use of the lever and the roller as ourselves; in truth, so very little have we advanced in our knowledge of these instruments, that it appears from Mr. Layard's account of his removal of the bulls and lions from the shores of the Tigris to the British Museum, that he actually employed the very same means to effect their transmission as the Assyrians used themselves, ages upon ages since, when they first deposited the beasts before the palace gates.

The King of Assyria himself is represented superintending the building of the mounds upon which the palace with its bulls is to be built. This King, as the cuneiform inscription shows, is Sennacherib; and the sculptures, as Rawlinson and the initiated are permitted to read, celebrate the building at Nineveh of the great palace and its adjacent temples—the work of this great King. The inscriptions on the bulls at Kouyunjik record most minutely the manner in which the edifice was built, its general plan, and the various materials employed in decorating the halls, chambers, and roofs. Some of the inscriptions have a thrilling interest. They indicate that the Jews, taken into captivity by the Assyrian King, were compelled to assist in the erection of the palaces of their conquerors, and that wood for the building was brought from Mount Lebanon, precisely as Solomon had conveyed its cedars for the choice woodwork of the temple of the Lord. There is an awful strangeness in being thus brought face to face, as it were, with the solemn mysteries of the Bible, and with our own earliest sacred recollections.

During the month of December the treasure-seekers were rewarded with a rare harvest. A mound at the southeast side of the palace at Kouyunjik, forming apparently the chief entrance to the building, was uncovered. It was 180 feet long, and presented no fewer than ten colossal bulls, with six human figures of gigantic proportions. The bulls were more or less injured; some of them were even shattered to pieces, but fortunately the lower parts of all remained untouched, and consequently the inscriptions were preserved. Two of these inscriptions contained the annals of six years of the reign of Sennacherib, "besides numerous particulars connected with the religion of the Assyrians, their gods, their temples, and the erection of their palaces." There can be no reasonable doubt of the accuracy of the translation made of these writings, and now given in Mr. Layard's volume. The very differences and variations that occur when the cuneiform character is submitted to more than one translator, attest the correctness of the general interpretation. Colonel Rawlinson has translated into English the particular inscriptions of which we speak; and Dr. Hincks, an equally competent scholar, has done the same—both independently of each other; and there is no material discrepancy in their views. The inscription informs us that in the first year of his reign Sennacherib defeated Merodach Baladan, King of Kar-Duniyas, a city and country frequently mentioned in the Assyrian inscriptions. It is not for the first time that the reader hears of this King, for he will remember how, when Hezekiah was sick—"At that time Merodach Baladan, the son of Baladan, King of Babylon, sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah," who boastfully showed to the messengers all the treasures of his house. The Assyrian monument and holy writ thus begin to reflect light upon each other. But this is only a gleam of the illumination that follows. In the third year of his reign, according to the inscriptions, Sennacherib overran with his armies the whole of Syria. "Hezekiah," so runs the cuneiform writing, "King of Judah, who had not submitted to my authority, forty-six of his principal cities, and hamlets and villages, depending upon them, of which I took no account, I captured and carried away their spoil. I shut up himself within Jerusalem, his capital city." The next passage, says Mr. Layard, is somewhat defaced, but enough remains to show that he took from Hezekiah the treasure he had collected in Jerusalem—30 talents of gold and 800 talents of silver, besides his sons, his daughters, and his slaves. The reader has not waited for us to remind him that in the 2d book of Kings it is written how "in the fourteenth year of King Hezekiah did Sennacherib, King of Assyria, come up against all the fenced cities of Judah and took them:.....And the King of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah, King of Judah, three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold. And Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasure of the King's house." It is something to have won from the earth such testimony on behalf of inspired Scripture. It is also something to have obtained from holy writ such evidence in favor of the monumental records of long-buried Nineveh.

At a later period, a chamber was discovered in which the sculptures were in better preservation than any before found at Kouyunjik. The slabs were almost entire, and the inscription was complete. The bass-reliefs represented the siege and capture, by the Assyrians, of a city of great extent and importance. "In no other sculptures were so many armed warriors seen drawn up in array before a besieged city." The sculptures occupied thirteen slabs, and told the whole narrative of the attack, the conquest and the destruction of the enemy. The captives, as they appear in the bass-reliefs, have been stripped of their ornaments and fine raiment, are barefooted and half clothed. But it is impossible to mistake the race to which they belong. They are Jews; for the stamp is on the countenance as it is impressed upon the features of their descendants at this very hour. The Assyrian sculptor has noted the characteristic lines, and drawn them with surprising truth. To what city they belong we likewise know, for, above the figure of the King, who commands in person, it is declared that "Sennacherib, the mighty king, king of the country of Assyria, sitting on the throne of judgment before the city of Lachish, gives permission for its slaughter." That it was slaughtered we have good reason to believe; for is it not written in the Bible that Sennacherib had quitted Lachish, having vanquished it, before his generals returned with the tribute extorted from Hezekiah?

If evidence were still wanting to prove the identity of the King who built Kouyunjik with the Sennacherib of the Old Testament, it would be sufficient to call attention to one other most remarkable discovery that has been made in these mysterious mounds. In a passage in the south-west corner of the Kouyunjik palace, Mr. Layard stumbled upon a large number of pieces of fine clay, bearing the impressions of seals, which there can be no doubt had been affixed, like modern official seals of wax, to documents written on leather or parchment. The writings themselves have, of course, decayed, but, curiously enough, the holes for the string by which the seal was fastened are still visible; and, in some instances, the ashes of the string itself may be seen, together with the unmistakable marks of the finger and thumb. Four of these seals are purely Egyptian. Two of them are impressions of a royal signet. "It is," says Mr. Layard, "one well-known to Egyptian scholars, as that of the second Sabaco, the Ethiopian, of the 25th dynasty. On the same piece of clay is impressed an Assyrian seal, with a device representing a priest ministering before the King, probably a royal signet." We entreat the reader's attention to what follows: Sabaco reigned in Egypt at the end of the seventh century before Christ, the very time at which Sennacherib ascended the throne.

"He is probably the So mentioned in the second book of Kings (xvii, 4) as having received embassadors from Hoshea, King of Israel, who, by entering into a league with the Egyptians, called down the vengeance of Shalmanseer, whose tributary he was, which led to the first great captivity of the people of Samaria. Shalmanseer was known to have been an immediate predecessor of Sennacherib, and Tirhakan, the Egyptian King, who was defeated by the Assyrians near Lachish, was the immediate successor of Sabaco II. It would seem that a peace having been concluded between the Egyptians and one of the Assyrian monarchs, probably Sennacherib, the royal signets of the two Kings, thus found together, were attached to the treaty, which was deposited among the archives of this kingdom."

The document itself has perished, but the proof of the alliance between the two kings remains and is actually reproduced from the archive-chamber of the old Assyrian king. The illustration of Scripture history is complete, and the testimony in favor of the correct interpretation of the cuneiform character perfect.

The guardians of our national museum may justly remember, with some gratitude and pride, that their country is indebted to the working men of this world, to the practical minds of a progressive age, for all that we see, read, and know, of ancient Nineveh. Rawlinson was a cadet in the East India Company's service, and when he first traced the cuneiform inscriptions upon the Behistun rock he sent his tracings home, that they might, before publication, be submitted to the intelligent eye of—whom? The professors of oriental literature in the great universities?—Not at all! A greater authority still was to be found in a ci devant clerk of the East India house, London—a modest man of the name of Norris, of whom nobody knew any thing, yet whose great knowledge actually enabled him to discover, though he had never seen the Behistun rock, that Rawlinson, who had been in constant communication with the monument, had not copied the puzzling inscriptions with proper exactness. Rawlinson, at the instigation of the East India house clerk, compared his copy again with this original, and found that Mr. Norris was right. To make the learning of these two self-taught men of any avail, it was necessary that a third should supply material for the exercise of their ingenuity and persevering skill. A lawyer's clerk came to their help. Austen Layard, if he ever studied oriental antiquities at all in his youth, must surely have pursued the knowledge under difficulties in the office of his uncle, a solicitor in the city of London.

Shortly after Mr. Layard's return to Mosul, in May, he floated down the river on a raft to Nimroud. The workmen had been also very busy here in his absence. Standing one day on a distant part of the mound, Mr. Layard tells us that he smelt the sweet smell of burning cedar. His Arab workmen had dug out a beam, and had made a fire of it to warm themselves. The inscriptions spoke of cedars brought from the forests of Lebanon to build the palace by the great king who had erected it. After 3000 years the precious wood had retained its original fragrance.

When Mr. Layard published, in 1849, the account of his first Assyrian researches, the monuments recovered were comparatively scanty, and the inscriptions impressed upon them could not be deciphered. Now, a connected history can be traced in the sculptured remains, and the inscriptions may be followed with the same facility as the Greek or any other character. That they may be read with immense profit and instruction is evident from the startling facts which they have hitherto revealed. Some of these facts we venture briefly to place before the reader.

We have previously hinted that the earliest king of whose reign we have any detailed account is the builder of the North-west Palace at Nimroud, the most ancient edifice yet beheld in Assyria. His records, however, furnish the names of five; if not seven of his predecessors, some of whom, it is believed, founded palaces, afterward erected by their successors. The son of this King, it is certain, built the centre Palace of Nimroud, and raised the obelisk, now in the British Museum, upon which the principal events of his reign are inscribed. Upon that obelisk are names corresponding to names that are found in the Old Testament. The fortunate coincidence furnishes at once the means of fixing specific dates and enables Mr. Layard to place the accession of the Assyrian Monarch who built the oldest Nimroud palace, at the latter part of the tenth century before Christ. The builder of the Palace of Khorsabad is proved to have been the Sargon mentioned by Isaiah. The rulers of his palace supply the most complete details of his reign; and from the reign of Sargon a complete list has been obtained of all the Kings down to the fall of the empire. The son of Sargon was Sennacherib, who ascended the throne in the year 703 B. C. We know from the Bible that Sennacherib was succeeded by his son Esarhaddon, and we now ascertain from the monuments, that one of the palaces at Nimroud was the work of his reign. The son of Esarhaddon built the South-east palace on the Mound of Nimroud; and, although no part of his history has been as yet recovered, there is good reason for concluding him to have been the Sardanapalus, who, conquered (B. C. 606) by the Medes and Babylonians, under Cyaxares, made one funeral pile of his palace, his wealth, and his wives.

While it is certain that there is no mention of Nineveh before the twelfth century B. C., Mr. Layard is still of opinion that the city and empire existed long before that period. Egyptian remains found at Karnak refer to a country called Assyria, and the enterprising explorer is not without hope that further investigation will supply him with still more ancient records than any he now possesses. The monuments of Nineveh, as far as they go, corroborate all extant history in describing the monarch as a thorough Eastern despot "unchecked by popular opinion, and having complete power over the lives and property of his subjects; rather adored as a god than feared as a man, and yet himself claiming that authority and general obedience in virtue of his reverence for the national deities and the national religion." The dominion of the king, according to the inscriptions, extended to the central provinces of Asia Minor and Armenia northward; to the western provinces of Persia eastward; to the west as far as Lydia and Syria; and to the south to Babylonia and the northern part of Arabia. "The empire appears to have been at all times a kind of confederation formed by many tributary States, whose kings were so far independent that they were only bound to furnish troops to the supreme lord in time of war, and to pay him yearly a certain tribute."

The Jewish tribes, it is now proved, held a dependent position upon the Assyrian from a very early period; and it is curious to observe that, wherever an expedition against the Kings of Israel is mentioned in the Assyrian inscriptions, it is invariably stated to have been undertaken on the ground that they had not paid their customary tribute.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Not every step sacred history is illustrated, illuminated, and explained by the speaking stones of Nineveh; and in this regard alone the Assyrian discoveries have a significance beyond any revelation that has been made in modern times. Even the architecture of the sacred people may be rendered visible to the eye by comparing it with that of the Assyrian structures; and certainly not the least instructive result of all Mr. Layard's labors is the ingenious analogy drawn by Mr. Fergusson in his "Palaces of Nineveh and Persepolis Restored," between the temple of Solomon and the palace of the Assyrian King. [London Times.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, August 6.

TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS!!!

Acts and Resolutions.—The members of Conference resolved to obtain thirty new subscribers, each, for the Advocate, this year—forward the cash, and attend to renewing old subscribers. A good, comprehensive resolution, that. We keep it before them. Let it not have the too common fate of Resolutions. It was passed, not as a mere sentiment, but a pledge of personal effort. An old divine somewhere says—"Resolution! I remember to have seen a book of the Acts of the Apostles, but never of their Resolutions."

Of two letters just received, one says: "Six more subscribers, and then I have sent my 'thirty' from this circuit."

The other: "I have introduced the Advocate into ten new families on my circuit, and at our camp-meeting, approaching, more shall be done."

Book of Sermons.—We were happy to meet Dr. Winans, in pretty good health, at Jackson last week. The Book of Sermons, at the request of his Conference, has been prepared and submitted to the committee. The book will be about 350 pp., large 12mo., and contain 13 sermons on the following subjects: Evidences of Christianity—Being and Character of God—Trinity in Unity—Creation—Creation of Man—Devil—Original Transgression, Legal Consequences—Moral and Physical Consequences—Incarnation of Christ—His Character—Death and Burial; Resurrection, Ascension and Intercession—The Holy Ghost.

Rev. Dr. Stevenson.—We tender sincere condolence to our esteemed friend, Dr. Stevenson, of Louisville, Ky., who lately has been called to mourn the death of his second and only daughter. Not long since he buried his eldest, and now his beloved Martha. A sojourn of few days in her father's house, a year ago, gave us opportunity, which we have ever highly appreciated, of numbering among acquaintances and friends the amiable and accomplished "Miss Mattie"—now no more.

Students.—In a notice of Centenary College, La., last week, we said, upon information, that it numbered, in all its departments, 260 students. It should have been that this number were in attendance during the year.

Maine Law.—While our Mississippi friends are working for a liquor law, it seems that at Natchez they have beat Maine. The papers tell it: The city authorities have established a quarantine to protect themselves from the yellow fever. The other day a 'thirsty one' walked down to a steamboat, just landed from New Orleans, to take a drink. The health officer would not let him come ashore for two days!

Dr. Parks.—Rev. M. P. Parks, D. D., assistant minister of Trinity Church, N. Y., died on the steamer Arctic, on her late passage from Liverpool. Dr. P. was once Professor of Mathematics in Randolph Macon College, Va., and began the career of his eloquent and useful ministry in the M. E. Church.

Illness of a Minister.—Rev. W. H. Watkins writes, July 29th:

"On my arrival yesterday, I called to see Bro. O. L. Nash, (Natchez) and found him still in very feeble health—indeed, nothing bettered by his recent visit to Cooper's Wells. He will not be able for months, if at all, to resume his pastoral duties. He requested me to inform his correspondents and friends, through you, that his health was such as to forbid his answering letters, or giving any attention to business."

The Main Point.—Let us not trouble our neighbors with unprofitable disputations, but all agree to spread, to the uttermost of our power, the quiet and peaceable gospel of Christ. John Wesley was wont to speak of good advice given him by a great and good man, Dr. Potter, Archbishop of Canterbury, for which he ever since had occasion to bless God:

"If you desire to be extensively useful, do not spend your time or strength in contending for or against such things as are of a disputable nature, but in testifying against open, notorious vice, and in promoting real, essential holiness."

F. F. V.—There are nearly 80,000 white adults in Virginia who can neither read or write. These are the long-sought "second families."

THE YELLOW FEVER.

The pestilence that walketh in darkness and the destruction that wasteth at noonday is upon our city. In less than ten days more than a thousand of its victims have fallen at our side.

No former visitation of yellow fever begun so early, or raged with equal intensity. While the principal mortality has been among immigration, yet it has in many cases attacked citizens of several years residence. Many children, born in the city, have died of it—in some cases, as reported to us on good medical authority, with black vomit. Even negroes, (blacks, as well as mulattoes,) who are generally considered exempt from this tropical fever, have been its marked patients.

The history, thus far, of what will hereafter be sadly known as the "yellow fever of 1853," gives assurance to the contagion theorists, and the advocates of establishing a quarantine below the city, to protect it from the febrile importations of Havana and Rio Janeiro. New Orleans, for several years past, has been steadily improving in its vital statistics. It was expected that in a few years the yellow fever visitation would be among things that were—as in the case of Philadelphia and other Northern cities. In the absence of any special local cause, a ship arrived on the 18th June laden with coffee, from Rio Janeiro—several cases of yellow fever on board and deaths. The infection spread from the shipping back toward the swamp—the type of it being malignant and foreign.

Those whose friends are here, and all interested, may see, in another column, the effective Samaritan police that has been organized. The noble Howard Association took in charge, from the 15th to 30th ult., inclusive, 924 cases of yellow fever—strangers and destitute persons. Of these, 187 died, 238 recovered, and the balance remained under treatment at that date. Others, too, as the Odd Fellows and Masonic and Sons of Temperance Associations, are greatly alleviating the general distress by systematic beneficence; while Christianity, under its broad seal of divinity, is busy everywhere doing good to soul and body. Ministers of various denominations are visiting the sick and burying the dead.

What a contrast between the appearance of streets and promenades and levee on the 1st of August and the 1st of June. Then gay, busy, crowded; now comparatively desolate. Mourners go about the streets, and scorce every day to their long homes. One hears in every group along the sidewalks—sick, just taken, got well—black vomit—dead. To speak of music and dancing, halls, theatre, opera, Sunday races, would sound like mockery and sacrilege, even to those who but lately thought not on God—who would none of his counsel, and despised all his reproofs.

Wholesome Warning.—A friend of learning and experience, who has been connected with a "Conference Institution" in a neighboring State, says of it:

"With a good constitution and great tenacity of life, it is yet dying from neglect and starvation—a friendless orphan. Our own people seem indifferent to its fortunes, running mad to establish new schools, and allowing the old ones to perish—a suicidal policy. We have schools enough in the older States. We want now some concentration of sentiment that will secure connexional support; otherwise we have just ahead of us a fearful crash and reaction in our educational interests."

Missionaries.—The Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church, North, says in his last slip:

"Rev. D. D. Lore, our missionary at Buenos Ayres, has asked to return home in consequence of impaired health, and the Bishop will probably relieve him next spring. This valuable brother has remained at that post not so long as we had hoped he would, but much longer than he had engaged to stay when requested to take the position. Missionaries have not as yet been appointed to either Turkey or India, fields we had hoped to see occupied ere this; but the Bishop advises that the men are not yet found who can be spared for that work. The necessities of the Church at home have also operated to delay the reinforcement of our mission in China."

Alabama University.—An account of the ceremonies of the Commencement week in Tuscaloosa occupies nearly four columns of the Monitor. It seems to have passed off with as much eclat as any of the previous Commencements.

The degree of Bachelor of Arts was conferred on the following alumni of the University: E. P. Gould, T. F. Bugbee, C. H. Cleveland, M. S. Cleveland, J. S. Merriwether, J. J. Ormond, H. E. Brooks, P. Fitzpatrick, Rev. E. R. Ware, J. E. Prince, W. H. Forney, and W. S. Wyman.

The following honorary degrees were conferred: Master Hon.—A. B. Levissee and W. B. Moss. Doctor of Laws—Hon. John A. Campbell, of Mobile. Doctor of Divinity—Rev. Henry Talbird, President of Howard College, Marion.

The Metropolitan Methodist Church, of Washington City, it is said, will be of stone, three stories in height, and 70 feet wide by 100 in length. It will not cost less than $50,000, and this exclusive of the lot, which is already secured.

The rev. J. T. Bowen, Rev. J. H. Lacy, Rev. J. S. Dennard, Baptist missionaries to Central Africa, with their wives, are about to embarkut Boston for Lagos.

Holston Advocate.—We are glad to learn that the health of Bro. Patton, editor of the Holston Ch. Advocate, is improving, and that he is expected to be at his post soon.

AID TO YOUNG MINISTERS.

The friends of the Society that has been operating three years, in the Virginia Conference, aiding needy young men in education, upon entering the ministry, have met some opposition, but are successful. Dr. Lee, in an able defence of it, in reply to a member of the Conference, who has written, in the Richmond Ch. Advocate, a series of articles on "Theological Schools to be Watched," with special reference to this Society, takes the wind out of his sails, by showing his misapprehension of its design. He denies that the Society is identical with, or has any tendency to Theological Schools; its object is not to teach divinity, but grammar, and so meet the requirement of the Discipline—to "speak justly, readily, clearly."

Rev. A. Dibrell, in the same paper, thus defines its character:

A number of young men, persuaded that they were called of God to the work of the ministry, have been recommended by their respective Quarterly Conferences to the Virginia Annual Conference as suitable persons to be received on trial in the traveling connection—young men of vigorous mind, solid piety, earnest zeal, and in their own communities useful as exhorters or local preachers. But in coming before the Annual Conference for admission upon trial, it has been found, in many instances, that from their indigent circumstances, or the early necessity that was upon them to engage in manual labor, or from other causes, they have been prevented from acquiring such a knowledge of their own language, as to enable them to speak readily, justly, clearly; and while they might be acceptable to a small portion of the work, they would be unacceptable to much the larger portion. The Conference in some instances, under the pressing exigence of the work, and the earnest advocacy and strong recommendation of friends, has received such, with the view of supplying some particular field of labor; but when these have been occupied, the appointing power has been embarrassed, because of their unacceptability elsewhere. But many others have been declined by the Conference. Feeling themselves relieved by this act of the Conference from all obligation to enter the traveling connection, and constrained by their circumstances, they have returned to their secular employments, and have been lost to the Conference, and comparatively lost to the Church. Now, it was to save just such men to the Conference, with others who feel themselves moved by the Holy Spirit to the work of the ministry, but who are deterred from applying to Conference from a consciousness of the meagreness of their information and rudeness of their speech, that our Young Men's Aid Society was formed. It was after an animated discussion that occurred at the Conference held in Richmond three years ago, upon the application of a young man to be received on trial, but whose application was rejected because his language was frequently incorrect, that a few of the ministers met and organized, under the constitution which has been published in the Advocate, the Young Men's Aid Society. The articles that set forth the design of this association are in these words:

"Art. 2. The object of this Society shall be to assist such young men as may give satisfactory evidence of a call to the ministry, but who are deterred from entering it by deficient education, and have not the means of educating themselves.

"Art. 3. Such young men, and such only, as those specified above, shall be sent, at the expense and under the direction of this Society, to some institution of learning, which the Society, or a committee appointed by it, shall select, to continue so long as the Society shall deem proper."

The two articles speak unequivocally for themselves—"such young men, and such only," &c. The constitution was formed in all integrity of purpose, and with a sincere desire to promote the honor of God, the kingdom of Jesus, and the good of souls.

The same writer thus briefly meets a theory that one when called to preach is always fully qualified for the work to which he is called:

Many who have become the most efficient traveling ministers in our connection, could at the start scarcely read their Bible correctly.

Again, if God calls not till men are prepared to begin the work, then the Christian Church, instead of being reproached for its apathy to the lamentable condition of the heathen world, should be reproached for its forwardness in sending men on foreign missions where, in many instances, they are compelled to devote themselves to hard study for several years before they can open their mouths to teach those who surround them the way of salvation.

We state these things at length because similar societies have been formed in other Southern Conferences, having a good and great work to do, and directly enlisting the sympathy of preachers and people. The only opposition likely to arise is from misapprehension of their character. The Alabama Society is moving off well, and the North Carolina Conference have just published their constitution of a similar Association—three articles of which are:

Art. 7. The Executive Committee shall examine the character of all applicants for aid, and shall recommend to the Society all such as they deem proper. It shall also be the duty of this committee to designate the school which any young man shall attend, and to secure from the teacher or teachers of each a written statement of his demeanor and progress—all which statements shall be embodied in their annual report to the Society.

Art. 8. It shall be with the Society, at its stated annual meeting, to say to whom assistance shall be given, and to specify the amount. A draft for this amount shall be made by the Secretary upon the Treasurer, in behalf of the person to be aided, which draft shall be paid by him only on reception of a note for the same.

Art. 9. The aid rendered to young men shall be in the way of loans, for which each beneficiary shall give his note to the Treasurer of the Society. These notes shall not bear interest; and any amount collected by the individual efforts of any beneficiary, and paid over to the Treasurer, in furtherance of the objects of the Society, shall be credited on the note given by said beneficiary.

COMMENCEMENT OF CENTENARY COLLEGE.

This occasion came off on Wednesday, the 27th ult. As usual, a very large and highly respectable audience from Mississippi and Louisiana, and a few from other States were present. The following young gentlemen, graduates, took their A. B. degree. We give the programme and the subjects of the addresses:

1. Latin Salutatory, (second honor.) W. C. Pipkin, St. Helena, La.
2. The Golden Age and the Iron—A Contrast. C. H. Ratliff, West Feliciana, La.
3. Moral Power. J. F. Houston, Madison, La.
4. Perseverance Ensures Success. Joseph A. McPherson, Jackson, La.
5. Triumphs of Genius. T. C. Keenan, Jackson, La.
6. Progress of Mind. Sanford Perry, Jackson, La.
7. Education, the Basis of Liberty. Jas. W. Saunders, Wilkinson county, Miss.
8. Hopes. Walter S. Compton, Vicksburg, Miss.
9. Essay. F. M. Guice, Concordia, La.
10. Philosophical Oration, (third honor.)—
11. Geology—Progressive Movements of the Creator. Geo. H. Clinton, St. Helena, La.
12. Man—The Emperor of Nature. C. N. Hines, Texas.
13. Life—A Battle and a March. W. W. Dunn, West Feliciana, La.
14. Be Just and Fear Not. G. Merrick Miller, Jackson, La.
15. Enthusiasm. C. S. G. Doster, Montgomery, Ala.
16. The American Head and Heart, with Valedictory Addresses, (first honor.) Robert Pugh, Assumption, La.
17. Baccalaureate, by the President.
18. Degrees Conferred.
19. Benediction.

A large and hopeful band of young men these—half of whom are members of the Church, and all of them of moral propriety. They have spent their college days in an atmosphere and under an influence highly favorable to moral as well as intellectual culture.

Our institutions of learning are still redeeming their pledges, not only to the Church and country, but to the ministry, by whose zeal in their rearing and support they have mainly begun and been maintained. In the above list, and bearing off the 2d and 3d honors, are the sons of two preachers, who have done long and hard work in the itinerant ministry. Worthy sons they are, and full of promise. May they be as useful as their fathers, and, with their advantages, abundantly more so. The son of another itinerant minister is a professor in this, his alma mater. Occasionally we meet them elsewhere—our ministers' sons and the sons of this college: the Church's by a double adoption, and reflecting their honors upon her. Last spring, at the Commencement of the Law Department of the Louisiana University, the address before this legal alumni was delivered by an alumnus of Centenary College—W. P. Winans, Esq.—the address which gave life and brilliancy to the event, and drew almost disorderly applause from the elite of the city, its Bar and University. We shall not soon lose a gratifying remembrance of it.

The degree of M. A. was conferred in course upon the graduating class of three years ago; the honorary degree of M. A. upon Emile Lepage, Rev. J. H. Derrhammer, Rev. W. H. Watkins, R. E. Green, and F. A. F. Harper. No other honorary degrees conferred.

Monday evening and Tuesday were occupied, very agreeably to the large concourse of visitors, in attending the exhibition of the Preparatory department and the two Literary Societies. The address before the Literary Societies was by Dr. D. Macauly, one of the Board of Examiners appointed by the Governor, on behalf of the State.

The Society of Alumni were addressed by one of themselves, Mr. Kernan, whom we had not the pleasure of hearing.

The meetings of the Joint Board of Trustees and Visitors were unusually interesting in the character and consequence of the measures adopted—progressive counsels prevailing. The chair of Ancient Languages in the college proper was divided into two—the Professorship of Greek Literature and the Professorship of Latin Literature. To the former the previous incumbent was re-elected, and to the latter W. H. Scales, M. A. Prof. Scales has signified his acceptance, and is regarded a valuable accession to an already full Faculty.

This arrangement was in view of bestowing more attention upon the preparatory department, which, for several years in connexion with the college, has of late risen, under the able and industrious direction of Principal Miller, into much consideration. It is a feeder of the college, both in a regular supply of well trained pupils for its first classes, and in funds. It is designed to add to that of the Principal, classical instruction of a permanent, elevated character. These two professors will, in addition to their college classes, take classes in the preparatory department, in their respective languages. Thus each professor will bring forward his own students, ab stirpe. This will give unity to the classical instruction, and help this important department. The salary of the Principal has been raised. The high schools of the country, both public and private, will find here unequal competition.

Such is this arrangement—an experiment, but it is sanguinely calculated by its friends to work well. We understand that Dr. Stanton, the President of Oakland College, Miss., who was present, expressed a favorable opinion of it, and a purpose to introduce a similar modification into the institution over which he presides.

The financial condition of the college is satisfactory. But money will be wanted, and those who have got it, and hold it for good uses, must get ready to give it. The original plan of the college building was laid out on an octagon, whose sides measure about 200 feet. Under the State, and before the Church came into possession by purchase, two of these sides were covered by a two story range of brick buildings, containing dormitories, recitation rooms, &c. The side between them was reserved for a large centre building, joining to these on each side by wings. The time has come and the demand, for that centre building. The friends of education in the Church must say to themselves—putting their hands generously in their pockets, as they say it—Let us rise up and build.

With some means on hand, and feeling the urgent need for more room to accommodate crowding students, the Board constituted a Building Committee, with instructions to go to work, as soon as possible, and carry it on as funds allowed. E. T. Merrick, Esq., of Clinton, is Chairman of that Committee. Rev. W. H. Crenshaw was elected Financial Agent to solicit aid in this behalf. He will start upon his agency when the Bishop authorizes, and much is looked for. At the last Legislature the authority was granted the Trustees, under charter, of disposing of certain portions of the college lands—the proceeds to be appropriated to this purpose. The lands have been surveyed and laid off into acre lots, offered at $100. Taking into account the beautiful and healthful location of Jackson, its society and educational facilities, it is expected that these lots will be purchased for family residences. It is certainly an eligible opportunity for parents who would educate their children under their eyes. Rev. B. M. Drake was empowered to sell these lots and make titles. On the first day he offered them, five or six were disposed of. To complete this centre building, and thus complete the original plan, will require at least $30,000. In it will be what every Commencement desiderates—a college chapel, large and well finished. The building now used for that purpose is the one occupied by the Convention that made the Louisiana Constitution before the last—wooden, and badly constructed for the purpose. It will also contain halls for the two Literary Societies—the members of which, with commendable spirit, have undertaken to raise funds towards the purpose. Thus the shoulder of "Young America" has been put to it.

Let us do this and be done with it. No hanging of fire—no Noah's ark of a hundred years building. It can and ought to be done in time for the present Sophomores to receive their first degree in.

Any description that leaves out the music that regaled the Commencement, would be unfair and imperfect. The college, at its own expense, ordered, two years ago, the purchase of instruments for a full brass band, and elected a competent gentleman, Mr. Blackmar—well designated in the catalogue as professor—to superintend and instruct in this department. That, from such young and raw material he can and has trained such an orchestra and brass band, is astonishing. The students make their own music, and it not only enlivens and adorns their public exhibitions, but it is to them personally no mean accomplishment and development. There is in this the useful and beautiful. It struck us, and we believe everybody, as "a thing that ought to be." The parting hymn, expressly composed, and in which a few exquisite female voices mingled, was a fitting finale to the chaste and manly valedictory of Mr. Pugh. It brought all hearts to a kind and melting mood, and helped professors and students to say good bye, with pledges of "ne'er forget." The Report of the Joint Examining Committee is a trusty account—as those need not to be informed who are acquainted with the names attached. It will appear next week.

The people of the South may educate at home if they will. This running after strange gods is a matter of taste—no longer of necessity. If they prefer to spend their money and patronage at Yale or Harvard, or any where but at home—to build up other institutions, rather than those at their door—to educate their sons under social and political maxims that it will be their interest to forget, and with companions whose acquaintance and friendship will be of no use or help to them in their future aspirations and toils;—why, this is a republican country. They can do it.

"What God has Joined Together," &c. The last accounts from Bishop Ives are of a peculiar character. To gain the priesthood of the Romish Church, he renounces the wife of his youth, and leaves her in the loneliness and desolation of widowhood. The account says:

"The Church Herald has been furnished with a letter, written by a member of the Episcopal Church in North Carolina to Bishop Green, which states that 'Mrs. Ives will return home with her brother, Dr. Hobart, he having received notice from the Pope that Dr. Ives would be ordained priest in the summer, and could no longer be considered as her husband.'"

This is putting away a wife for other cause than the Bible specifies. But we beg pardon; what cares His Holiness for the Holy Bible!

Death.—Rev. D. O. Andrews, of Memphis Conference, Panola Circuit, died on the 14th of July.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Columbus Ct. (Ala. Conf.)—The Lord is blessing us on this circuit. We have, up to this time, seventy-seven conversions, and over one hundred added to the Church. Bro. J. S. Belton, my colleague, has been accepted by Bishop Andrew for the China mission. We hope to get a liberal share of missionary money from the circuit. We have taken up our conference collections, and have something over the amount assessed to us.

S. H. Cox.

Linden Ct. (Ala.)—Linden Circuit blessed; 20 conversions and 26 accessions to the Church; backsliders reclaimed; old Church letters hunted up, and handed to the pastor. A new camp-ground is to be established in the midst of one of the most interesting communities in the State, at Hampden; 15 or 16 tents pledged. There will be 20, I have but little doubt; and I believe God will convert many, many of the people. Remember, the Hampden camp-meeting and the Linden camp-meeting, September 3d, four miles from Linden. Ministers and brethren are invited to attend both.

J. W. Laney.

Carthage, (Miss. Conf.)—I have just closed a three day's meeting. The Lord was with us; 10 embraced Christ, and 13 joined the Church. On Sabbath morning we held a love feast, and it was indeed a feast of love to the soul—one of, if not the very best, I have ever witnessed. To God be all the glory. Amen.

B. J. Woodward.

Lauderdale Ct. (Ala. Conf.)—I will further say, for the encouragement of all whom it may concern, that we have been blessed with a gracious season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We protracted our Quarterly Meeting, which commenced on last Friday. Our P. E. (Bro. Calloway) has been with us until this morning, and Rev. J. E. Newman. The Lord has blessed us abundantly with many awakenings and conversions.

July 27. R. Y. Rew.

Hernando, Miss.—Rev. J. W. Shelton writes, 20th ult.:

"We have had some gracious seasons of refreshing on our work. May we soon have much more to make our hearts rejoice."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

CENTENARY INSTITUTE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

The Annual Examination of this favorite institution of the Alabama Conference commenced on Friday, the 1st of July, and ended on the following Wednesday. In the absence of the Conference Committee, the undersigned were appointed to act in their stead, and the Report should have been forwarded much sooner, but the circumstances surrounding him who was appointed to write it prevented.

The audience was large, and composed of some of the most excellent people of the State. The Society of the place comprises many Methodist families of liberal means and taste, of intelligence and piety, who have sought Summerfield for the double purpose of finding a pleasant home, and the facilities of education. Commodious and tasteful residences adorn the beautiful vicinity of the college, and from the manifest tendency of wealthy Methodists to settle there, it is destined to be one of the most delightful social and educational retreats in the South. And this is the place where the preachers of the Alabama Conference hold their semi-annual "reunions;" many of them from all parts of the State attend every Examination. In addition to these, those who patronize the institution from abroad are generally wealthy and intelligent families that desire their children educated in the midst of such select social, moral and educational influences as Summerfield affords. All these advantages are manifest in the character of the young ladies of the college. There is a gentility and refinement, combined with a frankness, simplicity, reverence for sacred things, and, in many cases, piety, that, to him who has enlarged and elevated views of Christian culture, are delightful to behold.

It should be known, which is frequently not the case, that those who come here to live, and those who send here, have the double advantage of a school for boys and a school for girls. They are both under the same head, though in different buildings and some distance from each other—an arrangement that, in our opinion, has advantages over any other.

We regret that we did not witness the whole examination, but from the representations of competent gentlemen, we are convinced that those classes whose examination we did not witness were equal to the others. The classes in Geometry, Trigonometry, Moral Philosophy, French, and Natural Philosophy, were highly satisfactory. And we think candor requires us to say that the music was finer, and the concerts more successful, than any we have ever had. The declamation of the young men, some of whom are studying for the ministry, gave much promise for the future, as did the compositions of the young ladies, a fine class of whom (ten, we believe) graduated.

The Rev. Eugene V. Le Vert preached the Commencement Sermon on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, in his usually eloquent style. The Rev. C. C. Gillespie preached at 4 o'clock, P. M., and the Rev. John D. Fisher at night. On Wednesday, Commencement Day, after the compositions of the Graduating Class, and Dr. Mitchell's plain, strong and fatherly Baccalaureate, the audience listened to the Commencement Address, by Dr. Lipscomb, a young gentleman from Columbus, Miss. His theme was, "Youth and its Destiny;" in which, after a modest but manly introduction, he portrayed the unsophisticated aspirations of the youthful heart; then gradually expanded into a beautiful and philosophical exposition of the true relations of the affections and the intellect in character and civilization; then launched into a vehement and powerful argument against the present selfish, part intellectual and part material, civilization which leaves out the heart, and makes success the idol of its worship; then he proclaimed the Bible, the "Book of the Heart," as the great sanctifying, humanizing element needed; and concluded with one of the most touching, eloquent and powerful appeals to the Methodist itinerant ministry, as "men of heart," whose instincts and course were diametrically opposed to the prevalent pursuit of self, we ever heard. That young man "won golden opinions," and was himself a fine illustration of his doctrine, that "the heart makes the man."

The Examination was truly a delightful one; every person felt at home; preachers and people were delighted with "our school," we were glad to meet, were happy together, and regretted to part. There are no better facilities for the moral, intellectual and social culture of girls and boys, than at Summerfield, Dallas county, nine miles from Selma. And we might have said physical, also; for situated, as it is, on a high ridge between the Alabama and Cahaba rivers, the water is good, and the place healthy.

C. C. Gillespie,
E. Monsson,
T. Mendy.

☞ Southern Ch. Advocate please copy.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN CADDO, LOUISIANA.

On the 16th of July inst. the friends of Temperance gained a signal victory over King Alcohol, in a warmly contested battle, fought at the ballot-box in Greenwood, Ward No. 2, Parish of Caddo. The vote stood: "For license," 33; "No license," 34. This is a glorious result, and required for its achievement active exertions. It is a triumph of Temperance worthy to be chronicled. It is a triumph of principle—a triumph of truth over error—of virtue over vice.

Methodism is gaining a strong hold and powerful influence in Northern Louisiana. Her evangelical ministry—humble, active, zealous, efficient—are spreading holiness through the land. Good substantial houses for worship are going up in every neighborhood; Sabbath Schools are becoming common, and the membership of the Church is steadily on the increase. But Bochus is also erecting his altars all over the country where his infernal fires are never permitted to go out, but are kept constantly burning day and night, and where pure, spotless and unblemished character—the choicest young men of the country are offered up in sacrifice, and sons and sires bow together in worship. Let patriotism and religion unite in pulling down these altars, and extinguishing these fires. Greenwood has done well, nobly. Let the whole State follow the example of this beautiful little village.

Caddo.

The worms are doing serious injury to the cotton crop in the neighborhood of Greenwood. Already, on some plantations, they have entirely destroyed whole fields.

July 23, 1853.

Plain Spoken.—There is hope for South America. The politicians there are beginning to see that Romanism is impolitic; the republicans that it is anti-republican; the patriots that it is foreign in head and heart. The following, from a Chilian journal, shows how the Jesuits are liked in an exclusively Romish country, where they have been for a considerable time tried, and people know what they are. It is not a "Protestant fabrication," therefore:

"Unfurl your red banner, ye sons of St. Ignatius, and raise your voices against heresy, which is the prosperity of the country. Expel the foreigner—that is to say, the civilizer—from our ranks. It matters not; alone and destitute of support, we will combat you in the name of civilization and of the future. To-day ye are weak and miserable, because a ray of light annihilates you—because you would disappear before it as Lucifer before the manifestation of the God of truth. To-day ye are weak, because your prestige is false, your power a lie, your faith an imposture, your character sacrilege, your actions infamy, your religion a burlesque, your fraternity sarcasm, your virtue hypocrisy. Ye and yours are weak to-day, because you could not resist, with the aid of a hundred governments such as that which supports you, the powerful impulse of civilization and of the age. To-day the first step of this government consists in peopling our cities, not with laborious artisans and active foreigners, but with vampires, clad in black, who come to nourish themselves on our blood; with impostors, who come to consecrate ignorance and barbarity; with idlers, who come to deceive the people in the name of a divinity in which they do not believe, to favor their vices, to sanctify their infamies, and to frustrate the laws which condemn the guilty."

Good Men Wanted in Congress.—We cut the following well-timed expression from a Washington correspondence of the Philadelphia Presbyterian:

"If I had the ear of every Congressional district, I would say to the voters, do not send to Congress inexperienced and conceited boys—to not send men who ever get drunk—for if they get drunk at all at home, they will keep drunk all the time at Washington; there are here so many temptations. Do not send blackguards or profane swearers to Congress; a few such disgrace a whole nation, and one such disgraces a district. If Christian men all over the land would resolve, 'we will not sustain our party, unless our party nominate upright, sober, trustworthy men,' the matter would be remedied; for no party can afford to spare its Christian members. That political party would soon rot, that would exclude from it all the salt of the earth."

Georgia.—The sum of $2500 was raised at the late Commencement at Emory College, to complete the college buildings. Senator Toombs gave $400.

The man who cannot forgive, breaks the bridge over which he himself might pass to Heaven.

Arkansas.—Pulaski county has subscribed for $5000 stock in the Cairo and Fulton Railroad. Clark county has subscribed for $3500 stock in the road.

Heavy Damages in Favor of a California Passenger.—In the case of Orrin S. Bensted against Cornelius Vanderbilt and Daniel Drew, tried at the Ulster (New York) Circuit Court, last week, the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of $10,000. The action was for cruel and improper treatment of a passenger, who took passage by the Vanderbilt new line of steamers between New York and San Francisco, and for delay on the route.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY.

DIED—In peace, June 13th, in Lowndes county, Ala., WM. S. BUFORD, a native of Virginia, in the 54th year of his age.

DIED—At the residence of Dr. J. Gibbs, in Plaquemine Parish, La., on the 4th day of July, 1853, WM. A. DRAKE, aged 52 years.

He was a native of Edgefield District, S. C.; emigrated to the State of Georgia in 1828, in which State he married in 1831, and during the same year made a profession of religion and joined the M. E. Church, of which he remained a pious and consistent member until his death, which was peaceful and happy. He had been for several years a citizen of Minden, La. He lived respected, and died regretted. JOEL SANDERS.

☞ Southern Ch. Advocate please copy.

DIED—On the 3d inst., MARY LUCINDA, daughter of the Rev. M. Ford and Mary R. his wife, aged 5 years, 2 months, and 7 days.

Bro. Ford has lost two little daughters in about a week of each other. May God sustain the parents in this time of gloom and sorrow. Your children are safe with God.

"They have left you and gone before,
And landed safe on Canaan's shore,
With saints in light.

And though on earth no more you'll greet them,
Yet in that bright world you'll meet them,
In robes of white."

THOMAS NIXON.

Cayuga, Miss., July 20, 1853.

☞ Nashville & L. Advocate please copy.

Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." St. Luke: 18.

Departed this life on Sunday morning, the 7th inst., in the Parish of Lafourche, after an illness of only eight days, KATE WINN, infant daughter of M. B. and Lavinia Champlin, aged 8 months and 4 days.

And thus has the great Shepherd gathered the fold another lamb.

"Life is a span, a fleeting hour;
How soon the vapor flies!
Man is a tender transient flower,
That ev'n in blooming dies.

We lay thee in the silent tomb,
Sweet blossom of a day;
We just began to view thy bloom,
And then art called away."

LEWIS A. REED.

Thibodaux, July 18, 1853.

JOHN F. GILMORE, son of John W. and Martha Gilmore, of Monroe county, Miss., departed this life, on the first day of June, 1853, aged 17 years and 6 months.

The sufferings of the deceased were very severe, but borne with Christian fortitude. He professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1850, and always maintained a pious deportment, being obedient to his parents, and faithful to his God; and when called to die, he was prepared, and fully enjoyed the sustaining grace of God in the struggle. He frequently expressed his resignation to the will of God; requested his friends to sing and pray with him; told them he was going to Heaven to be with Jesus, and expected them to meet him there.

While his parents feel deeply the loss of so lovely and beloved, they sorrow not as those who have no hope, but anticipate the time when they shall be reunited, never to part again.

"I am the resurrection and the life," saith the Lord; "he who believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die."

GEO. SHAFFER.

My dear wife, MARTHA ANN, was born in, in the Parish of East Feliciana, La., and while at Jackson going to school, (I think in the year '37) under the ministry of Rev. C. K. Marshall, she was converted, and joined the M. E. Church. Bro. M. has this confidence in glory as a seal to his ministry. If grace should fall upon this, may it be no means to cause him to quit his location and throw himself into the work—itinerating is what I mean.

She was a consistent member up to her death. She will be remembered by a good many of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference, whom it always gave her pleasure to entertain. She was a Bible Christian. I believe that her work stands at the 29th hour, the last that she made. This was her morning's business—one chapter before entering upon the business of the day. I have been bereft of an affectionate wife; my children of a devoted mother. She said just before her death—"Jesus is precious."

J. HINES DAWSON.

Austin, Texas, July 13, 1853.

TEACHERS WANTED

To supply both departments of Pleasant Hill Academy, to commence on the first Monday in October next. Some experience, undoubted scholarship, and good moral character are qualifications that cannot be dispensed with, we therefore require all applications to be accompanied by testimonials from the following gentlemen: Dr. Manly, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Dr. Mitchell, of Greensboro', Ala.; Rev. M. P. Jewell, of Marion, Ala.; Dr. Powell, of Dayton, Ala.; Rev. A. G. McCraw, of Selma, Ala., and Gen. B. Y. Fair, of Montgomery, Ala. Recommendations from either of the above named gentlemen will be satisfactory.

The salary of $800 will be paid by the Trustees to supply the male department, and $750 for the female.

Applications still be forwarded to Pleasant Hill, La., directed to

JOHN JORDAN,
D. A. BLACKSHEAR,
A. H. REMBERT, } Examining Committee.

aug 6

UNIVERSITY OF NASHVILLE.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third Annual Course of Lectures in this Department will commence on Tuesday, the first of November, and continue till the first of the ensuing March.

PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.

JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.

A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy and Physiology.

W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Institutes and Practice of Medicine.

C. K. WINSTON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.

ROBERT M. POTTER, M. D.,
General and Special Anatomy.

J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy.

WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for students on the first Monday in October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures will be given by the Professors, commencing also on the first Monday in October.

The students will have free access to the State Hospital in lieu of each Professor. $15; Matriculation ticket, $5; Graduation ticket, $10; Graduation fee, $25.

Good board can be obtained in the city at from $2 50 to $3 per week. Further information may be obtained by addressing the Dean.

J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D., Dean.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb., 1853.

There are 142 railroad trains leaving Boston daily. The same number returns daily, likewise, and makes a heavy aggregate of business.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	20 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

☞ HOWARD ASSOCIATION—July 23, 1853.—The following gentlemen have been appointed to collect funds on behalf of the Howard Association:

FIRST DISTRICT.	SECOND DISTRICT.
J. C. HARRIS,	G. KURSHEDT,
G. W. SHAW,	W. L. ROBINSON,
H. W. PALFREY,	St. LIVINGSTON.
J. E. CALDWELL,
THIRD DISTRICT.	FOURTH DISTRICT.
C. W. WHITALL,	J. J. BROWNE,
J. M. VANDERGRIFF,	J. WILLIS.

☞ Donations will also be received by the undersigned.

jy23 D. I. RICARDO, Secretary, 40 Camp street.

☞ HOWARD ASSOCIATION — New Orleans, July 21, 1853.—The following pearl ring Physicians have kindly offered their gratuitous services in attending patients under the charge of the Association:

FIRST DISTRICT.

Dr. N. SMITH, corner of Annunciation and Edward streets.
Dr. J. C. RENSHAW, Macarone street, near Bartholomew.
Dr. HOWELL, Carondelet street, near St. Joseph.
Dr. DESNARS, at Touro's Infirmary.
Dr. HALL, corner of Berwick and Tinchi streets.
Dr. LALLY, 400 Magazine street.
Dr. M. KEAVY, 70 Carondelet street.
Dr. GEO. W. CHRISTY, 18 Natchez street.
Dr. MATHER, Nayades street, between Esplanade and Polymnia.
Dr. G. W. DEMESTER, 11 New Levee.
Dr. M. FARRAN, corner of Circus and Povdras streets.
Dr. DALTON, St. Charles street, near Tallesalla.
Dr. JACOBSON, 11 Union street.
Dr. GOHNS, Bienville's Row.
Dr. KISSEE, 78 Dupre street.
Dr. A. BAYLE, Esplanade, miles street, near Orange.
Dr. LURTON, 147 Canal street.
Dr. FORT, MALCOLM, 78 Circus street.
Dr. JONATHAN LE, corner of Girod and Carlos.
Dr. A. HART, 58, Josephi, near Camp.
Dr. HIRE, 121 Annunciation street.

SECOND DISTRICT.

Dr. P. HAGAN, Bourbon and Bienville.
Dr. CHASSE, 48 Dauphin street.
Dr. F. W. BERTRAND, 214 Bloom street.
Dr. KEATZ, corner of Conti and Marais.

THIRD DISTRICT.

Dr. KOVALESKI, 13 Hospital street.
Dr. BIDWELL, 10 Girod street, below the Railroads.
Dr. J. A. LANTHELLE, 42 Congress street.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

Dr. SCHREIBERT, corner of Rousseau and Second streets.
Dr. A. BELDUCH, Magazine street, near St. Andrew.
Dr. P. VEISER, Live Oak street, near Josephine.
Dr. WARREN, Jones, near City Hall.
Dr. J. K. GUILLAUD, corner of Canal and Apollo.
Dr. PERCHER, corner of Magazine and Seventh.

☞ The Medical Faculty generally of this city are respectfully requested to permit their names to be added to the above list, which they can do by applying to either of the Committees or the Secretary.

jy23 spd D. I. RICARDO, Secretary.

☞ HOWARD ASSOCIATION — New Orleans, July 22, 1853.—The following Apothecaries have been selected on behalf of the Howard Association:

FIRST DISTRICT.

J. G. VEISER, 189 Canal street, near Bourbon.
L. P. COXE, 83 Camp street, opposite Nat. Bank.
THOMAS MANN, corner Common and St. Charles streets.
M. S. HYAMS, corner St. Paul and Bienville streets.
J. S. M'FARRAN, corner Poydras and Circus streets.
SERRA, corner of Poydras and Bienville streets.
J. P. BARRIT, corner Esplanade and Bloome streets.
T. K. FINLAY, corner Jail and Camp streets.
A. BENAGH, corner Triton Walk and Tivoli Circle.
E. W. CROSS, corner of Bienville and Dauphin streets.
BIRENN, 179 Dryades street, opposite the Market.
P. PUECH, corner Navades and Palmyra streets.
F. C. DUNN, corner Magazine and Bienville streets.
L. PASSOLT, corner Rhee and Hospital streets.
F. HENDERICKSON, 206 Tchoupitoulas street.

SECOND DISTRICT.

SICKLES & CO., 90 Canal street.
A. BEALER, corner of Bienville and Marais streets.
A. S. HAYAS, Charter street, between Main and Madison.
C. RICHARDSON, corner of Bienville and Villere streets.
A. BROUSSARD, corner of Royal and Hospital streets.
J. ALLRICHT, corner Colborne street and Bayou Road.

THIRD DISTRICT.

H. A. GOLDMAN, corner of Louisa and Greatmore streets.
ARCH SIBLEY, corner of Bayou and Main streets.
B. LAPLACE, corner Victory and Elysian Fields streets.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

JNO. H. PIPE, corner of Apollo and Philip streets.
F. KALLAVEIL, corner of Bayou Philip and Sauguet streets.
S. BASKINS, corner Felicity Road and Magazine street.

☞ States will be put up at the Apothecaries above mentioned, whose persons applying for relief will leave their directions.

jy 23 spd D. I. RICARDO, Secretary.

☞ HOWARD ASSOCIATION.—RELIEF MEMBERS.—

W. DOUCEMET, President, 12 Bienville and Magazine street.
G. W. SHAW, First Vice President, Camp street, opposite Female Orphan Asylum, corner Camp and Poydras street.
C. H. CARLES, Second Vice President, New Basin.
G. KURSHEDT, Treasurer, 18 Bourbon and 48 Camp streets.
D. I. RICARDO, Secretary, 40 Camp street, and Tchoupitoulas street.
J. G. PERSON, corner Canal and Bloome streets.
W. L. GILES, corner of Camp and 12 Camp streets.
E. C. DILLARD, corner Canal and St. Charles streets.
W. L. SAMUEL, 87 Canal and 92 Camp streets.
W. EMMERSON, 78 Bienville street.
J. BENSADON, at Touro's Infirmary.
J. E. CALDWELL, 27 Bank Place, and Delord street, near Camp.
W. G. HAMER, 15 Old Levee street.
H. W. PALFREY, 27 Camp and 125 Julia streets.
W. L. ROBINSON, 18 Bienville street.
P. GONS, F. E., 27 Commandine street.
H. O'CONNELL, St Louis and Bourbon.
C. W. WHITALL, Esq., Bank street, opposite the Mint.
J. M. VANDERGRIFF, Architect Building.
J. J. BROWNE, First and Coliseum streets.
J. WILLIS, corner of Josephine and Chestnut streets.
J. LIVINGSTON, 10 Camp, and St. Louis street, near Royal.
J. C. HARRIS, Bank of the State street, near Magazine.
D. T. LONOVAN, Main street, between Girod and Julia.

☞ Persons requiring relief will please apply to one of the above members. It is also required that those applying for Relief will make their applications in the member residing nearest the Patients, also at the Touro Infirmary, corner of Bienville and Levee streets.

jy20 D. I. RICARDO, Secretary, 40 Camp street.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Weekly report from Saturday, 23d, at 6 o'clock P. M., to Saturday, 30th, at 6 o'clock P. M.:

Admissions 602—different diseases. Discharges 240—of which 134 were yellow fever; Deaths 236—of which 231 were of yellow fever. H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk

Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Friday 29th inst.:

Admissions 94; Discharges 46—of which 27 were yellow fever; Deaths 39—all of yellow fever.

H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk

Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of New Orleans for the week ending on Sunday morning, July 31, at 6 o'clock, A. M.:

Yellow Fever	692	Lockjaw	1
Pernicious Fever	7	Trismus Nascentium	1
Malignant Fever	7	Nervous	29
Black Vomit	3	Consumption	12
Erysipelas	761	Hydrothorax	1
Cholera	4	Respiration	13
Diarrhœa	5	Gastritis Chronic	1
Diarrhœa Chronic	2	Gastro-enteritis	1
Dysentery	5	Enteritis	1
Dysentery Chronic	2	Enteritis Chronic	1
Fever	1	Scirrhus Liver	1
" Bilious	2	Worms	1
" Remittent	1	Worm Fever	1
" Congestive	2	Dysentery	7
" Typhoid	10	Urinary Abscess	1
" Nervous	1	Uræmia	1
Ataxic	1	Metritis Chronic	1
Erysipelas	2	Of Females	1
Catarrh	1	Leprosy	1
Thrush	2	Intemperate	1
Croup	1	Old Age	1
Ecstasis	44	Stillborn	9
Hooping Cough	1	Fœtus	10
Measles	2	Still-born
Monomenia	3	Fractures, Skull	1
Marasmus	1	Injuries from a Mule	1
Teething	2	Drowned	1
Dropsy	1	Casualties	3
Furunculi	1	Wounds	1
Inflammation	2	Executed	1
Weakness	7	Intemperance	2
Vascular Seat	14	Delirium Tremens	3
Apoplexy	4	Emetatine	5
Cerebral Fever	1	Unknown	57
Encephalitis	1	Natural Causes	3
Meningitis	2	Found Dead	2
Epilepsy	1	U. Known	46
Convulsions	15
Total			881

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board Health.

Interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock P. M. on the 30th ult.: Yellow fever 125; other diseases 28—in all 154.

Interments in all the Cemeteries of the city, for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock P. M. on Sunday, 31st ult.: Yellow fever 137; other diseases 20; total 157.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH.—The following is the report of interments in the city for the week ending yesterday (Sunday) morning. The 31st ult. at six o'clock, A. M. Total interments 880, of which the deaths from Yellow Fever were 692.

HOWARD ASSOCIATION.—Yellow Fever Cases. We are indebted to the politeattention of the Secretary for the following statement. It will be seen that of the cases that have been under treatment, the proportion of cures is much greater than that of the deaths; which, considering the desperate nature of the cases in hand, is an encouraging circumstance:

This is to certify, That the following are the number of cases of Yellow Fever taken in charge of the Howard Association, commencing on the 15th and ending on the 30th July, inclusive:

Cases	924	Died	187
Discharged	238	Under treatment	499

D. I. RICARDO, Secretary.

☞ HOWARD ASSOCIATION — New Orleans, July 27, 1853.—The following Apothecaries have been selected on behalf of the Howard Association:

FIRST DISTRICT.

J. G. VEISER, 189 Canal street, near Bourbon.
L. P. COXE, 83 Camp street, opposite Nat. Bank.
THOMAS MANN, corner Common and St. Charles streets.
M. S. HYAMS, corner St. Paul and Bienville streets.
J. S. M'FARRAN, corner Poydras and Circus streets.
SERRA, corner of Poydras and Bloome streets.
J. P. BARRIT, corner Esplanade and Bloome streets.
T. K. FINLAY, corner Jail and Camp streets.
A. BENAGH, corner Triton Walk and Tivoli Circle.
E. W. CROSS, corner of Bienville and Dauphin streets.
BIRENN, 179 Dryades street, opposite the Market.
P. PUECH, corner Navades and Palmyra streets.
F. C. DUNN, corner Magazine and Bienville streets.
L. PASSOLT, corner Rhee and Hospital streets.
F. HENDERICKSON, 206 Tchoupitoulas street.

SECOND DISTRICT.

SICKLES & CO., 90 Canal street.
A. BEALER, corner of Bienville and Marais streets.
A. S. HAYAS, Charter street, between Main and Madison.
C. RICHARDSON, corner of Bienville and Villere streets.
A. BROUSSARD, corner of Royal and Hospital streets.
J. ALLRICHT, corner Colborne street and Bayou Road.

THIRD DISTRICT.

H. A. GOLDMAN, corner of Louisa and Greatmore streets.
ARCH SIBLEY, corner of Bayou and Main streets.
B. LAPLACE, corner Victory and Elysian Fields streets.

FOURTH DISTRICT.

JNO. H. PIPE, corner of Apollo and Philip streets.
F. KALLAVEIL, corner of Bayou Philip and Sauguet streets.
S. BASKINS, corner Felicity Road and Magazine street.

☞ States will be put up at the Apothecaries above mentioned, whose persons applying for relief will leave their directions.

jy 30 spd D. I. RICARDO, Secretary.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Monday, 1st inst.

Admissions 86; discharges 47; deaths 38—of which 36 were of yellow fever. H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk

OFFICIAL REPORT of Interments in all the Cemeteries for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock A. M. yesterday:

	Yellow Fever.	Other Diseases.	Total.
American, Girod street	3	2	5
Cypress Grove, (Dutch)	1	—	1
Fathersfield	10	3	13
Charity Hospital	19	1	20
Hebrew	—	—	—
St. Patricks	23	5	28
Lafayette, 4th District	33	4	37
Hebrews, Fourth District	1	—	1
St. Vincent de Paul, Third District	22	1	23
St. Louis, No. 1	—	—	—
St. Louis, No. 2	2	3	5
Total	113	20	135

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report for the 24 hours ending as published on Tuesday, 2d inst.

Admission 91; Discharges 52; Deaths 11—of which 35 were of yellow fever. H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

INTERMENTS in all the Cemetries of the city, for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on the 2d inst.:

	Yellow Fever.	Other Diseases.	Total.
American, Girod street	—	—	—
Cypress Grove, Ridge	8	4	12
Odd Fellow Rest	1	—	1
Charity Hospital	27	3	30
Hebrew	—	—	—
St. Patricks	27	—	27
Lafayette, 4th District	10	6	16
Hebrew, Fourth District	3	—	3
St. Vincent de Paul, Third District	21	4	25
St. Louis No. 1	—	—	—
St. Louis No. 2	2	—	2
Total	129	17	146

Report of the Charity Hospital from Tuesday, midnight, to Wednesday, midnight:

Admissions 71; discharges 33; deaths 43—of which 39 were of yellow fever. H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock A. M. on Thursday, the 4th inst.:

	Yellow Fever.	Other Diseases.	Total.
Protestant, Girod street	1	—	1
Hebrew, Melpaire Ridge	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	—	—	—
Odd Fell. Rest	1	—	1
Potter's Field	12	3	15
Charity Hospital	34	4	38
St. Patrick's	39	4	43
Catholic No. 1, Second District	—	—	—
" No. 2	3	3	6
St. Vincent de Paul, Third Dist	14	4	18
Lafayette, Fourth District	40	4	44
Hebrew	—	—	—
Total	151	17	168

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the cemeteries of the city for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Friday, the 5th inst.:

	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Pub's.	Total.
Protestant, Girod Street	3	—	—	3
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	2	—	—	2
Odd Fellows' Rest	1	—	—	1
Potter's Field	17	2	—	19
Charity Hospital	36	1	—	37
St. Patrick's	13	2	11	26
Catholic No. 1	—	—	—	—
Catholic No. 2	2	1	—	3
St. Vincent de Paul	19	—	2	21
Lafayette	34	3	—	37
Hebrew	2	—	—	2
Total	128	9	13	150

The above is arranged according to the official return made by Dr Simonds, the Secretary of the Board of Health. There is a discrepancy in our report and that of some of the other papers, arising from their having set down the deaths from unknown diseases in the Yellow Fever column.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Official.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Thursday, 4th inst.: Admissions 69; discharges 39; deaths 40—all of yellow fever. H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for July.—

Admissions.	Discharges.	Deaths.
Males 1412	Males No	Males 538
Females 651	Females report	Females 181
Total 2063	Total 1105	Total 719

Of this number, born in the United States 143; born in foreign countries 1036; unknown 15.

During the month there were born in the Lying-in Ward 14 children, 6 of whom 6 males, 5 females, 2 stillborn.

The furniture and household effects of the late Hon. Wm. R. King, Vice President of the United States, were sold at auction, in Washington, on Tuesday, the 26th ult. The Republic says the furniture was rich and beautiful, the greater part of it made to order in Paris. Among the many articles a rosewood Chickering piano was sold for $215; a pair of rare bronze vases, with marble pedestals, $150; a statuette of Cupid, $50; four suits of window curtains, with cornice and fixtures, $55 each; four arm chairs, $30 each. Two large and elegant cabinets, with Egyptian marble tops, elaborately carved and inlaid, two beautiful gilt and inlaid Brusle tables, and an oval centre table, richly gilt and inlaid with shell, were purchased by Mr. Sidney Webster for the President of the United States, at $600 for the set.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE EXHIBITION.—The New York Journal of Commerce contends that in nearly every department of industry, represented in the Crystal Palace, the United States manifests superiority over Great Britain. If Americans are excelled, it is in the fine arts, and those which create luxuries—to which as yet comparatively little attention has been given in America, as yet.

The rapid progress towards the completion of the Exhibition is said to be truly gratifying. Every day some new, useful, or tasteful object catches the eye, adding much to the effect of the fairy-like scene. The workmen have now nearly completed the picture gallery. It will contain about ten thousand square feet of wall space available for the display of pictures, every foot of which is bespoken for the purpose. A gallery four hundred and fifty feet long, appropriately lighted from the roof, and filled on both sides with pictures, will be something novel in extent, at least.

On Tuesday, 2011 single tickets were sold, and 721 season tickets presented at the doors. Receipts for the day, $1063. The sum of $2672 was contributed to the Washington Monument.

THE GARDINER CASE.—We learn from the Washington Star, that in the Criminal Court on the 29th ult., Messrs. Bradley and Carlisle, counsel for Gardiner, appeared in Court, and stating their willingness to go to trial in that case immediately, asked that the Court would fix a definite time for the trial. Their engagements in the Circuit Court demanded their attendance there at the September term. If not taken up now, they suggested that it be continued to the December term.

Mr. Fendall was willing to try the case at once, but he could not go to trial until the Commission which had gone to Mexico should return, when reasonable time would be given to the defence to finally prepare for the trial.

The Court declined to fix a day for the trial, or to continue it to the next term. The Commissioners were daily expected back, and when they returned a reasonable time would be given to both parties to commence the case.

Mr. Carlisle then gave notice of a motion for a continuance, but the Court declined entertaining the motion, on account of being about to enter upon the case of a man now in jail. Mr. Carlisle then asked to have his name struck from the docket in the case, and in company with Mr. Bradley left the Court-room.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND DELAWARE SHIP CANAL.—The New York Mirror says of the ship canal which is to unite the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays:

Though other places will be benefitted by this work in an eminent degree, it is the city of Baltimore that will take the cream and reap the greatest harvest of prosperity. Memphis Conventions may meet from year to year, and resolve and re-resolve in vain; practical action is the only thing that can accomplish their darling objects, one of which will be partially attained by this project. It will do more to build up a Southern City, and make it worthy the name of a rival to New York, than anything and everything that has hitherto been attempted. It will pour into the lap of Baltimore much of the trade that is now sent to Charleston and Savannah, and draw some from Mobile and New Orleans. The wonder is that Baltimore has been so long insensible to the importance of the work.

SAILS AND STEAM.—The Sovereign of the Seas, a sailing ship, made the voyage from New York to Liverpool in June, in thirteen days and nineteen hours, beating the steamer Canada that started with her.

"This is the quickest trip ever made by a sailing vessel. The shortest previous one was made by the packet ship Independence, Captain Nye, (now of the Collins steamship Pacific,) about ten years ago, in fourteen days and six hours. This, the Sovereign of the Seas has beaten by eleven hours.

Foreign News.

English papers to the 10th ult., brought by the Asia, furnish the following details of the European news:

ENGLAND.

The dinner at the annual meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society came off at Doncaster on the 13th, when over one thousand farmers and others sat down together. Lord Ashburton occupied the chair, supported by three or four Lords, a dozen members of Parliament and other local notables. Hon. Jo. Ingersoll, ex-President Aristo, and Judge Haliburton were present. Mr. Ingersoll's health was drank. In reply he alluded to the relative position of England and America in a commercial point of view. Agriculture, he said, was in many of its products an especial bond of Union between Britain and America. A portion of the agricultural productions of the United States was to a daily bread of the manufacturers of Britain, and business, certainly in their manufacturing cities, was to a great extent influenced by the operations of the United States.

The Earl of Mornington, sixty-six years of age, had sent a challenge to the Earl of Shaftesbury, failing an explanation to some remarks made by the latter in the House of Lords. Earl Shaftesbury, declining the explanation, refers his antagonist to a police magistrate or to his solicitors. Lord Mornington thereupon characterizes my Lord of Shaftesbury's conduct as "absurdly impertinent," and publishes the correspondence in the Times.

A. D. Hobbs writes to the Times declining his position on lock-picking. Mr. Totterell, whose premium lock he opened, has called him into print.

The preliminary committee had concluded the examination of witnesses on the subject of a decimal currency, and it was believed the result will be a unanimous report in favor of a decimal system—making the pound sterling the integer, and dividing it into one thousand mills or farthings.

In the House of Commons, Sir H. Ingles inquired as to what the Admiralty were doing to further Lieut. Maury's (of the American Navy) improved system of navigation, by which Americans were now making voyages to California in 110 days, which before required 180, etc. Admiral Berkley replied that her Majesty's Government were prepared to take their part in any well-digested plan for the objects in view, but it would be costly.

IRELAND.

The number of visitors to the Dublin Exhibition number 10,000 a day.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable prognostications, the potato crop is flourishing throughout all Ireland; there is not a vestige of the disease anywhere.

A movement is on foot to shorten the distance between Dublin and London to eleven hours, by placing an improved class of steamships on the sea passage.

The great Orange Anniversary of July 12, had generally passed off peaceably.

FRANCE.

The Emperor had kept very close since the late attempt on him at the Opera Comique. Some additional arrests had taken place in connection with that affair.

The following noticeable paragraph appeared in the Estafette:

"We blame the Government for not having made public what we are assured was decided upon in the Council of Ministers, namely: that in the event of any misfortune happening to the Emperor, the pregnancy of the Empress shall be immediately declared, and Prince Jerome declared Regent."

The Eastern question keeps the people in anxiety. The Constitutionnel confirms the statement already made, that a joint note by France and England is on the way to St. Petersburg; and adds that the note has likely been approved by Prussia and (this is questionable) by Austria. Meanwhile, business on the Exchange is almost suspended, awaiting the results of these final attempts at reconciliation.

Rumor, in which at present we are indebted for all kinds of surmises, says that the French Government was quite anxious to hurry matters, and had sent a note through the Embassador to inquire if England yet saw the necessity of making an energetic demonstration, by ordering its fleet to enter the Dardanelles. General Waroutoff was the bearer to Paris of Nesselrode's circular, and brought also a letter from Nicholas to Napoleon, in which, on dit, there are sarcastic allusions to the worthlessness of England's alliance.

The joint proposal of France and England is said to be written out in three different forms, of which the Czar may take his choice, and which ever one he selects, England and France guarantee to have the Sultan sign it. All three notes are drawn out as nearly as possible in middle terms between the ultimatum of Russia and the concessions the Porte would be willing to make. The propositions were forwarded through Austria, in her capacity of mediator, and the result is anxiously awaited.

The notes were penned before the appearance of Count Nesselrode's second circular.

Ney's statue of bronze is to erected on the spot where he was shot, in the Garden of the Luxembourg. It will probably be inaugurated on the 15th of August.

Queen Christiana, of Spain, had arrived in Paris.

AUSTRIA.

The position that Austria will occupy in any recourse to hostilities, is watched with anxious eyes. From Vienna we have nothing directly bearing on the question. Letters from various parts of the Empire, indicate that troops are concentrating along the Adriatic.

The Bishops of Neusohl and Csanad, who were implicated in the Hungarian Revolution, had been pardoned.

RUSSIA.

Two characteristic incidents are noticed: The Russians have assumed direction of the Moldavian and Wallachian post-offices; and have ordered a solemn religious service to be celebrated in the camp at Warsaw, to induce God to bless the arms of the "Orthodox Faith" against the Infidel.

TURKEY.

A dispatch from Constantinople, June 28, mentions that the Porte had effected a loan of 45,000,000 piastres (about $2,000,000) from the Oriental Bank, and that another 50,000,000 is in progress of negotiation with foreign capitalists. The Sultan has sent to the Mint all the plate he inherited from his mother.

The naval and military commanders continue to take all precautionary measures to guard against surprise.

Riots, which were attributed to the intrigues of Russian emissaries, had taken place against the Christians of Adrianople and elsewhere, and the Turkish authorities had taken energetic steps for the protection of life and property.

There are three American ships (names not stated) at Constantinople. It was reported that the Cumberland had brought a large amount of money to Constantinople.

ITALY.

Several arrests of Mazzini's friends had taken place at Florence. There is again talk of the Grand Duke abdicating in favor of his son, and report adds that the new sovereign's first act will be to publish an amnesty, to include Guerrazzi and his followers.

IONIAN ISLANDS.

From Corfu, to the 10th ult., news had been received of a riot, in which two Englishmen were killed. The assassins had been arrested, and were to be hanged on the 11th. No further details.

SPAIN.

A settlement had been come to with France, respecting the boundary line of Navarre.

HEAVY BANK ROBBERY.—The Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, in Jersey city, was entered on Monday night, and robbed of $3600. The thieves stole the keys at the Cashier's house, with which they entered the bank and plundered the vault of the above amount in bills and specie. Sheriff Marselles left a bundle at the bank on Monday, containing $1200, principally in notes of the North River Bank, which the thieves also carried off.

MINING IN SOUTH AMERICA.—A navigation and mining company, it is said, is about to be organized in New York for the purpose of navigating the Rio de la Plata and its confluents, and working the mines of Bolivia, Peru, and portions of the Argentine Republic.

Mr. I. S. Richardson is now exhibiting his ingenious invention of the "Atmospheric Telegraph," in Worcester, Massachusetts, where it attracts much attention. It is proposed to lay down a tube for the transmission of parcels and letters between Boston and Worcester, preliminary to the through line to New York.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Death of Col Bliss.

MOBILE, August 5.

Colonel W. W. S. Bliss, of the Army, died of yellow fever, this morning, at first Passengarde.

Government Appointment.

WASHINGTON, July 31.

Daniel E. Sickles, of New York, has been appointed Secretary of Legation to England.

Later from Rio de Janeiro.

BALTIMORE, August 3.

The bark Herod has arrived here, bringing dates from Rio Janeiro to June 22. Her advices state that coffee was coming in slowly at Rio, and the Baltimore had slightly advanced. Flour was dull.

LATER FROM BUENOS AYRES.—Thirty-Three Days Later.—Salem, July 25.—Advices by the Ethel, dates to the 23d June, have been received here, also some dates from Buenos Ayres. The city was still besieged, and guerilla contests were of daily occurrence. Many have been wounded or killed, particularly among the outsiders.

The National Congress at Santa Fe had adopted a constitution for the confederated provinces, in most respects like that of the United States. It has been accepted by Urquiza, but it was not probable that the authorities of Buenos Ayres would accept it, while Urquiza, with an army and fleet, surrounded the city.

The time allowed vessels in the port of Buenos Ayres to load had been extended 12 days.

In a naval brush on the 20th of May, Dr Gonzales, an estimable young citizen of Buenos Ayres, was killed.

All articles from the United States were in brisk demand. Flour had advanced to $10 a $12 50. Hides were eagerly purchased at advanced prices. Wool coming in was purchased on English account at high prices. Lumber was scarce and in demand.

YELLOW FEVER IN PHILADELPHIA.—Philadelphia, July 28.—The disease, which has been existing in our city for some days is now ascertained to be the yellow fever. It is confined chiefly to the vicinity of South street wharf, and mainly among the emigrants. There were six fatal cases in this region last night. They died after a very brief illness, and from motives of prudence were buried this morning before daylight. The people in the neighborhood of the infected district are being much alarmed. Quite a number have closed their stores and suspended business. It seems, however, that the disease does not spread rapidly. There are hopes that it will soon be checked.

The Board of Health has ordered the bark Mandarin, lately arrived from New Orleans with the disease on board, to be removed to quarantine, thirteen miles below the city. Also, that her planks be torn up and the bilge water pumped out. Several houses in the vicinity of the fever have been fumigated. The process of purifying them is now going on. Some of our physicians assert that this is malignant yellow fever.

HEALTH OF PHILADELPHIA.—Philadelphia, July 29.—The Board of Health held a meeting at noon to day, and passed a resolution, asserting that the disease which had recently occurred was only malignant bilious fever, arising from bilge water in the bark Mandarin—that only 11 cases in all had occurred, and none since Sunday; that no epidemic exists, and that the city enjoys unusual health. The telegraphic reports sent off within the last two days, representing a contrary state of facts, were grossly exaggerated, and did not emanate from the regular correspondent of the Northern and Southern press.

SCIENTIFIC CONVENTION.—Cleveland, July 28. Among the many distinguished persons present at this convention are Spencer S. Hairil, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute; Professor Thomas, of Cincinnati; Brown, of Natchez; Rainey, of New York; Riddell, of Louisiana; and Kennedy, of Pennsylvania; also, Horace Greeley, Ex-President Fillmore and Judge Hall, Dr. Leidy, of Philadelphia, and Prof.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

GIRLHOOD.

A sweetness in the morning air,
A witching laughter in the woods,
A group of maidens everywhere,
With glowing cheeks and flowing hair.
And not a screen or a care
Within their dainty hoods.

An agile fleetness in their limbs,
A tint of morning on their brows,
Their postures full of girlish whims;
No dappled fawn so nimbly skims
Along the silver lakelet brims,
Beneath the dripping boughs!

They are a ruthless, tomping rout,
Marauders of each nook and glen;
They disappear with song and shout,
They beat the forests all about,
And ferret timid flowers out,
Then come in glee again.

Such knot of flowers, and knots of girls,
With beauty in their bony eyes!
One plaits a cincter with her curls,
Another in her fingers twirls
A nosegay rich with liquid pearls,
A tell-tale in disguise.

On! girlhood is a guerdon fair
That still is left a recreant race;
There's witchery in its wayward air,
Sprinkling the sunshine everywhere;
Alas! that later years impair
Its simple, guileless grace!

WASHING SHEEP.

The following story, which has been told some time ago, though it has never appeared to any extent in print, is decidedly rich:

Once upon a time, when the subject of temperance was being freely discussed, the citizens of a little town in the western part of Massachusetts called a meeting to talk over the matter. There had never been a temperance society in the place, but after some little discussion it was voted to form one. They drew up a pledge of total abstinence, and agreed that if any member of the society broke it he should be turned out.

Before the pledge was accepted Deacon D. rose and said he had one objection to it; he thought Thanksgiving Day ought to be free for the members to take something, as he could relish his dinner much better at this festival if he took his glass of wine.

Mr. L. thought the pledge was not perfect. He didn't care anything about Thanksgiving, but his family always made a great account of Christmas, and he couldn't think of sitting down to dinner then without something to drink. He was willing to give it up on all other days, and, in fact, that was the only time he cared anything about it.

Mr. B. next rose, and said he agreed with the other speakers, except in the time. He didn't think much of Thanksgiving or Christmas, though he liked a little at any time. There was one day, however, when he must have it, and that was on the 4th of July. He always calculated upon having a "regular drunk" on that occasion, and he wouldn't sign the pledge if it prevented him from celebrating Independence.

Squire S., an old farmer, followed Mr. B. He was not in the habit of taking anything often, but must have some when he washed his sheep. He would sign the pledge if it would give him the privilege of imbibing when he washed sheep. Why, he considered it dangerous for him to keep his hands in cold water without something to keep him warm inside.

After some consideration it was concluded that each member of the society should take his own occasion to drink—Deacon D. on Thanksgiving, L. on Christmas, etc. The pledge was signed by a large number, and the society adjourned in a flourishing condition, after it should be the duty of the members to watch each other, to see that they did not break the pledge.

The next morning Deacon D. walked to his neighbor's yard, who, by the way, was Mr. S., the sheep man, wondering, as it was a bitter cold morning, whether S. was yet up. He met his neighbor coming out of the house, and, to his surprise, gloriously drunk—or, to use a very modern phrase, "burning a very beautiful kiln."

"Why, S.," exclaimed the astonished Deacon, what does this mean, sir? You have broken your pledge, and disgraced our society and the temperance cause."

"Not—hic—as yen know; ne—hic—Deacon, I haint—hic—broke the—hic—pledge, Deacon."

"Certainly yon have, sir, and I shall report you to the society. You agreed not to drink except when you wash sheep. You cannot make me think you are going to wash such a cold day as this."

"Follow me, Deacon."

S. started for the barn and the Deacon followed. On entering the door the Deacon saw a large wash-tub standing on the floor, with an old ram tied to it, the poor animal shaking dreadfully with cold, and bleating pitifully.

"Hie—there, D-deacon," said S., pointing to the sheep with an air of triumph, "that old—hic—ram has been washed six times this—hic—morning, and I—hic—ain't done with him—hic—yet!"

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The following statement shows the number of visitors at the exhibition on a particular day, and the amount contributed to the Washington Monument:

NUMBER OF VISITORS TO THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 22, 1853.

Number of single admissions	2898
On season tickets	1100
Amount of cash receipts	$1429

WASHINGTON NATIONAL MONUMENT.

CRYSTAL PALACE, New York, July 22, 1853.

Amount of cash on hand	$333 91
Contributions received this day	47 45
Total	$381 36

Among the objects of curiosity exhibited, the Herald says:

"There is a curious musical instrument, called the mechanical piano. This has one great advantage over ordinary pianos—it can be played by persons who have no practical knowledge of music. The performer, by turning a handle exactly similar to that of a hand organ, can play the most difficult pieces. The mechanical arrangement is in some respects different from the common hand piano, but it has also a finger board, and can be played in the same manner. This instrument cost five hundred dollars. The music is set in a very different style from that sold in the music stores, and is, besides, more expensive, so that, after all, we are inclined to think that, whatever advantage it possesses over the other pianos is more than counterbalanced by the difference in the price."

The same paper, in speaking of specimens of Italian statuary, says:

"The Veiled Faces are a perfect triumph in this branch of the fine arts, and show to what perfection the sculpture of marble can be brought. The veil extends over the whole face, yet leaves every feature as distinctly visible as if the veil were made of gauze. These pieces are by Raffaele Monti, an artist of considerable distinction, who obtained a prize at the World's Fair in London for specimens of art in this particular line.

"Pasquale Romanelli, a distinguished Florentine artist, has contributed a piece representing the son of the Swiss patriot Tell immediately after the apple was shot from his head. We do not speak too highly of it when we say that it is a work of great merit, and is not surpassed by any in the whole collection. The boy is in the act of rising from his knees, the bandage has fallen from his eyes upon his neck, and he is looking with a mingled expression of pleasure and astonishment at the apple which is pinned to the tree by the arrow from his father's bow. The features of the boy are admirably executed, and the whole body is faultless. Those who look at this work once, and have a love for the beautiful, must look again and again before they leave it.

"Near this statue is one of Columbus, a copy from the original by Costa, a celebrated sculptor of Florence. The original was made for Abbas Pacha, the ruler of Egypt, in whose possession it is at present. It is regarded as a work of great merit, and it certainly betrays great boldness and vigor of execution. The great discoverer is represented pointing to that portion of the globe on which is mapped the continent of America."

Here is Fanny Fern's idea of female friendship: "Two women joining the mutual admiration society; emptying their budget of love affairs; comparing bait to attract victims; sighing over the same rose leaf; patronizing the same milliner; and exchanging female kisses. Betty, hand me my fan!"

About the coolest item we have ever met with is that idea of Sam Slick's, where he says "he felt a desire to take off his flesh and sit in his bones a while, to cool himself." If any body can report a "cooler comfort," we should be happy to hear.

Louisiana Interior.

The South-Western (published at Shreveport) of the 27th ult. contains the following items:

Cotton in this parish is suffering much from the effects of heavy rains. Accounts from Hempstead county, (Ark.) of the 20th inst., represent the weather as dry and warm; highly favorable to the growing crops, which have improved greatly of late. The cotton generally in that section is equal if not superior to the crop of this time last year.

The Jefferson Herald, of Saturday, says that a severe wind passed over that place on Thursday evening, which it fears did some damage to the crops.

Shreveport was visited on the same evening by the heaviest squall of wind we have had for the last twelve months. It was accompanied by a rain which gave promise of a second deluge being at hand.

The town of Greenwood, in this parish, is the first place in the Red River country to refuse granting of license to sell liquor. At an election held on the 16th inst. the vote was: For no license 34; for license 33. We learn that the question will be again tested in Shreveport at the November election.

The Shreveport Democrat of the 28th ult. says:

Since our last issue we have had about two days of sunshine. Two heavy rains have fallen, and many lighter showers, with threatening clouds throughout the greater portion of the week. Our planters, we fear, will suffer, unless there is a change, which there is no immediate prospect of at present.

The river is still falling at this place, and, as far as we can learn, throughout its entire length. We cannot reasonably hope for navigation through to New Orleans beyond another fortnight, if so long.

We have made strict inquiries and can hear of but very little sickness of a serious character. A considerable number of light cases have occurred, but most of them have been easily controlled by our physicians. Intermittent and remittent fevers, and affections of the bowels, are the prevalent forms. Some few cases of bloody flux have occurred, which have proved somewhat difficult of management, but there has been no fatal case of the kind as far as we can learn.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Mexico last evening, from Indianola and Galveston, we have Indianola dates of the 26th and Galveston of the 29th ult.

We select the following from the Galveston News of the 29th ult.:

FIRE.—We learn that a destructive fire occurred on Tuesday last at Indianola, which consumed four houses and their contents. The loss is estimated by the Bulletin as follows:

Baldridge, Sparks & Co., four large houses, lumber and goods	$27,000
Lewis & Hughes, and Dr. F. E. Hughes, one house, drugs and furniture	6,000
Thomas Rooke	2,000
Supposed loss of goods on storage	10,000
Total	$45,000

Baldridge, Sparks & Co. are insured to the amount of $18,000. The other sufferers have no insurance.

It is said to be the work of an incendiary.

The Civilian and Gazette says:

The number of German emigrants who arrived at Galveston during the quarter ending June 30, was 429.

A collision took place between the steamers Neptune and Star State, in the Bay, on Wednesday night. The Star State was somewhat injured. We forbear any statement of particulars, as the matter is undergoing investigation in the U. S. Court.

Professor Forshey returned to Galveston by the Mexico, and is immediately to resume the survey and location of the railroad from this city to Houston, and thence to Henderson. Mr. Lacy and his coadjutors in this work profess to be sanguine of success, and state that they have made all their arrangements for its immediate prosecution.

The Advertiser says there is probably not a cotton planter in Bastrop county who will be able to gather his entire crop, provided nothing interferes to prevent it from fully maturing.

The Leon Pioneer says the corn crop in that vicinity will be a good one. Cotton looks unusually well.

The Jefferson (Texas) Herald learns that a company is now organizing there in anticipation of speedy difficulties between Mexico and the United States.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.—The citizens of Galveston are agitating the question of establishing quarantine regulations for that port for the purpose of preventing the importation of yellow fever from New Orleans.

BRAZOS CANAL.—The Telegraph has been informed by Mr. McGregor that the work on the Galveston and Brazos Canal is progressing rapidly. The new dredge-boat is far superior to those that were first used by Capt. Bradbury.

At the last accounts the canal had been opened within a few hundred feet of Oyster Creek, and Capt. Bradbury expects to complete it to the Brazos by the middle of October. The distance to be excavated is about two miles and a half, and the ground is so soft and pliable that he expects to excavate, on an average, ten or twelve rods a day.

SOMETHING NEW.—The Lavaca Commercial has noticed several loads of hay brought into that market within the past few days. This hay has been cut from the prairie near that place, and is intended to be shipped to Pensacola, as an experiment. If this experiment should prove successful, it is expected ere long to see a large quantity of hay shipped from there to Pensacola, Mobile, and other places.

WEATHER AND CROPS.—The Marshall Republican of the 15th inst. says during the previous two weeks they had frequent showers of rain, which have been general throughout the county, and the crops now present a cheerful appearance.

The Gonzales Inquirer regrets to learn that the worms have made their appearance in some of the cotton fields in that county. A gentleman informs the editor that on the San Marcus he noticed, in one large field, these insects were at work on the cotton, but had not done much damage. Should the present fair weather continue a few days longer, they will, it is thought, soon disappear.

INDIANOLA.—The Indianola Bulletin says:

On Tuesday last, the 21st ult., there were at the wharf and landing and leaving, in all, of large and small craft, twenty, which presented, for a new place like Indianola, quite an imposing spectacle.

MOBILE ITEMS.—Some cases of Yellow Fever have appeared in the Mobile City Hospital, but the Hospital physician denies that they originated there. He states that, from the best information, he is led to believe that they were all imported from New Orleans.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular to the Custom-house officers, directing them in future to take the invoice cost of the foreign importations as the valuation by which to estimate the duties to be collected thereon in all cases, except where the importer or his agent declares on oath, that the merchandise had depreciated prior to the shipment, in which case the depreciated price sworn to shall be taken as the declaration of cost, and shall be conclusive against the importer.

FIRE AT BOOKSVILLE.—Capt. Summers, of the steamer Ventura, reported to the officers of the steamer Texas Ranger that on Sunday night, the 19th ult., a fire broke out in the store of Berthold & Jones, Caddo parish, destroying stock, books and papers; also the store of Stewart & Co., Dr. Booth's drug store, and a large warehouse and several other buildings. Stewart & Co lost everything excepting books and papers. No insurance. Berthold & Jones's stock was insured for $10,000....ltiver falling.

A Western writer, in speaking of a new play just written by a gentleman of Cincinnati, says: "The unities are admirably observed—the dullness which commences in the first act never flags for a moment till the curtain drops."

Foreign News by the Arctic.

Our New York exchanges bring us full details by the Arctic.

The news is full of interest. The attitude of Russia towards Turkey is warlike, and Count Nesselrode has issued a new circular, more imperious and threatening than the last. Notwithstanding the belligerent aspect of affairs, the Bourses manifested no alarm, and the popular sentiment of Europe seemed to point to a peaceful issue.

A rumor, not authentic, has gained circulation, that Austria has seized the opportunity of again demanding from Turkey the concessions refused to the late mission of Count de Leininger. This, if true, shows that Austria would not be neutral in the anticipated struggle.

ENGLAND.

The tone of the London Times towards Russia, seems decidedly pacific, although it cautiously but firmly backs the cause of Turkey. Her Majesty's Government has doubtless calculated the cost of a war, and will decide in favor of non-intervention. The Daily News thinks that the disposition of the United States to sympathize with the nations who are opposed to aristocratic and dynastic oppression, may have an effect on the Turko-Russian difficulty that has not yet been sufficiently considered.

FRANCE.

An attempt had been made to assassinate Louis Napoleon, but the plot had miscarried. Many persons supposed to have been implicated in the conspiracy had been arrested with arms concealed upon them. The plan was to strike one of the horses in the Emperor's carriage, and in the confusion which would have followed, a more decisive blow was to have been struck. For the failure to unravel this plot, M. de Maupas was removed from the Ministry of Police, and his office abolished.

RUSSIA.

Prince Gortschakoff, the commander in chief of the Russian invading armies, had addressed a proclamation to the inhabitants of Moldavia and Wallachia, of which the following is a synopsis:

"The Emperor has ordered me to occupy your country with the armies. We come among you neither for purposes of conquest nor to modify your institutions. The occupation of the provinces is for no other purpose than a protection against grave and unforeseen circumstances, since the Ottoman Government replies to our proposals with refusals, and opposes the most offensive suspicions to our disinterested advice. The Emperor will avoid an aggressive war with Turkey so long as his dignity and interests will permit him so to do. When he obtains the reparation which is due him, and the guarantees for the future, which he has a right to expect, he will withdraw his troops from the Turkish territory. The presence of the Russian troops is not intended to impose on you any fresh charges or contributions. Forage and rations levied on you shall in due time (?) be paid from his Majesty's treasury. Look tranquilly to the future! Engage with security in your agricultural labors and commercial pursuits. (That supplies may be furnished to the Russian hordes!) Be obedient to the laws and acquire the best claim to the powerful protection of his Majesty, the Emperor!

(Signed) GORTSCHAKOFF."

The following is a synopsis of the new manifesto published by Count Nesselrode:

The note is entitled "Russian Notification to the European Powers," and says, "that Russia claimed nothing but a demand concerning the Holy Places, which was but a simple confirmation of what she had long possessed—that if this demand was not complied with within eight days, measures more decisive than the rupture of relations would be taken. France and England had been requested not to complicate the difficulties that existed by their attitude. This request has been unheeded. They had sent their fleets into the waters of Constantinople, and by that advanced attitude had placed Russia under the necessity of a threatening demonstration. Consequent on this the Russian troops had entered the principalities, not to make war, but to substitute for a moral a materiel guarantee. Further than this Russia had no intention to hold possession of the provinces, and when the pressure applied by the two powers had ceased, she would withdraw her armies. (Signed,) NESSELRODE.

TURKEY.

It was not learned with certainty what decision the Porte had taken with regard to the Russian passage of the Pruth. The Embassadors of France, England, and Austria, at Constantinople, on hearing the news that the Russians had crossed the Pruth, requested an audience of the Sulten, and asked him not to demand that the allied fleets should enter the Dardanelles. He complied with the recommendation, and confined himself against the invasion of the territory.

SMYRNA.

GALLANT CONDUCT OF AN AMERICAN NAVAL OFFICER.—The correspondent of a French paper gives the following account of the disturbance in Smyrna:

It appears that M. Costa, a Hungarian, ex-aid-de-camp to Kossuth, and who had just returned from the United States, was secreted in the house of a Sardinian, in Symrna. His whereabouts came to the ears of M. Vekbecker, Austrian Consul General, who, under pretence of searching for a thief, dragged him out gagged, handcuffed, and conveyed him on board the Austrian brig-of-war Hussar. All the efforts of the other Europeans, aided by Ali Pacha and the native officers, to have the prisoner handed over to the local tribunals, were in vain. On the following day the U. S. frigate St. Louis entered the port, and the Captain of the frigate, accompanied by the U. S. Consul, immediately went on board the Austrian ship and demanded to talk with the prisoner, whom they believed to have a claim to the protection of the United States. The Austrian Lieutenant in command denied that he had any prisoners on board. The Captain of the St. Louis and the Consul then went to the Austrian Consulate, where, after a scene of the most violent kind, M. Vekbecker admitted that the prisoner was on board, and gave a forced consent to see him. Returning on board the Austrian vessel, the American Captain thus addressed Commander Schwartz—"When I came on board a short time since, your Lieutenant lied to my face! The meanest of my cabin boys would not have been guilty of such cowardice! Where is the prisoner? I wish to see him." As Commander Schwartz hesitated, the American added—"Bear in mind, that if the prisoner claims my protection, and has the slightest right to it, I will remove him myself, and will not allow him to remain another minute on board." Unfortunately, the generous efforts of the Captain of the St. Louis were useless, for the prisoner prevaricated and betrayed himself so much in his replies, that he did not give his defenders the slightest chance to save him.

THE LATEST—Paris, Monday Evening, July 11, 1853.—It is said that a join note from England and France has been addressed to the Russian Government, making propositions for the pacific settlement of the impending question. Constantinople news of the 27th June, is of a pacific tendency; and an arrangement, advised by the Embassadors of England, France and Austria, was believed to be approaching its conclusion.

The House of Assembly of Bermuda has adopted a resolution directing the Receiver General to exempt from the payment of light duties all vessels arriving within the ports of the Bermuda Islands that shall be engaged in the whale fishery. The object of this measure is to encourage such vessels to visit Bermuda for the purpose of landing their cargoes of oil for shipment to the United States. It has been prompted by the circumstance of the two American whalers having arrived there lately with a considerable quantity of sperm and common whale oil on board, which they have landed, and the same has been shipped to New York in Bermuda vessels.

LATER FROM HAVANA AND KEY WEST.—The steamship Isabel, Captain Rollins, arrived at Charleston on the evening of the 24th ult., having left Havana on the morning of the 23d, and Key West on the evening of the same day.

She brings no news of the least interest from Havana.

We select the following from the Key West correspondence of the Charleston Courier:

The wreck of the brig Scotsman, of London, was sold on the 15th inst., by order of the U. S. District Court, for $1,610 80.

The following note was found attached to the neck of a sea-fowl known as the "Booby," shot at Sand Key:

"1, Booby, take my departure from the ship Moses Taylor, N. Y. French, master, 14 days from New Orleans, bound to Liverpool. Latitude 24 deg. 30 min. Long., 80 deg. 15 min. West. I have not had one hour that I could leave the yards in one point, since leaving the S. W. Pass of Mississippi. If this falls into the hands of any one bound to the United States, will please report as all well.

(Signed,) N. Y. FRENCH."

The bark Robert Morris, from Cienfuegos, bound to Philadelphia, ran ashore on Pelican Shoal on the morning of the 22d. All hands sick. The wreckers were endeavoring to get her off.

The following table exhibits the number of vessels wrecked on the Florida Reef, and those that have arrived at Key West in distress, from 1st January to 30th June, 1853:

Number wrecked	19
Number in distress	18—37
Amount of salvage paid	$128,887 00
Amount of expenses for repairs	119,652 00
Value of vessels and their cargoes	1,330,000 00
Number of ships	5
Number of barks	10
Number of brigs	10
Number of schooners	12—37
American ships	4
American barks	10
American brigs	7
American schooners	12—33
English ships	1
English barks	1
English brigs	2—4
	37

The ship Marathon arrived since the 30th June and is not included in the above. Her cargo is worth from $60,000 to $70,000—salvage not yet known.

The light-house at Sand Key was lighted up for the first time on the 20th July. It was erected under the superintendence of Lieut. Geo. G. Meade, of the Topographical Engineers, though destined by Mr. Lewis, a civil engineer of Boston, and is said to be one of the best lights on the coast, and one of the most perfect structures of the kind in the world.

FROM THE WEST INDIES.—The New York Herald has further files of West India journals. The dates come down to the 14th inst.

The most important item of news is with regard to the action of the House of Assembly of Bermuda, in the exemption of American whaling vessels from light dues.

We copy the following from the Bermudian of July 13:

The House of Assembly, by a large majority, adopted a resolution on Monday, July 11, directing the Receivor General to exempt from the payment of light dues all vessels arriving within the ports of these islands that shall be engaged in the whale fishery. The object of this measure is to encourage such vessels to visit Bermuda for the purpose of landing their cargoes of oil for shipment to the United States.

The Bermudian, of July 12, says:

On Friday, July 8, these islands were visited with a severe storm of thunder and lightning. The warm weather during the last fortnight has been kept healthy by the frequent showers of rain and thunder and lightning. Three weeks past we had cause to fear a sickly summer, but thanks to a kind Providence in ruling events, the hand of the destroying angel has been stayed. A month ago a number of cases of cholera occurred among the convicts at Ireland Island, and a few cases in different parts of the islands; but that fearful epidemic we hope has now left us.

Dominica.—The yellow fever was raging with great violence.

Demerara.—The new immigration bill had been disallowed by the Imperial Government. This circumstance, it was calculated, would check for a time the prosperity of the colony.

FROM NEW MEXICO.—The editors of the St. Louis Intelligencer hear from a gentleman who came in with the July mail from San'n Fe, that affairs were moving quietly in New Mexico.

The sheep and most of the other animals taken by the Navajos from Mexicans had been restored. The Navajos seemed anxious to make reparation and be at peace. The murderer of the Mexican, killed in May, near La Canada, according to the story of the Navajos, fled to the Utahs. No further difficulty was anticipated, although Gov. Lane was insisting on the delivery of the murderer to the authorities of the Territory.

The Navajos were busily engaged in planting. So also were a large portion of the Jicarelli Apaches.

The approaching election in September, of a delegate to Congress, was exciting some interest. Judge Beard was anxious to get up a democratic party—which might help him into Congress. Gov. Lane had not positively consented to be a candidate. The Mexicans were canvassing the question of setting up one of their own number. Maj. Weightman was still prospecting, but it was thought without strength enough to venture on announcing himself. To the many here who are acquainted with New Mexico, it may be interesting to state that Padrn Gallegos, Thomas Baca and Miguel A. Otero, are spoken of among the Mexicans. Mr. Otero warmly advocates the selection of Gov. Lane.

The Mexicans this year are paying more than usual attention to farming, with a promise of fair crops.

The Indians of the Plains were perfectly peaceable. Col. Sumner, (late military commandant of New Mexico,) Maj. Morris and Lieut. Whistler, were overtaken at Cotton Wood Fork of the Arkansas, coming in.

CHARLESTON, July 27.—The Danish brig Anna Margarita arrived at this port yesterday, seven days from Havana, bound for Copenhagen, with a cargo of sugar. She put in here to land forty passengers and a quantity of specie, taken from the ship Galena, on the 23d inst., near Abaco. The Galena had been struck by lightning, and was on fire, but bearing up for this port.

The ship Galena, of New York, bound from New Orleans for Havre, arrived here yesterday on fire. The Galena cleared from New Orleans on the 14th inst., with a cargo of 2032 bales of cotton and 7000 staves. On Saturday last, when near Abaco, she was struck by lightning near the mizzen-mast, and was soon after found to be on fire, when she bore up for this port, first transferring her passengers to the Danish brig Anna Margarita.

The firemen are at work on board the Galena, but it is feared they will have great difficulty in extinguishing the fire, which has had so much time to make headway.

EFFECTS OF RAILROADS.—A late number of the Chattanooga Gazette says: "Never before have we seen so much activity in the erection of buildings in our city as at this time. Several substantial depots and dwellings are springing up, and a few months will change the appearance of Chattanooga considerably. We are happy to see our mechanics and laborers so generally engaged in profitable employments. We already have a population of between 4000 and 5000 inhabitants, but it is scattered over a large area—as a gentleman lately remarked, "it seems to be sown broadcast over the land." Nothing can keep Chattanooga down—it must grow—its course is onward. It is now the first city of importance in East Tennessee. Knoxville does not like to admit this, but our railroads, population, trade, travel, location, etc., all speak plainly the facts as well as the words."

CHICAGO TO CAIRO.—It is confidently stated that the Central Illinois Railroad from Chicago to Cairo will be finished and opened for travel by the 20th of July, 1854, and we think this will prove true, for we know of no road in the country which has been prosecuted with more vigor than the Great Central. Ten thousand hands are now at work on its main trunk and branches. There is no lack of funds; the recent negotiation of the company of three millions gives them all the money they want for a long time. [St. Louis Intelligencer.

News Items by Mail.

The National Intelligencer understands that the six new revenue cutters just built at Bristol and Somerset, Massachusetts, by S. M. Hood, contractor—the builder of the celebrated swift clipper ship Pathfinder—prove to be perfect models in their way. They are called the Wm. L. Marcy, the Jefferson Davis, the James C. Dobbin, the Robert McLelland, the James C. Campbell, and the Caleb Cushing. They are expected to be at once taken to New York, where they will be fitted for sea as soon as possible, to proceed thence without delay to their several stations in the revenue service.

Lieut. M. F. Maury, Superintendent of the National Observatory, recently received from merchants, ship owners and others, of New York, a magnificent token of their appreciation of his services to commerce and navigation in getting up his wind and current charts. Just before leaving the city on his way to the Scientific Convention in Europe, a package was placed in his hands containing $5000 in gold, and a handsome service of plate. Such good fortune could have befallen no more worthy man, nor more useful servant of his country and the world.

The New York correspondent of the Sunday Dispatch says: "The Crystal Palace seems to be considered a total failure. Its receipts do not average $1500 per day. Double that amount would scarcely liquidate its unavoidable expenses and place to the credit of the sinking fund a sufficient per centage for the reimbursement of the capital stock. Shares have, therefore, fallen twenty-five dollars each on change, and sellers are plenty, while buyers are uncommonly scarce.

Some delay has taken place in the payment, by the U. S. Treasury, of the interest due 1st inst., on a portion of the 5 per cent. stock redeemed by Simeon Draper for the Government, owing to the official notice for the redemption of said stock having indicated, in some ambiguous terms, the manner of paying this interest. The Department has now decided to pay this interest, in conformity with all previous regulations, to the legal holders of the stock on the 1st June last.

A letter from Canton says it is the opinion of intelligent Chinese at Shanghai, that the Revolutionists will succeed in holding Nankin, and that part of the Empire, but that they will not be able to overthrow the Emperor at Pekin, so that the trouble may result in a division of the Empire.

The report of interments in the city of Baltimore makes the number of deaths for the week ending the 25th ult. 129, of which 33 were from cholera-infantum, 21 from consumption, 12 from dysentery, and 12 from infantile unknown. Of the whole number, 83 were under five years of age.

The Jacksonville (Fla.) Republican states that the whole stock has been subscribed for the construction of a railroad across the Peninsula of Florida. The route and terminus are not definitely fixed. Tampa Bay will probably be the Western terminus.

There is a demand for laborers on all the various railroads now making near Wheeling—the Cleveland and Pittsburgh, Marietta and Cincinnati, Central Ohio and Hempfield. It is said the latter road offer to pay $1 per day.

By these and previous lettings, the entire line of the road from Wheeling to Milford, near Cincinnati, has been placed under contract, and the whole will be completed in the course of the next twelve months.

The value of the wheat crop of 1851, in the United States, was $143,000,000. The value of the corn crop the same year was $391,300,000.

It is said the small-pox prevails to an alarming extent in Moyamensing, Philadelphia, among the blacks of that district.

The cholera has broken out among the boatmen on the Chesopeake and Ohio Canal, above Harper's Ferry.

The improvements at the President's House are fast progressing, and thus far are greatly admired.

So far, 116 democrats, 50 whigs and 4 abolitionists have been selected to the next Congress.

Mr. Murphy, now in the Sixth Auditor's office, is appointed Consul at Shanghai.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE EXHIBITION.—The following table shows the number of visitors and the cash receipts of the New York Crystal Palace Exhibition for the week ending Saturday, the 23d ult:

Season Tickets.	Transient Visitors.	Receipts at Door.
Monday... 3,506	2,721	$1,390 50
Tuesday... 1,800	2,686	1,295 00
Wednesday. 1,200	3,609	1,479 00
Thursday.. 1,000	2,810	1,389 50
Friday..... 1,100	2,898	1,429 00
Saturday.. 900	2,484	1,224 00
Total.. 9,506	16,608	$8,147 00

This gives the gross number of visitors during the week as 26,114, and the daily average as 4,352. The cash receipts, from transient visitors, are over and above the amount received from the sale of season tickets.

THINGS IN NEW YORK.—The total number of deaths in New York during the week ending the 23d ult. was 521; which was a decrease of 43 on the mortality of the previous week. There were 217 deaths among children under one year, and 357 among children under ten years. Cholera-infantum appears to be exceedingly prevalent at this particular season, there being 78 fatal cases, besides 31 from diarrhœa, during the week. The number of deaths from consumption was 49; from dysentery, 43; from marasmus, 22; and from dropsy in the head, 25.

MARRIAGE EXTRAORDINARY.—At the parish church of Hambleton, by the Rev. John Vernon, James Hobbins, Esq., of Cladesley Corbett, after a courtship of four days, and Harriet, youngest daughter of Wm. Chambers, of New House, Himberton. The bridegroom was in his ninety-seventh year and had no time to lose; his fair bride, who has nearly seen sixteen summers, had pity on him, and took him off hand, "for better or for worse," after he had settled upon her the whole of his property, amounting to £8,000 a year. [Montreal Gazette.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two "	5 00 "
For any three "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par
Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.
Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [North-ly]

EDUCATION.

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to add pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition..... $200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument..... 70 00
French Language..... 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.
For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUROSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, LA.

Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Calmer & Co., Messrs. L. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Finter, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jel1 ly

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.,
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 6

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 8 GRAVIER-STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM'L HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
No. 60 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jy2 1y.

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19, 1853. 6mo.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,
New Orleans

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety, Coach, Hog, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish, India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mule Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.
mh6 '52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enables them to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonious and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.
ANDREW MENEELY'S SONS.
West Troy, Albany county, N. Y., 1851.
SLAUK, DAY & STAUFFER,
Agents in New Orleans.
ap10

A NEW MEDICINE.

EPPING'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

THIS excellent extract is a concentrated preparation of Buchu, with other vegetable diuretics. It is as medical men will see, designed for that class of diseases which affect the urinary organs. For diseases and directions, see the label on each bottle. It is also a very fine alterative medicine. Dyspeptics, laboring under hepatic derangement, find great relief from the use of this remedy. It is on sale at the store of E. WRIGHT & CO., 151 Charles street, and the store of J. MACPHERSON, 29 Camp st.

It comports best with my feelings to offer this article to Physicians, Druggists and Hospitals, upon my medical knowledge and Christian reputation, without the accustomed puffing. DR. L. PIERCE.
my21 Columbus, Georgia

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

The claims of this new discovery are:
1. Its efficacy as an antiseptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.
2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers (see certificates Nos

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference, { J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DOREMUS, W. MURRAH.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 28. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 132.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

SCRIBE, HAZAN, AND RABBI.

The "Scribe" (Sopher) of the New Testament denoted one skilled in the Law, but in later times this appellation was only given to professional writers, or transcribers of the Law, etc. The Pentateuch, Book of Esther, Phylacteries, Messuzah, Writing of Divorce, and Amulets, are now all that lie within their province.

The Law can only be read from a written scroll in the synagogue; hence to have one transcribed is the most meritorious act a Jew can perform. If a man have many daughters, he may make a vow that he will have a Sopher Torah written, as soon as his wife shall present him with a son; or if he is prosperous in business, he may give one to the synagogue at his eldest son's confirmation, or some other propitious occasion. I need not say that these, as well as minor vows, are scrupulously kept.

A copy of the Law is pretty expensive, and would here cost about $200. The execution of it takes about a year. The Talmud contains a volume of directions to be observed in the writing of it: the principal ones of which are, that it must be written on parchment made out of calfskins; in black ink, prepared according to a rabbinical receipe; without crotchets or accents; the pen must be washed every time the scribe comes to the word Jehovah or Elohim, (when the latter stands for the True God,) and he must pronounce a blessing while writing the Sacred Name. Any ordinary mistake may be erased, but the name of God must not, under any circumstances, be effaced; and if it should be written by mistake, it may be cut out, and another piece of parchment glued in its place; but this can only be done once on the same sheet. If the mistake is doubled, the sheet is lost, and must be written over. A sheet is about a yard square, generally divided into three or four columns, with about an inch and a half between them. The margin above and below is from two to three inches. Certain verses must begin a fresh column—for instance, Gen. i: 1; xlix: 8; and four others, all marked in the margin of the Hebrew Bibles. Between each of the five books of Moses there must be a blank space left of four lines. Then there are some arbitrary appearances, laid down by the Masorites, the editors of the present edition of the Hebrew Bible—such as writing some letters larger, and some smaller than the rest, and some even in an inverted position, etc.; all doubtless owing to the ignorance or carelessness of some of the anti-masoretic copyists. I have seen some scrolls, each column of which began with the letter vau, which arrangement costs the scribe incalculable labor and trouble.

But suppose it to be finished now, consisting of some thirty-six sheets. The Sabbath is appointed for its consecration. The scribe goes to the town or village of his patron. He must not go alone, as the Sopher Torah must always be guarded by one; there must at least be two men to transport it. Now, these sheets must be sewed together—a labor very much coveted by the ladies. The thread is prepared by the scribe in the following manner: He takes certain sinews from the hind-legs of cows or steers, dries them till they are perfectly hard. When they are beaten soft again, they reveal a fine silky thread inside, which is now prepared in the same manner as flax or hemp would be, then spun and twisted. All this must be done by Jews, and blessings said at every step of its progress, consecrating the article to religious uses. This is also the case with the wool for fringes, leather for the phylacteries, and the parchment mentioned as often.

The ladies have finished their work. Both ends are now fastened on finely-turned rollers, metaphorically called Etz, Chayim, or tree of life—Prov. iii: 18. The male friends and relatives of the donor now make their appearance to do a Mitzvah—some thing meritorious. In Deut. xxvii: 3, we find: "And thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law." Now, although this text is not at all germane to the subject, they infer from it that they must individually write part of the Law at once. That the scribe will not allow his carefully written MS. to be soiled by every clodhead, you may readily imagine; but when he has found out a way of getting round the difficulty. The Jews rarely have any but Scripture names; and as the scribe generally knows all who wish thus to perpetuate their memories, he merely writes their names where they occur, in outline: they then fill up, and thus are precluded from doing any more. If a name is only found in the Prophets or Hagiographa, the scribe fixes the matter composing it out of several connective words.

The privilege of sewing, as well as of writing, is paid for to the scribe; and the latter does not think he has done any thing of merit, unless it costs him some thing. Now, although this is carrying even "justification by works" a little too far, yet we should remember that there is great danger of running from the opposite extreme, and despising "good works" a little too much. At all events, I think that the Jew has never received credit for deeds of this nature, as his very name has become synonymous with parsimony and meanness. Did he love money as much as is imputed to do, and for its own sake, he would hardly be so liberal in every thing relating to a charitable or religious purpose. No; I think even Christians might take some lessons from him in these matters. But to return to the subject.

After all these preliminaries are brought to a happy conclusion, it is rolled up to next Sabbath's "lesson" or section, and fastened by a bandage, and a richly embroidered cover or mantle is drawn over it. I must here describe the bandage, or Mappah, a little closer than a insulate of four strips sewed together lengthwise. It originally formed the swaddling cloth used at the performance of the Abrahamic ceremony. When the child is a year old, he is carried to the synagogue, and brings his Mappah. On it are embroidered in Hebrew letters his name and age, etc.: and the closet containing these bandages is thus a sort of parish register. They are only used to be wound round the Law.

The Sepher Torah is now (Friday) put in state in a room all ornamented with flowers and shrubs, and some times a miniature imitation of the tabernacle made by Moses. On Friday night, after the regular service, the congregation assembles in the said Hechal (temple) where various hymns are sung, while every man and woman present, in their turn, take the Law on the arm, and dance round the room with it. This is done after David—2 Sam. vi.

Next day the scroll is carried to the synagogue in procession, and all the other copies are brought out in their mantles glittering with gold and silver, to meet it. After having arrived at the synagogue, they go round the Al Memmer (or reading desk in the middle) some seven times, with all these scrolls, amidst the singing, and kissing [the scrolls] of the congregation. Then every male is called up to the reading of the Law. The priests all first, then all the Levites; then the remainder one by one, according to their age, till it comes to the youngest of those above thirteen, whose name is then called out: "Let come up (say) Isaac son of Abraham, with all the boys!" and immediately commences a scuffle all over the synagogue; all the little boys, with their father's talith or veil, which is three times longer than they are themselves, coming up to the Al Memmer. After the passage of the Law is read, the Hazan "blesses" them individually, according to their age, and mentioning every name seperately. How their face beams with joy, when each one hears his own name mentioned; and the whole thing is always looked forward to with great delight. Not so by the young man of thirteen, in whose train they are called up. His disgrace, which lasts until he is relieved by one younger than himself, can only be properly appreciated by the devil, or last boy in a printing office.

The doner of the scroll—who nevertheless remains its possessor, and may take it away again, whenever he should move to another place—generally gives a large dinner, to which every member of the congregation is invited—ladies and gentlemen; and this with very liberal alms to the poor, and a ball in the evening, usually closes this interesting ceremony.

The Law is kept in the Aron Hakodesh, or Holy Ark, a closet on the east side of the synagogue, which is covered with splendidly embroidered curtains, bestowed by private liberality. The curtain and ark are both of course copied from those of the tabernacle and temple.

No congregation can be without a Hazan, (reader) or Shochet, (slayer) for which reason these two offices, as well as a third that of teacher, or schoolmaster, are united in all small congregations. The duties of the last two are obvious. The Hazan must not be confounded with the Rabbi; for, though he may hold that office, it is but a rare occurrence in Europe. He recites the prayers aloud in the synagogue, chants certain passages, sings some, only hums or whispers others—all, however, to set tunes. The Jews believe to have received these innumerable tunes and chants, together with their liturgy, from great antiquity; and no one is properly prepared for this office, unless he knows all the chants for all the festivals. He is always chosen for his voice, and no attention whatever paid to his other acquirements, and but very little to his piety or moral character; and I have known Hazans myself who could not translate the daily liturgy, much less the difficult hymns they sing on the festivals. But then, on the other hand, he would equal Belotti in singing the Al Hakol after Don Giovanni, or the Lechal Dodi after Robert diavolo; for in some of the anthems modern compositions may be introduced. On extraordinary occasions the Hazan has two assistants, bass and soprano singers—sometimes a whole choir, which generally are much more amusing than edifying. The Hazan never preaches.

The Rabbi of the "Old School" is fast disappearing, and of course along with him go many of the ceremonies described in these papers. For the cause of this we must look in the regulations of the German and French Governments requiring them to pass through the University, which, I need not say, greatly tends to modify their zeal for orthodox and talmudical Rabbinism. But even many of these reformed (or "new" Rabbis, as they are called among the Jews,) have to submit to the rule of superstition and the Talmud, though they are gradually breaking away the outworks and bulwarks; and let us hope that they are the instruments (though against their will) in a higher hand of introducing a more glorious era—even that of Christ Jesus—the King of the Jews, and Desire of Gentiles.

The Rabbi has usually, except in large cities, a number of congregations under his superintendence, which he visits three or four times a year, catechizes the children, and sees what progress they have made in their Hebrew studies; also preaches in the vernacular once or twice a year at each place. He marries and divorces couples. The latter is now but a very rare occurrence, not because the Talmud does not render it a very easy and irresponsible matter, but because the modern Jew is better than the religious system he professes. This, however, I shall have occasion to show hereafter.

Doubtful questions of ceremonial law are settled by the decision of the Rabbi, from which there is no appeal. There are two honorary degrees conferred on Rabbis by the talmudical schools, somewhat corresponding with the B. D. and D. D. of the English Universities, or A. M. and LL. D. of our own. The lower, or Chaver, is not difficult of attainment; but the higher, or Morean, is supposed to denote its possessor as a prodigy of Hebrew learning. But as degrees of D. D. could formerly be bought at St. Andrews, so was it with the old Rabbies: and a hundred "ducats" produced a considerable impression even on a college of Talmudists. But that's neither here nor there, and it is high time to close.

JOSEPHUS.

Columbus, S. C.

ECCLESIASTICAL PREROGATIVES.

[The following is the substance of the closing remarks of Henry Winter Davis, Esq., of Baltimore, a member of the Maryland Episcopal Convention, in his argument on the conduct of the Standing Committee in condemning Dr. Henry V. Johns, for preaching in the Eutaw street Methodist Episcopal Church, during the autumn of 1851, at a protracted meeting then in progress in that Church.]

I here leave the argument of the law of the case. I have demonstrated—

First. That there is no law forbidding any Episcopal minister from ministering for or with any congregation of Protestant Christians, with all of whom our Church is in full communion.

Second. That there is no law imposing on them, in such case, the use of all or any part of the Book of Common Prayer.

Third. That the invocation of the vow of obedience to the godly admonitions of the Bishop is futile. It adds no legal right to require or to forbid the performance of any action not commanded or forbidden by the laws of the Church; and to ascertain whether the requisition of the Bishop be a godly admonition or not, we must look, not to the vow, but to the canons prescribing the rule of duty. We are confined to the Bible, the Book of Common Prayer, and the Books of the Canons of the General and Diocesan Conventions, which the institution service directs solely to be given to the minister as his whole rule of ecclesiastical conduct.

But another topic has been opened, not relevant to the merits of this controversy, but pursuing rather the purposes of the original proceeding against Dr. Johns on other grounds. It has been urged that Dr. Johns, at the Eutaw street meeting house, was engaged in the propagation of Methodism; that the meetings were held for the benefit of that Church; that its ministry were far from desiring to promote the spread of Episcopal principles, and therefore it is triumphantly insisted that Dr. Johns was faithless to the interests of his own Church in consenting to join in a propaganda against her principles.

I do not so a learned gentleman on the other side, when pressed to inform us if the Methodists be not part of the Church of God—feel at liberty to decline the challenge to a full and explicit reply on a point which, however irrelevant in this controversy, touches so nearly the very existence of Protestantism.

I say, then, if Dr. Johns, or the Methodist ministry, whether in their own congregations or elsewhere, preach either Methodism or Episcopacy, they are, one and all, equally recreant to the cause they are commissioned to preach. They are to preach Christ, and him crucified, and that alone. They are to preach what he preached, and because he preached it; and they are not to preach either Methodism or Episcopacy, because he preached neither. This would be preaching the doctrines and commandments of men under disguise of the authority of the Church of Christ.

But we are told he should have been engaged in advocating the accession of the Methodists to our Church.

I say, No: a thousand times, No.

He would have been prostituting his high calling to a paltry and anti-Christian purpose. His duty is to bring men to the feet of Christ, not to bring them in this or that guidance, with this or that vague formulary on their lips, but to bring them. If men can be saved in the Methodist Church, then it is a waste of power to strive to tear them from it, to drag them within the Episcopal Church to be saved. The end is the same; the latter is the longer and more circuitous road.

I meet the point that my learned opponent shrank from meeting. I avow openly, plainly, before the world, THAT THE METHODIST CHURCH IS A PART OF THE CHURCH OF GOD: and that, too, no small, mean, insignificant part.

If we judge by its fruits, the inference may lead to a sinister conclusion as to the comparative efficacy of the Episcopal organization. If we may venture to be no more enlightened than the apostles, and to judge of the faith of men and Churches, not by metaphysical dogmas, not by long-drawn spiritual descent and Episcopal genealogies, but by seeing that they manifest the like faith with us, and bring forth fruit abundantly to attest its genuineness, then the Methodist Church is not merely a part of the Church of God, but the most efficient, comprehensive, active, powerful, and aggressive portion of that Church. Look at the condition of our Church. The Episcopal Church was founded in England three centuries ago, with a kingdom to back her; now she is less in numbers and influence than when she started.

METHODISM, that noble Church of God! the Methodist Church, a rib taken from the side of our own Church, arose in the heart of one man, a little more than one century ago, without any worldly influence to back her, from the bosom of that Episcopal Church, and was cast out because she was not, and would not be luke-warm. She now numbers upwards of six millions, and her territory is rapidly filling up and measuring to the outer limit of the Saviour's commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

If fruit be the evidence, what shall we say? Of course it would be a great blessing, as my learned friend said, if Methodists would unite in the bosom of our Church: but would it not be as great a blessing if we unite with them? Would to God there was any prospect of either event. We flung away our opportunity of accomplishing the first, when Bishop White rejected the overtures of the Methodists of his day for a union a piece of infatuation to which I can apply no fitting language consistent with the respect due that excellent but weak and timid man.

We and our children will mourn that the destinies of the Christian Church in this country were at that momentous era committed to the guidance of a man incompetent to rise to the height of that comprehensive statesmanship which the fathers of the Federal Constitution were illustrating before his eyes. Had he been as wise as a party now in the Church would have us believe, the Methodists and Episcopalians would have been blended in one vast comprehensive and overwhelming congregation of the faithful, covering the whole earth, as the waters cover the sea, whose waves would have clapped their hands for joy over the length and breadth of the world. The plague-spot of sectarian division would not have defiled our Protestant Churches; but with one voice and one heart, in the unity of the faith, pervading every diversity of organization, its free truth would have spoken with an authority none could gainsay or resist. That opportunity is past; another is in the future, and not distant. We must bear the taunts of the Papist at our division, till his power shall coerce us to unite for his overthrow.

But the power of the Papacy is not merely spiritual; it is political, and it is a unit. It is more powerful than any one Protestant Church, and it may defeat and overcome them in detail.

The recent comprehensive aggression of that vast organization, distinctly foreshadows a near day of terrible conflict, which will decide the triumph of the Papacy, or its overthrow.

To shield our Protestant faith there is but one possible course; Protestants must forget and bury their divisions, or they must fall in the hour of trial. They must become one, or fall.

What hinders? Nothing but an inveterate blunder—which paralyzed the reformation, in a few years after its birth, and now palsies us. It is the Romish idea, that the Church is a teacher of theology, the guarantee of the scientific accuracy of a dogmatic system of metaphysics—the metaphysics of salvation—instead of being the proclaimer of the simple faith in Christ. Each sect has its symbol, a series of theological propositions, warranted sound, on which the whole sectarian organization rests; which are for each sect the criteria of truth and error, of union or dissension; and faith in which the zeal of partisans exact as the condition of salvation. These differences among Protestants relate solely to matters of theological speculations, the belief of which may well be one way or the other, without making any difference in the Christian character, or endangering the party believing or disbelieving. There is no Protestant sect which does not hold the essentials of salvation. They differ about non-essential matters of speculation, and about ecclesiastical organization. The time will come, and is now at hand, when the momentous alternative will be forced on all Protestant Christians, to abandon and forget all their paltry differences, in the unity of their substantial faith; to proclaim the absolute right of every Church to set up such organization as it may see fit; to assert the absolute irresponsibility of the Church for any sort of metaphysical speculation on the rationale of salvation, on the metaphysics of faith; to leave the Methodist, the Presbyterian and the Episcopalian, each individually and privately, to philosophize on the system of Christianity, as he may see fit, and to confine the duty and the responsibility of the ministry to the simple teaching of religion; and thus united, to meet and overthrow our Papal opponents on the ground we have left; or, in default of this, to go to the wall or to the ground, in a conflict which is now begun, which cannot be avoided, and the only alternatives are union or annihilation.

This view is, I know, foolishness to some of those who hear me, but it is truth and necessity, nevertheless; and time is rapidly making speculation history.

It is only this wide view which can reconcile sects, who may be induced to hold in abeyance views which they may be unwilling for the present to abandon. It is because Methodists are nearer to this point than any others that they are so powerful, so united, so flourishing a branch of the Church of God: and it is only requisite for us to proclaim our willingness to meet them on that ground, to change the face of the Christian world.

DANGERS AHEAD.

The Pittsburgh Gazette, one of the leading journals of the Iron City, says in a recent number:

"THE DANGERS AHEAD!—There is food for serious reflection in the following remarks from the Philadelphia Daily Register, which we extract from an article on the Montreal Quebec riots. Read and ponder."

Then follow the principal paragraphs of the article referred to. On this the Gazette says:

"How true and significant! And we may ask how many politicians in this community can be found who will dare to resist the demands and continued encroachments of the Romish priesthood? Even the press of the country, the great safeguard of a free people, is measurably dumb. From our immense pile of exchanges, comprehending the leading presses of the whole country, we cannot select a half-dozen papers which ever utter a syllable, under any provocation, against the steady and alarming encroachments of the Catholic hierarchy. Look at our own city. We have one daily paper, the Chronicle, the open and fearless champion of Romanism in all its phases, ready to second Bishop O'Connor's crusade against the schools in all its breadth and length, and which spares no opportunity to sneer at Protestant sects, or to utter laudations of the Church of Rome. This paper professes to be independent, but its tendencies are well known to be wholly toward the democracy, to which party the editors belong.

"Another of our city papers, the Post, the leading organ of the democracy, is completely under Catholic influence, so much so, that it has never uttered one word in defence of the common school system, which has been so determinedly and perseveringly assailed by Bishop O'Connor. So cautious is this paper of offending the adherents of the Pope, that no longer ago than one day this week, in some remarks on the Swiss and Austrians, and in praise of Kossuth, the name of Mazzini is carefully suppressed. No syllable in favor of Italian freedom is uttered.

"The Daily Union, another democratic paper, has not yet shown its head. Its editors are clever men, but we have no hope of them in a warfare of this kind. They have stood aloof from the common school controversy, and we suppose will continue to do so.

"Then we have the Commercial Journal, a whig paper. Its past course gives no indication that it will resist the encroachments of Romanism. It has been the better opponent and reviler of the eloquent Kossuth, who has also been denounced by Archbishop Hughes, and by every Catholic press and priest in the country. It published Bishop O'Connor's long letters against the public schools, without any formal argument in reply; and it has opened its batteries against the Italian patriot, Gavazzi, whom it denounces as a "bully" and a "mobocrat orator," and whom it classes with "Killers" and "Bouncers," and in the same breath apologizes for the mob of Catholics which endeavored brutally to assassinate him. Is there any hope for such a press.

"We could present numerous other facts to show the dangerous position in which the liberties of this country stand from the steady advance of the disciplined cohorts of Rome. The defences of freedom are gradually giving way, while the priests become more arrogant every day, and their presses tell us plainly that when they get the power, which they assure us will be at no distant day, they will give us the toleration of the rack, the rope and the faggot; and they tell us this coolly and deliberately, under the sanction of an Archbishop, and they defend it by saying that it is in accordance with the doctrines of an infallible Church!

"The remedies for these menacing dangers, the Register says, are, first, to enlarge the common school system, so as to embrace all the children of the Republic, and to render it free from all valid objections by purging it from all sectarian influences. The second is, that the right to hold personal or real estate, for religious purposes, shall be limited to trustees elected by each congregation from its own number, and extend only to the Church, the parsonage, and the graveyard.

"These remedies are excellent, and if they could be applied would do much to check the advancing evil. But the Romish Bishops already have the right, in nearly all the States, to hold all the property of the Catholic Church, and to any amount; and they have already accumulated immense possessions. We have no statutes of mortmain to prevent the accumulation of these vast ecclesiastical estates, and we have no hope that any legislative bodies will be elected to interpose a check, in the present state of the public sentiment. There is more hope in the matter of the schools. Here Protestantism must take its stand, and resist to the last. This citidel of liberty overthrown, the triumph of Romanism will be secured."

The Pittsburgh Daily Dispatch, an excellent penny paper, is an exception to the censure of the Gazette. It has taken the right ground from the beginning, and spoken out right manfully. [Adv. and Jour.

THE DEATH OF HUME.

To a man who solemnly believes the truth of revelation, and therefore the threatening of divine vengeance against the despisers of it, this scene will present as mournful a spectacle as perhaps the sun ever shone upon. We here behold a man of great talents and invincible perseverance, entering on his career with the profession of an impartial inquirer after truth, met at every stage and step by the evidences and expostulations of religion, and the claims of the Creator, but devoting his labors to the pursuit of fame and the promotion of impiety, at length acquiring and accomplishing, as he declared himself, all he had intended and desired, and descending towards the close of this life amidst tranquility, widely-extending reputation, and the homage of the great and learned. We behold him appointed soon to appear before the Judge to whom he had never alluded without malice or contempt; yet preserving, to appearance, an entire self-complacency, idly jesting about his approaching dissolution, and mingling with the insane sport his reference to the fall of superstition, a term of which the meaning is hardly even dubious when expressed by such men. We behold him at last carried off, and we seem to hear, the following moment, from the darkness in which he vanishes, the shriek of surprise and terror, and the overpowering accents of the messenger of vengeance. On the whole globe there probably was not acting at the time as mournful a tragedy as that of which the friends of Hume were the spectators, without being aware that it was any tragedy at all. [John Foster.

REPORT

OF EXAMINING COMMITTEE, CENTENARY COLLEGE.

To the Joint Board of Trustees and Visitors of Centenary College of Louisiana

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned having been appointed a committee of Examination by the Faculty of Centenary College, at the late Annual Examination, beg leave to submit the following Report.

The pleasing, though arduous and responsible duties assigned them, commenced on the 20th and closed on the 23d July.

The young gentlemen composing the classes in the college were examined through the entire course of study as arranged in the catalogues.

In all these branches the committee, with emotions of pride and great pleasure, would make known to your honorable body that the marked proficiency of a large majority of the lower classes, and the ripe scholarship of the Graduating Class, evinced an able, thorough and philosophical mode of instruction.

In the classics, the students generally exhibited a ready analysis and an accurate application of the laws which control and beautify the construction of these languages; thus fitting the mind, in this important branch of study, for the sterner duties which await it in the great business of life.

The examination of the classes in Mathematics was truly gratifying to the committee. The most difficult questions in all the branches were solved, and formulas and definitions stated and explained with great readiness and familiarity.

The examination in Modern Languages exhibited, on the part of the student, great familiarity and proficiency, and showed that the able Professor in this department had not been idle in the performance of his duties toward his classes.

In Moral Science, the test of proficiency was critical and searching. The young gentlemen acquitted themselves with great honor. In these branches the seniors especially manifested an intelligence of comprehension, and an application of the principles involved in the wide range of Moral Science, which clearly demonstrated that the class had been taught how to think, how to demonstrate the great truths pertaining to this science—how to summon mind to the noble task of elaborating its own proper sphere of action, and thus to be conscious of its own high and responsible destiny.

In the examination the committee observed a great variety of progress, attributable in most instances to a greater or less endowment of mental power, which pervades alike all classes in the world of mind. The scholarship, however, of those who passed the stern ordeal of criticism to which all were subjected, clearly vindicate the talent and ability, and the untiring labor of the Faculty.

These results consummate the conclusion, that the manner of instructing the youth of our country in Centenary College is thorough, critical, and eminently practical, and challenges the approbation of every lover of Southern education and of Southern institutions. The fact is unquestionable that here, in our midst, we possess all the facilities of ripe scholarship—that this institution, placed under your fostering care, has a Faculty of superior talents, with the experience which time and labor bring as their sure reward—that all may see and know that a Southern college is no longer an experiment—that here all the improvements in the science of teaching are practically administered.

These results speak a language more eloquent, more potent, than any the most laudatory commendations of wordy praise too frequent in the common place language of flattery. Let, then, the deeds of this growing institution—the labors of her Faculty—the progress of her students—and the scholarship, plead her claims before a Southern people proud of their native clime. Let these rouse their pride, and call forth their efforts in behalf of this, one of their own home institutions consecrated to the high and noble purposes of Southern education.

The committee are confident in the belief that Centenary College is destined to as brilliant a career of usefulness as any in our own loved land. We would invoke the native chivalry of her sons and daughters, that its light and influence may be shed, in all its brightness and glories, upon her onward and upward course of usefulness.

The committee would most respectfully recommend to your honorable Board and the Faculty, that as the greatest difficulty on the part of any members of the different classes seems to arise from a want of adequate preparation, that the preparation of candidates for admission to the college be exacted with the utmost care and caution. For they are confident in the belief that the utmost labor of the Faculty will utterly fail in making ripe scholars, without this previous preperation.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANCES A. F. HARPER,
GEO. McCLELLAND,
*
DANIEL MARTINDALE,
G. B. MILLER,
J. E. C. DOREMUS.

* Name illegible.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Board are due, and they are hereby tendered, to the Examining Committee for the able and obliging manner in which they have performed the duties assigned them, and that the Secretary be instructed to read this resolution on to-morrow, immediately in connection with the report of said committee.

ABOLISHED.—Imprisonment for debt has been abolished in Massachusetts by the Constitutional Convention now sitting to reform the organic law of the State.

RICH FOLKS.

We suppose there are people in all parts of the United States who think they are pretty well off—even rich. We know a few unfortunate individuals that labor under this hallucination, and who look with a mixture of pity and contempt upon their fellow-worms of the dust, whom they suppose to possess less of "the dust" than themselves. But Heaven help these poor things; they have not the slightest conception of what wealth is. They rich, forsooth! They are beggars comparatively. Many a rich man's upper servants live in better style.

Mr. Croesus, who flourished long before our time, and whom the reader has doubtless heard of, used to say that the citizen who had not fortune to support an army or a legion, did not deserve the title of a rich man; and he is good authority. His landed property alone was worth the snug little sum of eight and a half millions of dollars! Then he possessed slaves, furniture, horses, cattle and cash to an equal amount—making the comfortable sum of seventeen millions!

Mr. Croesus was a rich man; but many of the old gentlemen who departed this life centuries ago, were richer than he. There was Seneca, the philosopher, who uttered and wrote some tolerably good things concerning the age in which he lived, who was worth $17,500,000. Many modern authors would doubtless have been glad to be remembered in the old fellow's will. And so they were, all of them. He left them an invaluable legacy, and this is it: "Whenever you have written a book, lay it aside for nine years; and at the expiration of that time, peruse it carefully, and then, if your judgment approve, publish it, but not before."

Julius Cæsar, like Wilkins Micawber, Esq., was "incurring pecuniary liabilities that he found it difficult to discharge." He set a high value on friendship, having purchased that of Lucius Pallus for $1,500,000. He was a terrible spendthrift. Before he succeeded in obtaining any office, he had amassed debts to the amount of $14,975,000. But office-holders had good pickings in those days, as well as in our own; and as soon as Julius got his hand into the public treasury, his debts began to diminish. He soon became rich. He gave Servilia, the mother of Brutus, a pearl of the value of $200,000. He would doubtless have been guilty of many other extravagances, had not the "well-beloved Brutus" given him that cruel stab under the fifth rib. On the day of the assassination, Cæsar's friend, Mark Antony, owed $500,000, which was all paid thirty days afterwards. This same Antony subsequently swallowed a pearl dissolved in vinegar, (which Cleopatra administered to him,) worth $400,000. He also squandered $735,000,000 of the public treasury. He would have been a splendid fellow to have held a fiscal agency under our federal government.

Tiberias, at his death, left $118,125,000, which Caligula spent in less than twelve months. He lived at the rate of about $35,000 a day; one supper cost $400,000.

Æsopus, the comedian, even transcended Caligula in extravagance—having given $400,000 for one single dish. He had a son, Clodius, who was a chip of the old block. Among other costly gastronomic feats, he swallowed a pearl, (a la Antony) valued at $4000.

Appius, another Roman millionaire, squandered in debauchery some $2,500,000; after which, finding himself sober one day, he investigated his pecuniary affairs, and finding he had only half a million of dollars left, he poisoned himself, because he considered that sum insufficient for his maintenance.

A Mr. Hellogabulus, who lived in those times, and was one of the "upper ten," used occasionally to get up nice suppers which cost $100,000.

Another gentleman, named Lucullus, seldom sat down to a repast that cost less than $100,000. His private tables eclipsed the "ladies' ordinaries" of any twenty of the best hotels in the world. The fish from his pond were sold for $175,000.

On the other hand, there are not a few that keep amassing wealth, and yet are constantly haunted with the dread of coming to poverty! These are of the horse-leech tribe—the constant cry of "Give, give!" is theirs. We could write a long chapter about these latter, but they are too well known to require description. All we need say is, from such extremes of human misery Heaven defend us!

CHOATE'S EULOGY ON WEBSTER.—The proposed eulogy on Daniel Webster, by the Hon. Rufus Choate, was delivered in the College Chapel at Hanover, N. H., on Wednesday last. It is considered the most brilliant, eloquent and profound eulogy that has yet been delivered to the memory of the great orator and statesman. The following closing paragraphs exhibit the spirit and style of the whole address:

"But it is time this eulogy were brought to its conclusion. My heart goes back into the coffin there with him, and I would pause. I went—it is a day or two since—alone, to see again the house which he so passionately loved, the chamber where he died, the grave in which they laid him down—all habited as when

'His look drew audience still as night,
Or summer's noontide air,'

till the heavens be no more. In all that spacious and calm scene all things to the eye looked at first unchanged. The books in the library, the portraits, the table at which he wrote, the scientific culture of the land, the course of agricultural occupation, the coming in of harvests, fruit of the seed his own hand had scattered, the animals and implements of husbandry, the trees planted by him in lines, in copses, in orchards, by thousands, the seat under the noble elm on which he used to sit to feel the south-west wind at evening, or hear the breathings of the sea, or the not less audible music of the starry heavens, all seem at first unchanged. The sun of a bright day, from which, however, something of the fervors of midsummer were wanting, fell temperately on them all, filled the air on all sides with the utterance of life, and gleamed on the long line of ocean. Some of those whom on earth he loved best, still were there. The great mind still seemed to preside, the great presence to be with you. You might expect to hear again the rich and powerful tones of the voice of the old hospitality. Yet a moment, and the change would come. The doors would open, and he would enter, and you would see him, as you had often seen him, in the prime of his manhood, and in the fullness of his glory."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, August 13.

ment more and all the scens took on the aspect of one great monnment, inscribed with his name, and sacred to his memory. And such it shall be in all the future of America! The sensation of desolatoness, and lonellness, and darkness, with which you see it now, will pass away. The sharp grief of love and friendship will become soothed. Men will repair thither, as they commsmorate the great days of history. The same glanes shall take, and the same emotion shall greet and bless the Harbor of the Pilgrims, and the Tomb of Webster."

ARRIVAL OF BISHOP SOULE.

The congregation of Carondelet street Church were not a little surprised with joy, last Sunday morning, at seeing the venerable Bishop walk up the aisle, with a firm step, and take his seat in the pulpit. He looked and pronounced himself in better health and strength than when he left us six months ago, on his arduous trip to California. He arrived in the steamship Prometheus, by the Nicaragua route, early that morning. The Bishop has furnished us with the following acknowledgment of attentions and courtesy from the owners and officers of this line:

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 9, '53.

I sailed from San Francisco, California, on Saturday, the 16th ult., at 2 o'clock, P. M., on the fine ship Brother Jonathan, and arrived in this city by the ship Prometheus, after a very pleasant passage of 21 days and a few hours. I am under many obligations to the captains and other officers of these ships for their very kind attention to me, contributing in every way to render my situation on the ships exceedingly pleasant.

For myself, and in behalf of the Missionary Society and the Church with which I am connected, I take this method to acknowledge, with deep gratitude, the favor of a free passage on these ships. This kindness the Missionary Board will officinlly and publicly acknowledge. JOSHUA SOULE.

Sabbath night and Monday night he spent in Carrollton. On Tuesdny evening he left for Nashville on the packet boat Memphis, and we trust the Providence that has been ever with him thus far will speedily restore him to his family. The Bishop has thoroughly acquainted himself with the moral condition of California, and our own Church particularly, and brings back a good report. It will spring Southern Methodists to new and larger and well directed efforts in its behalf. He regards its condition healthy, its position safe and respectable, and its prospects equal to those of any other Protestant denomination. Four or five preachers of the right sort (the emphasis his) are now wanted.

The Church in San Francisco, with which Dr. Boring is stationed, has sold out the small house and lot heretofore occupied, and taken a site in an eligible portion of the city—a lot costing $3500. The contract for a large brick Church was made when the Bishop left, and according to their fast ways in California, we expect to hear by the steamers of next month, that they are worshipping in the basement. The Bishop has preached extensively throughout the valleys and mining regions—every Sabbath occupied and the appointments often distant. From accounts that reached us by the last mail, we donbt whether any resident minister of that State has preached to as many people during his stay there as Bishop Soule during a few months. He has been treated with great respect by those standing in high places, both in Church and State, and we doubt not his labors will be as advantageous to the Pacific Conference there as here. On but two occasions could the place of meeting contain the hearers: one was under a spreading oak—a few more might have got in—and the other in Sacramento, the last Sabbath of his stay in California, when he preached in the theatre to about 2000 persons.

As he mounted the flight of stairs leading up to our office, we asked him where was the asthma he carried away. "The asthma—I left that between the tropics."

Surely, the Church has cause to bless the Lord, who has preserved his going out and his coming in.

CORRESPONDENTS will have patience with our columns. Some valuable favors (to our readers) are delayed. Among them a letter from Rev. W. R. Gober, P. E. of San Francisco District, Cal.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.—The August number has been furnished us by McGinnis & Carver.

PUTNAM'S MONTHLY.—We are obliged to same firm for an August number.

MARION FEMALE COLLEGE.—This excellent institution opens on the 29th September next. Read the advertisement.

NEW COTTON.—The steamship Perseverence, from Galveston, Tuesday, brought a bale of new cotton, the first of the season received here. It is from the plantation of Judge Wafford, DeWitt county, Texas, and was consigned to Mr. John Williams. The first bale last year was received on the 2d August.

NEW BALE OF COTTON.—The second new bale of cotton received at this port this season arrived yesterday by the steamboat Cuddo No. 2 from Williamsport. It is from the plantation of Richard Flower, and is consigned to K. Dunbar & Co. The first bale was received from Texas by the steamer Perseverance, which arrived on the 5th inst.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

The city is still scourged with the yellow fever, as our interment lists shew. Considering that the population has been constantly thinning out from deaths and departures, while the highest figures of daily mortality are maintained, it is but too evident that up to this time the epidemic is on the increase. Its ravages are heightened by the incidents of warm weather, the debility of nurses, the over-worked sextons and over-crowded cemeteries, and that general stolidity, both moral and physical, that is superinduced, especially among the ignorant and more depraved classes of the community, by horrid familiarity with death's doings. Since 1794, when occurred the first visitation of yellow fever in New Orleans, it has never been on this wise. May the people hear the voice of His rod, and a merciful God spare us!

"Lord, we our sin and guilt confess,
Yet mercy would implore:
To mitigate our sore distress,
Display thy mighty power!

"Say, 'Tis enough'—and give command,
Disease shall then retire,
And rosy health revive our land
Now trembling at thine ire.

Where so much death is, let those at a distance conceive of the sickness! To alleviate this distress, three public houses have been converted into temporary hospitals, and the Council have appropriated $10,000 to benevolent disbursement. The Pontchartrain Railroad Company, the N. Orleans Bank, and the Home and the Crescent Mutual Insurance Companies have donated $500 each. Several citizens have done liberally also. Harry Hill, Esq., who was applied to at his plantation above the city at an early day, responded, authorizing the Howard Association to draw on him for $100 a week as long as the epidemic lasted. And this Association received on Wednesday a purse of $1,800 from the citizens of Mobile. May our generous sister city be preserved from the pestilence that wastes us!

The following description is from one of the city papers of the 11th, and agrees with the other daily press on the same subject. Horrid it is, but too true. Facts as they are, and as we have witnessed them, can hardly be colored or overstated:

DOWN AMONG THE DEAD MEN.

To verify the many horrible reports of the doings among the dead, we the other day visited the cemeteries. In every street were long processions, tramping to the solemn music of funeral marches. In the countenances of plodding passengers were the lines of anxiety and grief, and many a door was festooned with black and white hangings, the voiceless witnesses of wailing and of sorrow. On the one hand slowly swept the long corteges of the wealthy, nodding with plumes and drawn by prancing horses, rejoicing in their funeral vanities; on another, the hearse of the citizen-soldier, preceded by measured music, enveloped in warlike panoply, and followed by the noisy tread of men under arms; while there again the pauper was trundled to his long home on a ricketty cart, with a boy for a driver, who whistled as he went, and swore a ceaseless oath as he urged his mule or spavined horse to a trot, making haste with another morsel contributed to the grand banquet of death. Now among the steeples was heard the chiming of the bells, as of Ghoules up there, mingling their hoarse voices as in a chorus of gratulation over the ranks of fallen mortality. Anon from some lowly tenement trilled the low wail of a mother for the child of her affections, while from the corner opposite burst the song of some low bacchanal, mingling ribaldry with sentiment, or swearing a prayer or two as the humor moved him.

The skies wore a delusive aspect. Above was all cloudless sunshine, but little in keeping with the black melancholy that enveloped all below. Out along the highways that lead to the cities of the dead, and still the tramp of funeral crowds knew no cessation.

At the gathering points carriages accumulated, and vulgar teamsters, as they jostled each other in the press, mingled the coarse jest with the ribbald oath; no sound but of profane malediction and of riotous mirth, the clang of whip thongs and the rattle of wheels. At the gates, the winds brought intimation of the corruption working within. Not a puff but was laden with the rank atmosphere from rotting corpses. Inside they were piled by fifties, exposed to the heat of the sun, swollen with corruption, bursting their coffin lids, and sundering, as if by physical effort, the ligaments that bound their hands and feet, and extending their rigid limbs in every outre attitude. What a feast of horrors! Inside, corpses piled in pyramids, and without the gates, old and withered crones and fat huxter women, fretting in their own grease, dispensing ice creams and confections, and brushing away, with brooms made of bushes, the green bottle-flies that hovered on their merchandise, and that anon buzzed away to drink dainty inhalations from the green and festering corpses. Mammon at the gates was making thrift outside by the hands of his black and sweating minions, that tendered sweet-meats and cooling beverages to the throngs of mourners or of idle spectators, who, inhaling the fumes of rotting bodies, already "heaved the gorge;" while within, the "King of Terrors" held his Saturnalia, with a crowd of stolid laborers, who, as they tumbled the dead into ditches, knocked them "about the mazzard," and swore dread oaths, intermingled with the more dreadful sounds of demoniac jollity.

Long ditches were dug across the great human charnel. Wide enough were they to entomb a legion, but only fourteen inches deep. Coffins laid in them shewed their tops above the surface of the earth. On these was piled dirt to the depth of a foot or more, but so loosely that the myriads of flies found entry between the loose clods, down to the cracked seams of the coffins, and buzzed and blew there their ova, creating each hour their new hatches of swarms.

But no sound was there of sorrow within that wide Gehenna. Men used to the scent of dissolution had forgotten all touch of sympathy. Uncouth laborers, with their bare shock heads, stood under the broiling heat of the sun, digging in the earth; and as anon they would encounter an obstructing root or stump, would swear a hideous oath, remove to another spot, and go on digging as before. Now and then the mattock or the spade would disturb the bones of some former tenant of the mould, forgotten there amid the armies of the accumulated victims; and the sturdy laborer with a gibe, would hurl the broken fragments on the sward, growl forth an energetic d—n, and chuckle in his excess of glee. Skull bones were dug up from their long sepulture, with ghastliness staring out from each lack bone, eyeless holes without shutting on. "Alas, poor Yorick," and with only an exclamation from the digger, of "room for your betters!"

Economy of space was the source of cunning calculation in bestowing away the dead men. Side by side were laid two, of gigantic proportions, bloated by corruption to the size of Titans. The central projections of their coffins, left spaces between them at their heads and heels. This was too much room to be filled with earth. How should the space be saved? Opportunely the material is at hand, for a cart comes lumbering in, with the corpses of a mother and her two little children. Chuck the children in the spaces at the heads and heels of the Titans, and lay the mother by herself, out there alone! A comrade for her will be found anon, and herself and babes will sleep not the less soundly from the unwonted contact!

The fumes rise up in deathly exhalations from the accumulating hecatombs of fast coming corpses. Men wear at their noses bags of camphor and odorous spices—for there are crowds there who have no business but to look on and contemplate the vast congregation of the dead. They don't care if they die themselves—they have become so used to the reek of corruption. They even laugh at the riotings of the skeleton Death, and crack jokes in the horrid atmosphere where scarcely they can draw breath for utterance.

The stoical negroes, too, who are hired at five dollars per hour to assist in the work of interment, stagger under the stifling fumes, and can only be kept at their work by deep and continued potations of the "fire water." They gulp deep draughts of the stimulating fluid, and reeling to their tasks hold their noses with one hand while with the other they grasp the spade, heave on the mould, and rush back to the bottle to gulp again. It is a jolly time with these ebon laborers, and with their white co-workers, as thoughtless and as jolly, and full as much intoxicated as themselves.

And thus, what with the songs and obscene jests of the grave diggers, the buzzing of the flies, the slag-song cries of the huxter-women vending their confections, the hoarse oaths of the men who drive the dead carts, the merry whistle of the boys, and the stifling reek from scores of blackened corpses, the day wears apace, the work of sepulture is done, and night draws the curtain.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

CRAWFORD CT., ALA.—Dear Bro.: We have just closed a glorious meeting, held at Soule Chapel; 28 whites and 35 colored united with the Church; and about 15 profess to have received peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The meeting commenced the 22d of July, (our third Quarterly Conference.) From the first day the meeting was interesting. On the Sabbath we took up our missionary collection, ($100) and Bro. Armstrong, the P. E., appointed a meeting on Monday for the purpose of administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and we had a precious time. Rev. W. C. Turner was with us till Sunday night, at which time he had to leave for Mount Zion, to hold a two day's meeting for the blacks, (he is the missionary to them) and the P. E. joined him Tuesday, leaving me alone, except Rev. Josiah Evans, who lives in the neighborhood. But the Lord was with us in power. A number of persons came round the altar; among the rest, 7 young ladies, and they were every one converted. We held on, and Bro. Turner returned on Wednesday, and we alternated till Sunday last. The meeting grew in interest all the time. Although it rained three days, we met all the time. The people brought their baskets, and we preached morning and evening; had no night service. Saturday was another great day; a number of young men were converted. The result, as above, 18 young men and 10 young ladies—all of promise, too—joined the Church, besides the blacks. Praise the Lord, all ye people. Amen. WM. P. MILLER.

P. S. Our missionary work is not neglected. We have hold eight meetings, and taken in cash and good subscriptions, seven hundred and eighty-six dollars.

Mount Zion	$154 75
Salem	225 00
Shady Grove	80 00
Glenn's Church	80 00
Capece.... (very poor people)	7 50
Uchee.... (rich people)	18 75
Olivet	120 00
Soulo Church	100 00
	$786 00

Seven other meetings to hold yet.

WM. P. M.

EUTAW, ALA.—We have recently closed a meeting of considerable interest in our town. The manifestation of the power of truth in the salvation of souls was great, but not so extended as we had hoped and desired. Fifteen were converted to God, and twenty-one added to the Church. May the Lord increase the number tenfold; there is room for it. JAS. M. PATTON.

August 2.

DE KALB CT., (ALA. CONF.) I have just returned from a very interesting meeting at New Hope, a new Church, which was dedicated last Sunday by Bro. E. Calloway, our P. E. A great many sinners were deeply convicted; several mourners happily converted, and Christians greatly strengthened in the faith of the gospel. We received 25 accessions to the Church. The meeting has not yet closed, but I presume will this evening. J. W. COOK.

August 2.

WOODVILLE CT., (FLA. CONF.)—The Lord has graciously visited the Woodville Circuit this year. We have received about 80 members and a great many conversions. I have just closed a protracted meeting at Brown's Church, (on the upper part of this circuit,) at which place we received 25 members and several conversions. Also closed a protracted meeting at Belin's old Church, which had been thrown out for several years, which proved to be of great good; some were added, and the society again organized. To God be all the glory. W. A. ADAMS.

NEW TOWBOAT LINE.—A movement has been made in Boston in relation to a new line of towboats between this city and the Balize, which is calculated to make the members of the Towboat Companies here open their eyes. The plan is to form a company, with the co-operation of New York and the Eastern sea-ports, to establish a line in opposition to the present towboats here, against the management of which a variety of complaints are alleged. It is said that vessels of a great draft of water are compelled to remain on the bar in the river for an unreasonable time, in consequence of the unfair rules of the present Towboat Companies. A subscription for the new line is in progress.

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

"COMMON SENSE."

MR. EDITOR:—In your paper of the 30th ult., over the cognomen of "Common Sense," appears a communication headed "Small Talk." The writer seems to disagree with both you and myself, and I doubt whether he agrees with himself. If he does, we are not informed of it. He disagrees with you in urging the propriety of writing over proper signatures, and gives as a reason that anonymous writing "calls out much of the youthful talent of the age;" a better reason presently.

"Common Sense" then takes me up and says, "We would be sorry to have our name appended to such a proposition" as appeared in my recommendation to pay the preachers' quarterage of $125, instead of the present quarterage of $100 per annum.

Next he compliments me with liberality, &c.; but this seems to be done still to strike a deeper blow at my proposition.

Those acquainted with the Methodist economy, know that it is excessive folly to speak of "the support of" (the Methodist) "ministry" in connexion with the $100. The $100 is for the individual and personal necessities of the preacher, such as his apparel, books, etc.

The amount to be raised for the support of the minister and family is not a matter of disciplinary regulation, in so far as the amount of dollars and cents to be raised, but is a matter to be left entirely to the judgment and good sense of the Stewards. They are frequently assessed from $500 to $1500 per year for table expenses, according to the size of the family, the location, &c.; and this is too frequently shamefully low in assessment. This, however, we do not propose to regulate by the General Conference. What we propose is to pay the preacher 25 per cent. more for quarterage; their children' 25 per cent. more quarterage, and an arrangement for a good education to their children. However much Brother "Common Sense" might be ashamed of, or sorry to appear with such sentiments to his name, I will look upon it as a proud day when we can get this principle established in the M. E. Church, South; and as a matter of course, the quarterage being increased 25 per cent., the table expenses ought to be, at least, to a sufficient amount to meet the table exigences.

Our ministers have received as quarterage $100, commensurate with Methodism in the United States, I believe. This has been considered by them as sufficient. Now a proposition is made to augment this amount 25 per cent. True, it looks small, but the relation of 25 to 100 in not a very inconsiderable one. Instance, a preacher gets.....$100
His wife..... 100
Three children, (Discipline not at hand) 48

Makes quarterage for one year.....$248
Add 25 per cent to this..... 62

$310

Is $62 per year advance in quarterage of no importance to a family receiving $248? Will Bro. "Common Sense" answer? He asks if a member of the Conference can possibly reconcile it to his conscience to locate for the sake of twenty-five dollars? I answer, No. But an insufficient quarterage, with stinted tableage and uneducated children, will, as it has done, drive many away from the Methodist pulpit, unless we will all get to be good liberal souls, like Bro. "Common Sense," and just do the thing right.

He asks how much I spend myself? in speaking of the insufficiency of the $125.

Let us test this a moment. Suppose, for argument sake, I spend $150 on apparel, books, &c., as the preacher does for the same articles out of his quarterage, and "Common Sense" spends $500 for his wardrobe, (and we suppose from his inquiry that $125 is but a contemptible amount, when compared to the annual demands of this department.) Then Bro. A. spends but $100, Bro. C. only $50. Who is to be the criterion for the preacher?—Bro. Common S., Bro. C., or myself? I wonder the ink and paper had not blushed when the Brother signed himself "Common Sense."

Will Bro. "Common Sense" enlighten us by giving us some Big Talk, in the shape of how much preachers ought to have? or will he come out with sentiments that he will proudly avow over his own proper sign manual, and tell us how much he spends? (for we undestand that is the standard of admeasurement he raises for the salary of the preachers.)

I am glad I have provoked one good Brother to say some thing on this important subject. Hope he won't stop with that bit of "Small Talk," but will avow his own, and better sentiments, before he criticises mine.

Ah! Mr. Editor, there is another good reason why many should sign communications anonymously; that is the want of common sense. And another in these moneyed matters is, when the Steward comes around, and Bro. "Common Sense" don't pay as much toward the support of the minister as he ought, to make up the amount equal to his own expenditures, he can't say, Why, brother, you wrote so and so about liberality toward our preachers, and you ought to come up to your sentiments. No. Bro. "Common Sense" cannot then be found; he is not in the class-book.

Enough for the present, and I will now be absent some two months. Hope Bro. "Common Sense," and some other good brethren, may entertain your readers in a discussion on this subject, with Big Talk.

PRICE WILLIAMS.

Alabama River, July 3, 1853.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

EXTRACTS FROM THE MINUTES OF DAYTON QR. CONF.

Whereas, it has pleased the Great Head of the Church to remove by death from our communion and fellowship, but more especially from the deliberations of this Quarterly Meeting Conference, our beloved brother, Adolphus S. Cade, upon whose sound judgment, Christian prudence, and uniform piety we have so long relied, therefore

1. Resolved, That we have heretofore appreciated, and at present deeply deplore the loss of those labors so cheerfully dispensed by our lamented brother as Recording Steward and Class Leader; and while we are painfully sensible of the vacuum made in this body, the Church and community, we would humbly and believingly submit to the guidance of a gracious God, ourselves, and his own cause, for which he has promised always in wisdom to provide

2. Resolved, That we truly sympathize with and earnestly pray for sustaining grace upon his afflicted family, in the loss of one who invariably exhibited in their domestic circle so many virtues, which made it to them a peaceful and happy home.

3. Resolved, That the Secretary of this Conference be instructed to present to the family of our deceased brother a copy of these resolutions, and forward the same to the Southern and the N. O. Christian Advocates for publication.

(Signed) JOSHUA T. HEARD, P. E.
H. J. ASKEW, Secretary.

Dayton, Aln., Aug. 1, 1853.

CONFERENCE STEWARDS.

The following resolution was presented and passed at the recent session of the Pittsburgh Conference:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finances be instructed to inquire into the expediency of inviting to our next annual session a number of distinguished, and experienced lay brethren, to take seats with us and to be present in all meetings of the Conference Board of Stewards, to aid by their counsels in the disbursement of Conference funds, and in the discharge of any other duties having relation to our financial arrangements, which the Conference may refer to them.

This is much the same as the Louisiana Conference action of last year—falling behind it in this, that it does not provide (by committee) so specially for the utterance and influence of the "counsels" and aids sought. The editor of the Pittsburgh Advocate comments:

"The District Boards of Stewards are to elect annually one layman from each district in the Conference, who by virtue of such election shall be a member of the Conference Board of Stewards. This resolution was distinctly and separately put to the Conference, and passed by a pretty large majority. It elicited scarcely any debate. A few brethren seemed somewhat startled with the idea of the introduction of a novelty in our system, and were disposed to postpone action on it for the present. And without the light of experience, others might have felt the same embarrassment. But all who had knowledge of the results of a similar arrangement, adopted by several Conferences both in the South and North, believed it not only safe, but highly expedient and important. We hope much for the arrangement. We are greatly mistaken if it do not mark a new and brighter era in the history of the financial operations of the Conference, and which will be felt by the whole Church. We anticipate that ere long some thing of the kind will be adopted throughout the connection. It will then bring to the aid of the ministry, in all the benevolent operations of the Church, the wisest, most liberal and active minds in the laity. And can any one doubt that the most important and desirable results will flow from bringing into the counsels of the Church this large addition of practical knowledge, united with fervent piety and devotion to her best interests? These lay brethren, we anticipate, will devise "liberal things," and will wield a new and potent influence in their accomplishment. The arrangement will increase confidence, and create a new bond of sympathy between the ministry and the laity. It will infuse a lay element into our system, which, under the guidance of experience and the forming hand of Providence, will grow up, expand and develop into whatever the necessities of the Church may require. This element will thus become properly and legitimately a part of Methodism, so eminently the child of Providence. In this manner, without angry "disputings," or violent change, all that is truly desirable in regard to a lay influence in the Conference will be ultimately realized, and not only the harmony of our entire body thereby preserved, but its union more strongly cemented."

We would say to our Quarterly Conferences, be looking out your men—the best, and those that love the Church well enough to go up to the Annual Conference at Mansfield, La. Even a good plan needs to be well worked.

MINISTERIAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Ministerial Education Society of the Alabama Conference, of the M. E. Church, South, held in Summerfield, Ala., July 4th, 1853, the following subscriptions and cash contributions were received:

SUBSCRIPTIONS

J. C. DuBose, Mobile, Ala., by Dr. Hamilton	$100 00
D. W. Goodman, Mobile, Ala., by R. A. Baker	50 00
R. A. Baker, Summerfield	50 00
Rev. J. J. Hutchinson, of the Ala. Conf	10 00
Rev. T. Moody, of the Ala. Conf	10 00
Dr. Thos. P. Frith, Autauga, Ala., by Rev. F. G. Ferguson, in the form of a claim on Centenary Institute	54 35
	$274 35

CASH.

Rev. A. H. Powell, collection by R. A. Baker	10 00
Rev. G. Garrett, contribution	1 00
Rev. S. G. Capers, "	1 00
Mrs. Cook, Prattville, contribution, by S. G. Capers	10 00
Mr. Henry Ware, contribution, by Dr. Hamilton	1 00
Mr. John W. Golson, " by F. G. Ferguson	1 00
Mr. Linsey Davis, " by F. G. Ferguson	1 00
Mr. Thos. J. Motley, " by F. G. Ferguson	1 00
July 6.
Dr. S. W. Vaughan, " by J. T. Heard	1 00
Mrs. S. W. Vaughan, " by J. T. Heard	1 00
Mrs. J. T. Vaughan, " by J. T. Heard	1 00
Mrs. Fred H. Vaughan, " by J. T. Heard	1 00
Mrs. Paul T. Vaughan, " by J. T. Heard	1 00
Mrs. Hunter, " by	1 00
Sixteen anonymous, through Dr. Hamilton	10 00
	$42 00

THOMAS W. JORMAN, Treasurer.

NOTE.—The object of this Society is to educate such young men as give evidence of being called of God to preach, and wish to enter the itinerant field, and need help in the way of education. Come, brethren, here is a noble object for the exercise of your benevolence. Send in your assistance; it is needed. Persons wishing to contribute to the funds of the Society, can do so through any of the preachers of the Alabama Conference, or by remittance to the Treasurer, at Columbus, Miss. T. W. D.

COLONEL BLISS.—The Mobile Tribune, of the 6th inst., thus refers to the death of this lamented gentleman:

"After the above was put in type we learned that Colonel Bliss died a little after midnight, yesterday morning, of black vomit. He came to this city last week from New Orleans, spent a day or two here and returned to Pascagoula, where he was taken with the fever. It is supposed that he contracted the disease in New Orleans."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

OBSERVATIONS ON MEN AND THINGS.

SABBATH IN MOBILE—WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE—COMMENCEMENT OF EMORY COLLEGE—SPEECH OF MR. TOOMBS—GEORGIANS.

MR. EDITOR: After a delightful trip across the Lakes, I found myself, at the rising of the sun, on the day following my departure from your sanctum, in the city of Mobile, ascending the winding stairway to my lodgings in the Battle House. This house, in all the assidnites which are necessary to make guests feel that they are cared for, in selection and preparation of the most delicious viands, and in comfort and cleanliness of appointments, is not inferior to any I have ever seen. The proprietors say they can accommodate about four hundred with sleeping apartments.

As I strolled leisurely along the streets, about 9 A. M., my eye turning warily at each corner, in search of some place where congenial spirits met, I could but observe the pendant hooks which hung to naked posts without the signs which they were used to hold: the naked iron racks, which, stripped of the gay colors of merchandize, stood like unclad skeletons exposed to the sun; the squads of darkies standing at the corners, with idle laugh and shining teeth, together with the general silence, in which the sound of hammer, trowel and other tools came not upon the ear as at other times—all silently, but eloquently, proclaiming the Sabbath day.

In front of a massive structure, plainly built of mortar and brick, stood an orderly group of bright-eyed boys, while little girls, with dimpled cheeks and artless smiles, tripped along and disappeared in the basement. 'Twas the hour of Sabbath School. Ah! thought I, how many hopes are suspended upon the issues of these schools. They point the mind to that destiny of immortality which broods over the soul, at a time when the energy of such an idea is best capable of deepening and purifying the stream of thought, and raising the feelings to that noble elevation, whence they look down upon sin as coarse and disgusting; and they lay the deep foundations of moral principle the only sure basis for the liberties of our country. Impelled, by a fondness for youth, and a love for Sunday School, I joined the little group, and learned that we were entering St. Francis street M. E. Church. * * * * * * * * * * * * * * The Sabbath School had been dismissed about a half hour, and an assembly had met, and were sitting quietly, when a young man of meek appearance, advanced with light, but rapid step, and knelt in the pulpit. While he continued in silent prayer, a death-like stillness prevailed, interrupted only now and then by an audible sigh, which told that others bore a part of his burden. The subject of the discourse was faith; the style practical and energetic; some times vehement; and I left the service edified and impressed. One opinion was advanced, however, from which I must dissent, viz: that there is a general, if not universal, decline in religious spirit and power, since the days of our fathers. All must admit that some Christians lived in the past generations, whose piety has been seldom equaled; yet the troubles, dissensions and schisms which rent the Church, prove that these are exceptions to the common mass. Indeed, I do not think that it can be proven, by any fair means of deduction, that there was ever more enlightened, consistent piety in the Church, than at present. It is right that we should, to some extent, forget the foibles of those that are no more; but it is not fair to form our ideas of the character of the past generation from those whose biographies are worthy of being written for our imitation, without regard to the character of those over whom obscurity or charity has cast the veil of oblivion. We can only judge the tree by its fruits; and while the young preacher was elaborating his argument, it was evident to my mind that a Church, blessed with so many young, pious, college-bred ministers, like himself, laboring for less than a support—laboring for the same that their predecessors did, (although wages, and expenses, too, have advanced three or four fold.)—blessed with the most luxuriantly fruitful effectiveness in her missionary, educational and benevolent departments, and increasing in numbers with such unparalleled rapidity, cannot be in a spiritual decline.

Having been detained in Mobile and on the Alabama river, I did not reach Macon, Ga., until the 15th inst., consequently missed the Commencement of Wesleyan Female College, which took place on the 13th. But as Bro. L., whose companionship I had found so pleasant in beguiling the tedious hours upon the way, was going no further, I accepted the kindly proffered hospitalities of President and Faculty to spend the Sabbath.

This institution is located in a community favorable to health, refinement and religious advantages. The college building is 160 feet long by 80 wide, and 4 stories high, containing 50 rooms, besides dining room and chapel; stands upon an eminence commanding, from its cupola, a view of the entire city of Macon, and several miles of the surrounding country. The building and grounds are enclosed with a substantial wall of brick, and planted with the elm, mulberry, aspen, and other trees, whose light feathery foliage yield a pleasant shade, but is not so dense as to exclude those light-winged zephyrs which coquette with their lazily moving branches, dropping their vermilion upon the fair cheeks which nestle below. Lodging accommodations can be afforded in the building for 70 pupils. The Steward looks like one of those men whose leading traits are simplicity, firmness, frankness and good nature. He is provident and attentive. The Library, apparatus, &c., &c., are creditable. The legislation of the institution is vested in the Board of Trustees; the executive in the Faculty. The latter is parental and persuasive, so far as it relates to the government of pupils. But, to my mind, one of the most commanding features in the character of this institution is the spirit of deep piety which seems to prevail among the Faculty and their families. (The Faculty and their families, except the music teacher, board in the college, and eat at the same table with the pupils.) An association where the streams of Parnassus and Siloa unite, and flow along in one peaceful, fertilizing volume, is, in my estimation, of incalculable value and beauty. In vain may secular education strive to refine and elevate female character. She may gather the fairest flowers which decked the brow of Pindus, or of Helicon, and add every external charm, but all this cannot make her offices for which the God of Nature has designed her. Learning without piety, too often leaves her course and presuming—full of masculine pursuits, and clamorous for women's rights. Indeed, religion enhances every perception of taste, purifies every sensibility of happiness, and gives a higher zest to the pursuit of every ennobling acquisition. Alas! how many institutions, instead of fostering the resolutions of piety, are stagnant pools of iniquity, whence arises a moral malaria, amid which every conviction will be extinguished, and every good resolution perish.

July 17th, we bid adieu to Wesleyan Female College. Long may it stand, as it truly is, an honor to the name it bears, and may its numbers increase from 138 (the number in the college classes last session,) to as many hundreds as it may be proper to congregate. A car ride of five hours brought us back to Atlanta, from which, in company with Prof. Smith, I took the Georgia Railroad for Oxford, the seat of Emory College; for, having learned that, with the loss of about 30 hours, I could enjoy a treat which might not be offered again upon such terms, I resolved to avail myself of the opportunity of seeing the literati of Georgia and the Georgia Conference.

About 40 miles from Atlanta the gliding train passed in the suburbs of a neat looking village of probably a hundred inhabitants. This is Covington, and a buck ride of a mile and a half brought us to Oxford—a beautiful rural town of a few hundred inhabitants situated upon little hills, sloping off here and there with every imaginable eccentricity, while Nature's provident hand has scattered forest oaks along its quiet streets to shield the inhabitants from the violence of the sun. Just out of the village, cloistered in a thrifty grove of half grown trees, clothed in a rich foliage of tender green, which weaves a soft, mellow shade, are situated the buildings of Emory College.

A plain, but neat and commodious chapel has just been completed, 136 by 90 feet, 2 stories high, its cupola towering above the oaks and looking down upon the surrounding country. The part of the building set apart for chapel purposes, with its gallery, will accommodate about 2000 persons.

The exercises of the Junior Class took place on Tuesday, the 19th, which consisted of original speeches, in which there were some fine sentiments. Spirit Rapping was rapped with vehemence; Fillibusters were used with a severity which would satisfy a devoted subject of Queen Isabella; while Uncle Tom was waked up from his nap, where he had been Stowed away, and those striped and bloody curtains, so ingeniously woven around the old fellow, were handled roughly, to enable us to see his greasy face and the broad grin displaying his good treatment.

At 3 o'clock, P. M., we had a speech from the President, Dr. Pierce, full of wit, force and elegance. He set out with the opinion that "there was in every man a vein of benevolence, if you could find an Artesian auger long enough to bore through the granite and get down to it." The best comment upon the speech is the two thousand three hundred dollars paid and subscribed at the close of it, to extinguish the debt incurred in building the chapel, for which purpose the speech was made.

An eloquent address was delivered at night before the Alumni Association. It may be interesting to know that of the 172 Alumni of this young institution, 26 are ministers of the gospel; 3 are missionaries to foreign missions; 43 are engaged in the profession of teaching; many are in the learned professions, and 8 have died.

On Wednesday, the 20th, the chapel was crowded. Upon the rostrum were seated, in addition to the able Faculty, the venerable Bishops Capers and Andrew, Dr. L. Pierce, Hon. Robert Toombs, and a number of the grave and talented ministers of the Georgia Conference, with the Presidents and Professors of other colleges and seminaries in Georgia and Alabama. The speeches of the Graduating Class were creditable, but the exercises were so lengthy as to prevent the President from extending his Baccalaureate to more than a few remarks of most valuable assistance and amply advice. The exercises closed after conferring the degree of A. B. upon the 13 graduates; the degree of A. M. upon a number of Alumni, and that of D. D. upon Rev. Benjamin Jenkins, Missionary to China.

The Literary Societies were addressed at 3 o'clock, P. M., by Hon. Robert Toombs, which he defended the institutions of slavery. He argued that the African race are not as well off any where else, and have not been in any other age, as they are in the South as slaves. Among other things guaranteed to them, he mentioned that the combined missionary efforts for evangelizing the world had not converted as many, altogether, as had been converted among the slaves; that those were paid more for their labor, in accumulations than the operatives in most manufacturing countries were paid in cash, and did as much labor as hard.

Thus closed the exercises of Commencement, and in bidding adieu to Georgia, I must express my highest admiration for her public improvements, intelligence, and individual enterprize; as well as my warmest gratitude for the urbanity and hospitality of her people, unostentatious and generous citizens. Long will my mind recur to the delightful acquaintances which I made in the State, and the real worth and practical utility, and the heart will warm, as memory recalls the scenes and associations of Macon and Oxford.

BOAZ.

July 30, 1853.

PROSPECTS OF THE COTTON CROP.—Our exchanges bring us uniform accounts of continued wet weather, and consequent injury to the growing crop of cotton. The complaint is universal that the rains have accelerated the growth of the plant to an extraordinary degree, causing the young forms to fall off, the green balls to rot, and retarding the early maturity of those that escape destruction by the excess of moisture. The opinion prevails in many portions of the country that the yield will not reach more than half. Some contend that the crop will be an average one, while a much greater number insist that it will fall short of one-half. The effect of this general belief will be that the planters, confiding in the limited production and the consequent advance in prices, will delay sending their crops to market. We may, therefore, look for light receipts during the early part of the season at hand. A fall in the price of bagging and bale-rope must also follow.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the evening of the 28th July, by Rev. Otis Saxton, EDMOND R. MITCHEL, of New York, to Miss JEWILDEN A. VINCENT, of Wetumpka, Ala.

OBITUARY.

A FATHER IN ISRAEL FALLEN!

DIED—July 14, in Fayette county, Ala., Rev. JOHN TURNER, in the 79th year of his age. He was born and raised in North Carolina by pious parents, was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1792; made class leader at the time of being received into full connexion six months after an exhorter—six more licensed to preach. He lived a local preacher till 1794, and then joined the Virginia Conference and traveled till 1801, when family afflictions compelled him to locate.

In 1823 he moved to Alabama, in bad health, and settled in Walker county, and after having the advantages of pure water, mountain breezes, with the blessings of God, he regained his health, and rendered effectual services to the Church in that country until the year 1843. He then settled in Green county, Ala., for life, as he then thought, but the dearth there two years ago caused him to move to the place of his death, where he made an impression by his pious walk and godly conversation, which is only for eternity to reveal. Bro. Turner spared no pains to teach his family the precepts of God and the spirit of Methodism. Nor was his labor in vain. All his children, as far as I am acquainted, are parents of piety.

During his illness I visited him frequently. On my first visit he informed me that "all was well;" that he had long since committed himself to the keeping of God, and was only waiting the call of his heavenly Father. The second time I accompanied the family physician, and when he learned that his case was hopeful he said—"Well, brothers, I hope, if I get well, to see the power of God in this country this fall; but I feel now like St. John did when he had grown old in the service of God, and can only exhort the people to love one another." When he took the change for death—"Well," says he, "the time is now come. Prop me up in my bed, and let me talk a little before I leave you." He was propped up, and began talking to his family as follows: "Sons, I have been preaching Jesus and the Resurrection now sixty years. I have enjoyed his smiles and spiritual presence, so as to enable me to keep up the good fight. Now he enables me to meet death without any regret or fear whatever. My temporal matters are all arranged better than ever before in my life, and this seems the most favorable time, on my part, for God to take me from you."

He continued to discourse for some time to the family, and wound up with these words, "Who will take my place at the family altar? If you will take my place there, and serve God in the family, you will prosper; but if not, all will come to naught."

The scene was peculiar—a patriarch of fifty years ministry, with his silver locks falling around his face, his countenance showing that God was with him, his calmness that Heaven was just before, and he preaching Jesus in death!

He is gone, and to-day, no doubt, is in glory, with the many souls whom he had persuaded to put on Christ in this world.

G. W. TUCKER.

The M. E. Church in Dayton, Ala., has recently suffered a great loss in the death of our beloved brother, ADOLPHUS S. CADE.

He was born in Kentucky, April 30, 1811, and died June 17, 1853. About nineteen years since, at a camp-meeting near Springhill, Marengo county, he joined the Church as a seeker of religion, and in the summer following, while traveling for his health in North Alabama, was converted. In a few months he returned home, a sound man in soul and body. Soon thereafter he cheerfully submitted himself, from a sense of duty, to the claims of the Church upon him as a private member. And while his soul was sweetly fed at her altars, he in his turn adorned her doctrines, obeyed her rule, and in his sphere served all her interests. She knew him to be no idler, but an active and zealous member, and hence kept him constantly employed as Steward, Class Leader and S. S. Teacher. And many times, while the burden of responsibility connected with these several offices would tax the physical, and try the spiritual man, yet being sustained by the grace of God, he was ever found equal to the duty. Indeed, he was a model Steward, as those brethren, who at different times have served as his pastor, can testify. He was remarkable as the preachers' guiding friend. In sickness he watched him—in discouragement, cheered him—in perplexity, counseled him—and if needing, he aided him. His house has ever been ready with open doors and warm hearts to receive the minister of the gospel: and doubtless those who have shared his hospitalities, now scattered throughout this and other Conferences, upon receiving this sad intelligence, will send up from their sympathizing hearts an earnest prayer to God to bless his wife and children. Experimental religion was his favorite doctrine—he loved and lived it. In deportment, at home and abroad, he was consistent and uniform—dignified and affable, and in Christian duty prompt and willing. Not a public character in the usual signification, but was extensively known throughout his county as a citizen of fine business qualifications, with an elevated sense of propriety, truth and justice. Feeble in body, but vigorous in mind, with a reliable judgment and an accurate forecast. Of worldly means he was largely possessed, and gave of them liberally to spread and sustain the gospel. As stated by those who knew him most intimately, for six or eight months before his death, his life was more than ever before "hid with Christ in God," imparting joy and peace that were seldom interrupted. Truly, he was ripening for grace, as precious grain for the reaper. In a word, our brother lived to purpose. The world is better for his having been in it, and for years to come, trees of his pious efforts will be seen here and there to call up many pleasing remembrances. At this moment, no doubt, he has a better assurance "that his labor was not in vain in the Lord."

Near three weeks previous to his death he was attacked with a bowel disease; most of the time confined to his bed, but not considered in immediate danger. On the morning of the 16th June, to the surprise of all, his situation foretold a speedy dissolution. He knew that death was approaching, and without, alarm watched its onward movement. Yea, he rejoiced aloud that he was so near his rest. The few hours yet remaining were mostly spent in exhorting friends, religious and irreligious—comforting his afflicted wife and children, and praising God. About six o'clock, P. M., he gave signs of delirium, which increased upon him until after nine o'clock, A. M., of the 17th, when he breathed his last. His was indeed a triumphant death. In his decease the community and Church suffered greatly. But in that he composed of a kind wife, three [illegible] daughters, and an affectionate son, the loss is incalculable. The absence of his cheering smile, fervent prayers, timely admonitions, and general management in domestic affairs, will be long and painfully felt by them. May a kind Father sanctify this bereavement to the good of all, and finally bring us to meet our brother in Heaven.

JAMES N. HEARD.

DIED—at Wetumpka, Ala., on the 11th of July, Mrs. JULIA B. BOISSEAU, a worthy member of the M. E. Church of this place. She gave testimony in her last moments that her faith was strong in the Lord, her Saviour. None knew her but to love her.

OTIS SAXTON.

SARAH E., daughter of William J. and Susannah Hearen, was born the 19th of December, 1850, and died 9th of June, 1853.

Thus early has this sweet little flower passed away, illustrating the brevity and uncertainty of human life. But she is gone to that world of light, of beauty, and of love, where the flowers ever bloom, and where there is no more death.

The stricken and happy parents, with their faith firmly fixed upon the Lord Jesus Christ, may say with assurance—though it cannot come to us, we can go to it. God grant they may do so. Amen.

E. GARRETT.

Mrs. ELIZA ANN BALDWIN, wife of Wm. D. Baldwin, and daughter of James and Tirza Crawford, died in Choctaw county, Ala., July 26, 1853.

The last year of her life was one of severe affliction, being confined to her bed for near seven months. She was anxious to remain with her family, but as she neared the grave, she became better reconciled to death, and in the full exercise of her mental faculties, she expressed her willingness to go, and drew her family and friends around her and requested them to meet her in Heaven.

May Heaven bless and sustain her husband and children, and bring them all to meet her again.

J. M. DELOACH.

Weekly Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of New Orleans, for the week ending at six o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, August 7, 1853:

Yellow Fever	951	Lockjaw	2
Pernicious Fever	9	Trismus Nascentium	1
Malignant Fever	1	Paralysis	1
Black Vomit	8	NERVOUS SYSTEM	39
ERUPTIVE	969	Sore Throat	1
Cholera Asphyxia	1	Bronchitis	1
Diarrhœa	5	Consumption	11
Diarrhœa Chronic	4	Hydrothorax	1
Dysentery	3	RESPIRATORY SYSTEM	14
Dysentery Chronic	2	Disease of Heart	1
Congestive Fever	4	CIRCULATORY SYSTEM	1
" Typhus	1	Gastritis	1
Intermittent Fever	1	Gastro-enteritis	3
" Chronic	1	Enteritis	9
Typhus Fever	1	Enteritis Chronic	2
Typhoid "	5	Enteritis Typhoid	1
Cholera Infantum	2	Ileus	1
Endemic	36	Worms	2
Hooping Cough	3	Ascites	1
Small-pox	1	Jaundice	1
MISCELLANEOUS	4	Hepatitis	1
Marasmus	1	DIGESTIVE SYSTEM	22
Teething	1	Old Age	3
Debility	4	Debilitas Senilis	1
Dropsy	3	OLD AGE	3
Hemorrhage	1	Stillborn	5
Cancer	1	Sun-stroke	2
Cancer in face	1	Drowned	5
Scirrhus	1	CASUALTIES	7
VARIOUS SEAT	13	Delirium Tremens	1
Apoplexy	5	Syphilis	1
Congestion Brain	6	EMPIRICISM	2
Brain Fever	3	Not specified	60
Cerebro Meningitis	1	Unknown	1
Epilepsy	1	Found D	1
Convulsions	18	Not "	1
Tetanus	1
Not stated	1
Tymotic	1
Sporadic	1
External	26
Total	1188

Of whom 95 were under 10 years of age, and 21 colored.

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Weekly report of the Interments in all the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, the 7th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod Street	24	19	5	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	12	9	3	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	10	8	2	—
Potter's Field	110	86	24	—
Charity Hospital	268	232	14	22
St Patrick's	213	146	27	40
Catholic No. 1, Second District	2	1	1	—
Catholic No. 2	29	10	19	—
St Vincent de Paul, Third	199	144	38	7
Lafayette	332	283	40	7
Hebrew, Fourth District	12	10	2	—
Total	1199	970	175	54

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Saturday, the 6th inst.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	5	4	1	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	1	—	1	—
Odd Fell Rest	3	3	—	—
Potter's Field	24	17	4	3
Charity Hospital	45	35	—	10
St. Patrick's	31	18	3	10
Catholic No. 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
" No. 2	2	2	—	—
St. Vincent de Paul, Third Dist	55	43	9	3
Lafayette, Fourth District	71	60	11	1
Hebrew, "	3	2	1	—
Total	241	185	34	17

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

Daily Report for the interments in all the Cemeteries for the twenty four hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, 7th inst.:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	5	3	2	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	5	4	1	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	1	1	—	—
Potter's Field	18	12	5	—
Charity Hospital	45	32	3	—
St. Patrick's	29	24	5	1
Catholic No 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic No 2, " "	5	3	2	—
St. V. de Paul, Third "	33	19	13	1
Lafayette, " "	67	57	8	2
Hebrew, Fourth District	—	—	—	—
Total	209	165	40	4

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board of Health

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Monday, August 8, 1853.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	9	8	1	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove, Ridge	6	3	3	—
Odd Fellow Rest "	1	—	1	—
Potter's field	14	12	2	—
Charity Hospital "	46	43	3	—
St Patricks "	56	24	4	10
Catholic, No. 1, Second District	2	—	2	—
Catholic, No. 2, " "	5	3	2	—
St. V. de Paul, Third District	25	21	4	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	78	74	3	1
Hebrew, " "	5	5	—	—
Total	228	193	24	11

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Secretary Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Tuesday, 9th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	5	3	2	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	6	4	1	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	1	1	—	—
Potterfield	20	18	2	—
Charity Hospital	34	32	1	1
St. Patrick's	31	25	—	6
Catholic, No. 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic, No. 2	2	2	—	—
St. Vincent de Paul, Third District	40	31	8	1
Lafayette	46	43	3	—
Hebrew, Fourth District	3	3	—	—
Total	193	164	20	9

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Wednesday, the 10th inst.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	8	7	1	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	11	8	3	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	—	—	—	—
Potterfield	55	46	9	—
Charity Hospital	32	30	1	1
St Patrick's	37	28	8	1
Catholic, No 1 Second District	4	2	1	1
Catholic, No 2 "	5	2	3	—
St V de Paul, Third Distict	58	52	3	3
Lafayette, Fourth District	50	43	7	—
Hebrew "	7	6	1	—
Total	224	186	33	5

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Thursday, the 11th inst.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	—	—	—	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	8	8	—	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	—	—	—	—
Potterfield	51	45	5	1
Charity Hospital	54	53	1	—
St Patrick's	28	19	3	6
Catholic, No 1, Second District	2	2	—	—
Catholic No 2 "	1	—	1	—
St V de Paul, Third District	40	37	1	2
Lafayette, Fourth District	31	28	3	—
Hebrew "	2	2	—	—
Total	217	197	14	6

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report for the twenty four hours ending at 12 o'clock on Monday night, the 9th inst.:

Admissions, 107; Discharges, 39; Deaths 40; Deaths of Yellow Fever, 37.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this Institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock, Tuesday night:

Admissions 86; discharges 50; deaths 53—of which 51 were of yellow fever.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this Institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock, Wednesday night:

Admissions, 83; Discharges, 44; Yellow Fever deaths, 45; Other Deaths, 2.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

MOBILE COMING TO THE RESCUE.—Our Mobile friends have made upon a purse to be expended for the sick by the Howard Association. The purse arrived yesterday, accompanied by the following letter:

MOBILE, August 9, 1853.

DEAR SIR—Enclosed please find a check drawn by the Southern Bank of Alabama on the Louisiana State Bank of New Orleans for $1800. You will please accept it from the citizens of Mobile for the use of your noble society to be expended as you may consider best for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic now prevailing in your city.

The amount was collected by the undersigned within a period of twenty-four hours, and their only regret is that it is not sufficiently large to attest the full sympathy of our people in your behalf.

A. A. SASSAMAN,
A. J. MCLLANEY,
JAS. W. LAND,
A. M. QUIBLEY.

To D. I. RICARDO, New Orleans.

FURTHER DONATIONS TO THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.—We have learned with much pleasure that the Bank of Louisiana has presented the Association with $1000.

The Trustees of the Home Mutual Insurance Company of this city have, from their private purses, presented to the Society $500, viz, $100 from the President and $50 from eight others. The nature of their charter prevents donations from the fund; but the Trustees answered to the call of humanity from their own coffers.

The ladies, residing at Dr. Teagarden's have made up the sum of $105 for the Association, which was forwarded to Mr. Knrscheedt with the following letter:

MISSISSIPPI CITY, August 10, 1853.

Sir—The ladies residing at Dr. Teagarden's deeply sympathize with the afflicted poor in New Orleans, and beg leave to present through you to the Howard Association the enclosed amount of $105, humbly trusting that it may in some degree add to the comfort and supply the wants of at least a few of those who depend alone on the kind efforts of your society for relief.

May you, sirs, reap a rich reward for your humanity, is the prayer of each one who has contributed to this cause.

Very respectfully, C.

Mr. G. KURSCHEEDT.

INTERESTING TO SLAVEHOLDERS.—From the Mobile Register of the 10th inst. we learn that Chief Justice Chilton, of the Alabama Supreme Court, has rendered the following decision, which must be interesting to slaveholders:

1. When the contract of hiring, as reduced to writing, is general in its terms, not restricting the employment of the slave to any particular business; the bailee is authorized to employ him in any business to which slaves are ordinarily put, and which is not attended with extraordinary risk or peril to his life or health, and parol proof is not admissible to show that the slave was only to be employed in a particular business.

2. The hirer of a slave may re-hire to him another, being responsible to the owner for his proper treatment, and for his not being employed otherwise than is authorized by the scope of his original contract of hiring.

3. If the hirer employs the slave in a hazardous business, not warranted by his contract, or re-hires him to another, to be employed in such hazardous business, and the slave, while thus employed, is killed, even by inevitable accident, the owner may regard such misuse of his slave as a conversion, and recover the value from the hirer.

ARKANSAS RAILROAD.—A Convention was held at Helena (Ark.) to promote the building of a railroad through North Mississippi, crossing at Helena, by the way of Little Rock to the Pacific ocean. The Convention recommended the subscription of $100,000 worth of stock by the citizens of Phillips county.

The steamer James L. Day arrived yesterday from Key West, via St. Marks and Tampa Bay. By this arrival we have Appalachicola dates of the 4th inst. An election for municipal officers had been held in Appalachicola, and resulted in the election of F. Banezet for Mayor. There was no news of importance.

MISSISSIPPI BONDS.—The High Court of Errors and Appeals of the State of Mississippi has decided that the State is bound to pay the bonds of the Union Bank, and that no act of the Legislature, nor vote of the people, can effect the question.

FIRST BALE OF COTTON AT MOBILE.—The steamboat Agila arrived at Mobile on Monday, from Demopolis, with a bale of new cotton, raised on the plantation of Mr. George Breitling, of Marengo county, Ala. This is the first bale of cotton received at Mobile the present season.

CROPS IN MISSISSIPPI.—The Canton Madisonian of the 4th inst. says:

This is so critical a period in the life of our great staple crop, that we think it advisable that we should keep our readers at a distance advised of its progress and condition. It now presents a growing and luxuriant look, but we regret to say the weather continues so showery it is impossible to tell, with anything like probability, to what it is tending. If the month of August should continue wet, the cotton in this region will be worthless.

The cotton moth, the progenitor of the boll worm, has not as yet made its appearance in numbers at all alarming.

Louisiana Interior.

THE WEATHER, CROPS AND HEALTH. The Opelousas Whig, of the 6th inst., says:

We have had some bright and pleasant days during the present week. The nights have been quite pleasant. An occasional shower has fallen, but they seemed not to have been very general. Cane is growing finely. Cotton looks large and healthy, but it is devoid of bolls. The yield must be very light. We understand from visitors, from above, that the army worm is making its appearance on some of the plantations in the neighborhood of Homesville.

This is the weather for them.

Health was never better at this season.

The Bayou Sara Ledger, of Saturday last, says:

The health of Bayou Sara continues good. There has been no sickness of any consequence for the last six months, and not one case of yellow fever.

The Pointe-Coupee Echo, of Saturday last, says:

So far in the summer, the general health of this parish has been remarkably good. We have had no epidemic of any description, and the cases of fever that do occur are mild and easily managed. Strange to say, we have always less to complain of, with regard to sickness, in seasons unusually wet like the present.

We regret to be obliged to announce that the cotton crop of this parish cannot possibly be a full one this year. For months we have noticed that it was very backward; more so indeed than any that has fallen under our observation since our attention has been directed to this subject; but might have been made up by a late fall. Now, however, under the influence of the unparalleled wet weather which we have had since the 1st of July, the plant is shedding its bolls and forms to an alarming extent, and rust and rot are in many places destroying those that remain. The weather is still unsettled.

The Echo learns that the Swamp Land Commissioners finding that the State Auditor persisted in his determination of not auditing any of their orders on the Treasury, resolved to raise $30,000 on their personal security, in order that the contemplated improvements might no longer be delayed. Notes to the above amounts were made, and mutually endorsed by them, and sent to one of the banks for discount.

The Echo says:

We cannot speak in too high terms of the public spirit which prompted this energetic movement, and which we have no doubt will be successful in furnishing the Commissioners with fun is to make at least the necessary surveys, and a commencement of the important works in which this portion of the State is so much interested.

The Baton Rouge Vis-a-Vis, of the 10th inst., says:

In all parts of our parish the crops are growing finely, with the exception of the cotton, which has been somewhat injured by the late rains. Already, our planters are getting in their wood, repairing their sugar houses, repairing kettles, etc., preparatory for the grinding season.

An old planter stated to us yesterday that he thought the present crops the finest ever grown in this parish.

FROM HAVANA.—A letter to the Mobile Register, dated Havana, August 3, says:

"The three American seamen, held for being engaged in the service of the slaver Jasper, are yet in prison, and the recipients of as much brutal treatment as can well be invented for them by Spanish malignity. It has been ascertained by the Government that five of the six American seamen that were concealed upon the Cayo Cortes are yet there, but it has not been convenient to bring them to Havana. There seems here to be no doubt that these unfortunate men have been deceived originally in their shipment to New York, and that they have in fact been guilty of no crime against the laws of Spain—certainly not against her customs. In looking for the sailors of the Jasper, and for the vessel which was sunk near the point where her negroes were landed, the officers made discovery of a Spanish slaver, the brig Umva Empresa, which had a few days previous effected a landing of or near the same point with the Jasper. They captured also the crew of the vessel with considerable trouble, and they are now in prison in this city, which makes the first attempt to punish their own people for a long period."

CONCENTRATED MOLASSES.—With regard to the importation of sugar from Cuba, under the name of concentrated molasses, we take the following from the New York Herald's "Talk on Change," of the 1st inst.:

"The planters of Louisiana had complained to the Government regarding this practice, and the Secretary of the Treasury had issued his circular, directing sugar duties to be collected on all such half-boiled preparations, hereafter, at all our ports, and had signified his intention of making reclamations on importers for several years past, for payment of duties on that hitherto introduced, which would amount to a large sum. It was thought that the house at St. Louis was not the only one concerned in refining sugar from such materials introduced in a similar way. It was not clear, however, that the transaction was not perfectly legal under the tariff law as it existed, and that the Secretary might fail in his attempt at reclamation. The importers might also disregard his circular, and pay the new duties under protest. The able Secretary, however, would likely call upon Congress to amend the law, and thus effectually cut off this practice, considered injurious to planters and to other importers and refiners who took a different view of the subject."

The Mobile built ship, Wm. R. Hallett, returned to that port on Sunday last leaking badly. The Register of the 9th inst. says:

She had been out seventeen days, and in the beginning of her voyage made excellent headway; but after five days began to leak slightly. Still two hours at the pumps cleared her, but a continuance of bad weather and adverse winds made her spring a fresh leak that required eight hours at the pumps. All that good seamanship could do, was done to find and stop the leak, but in vain. In this extremity she was within about 120 miles of Key West; but that was dead to windward. In her condition this distance could not be accomplished, and discretion no less than legal requirement demanded a return to the nearest and most convenient port. This was Mobile, for which alone the winds proved favorable. Captain Smith speaks highly of the sailing qualities of his ship, and the leak was evidently caused by the difficulties of the passage, irrespective of her condition before starting.

THE GIRARD RAILROAD.—A meeting in behalf of the Girard and Mobile Railroad was held in Columbus on Saturday, the 30th ult. A resolution instructing the City Council to subscribe $150,000, in addition to previous subscriptions, was passed with only three dissenting votes. There are now wanting, according to the exhibit made by the friends of the company, but $54,000 to pay for the completion of the road from Columbus to Union Springs, the distance of sixty-two and a half miles. From Columbus to Colbert, twenty-two and a half miles, it is understood that the locomotive will be running some time during the next season. The company has already on hand, "all paid for," an engine and five cars.

When the road is finished to the Union Springs, the chief interest of Columbus in the enterprize will cease. It is yet, we think, very uncertain whether it will for many years go beyond that point. The Mobile subscription of a million of dollars is controlled by such conditions as leave it doubtful whether the company can make it available. In the first place the bonds for that amount are not allowed to be issued until Mobile receives sufficient guaranties that the road will be finished, in three years, from Union Springs to Greenville, a distance of fifty-eight miles. In the second place, the Mobile subscription can only be expended between that city and Greenville: indeed, will probably all of it be required to complete the first twenty miles of the road from Mobile, as two shiftless rivers, (the Mobile and Tensaw,) spreading out into the broad swamps, have to be crossed within a short distance of that city. From Mobile to Greenville, the distance is, we believe, a hundred and fifteen miles. [Savannah Georgian.

NORTH CAROLINA LEAD.—A rich deposit of lead, it is said, has been discovered in Davidson county, North Carolina. Arrangements for working the mines are being made by a very energetic citizen of that county.

News from Mexico

The Vera Cruz papers officially announce a meeting which took place at Guanajuato among the troops on the 24th July, promoted by the Captain of the first active battalion of the State, Don Jose M. Jordan, and the Lieutenant of the same corps, Don Clemente Cabeza de Baca. The object of it has not been distinctly ascertained. The General Commandant was for a time placed in prison, and loud acclamations were raised against the Government.

This did not, however, prevent him from taking immediate steps for its suppression, and using the influence he possessed with the soldiery to induce them to return to order, and succeeded to such an extent as to leave the belligerents denuded of much of the force they collected on at the beginning. Finding themselves disappointed the ringleaders fled, and quiet was restored to the city at three o'clock of the same day.

Some soldiers were killed in the confusion consequent upon the consternation into which they were thrown, from the desertion of their chiefs.

The principals have not yet been apprehended, but all the necessary steps have been taken by the Government to effect their capture.

The Governor and General Commandant, in an address subsequently to the people, informs them that they have nothing to fear from the outbreak of perfidy of the two subalterns who seduced the troops from their duty, and states also that the sergeants and some of the soldiers of the rebel corps will meet with capital punishment.

President Santa Anna has issued a decree, ensuing to cease in all the Republic of Mexico the Juntas de fomento, and placing the administration of the matters in the hands of a Ministry de fomento, colonizacion, industria y commercio.

LEGATIONS.—It is announced that El Sr. Lic Bejarano has been named Secretary of the Mexican Legation, going to Vera Cruz, New Granada and Ecuador, and El Sr. Don Jose Montinez de Castro Clerk of the same Legation.

President Santa Anna addressed the President of the Republic of Guatemala, informing him officially of his call to the Government of Mexico, and assuring him that he will omit nothing in his endeavors to extend the friendly relations mutually beneficial to the two Republics.

President Carrera, in reply, congratulates Santa Anna on the merited confidence reposed in him by his fellow-countrymen and expresses himself also to the effect that he will always be found disposed to contribute his part in preserving the union of the two people; convinced as he is, that their interests and necessities call upon them to conserve the best understanding.

TELEGRAPH.—On the 11th of July, telegraphic communication was established with Silao and Leon, and the 14th, with Guanajuato. This improvement was received with much joy.

El Senor D. Benito de la Elata has returned to his office of Secretary to the Government of Durango.

El Senor D. Thomas Pietro has been named Commissary of War and Marine.

Further Details from Texas.

We select the following from the San Antonio Ledger of the 28th ult.

LATE REMOVAL OF INDIANS.—We learn from Capt. Ogden, who arrived here on the 19th inst., nine days from Fort Washita, that all the United States Indians, ordered out of this State, had arrived safely at their several points of destination, with the exception of the Delawares, who had entered into treaty with the Chickasaws, their old allies, for a permanent settlement of their people. The Chickasaw and Delaware Chiefs being responsible for the good behaviour of the Delawares, and in case of their becoming obnoxious or troublesome to the Chickasawa they are to be removed to their own territory without further expense to the Government of the United States.

No trouble was experienced with these Indians until after crossing the Trinity, when assistance from Fort Worth became necessary. Again, on Red River, troops from Fort Washita had to be sent for, but the treaty entered into with Edmund Pickings, Chief of the Chickasaws, prevented an entire breaking up and return of the Delawares to Texas. Some seven Cherokees entered their camp in the nation, soon after the troops from Washita had left, bidding defiance to the agent and the troops at the post. An express was despatched after the command under Lieut. N. Burt. Penree, who, by marching all night, got back by daylight and surprised the Indians by surrounding their fire, and, with bayonets presented, demanded their surrender. An attempt was made to resist, but the close proximity of the bayonet soon cooled their courage. All were taken prisoners, their whisky kegs knocked in the head; their horses, packs, arms, etc., under the laws of the nation, were condemned, and before Capt. Ogden left, all were on the march for Van Buren, where a reward of $200 per head awaited their delivery.

Lieut. Penreo is entitled to much credit for the energy displayed in this affair. For two nights and days he was on duty without sleep, and although jaded and worn out he took the road and returned in time to make prisoners of them all. This prompt action on his part saved the agent much trouble and difficulty, and rendered the frontier of Texas on Red river much service by the arrest of these desperadoes.

These Indians only the day before had been fired on by the people in Princeton in consequence of an attack made by them on some of their citizens.

We further learn that a sale of the government train was advertised to be held on the 16th inst. In the meantime, Col. Capron, Agent, had gone to Fort Arbuckle with some Comanches to recover, if possible, from the Kickapoos, some stolen horses. Col. C. we understand would leave immediately after the sale, and in all probability will be here by the 1st prox. It is a source of felicitation that those Indians are removed at last. It has long been a complaint on the part of the native Indians that the Delawares and others have done more injury to the game than all the native tribes. Their superior skill in firearms gives them great advantage; and besides, the foreign Indians, just removed, have been in the habit of destroying game for their hides alone.

TEXAS GOLD MINES.—The Houston Telegraph says a report was circulated on the frontier that the Mining Company that started from Washington a few weeks since for Grand Quivira have been destroyed by Indians. This report has since been contradicted. A gentleman who met with the company above the settlements says they were all in fine health, and confident that their guide, Mr. Stewart, would lead them to mines far more valuable than any that have been discovered in California.

ALABAMA ELECTION.—Full returns from the Fourth Congressional District show the re-election of Wm. R. Smith (Union dem.) He was opposed by Sydenham Moore (Southern Rights dem.) and S. J. Hale (whig). The vote was as follows: Moore 2672; Hale 2596.

The Mobile Tribune gives the following list of the members of Congress elected: First District, Phillips, (dem.;) Second District, Abercrombie, (independent whig;) Third District, Harris, (dem.;) Fourth District, Smith, (dem;) Fifth District, Houston, (dem.;) Sixth District, ——, (Cobb and Clay, both democrats, are candidates. The Montgomery Advertiser thinks Clay is elected;) Seventh District, Dowdell, (dem.)

The Montgomery Advertiser, of the 6th inst., in noticing the election returns received, remarks:

It is hardly necessary to say that Col. John Anthony Winston, the regular democratic nominee, is triumphantly elected. He has received large majorities in nearly all the counties in the State.

AMERICAN SILK.—At Newport, Kentucky, opposite Cincinnati, there is an unpretending silk factory. It employs some half dozen or more laborers, with five looms, and some 150 spindles, consuming annually several hundred weight of raw silk. The manufactures are pocket handkerchiefs, cravats, vestings, and plain and plaid silks.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Judge Sharkey and the Slave Trade.

WASHINGTON, August 6.

The Hon. Wm. L. Sharkey has published a card refuting certain charges that has been made against him. He denies all connection with the affair of the Lady Suffolk, declares that he never sent a letter to the Mexican Consul, recommending him to grant a passport to the ship Mary, and defies his accusers to find any such document on the files of the Mexican Consul's office at Havana.

New Postal Treaty.

WASHINGTON, August 6.

The Postmaster General and the Bremen Minister yesterday signed the new postal between those two Governments, by which the postage is reduced to ten cents for a single rate.

Kentucky Elections.

LOUISVILLE, August 6.

The election in this State has resulted in the choice of six whigs and four democrats for Congress.

Sailing of the Atlantic—Distinguished Passengers.

NEW YORK, August 6.

The Collins steamer Atlantic sailed today for Liverpool. Among her passengers are the Hon. Pierre Soule, Minister to Spain; Hon. James Buchanan, Minister to England; Mr. Sickells, Mr. Campbell, Consul at Rotterdam, and Mr. Barnwell, Consul at Amsterdam.

FURTHER BY THE NIAGARA.

NEW YORK, August 5.

The following are additional items by the Niagara:

Russia and Turkey.

The Russian Chancellor is said to have declared to the French Embassador, at St. Petersburg, that the Czar would welcome an early arrangement of the existing difficulties. The only cause of delay at the time was the necessity of obtaining the consent of Austria, which was already on its way to St. Petersburg.

A rumor has been in circulation in Paris that the American Minister at Constantinople, had addressed a note to the Porte, announcing that the Government of the United States would support the integrity of Turkey, on condition that the United States should henceforth have a voice in the direction of Turkish affairs.

The Affair at Smyrna.

Colonel Costa was landed in chains from the brig of war, at Smyrna, and guarded by a company of Austrian marines from the vessel to the office of the French Minister. A letter from Smyrna says that the conduct of Capt. Ingraham in this matter has excited indescribable indignation (!) The information that France and England had offered to mediate caused a considerable improvement in the funds (!)

Hungarian Prisoners.

A late letter from Pesth states that seven cart-loads of Hungarian prisoners had just been brought into that city. The offences with which they were charged were not made known.

Short Crop in Barbary.

Letters from Tunis bring the information that the export of breadstuffs from Barbary has been prohibited, in consequence of apprehensions of a deficiency in the crops.

Commercial Activity.

The report that the Czar had accepted the terms proposed by the French Government, had produced much activity in the markets generally in England and France.

Chinese Affairs.

The insurgents in China have translated the Bible, and have circulated it very extensively throughout the Empire. The book produces intense excitement wherever circulated, and there is a serious likelihood that it will lead to the destruction of the Tartar race. The city of Nankin is reported to be in a state of ruins (!) The insurgents are preparing to march upon Pekin as soon as they receive certain expected re-inforcements

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SONG OF THE WORM.

BY ALF. BURNETT, OF CINCINNATI

I am king of the realm down under the sod
Where supremely I reign on earth-worm clod.
For no one is here to dispute my sway,
Down in my kingdom—down deep in the clay!

I've ruled over it long—this realm of the dead,
On the dust of monarchs and kings do I tread;
Far greater than death—far greater am I,
I reign over him—where his dead doth lie!

I have for my sceptre a polished bone,
And of human skulls is fashioned my throne;
My subjects outnumber the sands on the shore,
And to my kingdom each day bringeth more!

The old and the young, the bond and the free,
The rich and the poor, all hasten to me;
The fame of my kingdom is spread far and near,
And thousands are waiting to journey down here!

Oh! how I'll revel beneath the grey stones,
And march up and down amid the white bones!
While the mourners above—ah! little they know
Of the monarch-worm and his kingdom below!

But soon they'll come where my feast is spread
And the living and loving shall be with the dead.
And I'll glory in watching their slow decay
And the flesh from their white bones wasting away

SIXTEEN DAYS
LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.
ARRIVAL OF THE PROMETHEUS.

By the steamer Prometheus, which arrived Sunday morning from San Juan, which port she left on the 1st instant, we have California papers of the 16th ult. From the Placer Times and Transcript (San Francisco) we make up the following summary:

CELEBRATION OF THE FOURTH.—By no means the least interesting event of the fortnight just closing, was the celebration of the anniversary of American Independence. Throughout the State (San Francisco) the occasion was observed with much enthusiasm. In this city the military, in conjunction with their guests, the Sutter Rifles, of Sacramento, and with a portion of the fire department, made a grand display, and the First California Battalion were the recipients of a superbly-wrought national flag, presented by Mrs. Catherine N. Sinclair, who accompanied the gift with an eloquent speech, and was appropriately responded to by the California pioneer, Major General Sutter. The citizens almost universally entered into the spirit of the occasion with a degree of patriotic zeal we have seldom seen equaled, and the day was passed in the utmost rejoicing. Few accidents throughout the State, and none of a very serious character, marred the jubilee.

AGRICULTURE.—The agricultural prospects of the State are very gratifying. The wheat harvesting is under way, and the aggregate crop promises to be good. From some sections, however, we hear complaint of the rust. The barley, oats and potato crops are also unprecedentedly large.

MINING.—From the mining sections we learn that a falling off in the gold product may be expected, owing to the excessively hot weather, and the incomplete state of water improvements. No diminution of product is observable, however, in proportion to the labor bestowed, and we hear of no discouragement among the mining population.

ELECTION OF GENERAL LANE.—Acconnts from Oregon confirm the reported success of the democratic party throughout the Territory, and the election of Gen. Lane to Congress. Times were prosperous, and considerable excitement existed in certain districts consequent upon new gold discoveries.

STRIKES AMONG THE MECHANICS.—Strikes have reached the land of gold, and organizations are forming in San Francisco for sustaining equitable rates of wages in most of the mechanic pursuits, as well as for ordinary laborers. The hod-carriers demand five dollars per day, and carpenters are likely to fix upon eight dollars as their regular remuneration.

POLITICAL.—In State politics the past fortnight has been prolific of incident, the Whig Convention at Sacramento having selected a ticket comprising the following nominations:

For Governor, William Waldo; for Lt. Governor, Henry Eno of Calaveras; for Justice of the Supreme Court, Tod Robinson of Secramento; for Attorney General, David K. Newell of El Dorado; for Comptroller, Gilbert E. Winters of Yuba; for Treasurer, Samuel Knight of San Joaqnin; for Surveyor General, Selim E. Woodworth of Monterey; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, Sherman Day of Santa Clara.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES.—Two very destructive fires have occurred in the interior since the last steamer advices. French Corral, a very thrifty mining town in Yuba county, was almost laid waste on the night of July 8. Fifty thousand dollars' worth of property was estimated to have been consumed. On the 12th of July the town of Ophir, in Placer county, suffered from a still more disastrous visitation. Only a few buildings were left in the place, and the lose is set down at $80,000.

MARRIAGE OF LOLA MONTEZ.—Among the domestic incidents of the times in California, the marriage of the celebrated Lola Montez will attract the most attention. This distinguished lady again united herself in the bonds of wedlock on the 1st of July, the happy young man being Patriek Purdy Hull, Esq., formerly of Ohio, and for the past four years engaged in the newspaper business in San Francisco. Mr. Hull was a fellow passenger with the fascinating Countess on her journey to California, and the acquaintance then formed, fast ripened into an attachment which terminated fatally to his bachelorhood. The nuptials were consummated at the Holy Church of the Mission Dolores, in presence of a select party, among whom were Beverly C. Saunders, Esq., Judge Wells, James E. Wainright, A. Bartol, Esq., Louis R. Lull, P. A. Brinsmade, and other prominent citizens. The bride and groom have since visited Sacramento, and are now in domestic retirement in San Francisco.

LOTTERIES.—A specious and despicable evasion of the anti-lottery law has been practiced to a shameful extent in San Francisco, during the past two or three months. Schemes, in the aggregate amounting to two or three hundred thousand dollars, have been successfully carried through; but the better class of community has condemned the business, and there is a prospect that it will not longer flourish.

THE OVERLAND EMIGRATION.—The first of the overland emigration of the present year, arrived in Sacramento on the 4th July. The party consisted of twelve persons, headed by Capt. Isaac Evans, and were from Galena, Illinois. They left the Western frontier of Missouri on the 20th April and met with little molestation from Indians. The early part of the journey was impeded by deep snow. The winter had been terribly severe on the plains. Humboldt river was found very high, and the ordinary river road overflown. From this canee it was thought the early emigrants would find much difficulty in procuring grass for their stock. A number of Salt Lake trains, with considerable herds of cattle, had already arrived in Carson Valley, on the Eastern side of the Sierra Nevada.

FROM THE MORMON TERRITORY.—Dates from Salt Lake City are to the 14th June. Heavy rains had fallen, which, with the melting of the snows on the mountains, had done some injury to roads and crops. In some parts of the Valley, grasshoppers had been very destructive to vegetation. The Legislature convened on the 1st June, sat three days, passed ten acts and adjourned. The expedition sent out to treat with the hostile Indians had returned, after having partially effected their object.

FINANCES OF SAN FRANCISCO.—The Commissioners of the Funded Debt have presented their second annual report, from which it appears that the total amount of the funded debt of San Francisco is $1,517,652 00; $92,000 was redeemed in 1852, and so far this year $22,000. A further sum of $10,000 will be redeemed during the present month. The real estate sold at auction by the Commissioners during the past year netted $216,085 95, from the proceeds of which there has been cancelled of the old floating debt of the city $188,890 82. The Commissioners believe there is still outstanding more than $30,000 of old three per cent scrip, which should be paid as soon as possible. The long pending difficulties with the lessees of Market and California street wharves have been advantageously settled. In the matter of the Pacific street and Broadway wharves, they are still in litigation.

FRAUD ON THE REVENUE.—James Collier has been indicted for misdemeanor in the appropriation to private uses of $200,000 of the revenue received during his Collectorship, and the investigation now proceeding in the case of T. Butler King, his successor, upon charges of a like malfeasance.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.—From the upper San Joaquin there are accounts of destructive fires among the crops of wheat, barley and new-mown hay. The Indians of that section were quiet.

Horse stealing is again greatly in vogue over the country, and nothing but a "vigilant" execution of the law seems likely to check the crime.

All parts of the State are healthy, and passengers arrive in better condition than at any period of the past two years.

The number of vessels arrived at the port of San Francisco during the fortnight was eighty: of which twenty were from Atlantic parts, three from Chili, three from China, one from Australia, eight from the Sandwich and Friendly Islands, four from other foreign, and the rest from Oregon and domestic coast ports.

CALIFORNIA MARKETS.—The importations of merchandise, particularly of provisions, have been heavy, and the market is greatly overstocked with every description. The stock of flour in the country is estimated at one hundred and thirteen thousand barrels, with some seventy thousand barrels more on the way from Eastern ports, on vessels which sailed prior to June 1st. Recent importations, however, have found out so badly, that a superfine article has advanced in price, and inspected Haxall and Chili brands are firm at $14 50 to $15 50 per bbl. The cargo of Gallego and Haxall, by the Courser from New York, (5,000 bbls.) has gone into store, $15 25 per bbls. having been refused for it, subject to inspection. The sales of the fortnight embrace about 27,000 bbls. of all descriptions. Much of the flour arriving is damaged, owing to haste in putting up for shipment.

Large quantities of provisions have been received, but prices seem well sustained. Pork, $28 to $30; Hams, 18 to 20c; Lard, 12½ to 14c; Butter, 22 to 25c; Cheese, 17 to 18c; Beef, $26 to $29; Clear Bacon Sides, 16 to 17c per lb.

Lumber, both Eastern and Domestic, has improved under the influence of increased Building, and prices begin to approximate to cost and charges.

For staple Dry Goods there is an active demand, but prices do not exceed what the article can be laid down for. Foreign goods are dull of sale, and are not paying cost and charges. The supply of clothing is superabundant, and no description is paying.

Money matters, owing mainly to the enormous sums necessary to meet freight charges, and an overstocked general market, are stringent. On undoubted securities, money is worth two and a half to three per cent per month.

Late from China and the Sandwich Islands.

FROM CHINA.—Recently received intelligence from China, confirming the reported success of the revolutionists, and the Christian character of the religion they profess, has elicited much interest in this quarter. The advantages likely to result to the civilized world, from the opening of the ports in China to foreign commerce, and particularly with regard to the relative position of California with that country, are beginning to be appreciated by our citizens. A series of lectures now in progress of delivery by Rev. Mr. Speer, who was formerly a missionary in China, delineating the manners, customs, and religion of Asiatics, meets with thronged attendance.

FROM AUSTRALIA.—The latest news from Australia is to the 6th of April. It is interesting mainly in a commercial point of view. Merchandise of almost every description was becoming scarce, and provisions in particular were needed. The prices quoted, however, scarcely indicated the great scarcity complained of. Flour was commanding about the same rates as in this market. Much disappointment was being experienced and expressed by newly arrived immigrants in regard to the productiveness of mines. The journals attribute this rather to the overwrought expectations of the new comers, than any falling off in the yield of the precious metals. They unite in condemning the exaggerated statements sent abroad, particularly by the English press, in regard to the productiveness of the colonial gold field.

DEPRAVED STATE OF SOCIETY IN AUSTRALIA. It is said there are about 500 English convicts from Van Dieman's Land in Melbourne, Australia, and vicinity, and on meeting a man in the street, think nothing of presenting a pistol to his breast and demanding his money. A letter from Melbourne to the Newark Advertiser, after recording numerous assassinations, says:

"In going to Forest Creek, Campbell's Creek, Bendigo and Golden diggings, you pass through what is called the Black Forest, a dease and thick wood, about twelve miles in length. The other day, while four of us were passing through this forest, we found thirty-five who had been stuck up, (that is, robbed and then tied up to a tree,) and one poor fellow, who unfortunately had but thirteen shillings and sixpence, was tied to a tree and his body filled with shot, which they had fired at him, I suppose, because he had no more. They also 'stuck up' a young lady within sight of her father's house. This was never done here before, and accordingly you may judge of the state of society."

Arrival of the Philadelphia.

LATE NEWS FROM PANAMA, SOUTH AMERICA AND AUSTRALIA.

The U. S. Mail steamship Philadelphia, Lieut. J. McKinetry, U. S. N., commanding, arrived here Monday evening from Aspinwall, with the California mails and passengers which came from San Francisco by the Pacific mail steamship John L. Stephens.

The Stephens brought, besides her passengers and mails, $1,800,000 in gold dust on freight, which went to New York on the U. S. Mail steamship Illinois.

The roads over the Isthmus were in fair condition, and the health, both of Panama and Aspinwall, was remarkably good.

The California papers by the Philadelphia were anticipated by the Prometheus.

The Philadelphia brought us files of Kingston (Jamaica) papers to the 28th ult., Panama papers to 25th ult., and dates from Aspinwall to the 1st inst.

From the Aspinwall Courier, of the 1st inst., we learn that the health of the Isthmus had been generally good, and that of the city of Aspinwall much better than usual at this season of the year.

Business had been very dull, owing to the small number of passengers in transit.

Gold mining is creating an excitement on the Isthmus.

An English company has bought a gold mine on the river Barbara, a tributary of the river Atrato, and is now preparing to work it.

Intelligence from San Juan del Sur to a late date, informs us that the place was very sickly and that the black vomit had broken out, and proved fatal in several cases.

FROM AUSTRALIA.

Dates by the Lallah Rookh, arrived at Panama, are to the 13th April, that vessel arrived at Valparaiso in sixty-two days from Sydney.

The following are the amounts brought down by the Government escort:

From Sofola 953 ounces, from Tambaroura 461, from Merlo 743, from Mudgee 234, by other conveyance 953 from Sofola, 316 from Tambaroura. Further from Mount Alexander 17,437 ounces gold, and 29,000.

The Liverpool Mining Company were making great progress; gold dust in the mines was worth from £3. 11s. 6d. to £3 15s. 6d. Flour from £35 to £40 per ton, and the price of all classes of food was kept at a high rate by monopolists, which state of things was, however, not expected to last long. The price of flour in Port Phillip was £32 per ton, barley $6 fanega, wheat $6 fanega, cognac $8.

The Lalla Rookh is reported to have orders to load with flour and wheat at Valparaiso for Sydney.

FROM PERU.

From Peru the news is interesting, affairs between that country and Bolivia are daily approaching a state of warfare, although no actual outbreak has yet taken place.

The first act of hostility was the stoppage of 600 horses in Bolivia, destined for the Peruvian Government, (already noticed.) The second: the seizure by Peru of Peruvian bark stored in Arica, and belonging to Bolivia. The third: the decree of Peru levying 40 per cent. transit duty on all merchandise passing through that country for Bolivia, and vice versa. Fourth: the decree of Bolivia to coin Hard Dollars for export. Fifth: the seizure of Cobija by Peru, thus cutting off all communication between Bolivia and the Pacific, Cobija being the only port of the Government.

This port was entered by two vessels and 200 men. There was no resistance offered, the guns of the fort having been previously shipped to Valparaiso for safe keeping, and the Bolivian garrison and authorities having vacated the place upon the appearance of the Peruvian forces before the harbor. This event has not, however, in any way interrupted the trade of Cobija, nor has the communication with the interior been placed under any restriction; the only difference at present being a change from Bolivian to Peruvian authorities.

On the seizure of Cobija by Peru, Gen. Belzu ordered all Bolivians to retire from the frontier, and at ones made preparations to guard against an invasion.

In making this capture the Peruvians have evidently made a false step; and if they attempt to succeed in further into Bolivia, there is every probability of their being speedily defeated.

Belzu has issued a decree, ordering preparations for war; declaring an absolute interdiction on all commercial traffic between Peru and Bolivia; and ordering all goods in transitu, between one country and the other, to be seized. All citizens of Bolivia are prohibited passing out of their own territory. All individual or epistolary communication between the two Republics is also stopped.

A proclamation has been issued by Gen. Belzu, calling upon the people to prepare themselves for war, and be ready to take up arms when necessary. He assures them of his intention to resist every attempt of Peru to encroach upon Bolivia, and declares himself at once prepared and willing to enter the field against the Peruvian army.

From Ecuador we learn nothing of importance.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Perseverance brought the mail Tuesday from Texas.

By her we have Galveston dates to the 6th inst., and a full file of other Texas papers.

The Civilian & Gazette (Galveston) of the 2d inst., has the following items:

The receipts for import duties at the port of Galveston during the year ending March 31, 1853, were $25,072.

LARGE FIRE AT INDIANOLA.—Indianola, July 27.—This morning about 2 o'clock, an extensive and destructive conflagration broke out at Powder Horn. Baldridge, Sparks & Co. lost their line warehouse, storehouse and office, together with a large quantity of merchandise, and a large stock of different kinds of goods, which they had on consignment. I understand they were insured to the amount of $18,000, which does not begin to cover their lose.

CROPS IN TEXAS.—The Gonzales Enquirer says the worm has already made its appearance in some cotton fields, but has not yet done much damage. It is hoped that the continuance of fair weather will cause the worm again to disappear.

The crops throughout every portion of the State, says the Houston Telegraph, have been greatly improved by the late rains, and are generally promising. In all the Eastern counties the corn and cotton are far more promising than they were last summer.

A friend in Gonzalee county writes the Indianola Bulletin that excellent corn crops have been made there. Another from De Witt speaks in the same terms. The ensuing autumn and winter will be a fine time for emigrants in the country. Meats and breadstuffs will be abundant and cheap.

A letter from Oyster Creek says: "We shall soon be picking cotton here; and since my residence in this county, have never known the crops look so flattering."

NEW COTTON.—A bale of new cotton, raised on the plantation of Gen. Wall, about seven miles above this place, was brought to our town last Tuesday, and immediately forwarded to Indianola for shipment to New Orleans. This is the first cotton of this year's growth we have heard of being shipped from any part of Texas, and if time and distance can be reckoned, we have no doubt it will be ahead of any from Louisiana or Mississippi. This is early, considering we had a very late spring. [Gonzales Inquirer.

The News of the 5th inst. says:

Our accounts of the crops in the interior are very encouraging from all parts of the State. The corn crop has generally turned out a fair average one, and is said to be abundant. Cotton is now very promising, though this is a crop upon which certain calculations can never be made until it is gathered. There is some reason to fear that the present wet weather, which is probably very general, may superinduce the caterpillar or other species of insects, often so destructive to the crop. Sugar cane, we are informed, never looked better, if as well, in any previous year. Its growth is said to be very large, and is now maturing finely.

The Houston Telegraph says:

Showers of rain have been falling here almost deily, for the last eight or ten days, and fears are entertained that the continued rains will severely injure the sugar and cotton crops.

The following items we extract from the Ledger of the 28th ult.:

GEN. LAMAR DEAD.—A report is in town that this distinguished man is no more. His name has been identified with the history of Texas from its first settlement by the Americans to the present time. As President of the late Republic he was by turns the subject of inordinate praise and indiscriminate censure. God has taken him home at last.

Victor Considerant, the noted leader of the St. Simonians, is on his way to Texas to purchase about 400,000 acres of land. Wives and property are in common among the St. Simonians. Somehow we do not admire their doctrine and less their practices.

RAILROAD ITEMS.—Pacific Railroad.—The Washington Union contains a leading editorial urging the construction of a railway to the Pacific. The article urges the constitutionality of the right of the General Government to aid the work, and bases it upon the war power, which it affirms to be ample for the purpose.

A locomotive without rails is described by the Courier des Etats Unis as having been invented and exhibited in operation in Paris by Alexander Levor. It was attached to two cars, which it drew along the streets, around abrupt corners, advancing and retiring with ease. It has four wheels with broad felloes.

A Locomotive Village.—The Illinois Journal says that a new plan of accommodating laborers on railroad improvements is practiced on the Chicago and Mississippi Railroad. The entire working force on this road is one hundred persons, who live in cars fitted up for the purpose of boarding the men, and are pushed along as the rails are laid—thus securing the advantage of having the men always near their work. This locomotive boarding house or village comprises fifteen large covered cars, with all the necessary conveniences for cooking, eating and sleeping. They carry the cows along—they grage alongside, and are put in their stalls when the locomotive village changes ground.

The Central Pacific Railroad.—Col. Benton has furnished the National Intelligencer with a letter from Mr. H. Heap, connected with the Central Pacific Railroad exploring party, under Lieut. Beale, in which he states that through the entire line which the party had explored, comprehending fully half the distance between the boundaries of Missouri and California, and embracing, as is said, the most difficult portion of the line, the construction of a road is not only practicable at an easy grade, but the country is well watered and fertile, such as to invite settlers and cultivators throughout.

REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.—The following important notice from the Treasury Department, intended to make a decided reduction in the public debt, appears in the Union of the 23 inst. The terms proposed are such that we suppose the holders of the stocks will be induced to bring them forward, at least to the amount indicated in the notice. The effect upon the money market will probably be decidedly felt.

"Notice is hereby given, to the holders of the six per cent. stocks of the United States, of the loan authorized by the act of 28th January, 1847, and redeemable the 31st of December, 1867, and of the loan authorized by the act of 31st March, 1848, and redeemable 30th June, 1868, that the department is prepared to purchase, at any time between the date hereof and the 1st day of December next, to the extent of the sum of five millions of dollars of the said stocks, in the manner and on the terms hereinafter mentioned, to wit:

"In case of any contingent competition, within the amount stated, preference will be given in the order of time in which the said stocks may be offered. The certificates, duly assigned to the United States, must be transmitted to this department; upon the receipt whereof, a price will be paid, compounded of the following particulars:

"1. The par value or amount specified in each certificate.

"2. A premium on said amount of twenty-one per cent.

"3. Interest on the par of the certificate from the 1st of July, 1853, to the date of receipt and settlement at the Treasury, with the allowance (for the money to reach the owner) of one day's interest in addition.

"Payment for said stocks will be made in drafts of the Treasury of the United States, on the Assistant Treasurer at Boston, New York or Philadelphia, as the parties may indicate."

THE FISHERY QUESTION.—It is stated that the people of the lower provinces have earnestly petitioned the Home Government to withdraw their naval force, which has been sent to the fishing grounds, to keep the Americans from coming within three leagues of the shore. If they have not done it already, we have no doubt such will be the fact.

The truth is, says the Portland State of Maine, the Provincial Government have made a grand mistake, and are now beginning to reap the legitimate consequences of their own doings. The principal value of fish arises from the process of curing them. When vessels were allowed to land and cure their fish on shore, it gave employment to their people at home.

Now the Yankee fisherman lets himself out to a provincial master, who runs his vessel as soon as loaded into one of our own ports, pays the duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem on fresh fish—a merely nominal sum—and the Blue-nose waits in vain for his accustomed labor of curing and salting, etc., etc., which gave employment to so many of the people on the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shores. This labor is now done in the United States, and the provincial ports are deserted, or comparatively so, where a valuable trade was formerly enjoyed.

This is a practical view of the question that may, after all, put the diplomatists of the provinces on the right track. [Gloucester (Mass.) News, July 30.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.—We select the following from the Republic of the 21 inst.:

Some months ago the Post-office Department made a claim against the British Post-office for the return of transit postages on a large quantity of newspapers erroneously credited to the British offices, which has signified its readiness to pay over to our Department the sum of $6,499 06. So much clear gain.

The steamer Water-Witch has been heard from at Buchos Ayres, on the 25th of May. She left Rio on the 30th of April, and made the trip to Montevideo in eight days, during two of which the weather was very heavy. At Montevideo the steamer was detained at quarantine eight days, in accordance with an oppressive regulation subjecting all vessels from Rio to that length of quarantine, whether they have sickness on board or not. The Water-Witch, it will be remembered, is on her way to the head waters of the La Plata, on a surveying and exploration expedition.

Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, accompanied Mr. Marcy to Berkeley Springs. As he took his secretary, Mr. Cobbett, along with him, and Mr. Marcy took Mr. Borrit, it is presumed they have sought the Springs more for their quiet than their waters; and that they expect there to negotiate industriously on the fishery question. Mr. Crampton went the Springs at Mr. Marcy's invitation.

NEW YORK CRYSTAL PALACE EXHIBITION.—The following table shows the number of visitors for the second week:

	Season Tickets.	Trans. Visitors.	Rec'd at Door.
Monday	1200	2650	$1307 75
Tuesday	720	2041	1003 25
Wednesday	833	2281	1156 75
Thursday	1633	3850	1920 00
Friday	1700	3348	1032 50
Saturday	610	2651	1400 00
Second week	6816	16,821	$8420 20
Add 1st do.	9500	16,608	8417 00
Total	16,323	33,429	$16,567 25

The Directors announce that five dollar tickets will be issued early this week, to admit the holder until the 1st of October.

The Baltimore and Philadelphia Railroad Company, the New Jersey Railroad Company, and the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and Camden and Amboy Railroad and Transportation Company, it is said, all agree to transport goods for the Exhibition free of charge.

Among the recent additions to the American Department of the Crystal Palace, is the Lord's Prayer, engraved in Old English, on a gold dollar, and on a three-cent piece in italics, by Mr. Overnough.

SCENES ABOUT THE NEW YORK CRYSTAL PALACE.—A letter from New York, speaking of the "sights" in the vicinity of the Crystal Palace, says:

"As if it were not bad enough to have scores of deformed animals on exhibition—woolly horses, and horses without any wool, monkeys, dancing-bears, baboons, rattlesnakes, anacondas, and other like monstrosities. Model Artiste exhibitions have commenced lusciness in three different shanties. Vulgar paintings of Gods and Goddesses are hung out for signs to attract the lewd, and, though clearly coming within the prohibition of the statute, not the slightest effort is made by the police to abolish the abomination. The houses in which these disgraceful allurements are permitted are but temporary concerns, the intentions of the proprietors being to demolish them as soon as the Exhibition closes. The ground on which they stand is all leased at enormous prices. For the privilege of putting up a two-story shed in 42d street, to exhibit "Views of the Universe," the owner paid $3000 for eighteen months. The other wonder-mongers have been obliged to pay proportionately high."

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—From the Courier and Enquirer (New York), of the 2d inst. we select the following:

The greatest activity continues to prevail in all departments of the Exhibition. Among the interesting recent additions, we notice, in the United States Department, several splendid horse carriages, including one of extreme richness from Philadelphia; a rich display of military goods, further additions to the fine collection of furniture, upholstery, pianofortes, and light carriages, and several heavy pieces of machinery. The British section is also increasing in machinery. A very interesting collection of ancient armor has just been opened. The progress of fire-arms from the time of Henry VIII. is illustrated in a striking manner by these specimens. It is curious, likewise, to observe the degree of ingenuity often displayed by the early gunsmiths. Five-barreled revolving fire-arms of the time of James I. (if we remember right) are comprised in the collection.

The continental departments continue, as before, to fill up mainly with textiles, pottery, professional apparatus, and fancy articles. Works of art still come in, several valuable additions being observable within a few days. The sable Emperor of Hayti, Faustin I., contributes a huge block of polished mahogany, containing not less than seventy-five cubic feet of the solid wood. It is surmounted by a bust, of the darkest hue, which we take to represent his Majesty.

Seats have been provided, sparsely, on the ground floor, enough, indeed, for the present demand, but likely to need an increase when the Exhibition shall have become complete. We observe that the gas fixtures are going up, but these probably will not be used earlier than September. The fire apparatus is worthy of notice. In addition to the actual engines on exhibition, the towers are to support capacious reservoirs supplied from the Croton pipes, and communicating by hose with all parts of the building, and a large number of buckets are kept filled with water in convenient places.

Complaints are made on both sides, in regard to making change at the ticket offices. Visitors ought to remember that the immense number presenting (as most persons naturally do) bills and gold in payment of the half-dollar fee, must create serious embarrassment, in the present scarcity of silver. Considerate persons will, therefore, take pains to provide themselves with the proper change. At the same time we believe the managers will do themselves and the public a wrong, if they permit tenders of bills and gold to be refused at their ticket-offices, through unwillingness to purchase silver for change.

Yesterday 2821 persons were admitted on single tickets; on season tickets 950. Cash receipts $1177. Contributions to the Washington Monument were $14 33. Total contributions $731.13.

LAND FOR SALE.

The subscriber wishes to sell a most desirable settlement of land, lying 18 miles west of Monroe on the Ouachita river, and one mile north of Indian Village, Jackson parish, and on the track, as laid off, of the Mississippi, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, containing 640 acres, with 160 cleared and in a good state of cultivation, with a good gin and cotton press, with all the buildings necessary for common family purposes. About 160 acres of the land is very level and will not wash, and quite productive. A portion of it having made a good average bag of cotton per acre last year. The place is uncommonly well watered and healthy, myself having lived on it for seven years, with a large family, without having a single bad case of sickness. There is also many advantages and conveniences too tedious to mention, which can be fully seen upon examination of the premises. It will be sold at a fair price—one-third cash upon giving possession, and the balance to suit purchasers. ISAAC COLLINS.

aug13 3t Indian Village, Jackson Parish, La.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES, AND BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 54 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two "	5 00 "
For any three "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews,	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in advance, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.
☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

EDUCATION.

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES KEARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKELL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. Y. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and govern the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts, plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior organ, and all musical instruments, &c.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the express and permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaint them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 16, 1853. aug13 1jan1

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, LA.

This institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852 and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance, to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board.

Lodging, washing, and English tuition	$200 00
Music on Piano, with use of instrument	70 00
French Language	30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Plaquemine, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES.—Messrs Wright Williams & Co. Messrs A. J. Wright & Co. Messrs J. T. Donald & Co. Messrs Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs I. D. Fuller & Co. Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jy13 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.,
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. 1e 6

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET.
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
☞ No. 60 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jy2 1y

DR. J. T. KENNON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

☞ Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19, 1853, 1mo.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,
New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc. to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Saddles and Martingales in great variety; Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Bifid Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery, Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil Varnish; India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.

mh6 52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast iron YOKES with wrought iron arms are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enables them to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing to them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; with such improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS of all kinds manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, p

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DORMAN, W. McRAE. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 29. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 133.

From Dickens' Household Words.

HUSH!

"I can scarcely hear," she murmured.
For my heart beats loud and fast;
But surely, in the far off distance,
I can hear a horse may ride."

"'Tis only the deer that were feeding
In a herd on the clover grass;
They were startled, and fled to the thicket,
As they saw the reapers pass."

Now the night arose to silence,
Birds lay in their leafy nest
And the deer couched in the forest,
And the children were at rest.
There was only a sound of weeping
From watcher around a bed—
But rest to the weary spirit,
Peace to the quiet dead!

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

"Thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed; neither shall a gurment mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee."—Lev. xix: 19. "And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised unto you; it shall not be eaten of. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, to praise thu Lord withal. And in the 5th year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof. I am the Lord your God."—v. 23-25. Many a Christian reads over these ceremonial enactments of the Jewish lawgiver, without bestowing more than a cursory thought upon them: certainly without ever imagining that they are still in force among six or seven millions of his own cotemporaries. This is nevertheless the case, and I have known many inconveniences to arise from a literal observance of these regulations, particularly from the one forbidding the wearing of linen and woollen mixed: since the materials of many of the modern fabrics can only be analyzed by a practiced eye; and with a weary heart have I often seen fine suits given away to some poor Gentile neighbor, after they had worn them once or twice—the infringement of the Law not having been previously discovered.

Another picture from my childhood, still green in my memory, obtrudes itself here in the shape of a fine large vine, which, though but four years old, was hanging full of luscious grapes, just within reach of our little hands. We looked at them wistfully and longingly day after day, but we knew also that we must not pluck any of the fruit, as it was "holy to the Lord:" and although the temptation certainly was great, such is the awe and reverence for things divine, with which Jewish parents early impress their children, that I do not think we ever entertained the sacrilegious thought of tasting the "forbidden fruit:" for children, a great proof of self-denial.

"Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together"—Dent. xxii: 10—seems to come under the same category; though we can more easily account for this humane law than we can for the prohibition of wearing diverse garments." Owing to the commandment in Dent. xx: 19, they never cut down a fruit-tree, as long as there remains a green leaf upon it; and to cut down or break a young fruit-tree is considered a crime akin to, and short only of, manslaughter. There is a glaring inconsistency in the literal observance of the above and the total disregard of the kindred injunction. (Lev xix: 9 10.) "And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field;" * * * "thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger." It is certainly not a want of charity or benevolence that abolished this custom, as we have before shown.

In Lev. xix: 26, as well as in many other passages of the Sacred Writings, we find seven denouncitions against enchantments of every kind. It is a pity that the Rabbins forget to put "a hedge" around this law; on the other hand, they have found various ways of circumventing it, and the Talmud, as well as other later works, contain numerous directions for all sorts of charms, amulets, and nativities even. These amulets consist of slips of parchment with cabalistical inscriptions, having no connection whatever (how should they?) with the disease they are expected to remove. Sickly or deformed persons, and young children generally, have amulets hanging round their necks, as whilom Gentiles had their horoscopes.

I once saw a partially enlightened, and certainly learned and well educated Rabbi, prepare a charm for toothache, in accordance with the directions he found in some Hebrew book—I am not quite certain whether it was in the Talmud, but think it was. I was sent to procure an old boot, which, pulverized, formed a prominent ingredient in this singular anti-pharmaceutical specific. Nor do they, any more than any other superstitious people, want for old women, who heal every sore by merely looking at it, and whispering some unintelligible jargon. With such practices, however innocent, we cannot be much surprised at many of the scenes described in "Ivanhoe," especially when we take into consideration the intolerant spirit of the Dark Ages.

And here I may be allowed to say a word or two against the current ideas of the every-day life and character of a Jew, as described by many popular authors. "Shylock," although the offspring of genius, and justly admired as being perfect in his way, can certainly not be regarded as a faithful type of his people at any period; and yet he is far better drawn than "Isaac of York," whose "Father Abrahams," and other vast exclamations, are all borrowed from Shakspeare, and never belonged to any Jew of modern times. "Rebecca" is a splendid heroine of a novel, but certainly not the picture of a real Jewess. I say this of course, with all due deference to Sir Walter Scott, who perhaps enjoyed but limited opportunities of studying the Hebrew character. Many polite authors, who have occasion to refer to this people, take that opportunity to strengthen the already too strong prejudice existing against them. That so enlightened a statesman and pretended philanthropist as Sir Francis Head should conceive it necessary to fan the old flame in his recent work of "A Faggot of French Sticks," is certainly much to be regretted. The best picture of Jewish life in England I have ever met with is a little work of two volumes, entitled, "Emma de Lissau," and "The Jewess," or "Sophia de Lissau."

Among the Jews the parents are supposed to be responsible for their children up to the age of thirteen, when a boy becomes Bar Mitzvh, (son of the commandment,) enters into manhood, and must bear the burden of his own sins. He begins to wear phylacteries three months before this time: goes to the Hazan every day to learn his Sidrah, i. e. the reading and chanting of either part or whole of the section of the Law to be read on the Sabbath following his thirteenth birthday. Formerly he also delivered a speech on this his day of confirmation, but this custom is getting obsolete. He now, for the first time, may lead in the grace after meals, count one of the Minyan, (necessary number for divine service—ten,) and may always be called to the reading of the Law—privileges which he could not enjoy before. This is also the terminus of his scholastic career, if he is destined for any practical pursuit in life. If he is to study for a profession, he will now proceed to an academy of a higher character. With parents this is a day of great rejoicing, particularly if it be their eldest son. It is the second of the three great and happy events in a Jew's life: the first his admission to the Covenant at the age of eight days, when his parents receive the wishes that he may safely reach the age of Bar Mitzvh. And on this day the friends again congratulate them, hoping that he may soon be happily joined in holy wedlock, and thus relieve his parents entirely of their charge.

Having now disposed of nearly all the occasional ceremonies, I shall proceed in my next to give "the times and seasons," or Festivals and Fasts, in regular succession, and then close the series by a description of the rites and customs observed in sickness, death, funeral and burial. Should you, Mr. Editor, or any of your readers, get tired before that final catastrophe, you may stop me at once, by just giving me a hint to that effect. otherwise I shall regard "silence consent," and proceed the "even tenor of my way."

JOSEPHUS.

Columbia, S. C.

[NOTE.—The editor and readers would be obliged if "Josephus" would continue.]

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

SMALL TALK.

Yes, some of our best preachers locate; and we do not blame them all. It is the duty of some—and some who are very useful—to locate. Stern necessity requires it. They have children who must be fed, clothed and educated. Yes, I say, educated. And where is the provision made for this? The minister is called to his work. The people also are called to their work—to take care of his children to attend to all their interests. Now, if the minister is embarrassed, so as seriously to retard his usefulness, or is compelled to abandon his work entirely, for want of means to support and educate his children, whose fault is it? Upon whose shoulders lies the responsibility of taking a workman from the vineyard of the Lord! Upon whose skirts clings the blood of the souls who shall thereby be lost! Upon those of the minister, who is driven by sheer necessity to locate! Evidently not. The Church, by its inattention to his wants, has become the responsible party. And most fearful is the burden thus assumed.

You will pardon, Mr. Editor, all allusion to my own experience. (And here, by the way, is an example of the benefit of writing anonymously.) During the three years of my itinerancy as a single man, I spent each year twice the amount of my salary for necessary expenses. During the two years since my marriage, I have spent more than six hundred dollars of my private means. Now, as my private means are very meagre, in a short time nothing will be left in that quarter. What then? Debt or location. And who would not infinitely prefer the latter? Now, I am But E' Pluribus Unum—a type, in this respect of a large number.

"Yes," our people virtually say, "we have a set of godly, self-denying men, who will preach to us, whether we support them or not. They love us too well to let our souls perish. We will enjoy our money ourselves, and have the benefit of their ministry too. Thank God for a free gospel, and thank God for Methodist preachers, with their zeal and burning love of souls! No danger of being without a preacher! If we do not seek them, they will seek us."

I verily believe, Mr. Editor, that this one hundred dollar system, while it has been a source of benefit, has also been a source of great evil. It has lowered the standard of Christian benevolence among us. It has been the great rule by which contributions generally have been governed. The great idea is, the Methodist is the cheap Church. It will cost us less to be Methodists than any thing else. Does not the Methodist pay less to the great enterprises of Christian effort and philanthropy than any other prominent communion in the land, in proportion to her numbers and wealth?

This system has kept men of talent from our ministry. We do not, in every case, approve the motive. We only state the fact. Some men and especially those who have spent many years in the study necessary to prepare them for the duties of a profession are, to a certain extent, incapable of practicing economy. Their success in their profession requires that they keep their minds free from pecuniary difficulties. The improbability of support, therefore, forbids their becoming itinerant ministers.

It is very difficult to convince the people that their contributions to the support of the minister are not to be given on the ground of charity—that they are to pay him, as they pay any one else in their employ, and that to withhold this amount necessary, is as downright fraud as though they were to repudiate their store account or butcher's bills. Some are inclined to complain of the amount necessary for their support. Do such men ever think that it costs thirty-five millions of dollars to pay the salaries of American lawyers? that twelve millions are paid annually to keep our criminals?—and ten millions to keep the flies among us alive, while only six millions are spent annually to keep six thousand preachers in the United States? These are facts, or an approximation sufficient for all practical purposes, as the statistics will show.

Now, if men will come out and deny that they receive a quid pro quo—say that the benefits of a ministry are not commensurate with the money they consume, however mistaken, they would manifest more consistency, than after acknowledging the indispensable necessity that we should have them, fail to secure them a comfortable support. They who enjoy what they confess to be inestimable privileges, are bound, not only in honor, but in gratitude and common honesty, to support the minister through whom they receive them. More yet. COMMON SENSE.

From the Boston Watchman.

THE NEW GENERAL OF THE JESUITS.

The most noteworthy event in the ecclesiastical world—we say not the religious—that has been made public within the last few days, is the election of a new General over the Society of Jesus. The General of the Jesuits is only second to the Pope. He is his right-hand man. Bound by a vow of absolute obedience to the Supreme Pontiff, he does his choicest work; openly, if need be, or covertly, if that be the more expedient. He is, to the Roman Czar, Chief of the Police and Generalissimo of the forces. For the execution of the collective pleasure of the Court of Rome, this General is as essentially necessary as the leaden seal is to the Bull: for all purposes of evasion or chicane, he is as essentially necessary as the non obstante clause in the same document. He is the acting commanding-officer of the Papal garrison, doubly furnished with his own discretion and the sagacity of his assessors on the one hand, and with the authority of the god of thunders on the other. Naturally enough, people ask who he is, and the first notice of his elevation to the chair of Loyola is therefore given in a style analogous to that which is usual in announcing the creation of a Pope. His name is said to be Beckes, (but we rather suspect this to be a misprint,) by birth a Belgian, and latterly Provincial of the Province of Austria.

If he be the personage we suspect, he is qualified by a strong admiration for Saintish fables, a thorough Bollandist, such another, in that one particular, as Father Newman, and quite proper to nourish the infatuated youth of this generation who go over to Rome to satisfy their morbid appetite. He can give them legend and falsification to their heart's content. But as we may choose to be mistaken in his antecedents, we say no more on this point. Roman ecclesiastics are pleased to note that he is a Belgian, third of that nation who has been counted among the successors of Saint Ignatius. Doubtless they bear in mind the achievements of his countrymen who have taken the helm of Jesuit politics, and they may hope that he will sustain the notoriety which those Generals acquired. Let us join them in giving attention to his origin, since attention is challenged, and observe that the first Belgian General was Everard Mercurian, whose name darkens the history of our own country. It was Mercurian who organized the Jesuit Mission, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, for the "conversion of England." It was he who coolly dismissed the Italian zealots who offered themselves as candidates for the honor of overturning the throne and subverting the religion of this country, and cunningly determined to employ Englishmen only, persons who could best travel in disguise, most easily worm themselves into the confidence of families, most skillfully perform the part of spies, and most safely associate themselves in conspiracies against the Sovereign. This was the first Belgian.

The second Belgian was Charles-le-Noyelle, who signalized himself during a very brief generalate, in drumming the French Jesuits together to fight against the liberties of the secular clergy in France, and to resist the independence of the King and the Parliaments. It was under his reign that the Jesuits of France displayed their piety in worrying the poor defenceless Huguenots, just after the revocation of the edict of Nantes. In this way the wary Belgian, having first incensed Louis XIV by enforcing the odious claims of Clement XI, and upholding his Bulls into this country, planted him again by helping to extirpate the Reformed. Noyelle, the second Belgian, played a very conspicuous and effective part during four and a half years of power, and the mention of those calamitous days might remind Christendom in general, and French Protestants in particular, that it behooves them to anxiously observe what will signalize the reign of this third Belgian.

Yet these are only historic notes: mere passages in history which the Romans invite us to remember, and which all will now acknowledge it would be folly to forget. More to the point, however, is a reference to the more recent action and the actual position of Jesuitism. Roothaan, who died the other day, and vacated the seat now occupied by this Belgian, demonstrated the skill in pilotage that distinguished the select few to whom the duties of this dignity is intrusted. Many will recollect that so lately as the year 1845, it was announced that there were no more Jesuits in France. The government of Louis Philippe, contended strenuously at Rome for an authoritative suppression of all Jesuit establishments at Rome, as dangerous to the State. After long negotiation, M. Guizot congratulated the Assembly on the successful issue of his own efforts, testified by the closure of the Jesuit houses, and the migration of their inmates. But this was all an illusion. General Roothaan had advised them just to hide their heads, and let the storm blow over; the storm has blown over, and in France, where they were denounced as a dangerous fraternity for ten years at least, they already swarm again, and for some time before his death Roothaan saw with exultation the triumph of his policy over the last murmur of opposition. A thorough Jesuit of the old school, he early signalized himself as a commentator on "the Spiritual Exercises" of Ignatius Loyola, and contributed in no small degree to a revival of the exact discipline which had been disturbed by the dispersion of the Society in 1802, and scarcely recovered on the reconstitution of it in 1814, by Pius VII, when a sudden influx of young men and a paucity of well practised elders threatened to unnerve its ancient strength by a vast novitiate overwhelming the austerely rigid spirit of obedience. It was also Roothaan who authorized, presided over, and conducted to a successful issue, a scheme for adapting the course of studies in Jesuit schools to the actual requirements of the age, proceeding in the spirit of Dr. Wiseman's book on the connection between science and religion. In other words, it was Roothaan who guided Jesuitism into its present position of educational power, and made it possible for the successors of the men who imprisoned Galileo to exhibit themselves as teachers and advocates of modern science. We have not space here to dilate on the dishonesty of this movement, nor to point out its illusions, but we cannot refrain from dropping a word of caution to all Protestants who are concerned in the promotion of public education. They may depend upon it that there is not one educational institution of any kind that is not now beset with Jesuit spies, or actually invaded by Jesuit corruptors. We have never been foremost to raise an alarm, and least of all have we been willing to join in a mere vulgar outcry about Jesuitism. But let any one glance over the state of England during the last twenty years, marking coincidence of dates and events. Let him observe the reform of Jesuit education in 1830, at Rome; the introduction of that reform into their colleges every where except, perhaps, in Spain, the rise of Tractarianism at Oxford, just as soon as the Jesuit educationists could furnish and use their instruments. Let him trace the issue of a brood of perverters, bearing no clerical character, but acting through the press, in the studio, in the orchestra, in the college, and wherever else the youthful mind can be most easily acted on. Let him also mark the incorporation of these new "Catholic" schools with the University of London, in common with other schools that are characteristically Protestant, and with others again that are characteristically latitudinarian, at least; and then let him reflect on the magnitude of the work achieved for Romanism by the last General, compute the value of the instrumentality made ready to the hand of the present, and consider what is his own duty in regard to public education, aye, and in regard to domestic education also, at the present juncture. This third Belgian is no idle spectator of the struggle that is going on in Ireland for expelling Protestant influences from the National Schools. It is nearly effected. Archbishop Whately and the Presbyterian members of the Board are as good as beaten off the ground, and our Government shows no disposition to vindicate the rights that are involved in this contention. The Congregation of the Index rules in that Board. This new General will be no unconcerned spectator in the Houses of Parliament. By delegation he will stand in the lobbies to look after "Catholic Members," he will step up beside the Speaker's chair, and wait behind the woolsack. By delegation he will sit more closely than ever in the Queen's Council, and speak there from the lips of the members whom Lord Aberdeen so tenderly placates. He will be busy at the Colonial office. Ubiquitous as he is, he will move intangibly without lumber, and without pause, in every place of intelligence, legislation, and command; and unless Protestantism keeps up an equal vigilance, cultivates a quick and wakeful conscience, and lives on truth, fresh flowing from its fountain-head, the generalate which began on the second day of this month will supply a sad chapter in the history of England.

MODERN PREACHING. Rev. John Angell, James says: "It is my sad and serious belief that if the evangelical pulpit is losing its power, it is just because it is losing sight of its object and its aim. The cultivation of the intellect and the advancement of knowledge, in the present day, are letting both preachers and hearers above the plain and simple gospel of Christ. Sermons are with many no longer heard as the Word of God, but as the word of man; not as means of grace and aids to salvation but as intellectual exercises on religious topics, for the gratification of taste, intellect, and imagination on Sunday. And it must be confessed that the preachers of them are, by their artificial and excessive elaboration, and the introduction of new topics, teaching their hearers so to regard them, and are training them thus to be a kind of amateur hearers of sermons."

A CONVICT CONQUERED.

The following account of the reformation of a "convict," published in the Prisoner's Friend, gives a very forcible illustration of the power of love to reform even the most hardened of our race:

Many years ago there was brought to the State prison, in Connecticut, a man of giant stature and of desperate character; one whose crimes had been for seventeen years the terror of the country. The warden was a Christian—a Christian not in name only, but in "deed and in truth"—one who had more than usual faith in the power of kindness. When the prisoner came, he took off his irons, and addressed him thus: "Friend, you are now placed in my care, it will be best for us to treat each other as well as we can. I shall try to make you as comfortable as possible, and shall be anxious to be your friend; and I hope you will get me into no difficulty on your account. There is a cell here for solitary confinement, but I have never used it, and should be very sorry ever to turn a key upon any human being in it. You may range the place as freely as I do; only trust me, and I will trust you."

The desperado, though evidently surprised, appeared but little affected by his kindness, and for weeks seemed to soften very slowly. True, he was not violent, but sulky; at length word came that he had attempted to break prison! The warden called him and charged him with it, but he gave no reply; his face was darkened by a ferocious scowl, and his lips sealed with sulky silence. He was told it would now be necessary to put him in the solitary cell. He was desired to follow the warden, who went before him, carrying the lamp in one hand and the key in the other. In the narrowest part of the passage the warden, a little light built man, turned short around, and, with an eye beaming with kindness, looked up full into the face of the stout criminal, and said: "I want to know if you have treated me as I deserve. I have done every thing to make you happy. I have trusted you, but you have never given me the least confidence in return. And you have even planned to get me into difficulty. [illegible] to look you up. If I only had the least sign—if you cared for me"—he had no need to say more—it was a dead shot! it had gone through the tough rind of his depravity, and had reached his very heart! The strong man was subdued; bursting into tears, he wept like a child. "Sir," said he, "I have been a very devil these seventeen years; but you treat me like a man, and I can't resist it." "Come," said the victorious warden, "let's go back!" The free range of the prison was again given him, and from that hour he became a new man; opening his whole heart to the kind warden, and fulfilling the whole term of his imprisonment with cheerfulness and contentment.

The world is just beginning to understand the meaning of the passage, "We love Him because he first loved us."

"THE LAMP AND THE LANTERN."

Rev. Dr. Hamilton is one of the most popular religious writers of the day. Numerous tracts have issued from his pen, full of evangelical truth and earnest appeal. We give an extract, entitled

THE BIBLE AND THE INQUIRER.

A father and son were on a journey. It was late in the afternoon, but still clear day, when they came to a cottage by the road-side, and the father went in and borrowed a lighted lantern. The young man was exceedingly amused, and perhaps he was a little vexed. If any one should meet them carrying a lamp in the sunshine, it would look so absurd; and what in the world was the use of it! But the old traveler took the young man's jibes good humoredly, and only answered, "The night cometh." And it did come. They passed no more cottages, but they got into a thick forest, where the daylight faded so rapidly that the lantern already shone a welcome companion. Not only was the sun gone down, but the last streak of twilight had vanished. It was dreadfully dark; but the good little lantern spread a cloth of gold before the steps of the travelers, and did not let one shadow or phantom come near them. At last the road divided. "Straight on!" cried the youth. "Not so fast," said the elder; for, though the path to the right was less trodden, perhaps it was the one they should take; when fortunately they espied a finger-post, and holding the lamp as high as they could, they read the direction and found that they would have gone utterly wrong had they not taken the narrow and neglected foot-way. Rejoicing at their escape, they pushed on merrily; and by-and-by, with his frisky spirits, the younger went ahead, and was far in advance of the lantern, when the old man heard a splash and a shout, and running up, was just in time to help ashore his boisterous boy, who had soused into a stagnant pool, and who crawled up the bank pale and shivering, with the leeches and duck-weed clinging to his garments. "You see the road was not through this pool, but round it. You should walk in the light," and so they again set out together. As the stillness deepened, they sometimes heard a rustle in the faulty undergrowth, and distant howlings, or a sharp snarl near hand, warned them that the beasts of the forest were abroad; and once or twice they could see a pair of fiery opals glaring at them, but as soon as they turned the full flame of the lantern in that direction the goblin retreated. We need not tell the whole adventures of the night; but at last they came to a place where a heavy moan arrested them, and searching in the copse, they found a man stretched on the ground, and badly hurt. He had either received a blow on the head or had inhaled some stupefying ether, for at first he talked very incoherently. It turned out that as he had been coming along, a gentleman in black had prevailed on him to cast his lantern into the ditch, and that soon after some foot-pad had knocked him down and dragged him off the road, and robbed him of all his money. As soon as he was somewhat restored, they set him on his beast and journeyed on together. The day was breaking and the forest was thinning off on the margin of a magnificent domain. They looked forth on vine-clad hills and a shining river; and though the palace itself could be descried but dimly—it was so far up in the dazzling sunrise—they could easily make out many mansions. "I am home!" cried the old man; and the full morning was reflected from his face as he smiled, "Mine eyes shall see the king in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off." And as he embraced his comrades, he handed over the lantern to his son, and said, "Keep this as a light unto your feet and a lamp unto your path." The youth prized the keepsake. He found constant occasion for it. He brightened up the four windows, by which it sent its light backward and forward and on either side, and with the point of a diamond he traced these mottoes on them:

"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word."

"When thou goest it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest it shall keep thee, and when thou awakest it shall talk with thee. For the commandment is a lamp and the law is light."

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn and the day-star arise in your hearts."

"If we walk in the light, as God is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin."

RESISTING TEMPTATION.

Many a struggling contender for the faith is constrained, on reviewing his spiritual history, to confess that it is a record of broken purposes. To resolve has been easy; but to conquer, have been the darling objects of his desire; but, in performance, self has too often had the mastery.

Why is this? It cannot be because of the inoperativeness of grace; for that is declared to be sufficient. It must be owing to a failure to exercise faith for present victory when under temptation; and that failure may find its cause in a disposition to parley with temptation.

Whoever does this, is certain to suffer some degree of hurt in spiritual conflicts. For temptation is potential just so far as it is listened to, and no further. It may be compared to the spider's web. When this ingenious insect would throw its web across a forest pathway, it crawls to an outside branch and spins a single thread of sufficient length to span the road. At first this tiny thread descends toward the ground. But it is soon borne up by the air, higher and higher, until it waves horizontally to and fro. Presently it touches an opposite branch. This is the insect's triumph. Lightly it steals across upon the slender thread, and fastens it to the bough. Then, crossing and re-crossing, it adds fibre after fibre, until a bridge of web is formed sufficient for all purposes.

Very similarly does Satan seek access to the human mind. First, he thrusts an impure or sinful suggestion before it. He keeps an evil object present to the imagination, that it may stir the emotions. Then it floats like the spider's thread. If the mind instantly turns from it, with an act of praying faith, it is impotent for evil. It neither stains nor weakens the mind which instantly, earnestly, peremptorily rejects its solicitation. But if the believer pauses, views it with favor, in that moment it pollutes and weakens him, because that favoring look implies evil desire; it becomes a point on which the temptation fastens; and Satan has now a direct bridge of access. Stronger and stronger the temptation grows; weaker and weaker becomes the spirit of resistance. The cry for divine help, which the soul first sent up, grows fainter; and it even begins to cast about itself for reasons in favor of the proposed indulgence; these rise upin abundance. Meanwhile the desires strengthen, passion triumphs, and the tempted one soon lies wounded at the feet of his malicious foe.

This evil all grows out of the first mental act of favorable regard for the sinful object. Safety exists only in instant, prompt, believing resistance. Therefore, tempted one, learn the secret of victory. It lies in INSTANT RESISTANCE of the tempter. Meet him, as Christ met him, with prompt denials couched in Scripture language. Fight him with texts from the armory of God. Let his assaults be a signal for new acts of appropriating faith. Thus, instead of being conquered, you shall conquer. The joy of victory shall be yours in place of the lamentations of defeat; and your future life be a glorious record of gracious triumphs, instead of broken resolutions: for, hath not God written, RESIST THE DEVIL, AND HE WILL FLEE FROM YOU? [Zion's Herald.

LIQUOR LAW IN SWEDEN.—In Sweden, whoever is found drunk is fined for the first offence, $3; and for the second, $6; for the third or fourth, imprisonment is added to the fine, and deprived of the right of voting at the elections, or holding office, and exposure to the church on Sunday. If the same individual is found committing the same offence the fifth ti[illegible] he is imprisoned six months and condemned to hard labor. If a professor of religion, it is [illegible] severe, and he is cut off from the chur

WILL THE JEWS RETURN TO THEIR OWN LAND?

Rev. N. J. Steiner, the Jewish Missionary, delivered a discourse on the above named subject, at the lecture room of the Broadway Tabernacle, last evening. He said: There are 250 passages of Scripture which speak of it, written by eleven different men, which refer to the restoration of israel; and if you understand how to interpret this portion, it will serve as a rule to interpret other prophecies. The question then is, will the Jews return to their own land? It is their own land, for God promised to their fathers to give it unto them. If you wish to settle the question whether they will return, ask yourselves, have prophecies concerning Israel been thus far literally fulfilled? And if so, that which is unfulfilled will also come in that literal way. Just as we are told in the Book of Moses, we have been scattered all over the world for the past 1300 years, and have had no home during that time; yet they have never been commingled with other nations. This goes to show that we are yet to be gathered up and return to Palestine; which, during all this time, has never been held by any one nation for a great length of time. Are we always to be down-trodden outcasts, despised, rejected, cursed, and driven from one country to another? No! As the Lord has done us evil, so will he do us good. I look forward to that time when the Lord shall turn our captivity and bring us back to Jerusalem, according to the promise in the Scriptures. I also believe that we shall be spiritually blessed, and shall also weep for the crucifixion of Jesus. "The children of our Israel shall be for many days without a prince or ruler, and afterwards they will be converted." The speaker said that at the present time the Jews in Europe think the time has come for them to return to Palestine, and that they are now raising funds for the purpose of sending on persons to till the soil, preparatory to this event. The speaker dwelt at considerable length upon the prophecies, which are yet unfulfilled, and he felt confident that, sooner or later, the prophecies would come to pass. The audience was not large, owing, undoubtedly, to the unfavorable state of the weather. [Saturday Tribune.

SOUTHERN NEW SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Southern Convention, called by some of the New School Presbyterians, has been held in Murfreesborough, Tennessee. The Convention comprised six ministers and one minister from the Synod of Kentucky; twelve ministers and five elders from the Synod of West Tennessee, and two ministers from the Synod of Mississippi. They convened on the fourth of July, and continued in session two days. Notwithstanding previous intimations to the contrary, the Convention took into consideration the action of their late General Assembly in reference to slavery. The Report of the Committee strongly condemns interference on this subject. They say, that so long as their brethren in the North and West adhere to the Constitution of the Church, their Southern brethren will stand by and with them; but "when they leave that, they leave us." The "inquiries," which the Buffalo Assembly proposed to institute, as to slaveholders and slaveholding, the Committee characterize as "unlawful, indelicate," and they add:

"Information is then sought respecting things belonging to the category of our purely political interests, and with which our ecclesiastical authorities have no more to do than with the number of our horses, or the produce of our farms. Questions are asked, which imply upon the very face of them the impeachment of the fidelity of our sessions in watching over the Christian conduct of their flocks! The whole thing is improper.

* * * * These questions would be firebrands in our churches, and an effort to gather the information they seek in any of our churches, would be disorderly, and should be rebuked as tending to produce confusion and mischief. A voluntary answer on the part of our sessions would unwisely countenance the spirit of innovation and agitation, and be inconsistent with self-respect."

As a summary of the conclusions to which they came on mature reflection, they submit the following resolutions:

"1. We hold ourselves and the members of the churches we represent, to be an integral portion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and entitled to all the rights and immunities of said Church.

"2. In regard to slavery, we stand upon the platform of the Bible and the Constitution of the Church, which, in our opinion, nowhere teaches that the holding of slaves is a sin or disciplinable offence; that, consequently, the resolution passed by the General Assembly at Detroit in 1850, defining wherein it is, and is not an offence, is unconstitutional, and of no binding force.

"3. That we shall look with interest to the course that shall be pursued by the conservative brethren of the Northern and Western portions of the Church at the next General Assembly; whether they will lend us their aid in preserving the integrity of the Church, and arresting the course of additional agitation, and setting the Church on the basis of its standards."

VERY SENSIBLE.—It was remarked by an intelligent old farmer, "I would rather be taxed for the education of the boy, than the ignorance of the man; for the one or the other I am compelled to be."

CHLOROFORM FOR BEES.—A sixth part of an ounce of chloroform for a single hive, or nearly a quarter of an ounce for a large hive, is used in Scotland for putting bees to sleep while their honey is taken. They put the chloroform in a shallow breakfast plate, covered over with a gauze, then put the hive over the plate, cover with cloths, and in twenty minutes the bees will be sound asleep, and out of the combs on the table. This is considered better than sulphur, and the bees rather like it.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, August 20.

Rev. Alexander F. Doro.—This highly esteemed and useful clergyman—pastor of the Trinity Church, (Protestant Episcopal.)—died of yellow fever, in this city, Thursday, 13th inst.

Mr. D. had been pastor of the congregation that has sustained this irreparable loss in his death, for three years. Favored with his zealous labors and fervent piety, it had prospered much. To the pastor is largely due the tasteful house of worship just erected on Jackson street, Fourth District. He leaves a widow and six children.

Our acquaintance with the deceased begun and ended in this field of his last labors, and gave us assurance of personal and official excellencies that make the death of such a man a profound grief and heavy loss to the whole community and the Church at large.

Church Debts.—We hope Methodists will steadfastly maintain this good doctrine in building churches—"Owe no man any thing." The papers inform us that a Bishop of the Episcopal Church in Pennsylvania has rendered a most important service to his diocese by the measures he has adopted for arresting church debts. By refusing to consecrate any house of worship which is not paid for, he has constrained those who wish to build churches either to count the cost and "cut the coat according to the cloth," more particularly than has been customary, or else to bestir themselves to more liberal things than have been wont to prevail. Our Episcopal friends think a good deal of "consecration," and they would exert themselves no little rather than continue long to worship in an unconsecrated sanctuary. The result, at any rate, has been most happy. A great change for the better has been wrought.

"The time was, (says the Episcopal Recorder) and that not very distant, when it was deemed no particular evil to have a mortgage upon a church building to the extent of a third, or even half of its original cost. A debt was deemed an inevitable necessity; there was somewhat of a charm about it as a financial operation; the contracting party appealed to equity, on the ground that it was not reasonable for the present generation to bear all the burden—a large portion of it could be fairly left to posterity. That dream, however, has passed away, and views more in accordance with Christian doctrine and sound reason are rapidly spreading among us."

Missions.—The Central Christian Advocate (St. Louis) of the 5th inst. says of the renewal of this mission of the M. E. Church, North, in New Mexico:

"Rev. E. Nicholson, Superintendent of our Missions at Santa Fe, has been in the city the past week, on his way to his distant field of labor. It will be remembered that Bro. Nicholson spent some time in that country, and returned under the impression that it would be impracticable to make further efforts in this mission. Recent circumstances, however, have changed this impression, and he is now on his way to again commence operations. In addition to a brother, who goes out as an assistant, he is accompanied by a Mexican priest, who has renounced Romanism, and who will assist in this mission."

"Enough for this Time."—A spirited newspaper war has been, for a few months, carried on in the Standard, a paper published in Columbus, Miss. The casus belli is the pamphlet—"Reasons why I cannot be an Episcopalian." We have been interested spectators, but without any desire to interfere. "Presbuteros" is the advocate of the author and doctrines of the pamphlet. He has characterized Puseyism as "a putrid excrescence on the body of a branch of the Church." The champion of the High Church party takes exceptions to this—if "Presbuteros mean by this the doctrines taught by Dr. Pusey and his compeers at Oxford." He concludes his rejoinder in these significant words:

"But enough for this time. May the good Lord preserve the life of Dr. Pusey to good old age, and raise up many more like him, to stir up to greater devotion the members of the English and American Church."

Dr. Olin.—The National Intelligencer of July 23d has a long article, biographical and critical, of a highly favorable character, on Dr. Olin. We quote a few sentences: "Dr. Olin was accustomed habitually to beg the prayers of his friends on all emergencies and momentous affairs, attributing much efficacy to those intercessory appeals. He even expressed his belief that our departed friends pray for us in their new and glorious abode. Though a confirmed invalid, Dr. Olin allowed of no dereliction of duty through corporeal infirmities. In delivering a course of lectures to his alumni on the subject of the college studies, he overtasked his strength, inducing a physical debility which staid forever his useful career. Conscious of his state, and probing in religious beauty the mighty proportions of his immortal spirit, his soul passed before that final ordeal for which the scope of his whole life was an anxious preparation. He died on the night of the 15th August, 1851, his last words to Bishop James being, 'I shall be saved, though it be as by fire.'"

Teachers will find a demand and eligible opportunity offered them in our advertising columns.

Female High School.—This institution, though young, begun and exists under the best auspices. The President of Trustees, L. C. Garland, speaks briefly, but to the point, in our advertising columns.

THE EPIDEMIC.

It is not our privilege, as we hoped it would be, to record the ebbing.—The tide of sickness and death rolls in upon our afflicted city. Taking into consideration the ordinary and extraordinary absenteeism of the season, it is but too plain from our mortality lists that, at the time we go to press, the epidemic is on the increase. The plague of London, about which so much has been written and told, did not carry off more than half as many victims, in proportion to population. We have rain every day, quickly succeeded by a hot steaming sun. At night the air is unseasonably cool.

The occasion develops a generous sympathy equal to it, not only here, but abroad. To the donations noticed last week for caring for destitute sufferers, we now add that of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, $1000; Tow-boat Company, $800; and many smaller sums in the city, of which an account will be rendered the public by the Howard Association. New York has contributed from its own citizens, and various Orleanians now there, $20,000; Philadelphia has sent on $3000; Baltimore, $5000, and the Corporation of Savannah, $1000.

The various cemeteries have been recovered from the horrid state of disorder and backwardness into which they had been suffered to fall last week. Interments are made with promptness and propriety.

A visit and personal inspection of the hospitals, last week, assured us that the sick in them are receiving better nursing and medical attendance, by far, than usually falls to the poor and destitute and strangers—as most of them are. The work of humanity is not in vain. A vast amount of suffering is ameliorated and many lives saved.

We take from a daily paper the following report of the mortality up to the 14th instant:

In the month of June, when the population here may be estimated at about 140,000, there were 610 deaths, of which 21 were of yellow fever. This total is only what may be considered a very moderate and natural mortality, although it proves, also, that as the season progresses the disease increases.

The month of July shows a fearful increase. Towards the latter part of this month the population decreases 50,000; notwithstanding we find an aggregate mortality of 2210, of which 1409 died of yellow fever. It will also be noticed that the deaths from other diseases increased from 610, out of a population of 140,000, to 801, out of a lessened population, estimated at 100,000, or averaging that number, for it is during the latter days of July that all take wing from the city, whose obligations are not of a nature to retain them; thus leaving the population at the beginning of the present month at about 80,000, which may be considered the maximum. Of this unfortunate remnant, as will be seen by the report, 2712 have been carried to the grave in fourteen days, 2255 being deaths from yellow fever, the total number showing one death to every thirty individuals. It is fearlessly expressed here by those whose long residence and experience is a sufficient guaranty for the correctness of their assertions, that the mortality will be at least in the same proportion. Is it not fearful to contemplate? Already the aggregate deaths by yellow fever are 3685. The same proportion, until the first of October, will give 5000 more, and so we may expect to lose in this season nearly 9000 of our inhabitants from this disease only. What, then, remains to us? Simply to endure patiently, to guard our own health, and to perform our duty to those whose misfortune it is to require aid.

COMMENCEMENT—WHAT IS IT?

This word, used in reference to College Anniversaries, strikes many as a misnomer—seeming to be the end of the scholastic year rather than the beginning. The Independent, a very scholarly paper, gives a definition. The editor lately attended the Commencement at Yale College:

"A college commencement is a day for the conferring of degrees. In the academic dialect of the English universities a person receiving the degree of Bachelor in Arts, in Medicine, in Law, or in Divinity, commences Bachelor in the faculty in which he graduates; and afterwards, when he receives, in course, the next degree in the same faculty, he proceeds Master or Doctor. Commencement therefore, or the time of such commencing, closes the college year. Instead of being the beginning of a term, it is properly followed by a vacation. The orations and dissertations exhibited by those who have completed their college course, are not the commencement. Still less are the discourses and addresses that cluster around the anniversary, any part of the commencement. The essential thing is the conferring of degrees. The solemn utterance of that Latin formula, 'Admitto te ad gradum baccalaureatus,' is the essential thing, for there can be no commencement without commencing. But, very naturally, the yearly solemnity of conferring degrees upon those who have honorably completed the required course of study, is the great anniversary of every American college; and in modern times the anniversary has become a literary exhibition. In old times, every candidate for a degree proposed his Latin thesis, and stood ready to defend it with syllogisms in Latin against all opposers. But in modern times, the syllogistic disputations and the theses have wholly disappeared; and in their stead there is an exhibition of what the graduating class can do as writers and speakers. This commencement anniversary is a convenient occasion for orations and discourses by the appointment of various societies; and the more attractions there are of this kind the greater is the resort of graduates and strangers."

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN CALIFORNIA.

The Romanists, acting on the sly, have defeated the American free school system in California. Thus have they carried one point in our republic. It teaches the old lesson—Vigilance is the price of liberty.

"It appears," says the Independent, "in a statement in the Pacific, that the Catholic Bishop addressed a letter to the State Superintendent of Common Schools, containing a report of the Catholic schools, and asking him to use his influence to procure such a modification of the law as would allow these schools to receive a pro rata of the moneys raised for the support of common schools.

"The Superintendent accordingly recommended the measure, and the committee to whom it was referred drafted a bill, but did not report it till a very short time before the adjournment, when there was not sufficient time for the examination and discussion of the bill; and, in the hurry of the last hours of the session, it was passed, on the recommendation of the Superintendent, almost without examination.

"The old law provided that the common schools should be free from all denominational and sectarian bias, control and influence whatever, in order to a participation in the benefits of the school fund; and that no school-book of a sectarian or denominational character should be introduced or used in any common school instituted under the act. These provisions are repealed by the amendments.

"The amendments also give to the State Superintendent the power to decide what books shall be used in the schools! He is at full liberty to introduce the Catholic Catechism and the miracles and legends of the Church. The people of the State will thus be compelled to pay, by tax, for teaching the dogmas of the Catholic religion; so that here we have the Catholic religion established by law! Whether the people of this young State will submit to this imposition remains to be seen."

REV. JUSTIN EDWARDS, D. D.

Though Dr. Edwards was a Northern man in residence, and a native of Massachusetts, he was not unknown to many of our readers. He died in Virginia, July 23—on a journey for his health—about 66 years old. We bear distinctly the impression of his lecture on keeping the Sabbath day holy, delivered in Montgomery, Ala., while the Conference was in session there. How completely he seemed to grasp every subject he touched and hold it in his mind in all its relations! Greatness and integrity were his traits—even to a stranger. His excellent little book, "Sabbath Manual," we commend to every one as worth its weight in gold. An exchange gives these items:

In his boyhood he manifested an extraordinary desire for the acquisition of knowledge, especially in the profoundest subjects of [illegible] was a graduate of William College, and was fifteen years pastor of the church at Andover, where his ministry was greatly blessed and honored. It was he, more than any other, that studied out and promulgated the doctrines of the great Temperance Reform—the moral wonder of the age; and when the American Temperance Society was formed in 1827, he was chosen Secretary, and filled that office till his death. He devoted seven of the best years of his life to the service of the Society, traveling in all parts of the country, and every where seeking to fix the true doctrines and practice of temperance deeply in the consciences of the best portions of society. His annual reports of the Society, afterwards embodied in the volume of "Permanent Temperance Documents," constitute a series of linked logic and powerful appeal that can hardly be equaled in the English language.

He was afterwards chosen President of the Theological Seminary at Andover, as successor to the eminent Dr. Porter. And when that office was discontinued, he set himself, with the energy of a young man, to the introduction of a system of far-reaching movements for the preservation of the sanctity of the Sabbath, with a view especially to the universal recognition of THE RIGHT of the laboring man and the laboring beast to the stated enjoyment of the Sabbath's rest.

Of late, Dr. Edwards had been much employed in preparing a Family Commentary on the Bible, for the American Tract Society. The New Testament is published, and will show how perfectly original and unique his mind was, both in conception and execution. He had advanced in the Old Testament as far as the 9th Psalm, on which the last words he wrote were these—"Men die, and leave many things unfinished; but God Lives. His cause will extend, and by such instrumentalities as He shall raise up, will ultimately triumph."

WHOM SHALL I FEAR?

True piety elevates its possessor in the scale of being, exalts his feelings, dignifies his character, and sanctifies his heart. It provides for us a suitable relief in every trying state, and enables us to exult in God as the God of our salvation. Let us notice—

The Confidence of the Christian.—"Whom shall I fear?" This is not the language of vain presumption, but the expression of Christian assurance. Whom have we to fear?

God Is Reconciled.—The love of God is shed abroad in the believer's heart, and the possession of love softens the feelings of fear; shall we be afraid to approach a reconciled Father?

The Law Is Satisfied.—Those who are under the bond of the covenant, need not fear the curse of the law; its threatenings are averted, and the curse is turned into a blessing.

Satan Is Conquered.—He can go no further than the length of his chain. "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly."

Afflictions.—They are Sanctified.—Shall I fear that which comes from my father, who loves me? Shall I fear that which is sent for my good? Shall I fear that which is sent to promote the spiritual benefit of my soul? The demand of piety never sparkles so brightly as when the Christian is surrounded with the darkness of Affliction.

Death Is Vanquished.—To the believer it is only "the shadow of death;" there is no substantial evil in it. The shadow of a serpent will not sting; the shadow of a lion will not devour; and the shadow of a sword will not kill. Death is only a dark passage that leads to our Father's house. The unbeliever has every thing to fear: God is his enemy; he is under the curse of the law; led captive by the devil, his afflictions are unsanctified, and he is unprepared for death.

"God is my strong salvation:
What foe have I to fear?
In darkness and temptation,
My light, my help, is near."

[For N. O. Christian Advocate.]

DEDICATION AT PRATTVILLE.

PROSPERITY OF THE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:—I recently had the pleasure of making a trip to Prattville, to attend the dedication of the new Methodist church just finished there; and was so much gratified with what I saw and heard that I am disposed to try and convey some portion of that pleasure to your patrons.

Prattville, as many of your readers are aware, is a flourishing manufacturing village of some 700 inhabitants, in Autauga county in this State, which has been called into existence almost entirely by the untiring energy, tact and perseverance of that prince of mechanics, useful citizen and liberal-hearted man, Daniel Pratt. Bro. P., as I am informed, came to this State twenty years ago, with but a small amount of means. He set himself down upon Autauga creek, went to work, and by his own efforts has accumulated a fortune, and carved out for himself a reputation for almost all that adorns human nature, such as few men in this country possess, yet such as any man might be proud to acquire. While he has been doing this for himself, he has been blessing all around him. No man who would attend to it, ever wanted work where Bro. Pratt was; the honest poor within the circle of his acquaintance never lacks bread, and no public undertaking calls for his aid in vain. He has, at his own expense, built a plank road from Prattville to Washington, four miles; built a school-house for the benefit of the public, which cost him $1200; and if I am rightly informed, bore one-half the expense in the erection of the Baptist church, and contributed liberally in aid of the Presbyterian church in Prattville.

But it is to the cause of Christ, as connected with Methodism, that Bro. Pratt's heart seems to be most wedded. As long ago as 1839, he made the largest subscription—$1000—to the Centenary Collection that was made in the United States, if I am not mistaken. Repeatedly since that has he aided most liberally educational and Church enterprises, colporteur operations, etc., etc. But his most munificent act is the erection of the church just consecrated. This building is 75 by 60 feet, is of brick, and of the best and most tasteful workmanship. It has an elevation of 22 feet, with an end gallery; is beautifully frescoed throughout by an artist from your own city. The pilasters, pannel work, heavy cornice and centre-piece, are so skillfully [illegible] of the most searching eye. And the curtain behind the pulpit is so close an imitation that many visitors have not been satisfied until they went up and touched it, and thus dispelled the illusion. The pulpit and altar are neat and tasteful, and both richly furnished. The seats are capped with mahogany, and have henvy scrolls at the end, of the same wood. The fronts, backs and tops of the ends of the seats are veneered with mahogany also, giving the whole an air of great neatness. To the front part of each pew is affixed a mahogany rack, which is furnished with three hymn-books—two 12mo. and one 24mo. There is also in each a cricket for the comfort of ladies—a frame for the reception of gentlemen's hats—and a supply of neat spittoons for the accommodation of all. The whole is well carpeted and admirably lighted and ventilated. Connected with this building by a hall, on which is an elegant office for the pastor, is another church edifice, 40 by 75 feet, and hardly inferior in external appearance to the former. This is intended for Sabbath schools, a lecture room, the colored people, etc., etc., and when finished will be far in advance of most of our country churches. The whole cost of this structure is not far from $20,000—every cent of which has been borne by Bro. Pratt.

You boast, Mr. Editor, of your liberal men in your city, and I am glad you herald their doings to the world, not to eulogize a mortal, but to provoke others to love good works. We rejoice in them too; but we wish to let you and the world know that the same grace opens hearts among us to devise liberal things.

While on this subject, allow me to say that if the facts ordinarily relied upon as proof are admitted to be such, the course of Methodism in this part of the State is onward. I doubt if there ever was a time when it presented more evidence of substantial prosperity than the present. At Wetumpka our friends have commenced the erection of a fine church; in Montgomery they have a magnificent one mostly finished; in Prattville things are as above described. In this place we have just commenced the work of providing ourselves with a good house of worship; in Hamburg, seven miles east of Marion, a neat and commodious one has just been dedicated; and in Woodville the friends are now talking earnestly of building a fine one. So that when the undertakings, which may be said to be now underway, shall be completed, not less than sixty-four or sixty-five thousand dollars will have been expended in church building in this small section of the State, within the term of two or three years. Within the same limits, during this Conference year, there have been the following works of grace: In Summerfield and its appendages, Pea Ridge and Bethel, there have been some 90 conversions; at Perryville, some 30; at Hamburg, some 60 to 70; at Woodville, some 30 to 40; Marion, 90; and now at Greensboro' there is a work in which there have been already from 70 to 80 brought to Christ, and the glorious work still advancing. Well may it be said, what has God wrought! and still we are expecting more. These revivals have in all cases been attended with the happiest influence upon the churches, bringing them up to a high point of zeal and charity. May the work still go on.

J. Hamilton.

Selma, Ala., August 10.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

A FEW WORDS TO THE OVERSEERS ON SOUTHERN PLANTATIONS.

BY A MISSIONARY.

As you are a numerous class of citizens in many parts of the South, and stand so intimately connected with the movements of the Church in her missionary operations among the blacks, I have thought proper thus to address you a few words on the position that you occupy and the opportunity you have of aiding the cause and doing good to that people.

In the first place, allow me to assure you that you have the sympathies of the writer in your perplexing and often ungrateful calling.

The government of human mind and conduct in any department of life is difficult, and no one engaged in this business finds more to try the patience and perplex the judgment than those engaged in the management of the servants on our Southern plantations. To attend to it properly, requires the exercise of no little forbearance and perseverance.

But your co-operation with the Church in her missionary operations among the blacks is the point to which I wish to call your attention. I do this from the fact that you have it in your power to do much towards opening a door for preaching the gospel among that people, and can aid greatly in sustaining it when introduced among them. In many instances it is altogether with the overseer whether there shall be preaching on the plantation or not; or whether the servants shall be allowed to meet with the servants on a neighboring plantation at the place of worship. The master may be irreligious or indifferent; or, if professing to be religious, he may not feel sensibly the obligations resting upon him to do all he can to improve the morals of his people, and by the blessings of the gospel, try to prepare them for a happy exchange of worlds, when the Master of all calls us from the labors of earth. With the most of this class of masters the wishes or opinions of the overseer would determine the question in favor of the gospel. Will you give it that determination? I trust so, lest you, with the unfaithful master in the great day of accounts, be found to have stood in the way of the servants entering into life, and their blood be required at your hands.

I am glad that most of the overseers are in favor of the missionary operations among the blacks, and some are so much so that rather than have no preaching where they are, they would pay the expense themselves. Often the owner lives hundreds of miles from the plantation, and leaves the entire management of his people in the overseer's hands, and thus a large measure of responsibility; and were it his desire or suggestion that the missionary be invited to come among them, it would not be denied.

And when he is welcomed among your people, much depends on the encouragement and support you give the cause. You can, in the first place, make convenient arrangements for preaching. If you have no chapel, and no time to build one, seats can be provided in the most comfortable place you have. Then so arrange the ordinary affairs of the plantation that none of its regular business should interfere with the hours of preaching. Let all understand that the hours of preaching are sacred hours, and not to be perverted to other purposes, nor are they to be neglected without cause.

And always, when convenient, attend preaching yourself. Some object to this. They think the presence of the overseer or master, at preaching, with the servants, is embarrassing to them, and might prevent their being benefited to the same extent that they might be, were they absent. I am aware that the unruly and unfaithful might be, and often are, embarrassed under such circumstances; but it is a kind of embarrassment that has a good effect. Then I have observed that those masters and overseers who are regular attendants on the exercises of the missionary, are the most devoted to the cause. It has a healthful effect on white and black.

Lastly, you should make it your daily business to pray God's blessing upon the labors of the missionary, and feel deeply interested in the reformation and conversion of the servants. "But," says one, "I am not a converted man; I can't pray for myself." Well, it ought not so to be. You should have been a changed man long before this, and now ready to every good word and work, and in your prayers and godly example afford efficient service to the cause of our divine Redeemer. You may not be aware, dear sirs, that the influence of a pious overseer had much to do in first introducing the gospel among the plantations of the South. Thus this successful plan of doing good to the black man had its start. And were all the overseers converted men, or moral men, or missionary men, what an amount of influence they would exert in favor of improving the morals and saving the souls of the blacks!

I trust, gentlemen, you will give this subject the attention it deserves, and act accordingly. And be ye assured that the writer will pray that overseer and servant, master and missionary, may all act a faithful part in their respective stations, and finally enjoy the fruits of their labors together in Heaven.

Arcola.

Prospect of the Crops.—From all parts our exchanges bring us news of long continued and copious falls of rain. The effect of this state of things can be but in the highest degree disastrous to the growing cotton crops, causing the plant to grow too large, the forms to fall off, and by too much shade, producing rot in the matured bolls. There is also another injurious effect incident to the wet weather, in the difficulty of drying the crude cotton when gathered, and in the consequent rot which must take place in much of it when housed. There is no doubt that the unfavorable state of the weather will have another unfavorable effect on the incoming crop, from the fact that the beating rains, by mingling quantities of dirt and decayed leaves with the staple will deteriorate its quality and value. The above enumerated causes and effects combined, will doubtless influence the quantity and quality of the yearly receipts, and nothing but a very late frost can justify the expectation of a large yield.

The grain crops have turned out well, and there can be no fear of a deficiency in the "staff of life."

CALIFORNIA CORRESPONDENCE.

[Special Correspondence of the Advocate.]

Sonoma, July 8, 1853.

Mr. Editor:—About fifty miles north of San Francisco lies the Sonoma Valley, bounded south by the San Pablo Bay, east by a range of mountains separating it from Napa valley, west by a similar range dividing it from Petaluma valley, and these two mountain ranges closing up, or nearly so, forms the northern boundary. Thus, by the bay and mountains, it is entirely surrounded, save a narrow gap, affording an outlet on the north side. Through this mountain range flows a small stream, passing through the most fertile portions of the valley, and connecting with the above named bay. A small steamer, with several sailing craft, plys regularly between this and San Francisco, landing at high tide on the creek within three miles of our city. This is a handsome little valley, affording altogether not more perhaps than five square miles of valuable agricultural land. At the foot of the mountains forming the northern boundary of the valley is located the Pueblo de Sonoma; one square mile around is generally thought to comprise the grant made by the Mexican Government to the town, and hence is regularly laid off into blocks and streets. It is, however, a small place of a few hundred inhabitants, deriving its importance from the agricultural resources of the valley. The numerous old tile covered adobe walls are indicative of age and the ravages of time. The old church and college buildings, where the natives were taught the flummery of Roman Catholicism, are a gloomy heap of deserted ruins. Dwellings of modern style are being erected and occupied by American families. After the country fell into the hands of our government, this place was occupied as a military station; but the troops have been removed, though the garrison is still kept up. Here also is the residence of Gen. M. G. Vallego, formerly an officer under the Mexican Government, and who was taken prisoner by the Americans at the breaking out of difficulties between the two governments and the erection of the "Bear Flag." The owner of many leagues of land and numerous herds of cattle, and surrounded by serfs and peons, he was a man of authority, whose slaves dared not question his right to command. Influenced no doubt by partisan and political demagogues, he attempted to establish a capital for the State bearing his own name, but it was a total failure. The General's former dwelling occupied a conspicuous place on the north side of the Plaza in our town, with a flourishing vineyard and orchard in the rear, inclosed by an adobe wall two feet thick and eight feet high. But he has recently erected and now occupies a more magnificent mansion of modern style of architecture, at the foot of the mountains, a little out of the city. Here he has a bold spring of pure water issuing from the mountain base, a large garden through which the water flows, and by which it is finely irrigated, with other handsome improvements. It is a beautiful spot.

The moral and educational interests of this community are gradually advancing. Schools are better patronized than formerly. A little east of the city stands a commodious house of worship, finished off with cupola and bell, erected by the Church, North, and dedicated by Bishop Ames in April last—regular services twice each Sabbath. Immediately south of the Plaza, and in a very eligible location, stands one of the most neatly finished and handsome little churches in this or any State. The finish is not only neat, but fine, for a building entirely of wood. A beautiful steeple and spire point heavenward; a bell also is within to arouse the slumbering, and remind the thoughtless of their obligations to hear the word preached. The style is purely Gothic, and in this respect is, I presume, an anomoly in the history of American Methodism. Is there another after this style of architecture in the United States? or has Bro. E. B. Lockley the credit of erecting the first Gothic Methodist Church on the continent? Perhaps, however, it may not be regarded as so very creditable either: for I remember seeing it stated in your paper, but a short time since, that the Great Beast invariably dwells in Gothic houses. At any rate, "Soule Chapel" is an ornament to the town in which it stands, and we trust will prove a great blessing to the community. On last Sabbath, at 11 o'clock, A. M., it was dedicated by the venerable Bishop whose name it bears. At an early hour it was crowded—pulpit, altar and aisles were jamed, and a crowd still without seeking admission. All was silence and interest, while the Bishop talked more than an hour of godliness—the profits thereof and the means of promoting it: 1 Tim., 4-8. The cost of the house was $4200. Of this amount, over $2000 was still due; our appeal, however, was made for the latter sum only. In reply, and a very prompt one it was, we had in cash and on subscription over $2160. Well done! thought I, to get a hundred dollars more than was asked for, by no means a frequent occurrence. It covers the entire indebtedness of the house. I like the plan of paying for houses of worship before offering them to the Lord, and hope the practice may at least become general. On Monday, the 4th, the Sabbath School, in connection with Soule Chapel, had a very interesting celebration, the first ever held on this side the bay. At an early hour the officers of the school and some seventy children were in attendance, with badges and banner appropriately inscribed. Singing of several hymns by the children, reading the Declaration, 4th of July oration, and a very appropriate Sabbath School address, closed the exercises at the church. A procession was then formed and marched out a short distance to a beautiful grove of spreading oaks, where refreshments had been prepared. After several hours pleasantly spent in that lovely shade, Bishop Soule, who had been in attendance all the while, and seemed to enjoy himself much, arose and made some touching and appropriate remarks, when the crowd dispersed, all apparently delighted with the scenes of the day. The 3d and 4th of July, 1853, will form quite an era in the history of our valley, and will be pleasantly remembered by many.

Bishop Soule has now completed his tour through the mountains, and has visited the most important points both of the valleys and mines. He not only filled the long list of appointments published for him to do which he had to travel in some instances more than a hundred miles during the week, mostly by land, and in some of the warmest weather experienced in California—but, as if too much circumscribed in his movements by that plan, he occasionally turned aside to preach to crowds hastily assembled under the spreading oaks in the open air. If any have supposed or feared that, through the infirmities of accumulated years, the Bishop's visit to our State would be comparatively inefficient, let such know that they were never more mistaken. He had not traveled six or seven thousand miles merely to touch at our coast, and attend the session of our Conference, but must know what we are doing, and are likely to do. This he has accomplished, and unless we are greatly mistaken, leaves with favorable impressions of the country and our work in it. He leaves a favorable impression behind him. May a kind Providence guard and guide him to his family in safety.

W. R. Goen.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Carnesboro', Ala.—We have been holding a protracted meeting here of more than four weeks' continuance, during which the Lord has blessed our Church and community with a gracious revival: 75 souls have found peace in believing, and 46 have united with our branch of the Lord's Zion. About 25 will, I presume, attach themselves to other denominations. All our Protestant communions here appear greatly refreshed by the gracious visitation. We had during the meeting the efficient services of Bros. C. C. Galloway, Neely and Hamilton, with occasional help from other neighboring brethren. Bro. Neely was with us the larger portion of the time, and his labors were greatly blessed. Among the converts and those who have joined our connection, are about twenty of our most promising young men, between the ages of 18 and 25 years. It has but rarely been my privilege to enjoy such a repast as a class meeting held with them last night proved to be. Is not such a company coming among us now in answer to the prayer for more laborers?

J. J. Hutchinson.

August 10.

Prairie Creek Mission, Ala.—Since my last quarterly report, I have added three other appointments to my work, which makes fourteen appointments, two of which are to the whites. I now preach to 16,000 blacks, most of whom are under catechetical instruction, some of whom are improving finely.

We have had one house of worship built this quarter for the colored people, and I have the promise of others being built soon.

One has been expelled, five dropped, two died happy, twenty baptised, eight of whom were children, and fifty joined on probation; and there is a gracious revival on several plantations. And I think I may say with safety that the mission is in a prosperous condition, and could be profitably enlarged, if we had the laborers for the work.

August 9. J. M. Wells.

Summerfield Ct., Ala.—Rev. C. C. Galloway writes, August 9:

"The Lord has revived his work at the Bethel and Pea Ridge churches."

STRONG ARGUMENT.

David Paul Brown, Esq., of Philadelphia, a lawyer of distinction, supports the Maine Law, and thinks that intoxicating drinks should be prohibited, because—

1. They deprive men of their reason for the time being.
2. They destroy men of the greatest intellectual strength.
3. They foster and encourage every species of immorality.
4. They bar the progress of civilization and religion.
5. They destroy the peace and happiness of millions of families.
6. They reduce many virtuous wives and children to beggary.
7. They cause many thousands of murders.
8. They prevent all reformation of character.
9. They render abortive the strongest relations.
10. The millions of property expended in them is lost.
11. They cause the majority of cases of insanity.
12. They destroy both the body and the soul.
13. They burden sober people with millions of paupers.
14. They cause immense expenditures to prevent crime.
15. They cost sober people immense sums of charity.
16. They burden the country with enormous taxes.
17. Because moderate drinkers want the temptation removed.
18. Drunkards want the opportunity removed.
19. Sober people want the nuisance removed.
20. Tax payers want the burden removed.
21. The prohibition would save thousands now falling.
22. The sale exposes our persons to insult.
23. The sale exposes our families to insult.
24. The sale upholds the vicious and idle at the expense of the virtuous and industrious.
25. The sale subjects the sober to great oppression.
26. It takes the sober man's earnings to support the drunkard.
27. It subjects numberless wives to untold sufferings.
28. It is contrary to the Bible.
29. It is contrary to common sense.
30. We have a right to rid ourselves of the burden.

Burning the Dead.—Somebody has been hoaxing the editor of the Baton Rouge Comet after a very vile fashion. In its issue of the 11th inst. that paper says:

"We regret exceedingly to learn that burning the dead has at length been resorted to in New Orleans. The authorities have been forced into this measure from the inability to obtain hands to bury the dead. We learn that on Friday morning fifty dead bodies were publicly consumed."

This report doubtless arose from a recommendation by a contemporary to resort to this method of disposing of the dead bodies. The recommendation was not acted on, and it is superfluous to say that the Comet's informant was in error.

Health of Charleston.—The weekly report of the City Register of Charleston shows an exceedingly favorable state of health in that city. The total number of deaths for the week ending the 6th inst. was 15.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—In Dallas, Ala., August 2, by the Rev. C. C. Calloway, Mr. JAMES R. SMITH of Sumter, to Miss ROXANNA STURDIVANT of Dallas.

OBITUARY:

DIED—July 3, 1853, in Green county, Ala., INSURRECTION WATKINS, aged 14 years, 9 months and 20 days.

The deceased was the youngest son of Bryant and Lucy Watkins—remarkable for his affectionate spirit towards his brothers and an only sister, as well as for his dutifulness to his parents. During his sickness he seemed much concerned about the trouble to which the family were necessarily subjected in waiting upon him. Though but a boy, he seemed to have calculated the importance of preparing for another state of existence, so that his parents and friends are not without hope that their loss is his infinite gain. The instances of mortality so frequently occurring around us should admonish us "to be ready," for neither age nor sex form a minute delers the monster, death: nor can the most tender relations which exist among us, or the unutterable anguish of parents weeping over their dying children, awaken his sympathy, or bribe him to withhold the fatal stroke.

L.

DIED—Of yellow fever, in this city, 17th inst., SARAH E., daughter of Wm. S. and P. Hunt in her 8th year.

"Millions of infant souls compose
The family above."

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of this institution for the week ending at one o'clock yesday evening:

Admissions.....587 Deaths.....27
Discharges.....276 By yellow fever.....262

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock Friday night:

Admissions.....85 Deaths.....27
Discharges.....40 By yellow fever.....26

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of the institution for the 24 hours ending at twelve o'clock Saturday night.

Admissions.....69 Deaths.....13
Discharges.....40 By yellow fever.....25

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report for the twenty-four hours ending at 12 o'clock on Sunday night, the 14th inst:

Admissions.....72 Deaths, yellow fever.....25
Discharges.....25 Other deaths.....6

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock, Monday night:

Admissions.....87 Yellow Fever deaths.....16
Discharges.....56 Other deaths.....1

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Tuesday, 16th inst:

Admissions.....61 Deaths.....20
Discharges.....34 Yellow Fever.....24

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Wednesday, 17th inst:

Admissions.....56 Yellow fever deaths.....33
Discharges.....41 Other deaths.....2

Weekly Report of the Interments in all the Cemeteries of the city, for the week ending at six o'clock A. M. on Sunday, August 14, 1853:

Yellow Fever	126	Brain Fever	3
Bilious Fever	10	Chronitis	1
Typhus Fever	1	Hydrocephalus	1
Sick Vomit	7	Enlargement of Head	1
Diarrhœa	1	Epilepsy	1
Cholera	1	Cramps	1
Cholera Morbus	1	Fits	1
Inflammations	5	Convulsions	24
Cholera Chronic	1	Lockjaw	1
Bowel Complaint	1	Mal au Machoir	1
Dysentery	4	Tetanus	1
Dysentery Chronic	1	Nervous System	51
Fever and Ague	1	Tonsilitis	1
Fever Intermittent	2	Bronchitis	1
Fever Bilious	2	Croup Chronic	1
Fever Remittent	1	Pleurisy	1
Fever Congest	1	Consumption	11
Fever Congestive	1	Dropsy of Chest	1
Fever Typhus	1	Haugrene of Lungs	1
Fever Inflammatory	1	Fluction de Poitrine	1
Inflammation	1	Affection Pulmonaire	1
Inflammation of Bowels	1	Swelling of the Throat	1
Inflammation of Liver	1	Respiratory System	29
Inflammation of Kidneys	1	Gastro-enteritis	1
Inflammation of Stomach	1	Enteritis	1
Inflammation of Brain	1	Inflammation of Bowels	1
Disease	38	Colitis	1
Hooping Cough	2	Peritonitis	2
Measles	1	Intestines Chronic	1
Rheumatism	3	Digestive System	7
Acute Mesenterica	1	Childbed	2
Scalding	5	Cancer of Breast	1
Scarlet Fever	1	Puerperal Fever	1
Scarlet Dentition	1	Of Females	4
Debility	2	Old Age	3
General Infirmity	1	Natural Cause Decay	1
Dropsy	2
Tuberculosis	1	Stillborn	9
Tumor	1
Visitation of God	15	Sun-stroke	4
Accidents	7	Drowned	1
Asphyxia, Strain	6	Casualties	5
Hydrophobia Canina	1	Hydrophobia	1
Abscess Carbuncular	1
Erysipelas	2	Delirium Tremens	2
Gangrene Traumatic	1	Suicide	1
Inflammation Brain	1		3
Uncertain	7		77
Zymotic diseases	7		1357
Sporadic do.	1		110
External Causes	1		16
Total			1620

Of whom 146 were reported as under 10 years of age. 329 colored.

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board Health.

A corrected report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for each day in the month of August to the 14th of said month:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
August 1	142	106	25	11
" 2	135	115	14	6
" 3	146	121	17	8
" 4	166	135	15	16
" 5	150	128	9	13
" 6	258	194	50	14
" 7	206 to 1156	165 to 967	41 to 150	4 to 60
" 8	219	187	23	9
" 9	201	161	21	14
" 10	230	193	33	4
" 11	223	182	10	13
" 12	207	180	25	2
" 13	214	159	24	17
" 14	232 to 1526	191 to 1288	25 to 163	16 to 75
Total	2712	2275	363	144

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board of Health.

Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M. on Saturday, 13th August, 1853:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	2	2	—	—
Grave, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	—	—	—	—
St. Fidèles' Rest	4	3	1	—
Recorded	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	85	58	7	—
St. Patrick's	39	35	1	—
Catholic No. 1, Second District	40	20	3	11
Catholic No. 2	3	—	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third District	2	2	—	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	15	9	4	2
Hebrew	33	28	3	—
Total	4	4	—	—
	214	159	22	13

J. C. Simonds, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries for the twenty-four hours ending at 12 o'clock on Sunday, 14th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	9	4	5	—
Cypress Grove, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	5	4	1	—
St. Fidèles' Rest	—	—	—	—
Charity Hospital	61	50	1	6
St. Patrick's	43	36	7	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	37	27	3	10
Catholic No 2	1	1	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third	2	2	—	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	11	11	—	—
Hebrew	52	48	4	—
Total	3	3	—	—
	224	191	28	15

J. C. Simonds, M. D. Sec'y Board of Health

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock on Monday, August 15, 1853:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	5	4	1	—
Cypress Grove, Metairie Ridge	6	3	1	—
Cypress Grove	6	3	1	—
St. Fidèles' Rest	—	—	—	—
Charity Hospital	66	58	8	—
St. Patrick's	30	28	1	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	31	25	1	5
Catholic No 2	3	2	1	—
St. A. de Paul, Third District	29	12	8	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	50	44	6	—
Hebrew	4	4	—	—
Total	213	181	28	6

J. C. Simonds, M. D., Secretary Board of Health

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M. on Tuesday, 16th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 1	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 2	63	53	10	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	49	35	3	—
St. Patrick's	24	23	1	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic No 2	5	5	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third District	24	21	3	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	15	15	5	—
Hebrew	9	9	—	—
Total	210	181	24	—

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health,

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Thursday, the 18th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 1	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 2	63	53	10	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	49	35	3	—
St. Patrick's	24	23	1	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic No 2	5	5	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third	24	21	3	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	15	15	5	—
Hebrew	9	9	—	—
Total	210	181	28	—

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Wednesday, the 17th inst.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	9	4	5	—
Cypress Grove, Metairie Ridge	—	—	—	—
Cypress Grove	5	4	1	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	—	—	—	—
Charity Hospital	61	50	1	6
St. Patrick's	43	36	7	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	37	27	3	10
Catholic No 2	1	1	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third	2	2	—	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	11	11	—	—
Hebrew	52	48	4	—
Total	3	3	—	—
	224	191	28	15

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock A. M. on Thursday, 18th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 1	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 2	63	53	10	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	49	35	3	—
St. Patrick's	24	23	1	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic No 2	5	5	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third	24	21	3	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	15	15	5	—
Hebrew	9	9	—	—
Total	210	181	28	—

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M. on Friday, 19th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 1	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 2	63	53	10	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	49	35	3	—
St. Patrick's	24	23	1	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic No 2	5	5	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third	24	21	3	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	15	15	5	—
Hebrew	9	9	—	—
Total	210	181	28	—

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M. on Saturday, 20th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 1	6	5	1	—
Cypress Grove No 2	63	53	10	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	49	35	3	—
St. Patrick's	24	23	1	—
Catholic No 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic No 2	5	5	—	—
St. A. de Paul, Third	24	21	3	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	15	15	5	—
Hebrew	9	9	—	—
Total	210	181	28	—

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One square, first insertion.....$1 00
Each subsequent insertion.....50
One square, one year.....15 00
One square, six months.....8 00
Two Squares, one year.....20 00

Nota Bene—A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

MINISTERIAL SERVICES.—Persons desiring [illegible] Rev. L. PARKER, Corresponding Editor, or Rev. JOSEPH SUMMERS, Assistant, at the Book Room, corner of Camp and Common streets, New Orleans.

NOTICES.

WARRIOR STAND, Macon Co., Ala., August 10, 1853.

MR. EDITOR—Please publish the following resolution and arrangement for Protracted and Missionary Meetings on Tuskegee Circuit, Alabama Conference, as adopted by our Third Quarterly Meeting held at this place on the 5th 6th and 7th inst. JAMES B. HALL.

Resolved, That this quarterly Meeting appoint a committee of five persons, composed of Bros. J. W. Ellis, preacher in charge, and A. M. Sanford, junior preacher, and three other brethren of the Conference who they shall be competent and arrange for Protracted and Missionary Meetings at every appointment on the Circuit, and that the brethren so appointed be allowed their own discretion as to what stage of these meetings they will take up collections.

Whereupon the Conference appointed Rev. J. B. Hall, Rev. E. Ziebry and Bro. Stafford C. L. to co-operate with the preacher and Sanford.

Immediately after the adjournment of Conference the brethren entered upon the discharge of their duties, and I herewith send you the result of their deliberations:

Warrior Stand—Sermon by Rev. S. Armstrong, P. E. 4th which was preached on Sabbath of the Quarterly Meeting.

Mount Zion—Sermon by Rev. J. W. Ellis. Meeting to commence on Saturday before 4th Sabbath in September.

Tuskegee—Sermon by Rev. S. Armstrong. Meeting to commence on Saturday before 4th Sabbath in September.

Mt. Atlantis—Sermon by Rev. S. Armstrong, P. E., 4th Quarterly Meeting, 22d and 23d October.

Sugarel Chapel—Sermon by Rev. E. Story. Assistant—Rev. W. N. Sears. Meeting commences Saturday before 3d Sabbath in September.

Franklin—Sermon by Rev. John M. Ivy. Assistants—Revs. Robert Adams and Christzberg. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

Providence—Sermon by Rev. W. N. Sears. Assistants—Revs. Wm. Manifee and Bree Hove. Meeting commences Saturday, before 2d Sabbath in September.

Mt. Meridor Chapel—Sermon by Rev. D. Perry. Assistant—Rev. J. Motley. Meeting commences Saturday before 3d Sabbath in September.

Pisca Chapel—Sermon by Rev. J. Tally. Assistant—Rev. John C. Jones. Meeting commences Saturday before 4th Sabbath in September.

Slade Chapel—Sermon by Rev. A. M. Sanford. Assistants—Revs. D. Perry and Wm. Barrow. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

New Hope—Sermon by Rev. J. Tally. Assistant—Local brethren in the neighborhood. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

Perry Chapel—Sermon by Rev. John H. Lockhart. Assistants—Revs. A. F. Moore and Garner. Meeting commences Saturday before 3d Sabbath in September.

Mount Nebo—Sermon by Guy Garner. Assistant—Rev. Breedlove. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

So, you perceive, the missionary spirit upon this circuit is not dead, as was predicted by the faithless and unbelieving. Yours respectfully,

JAS. B. HALL, Secretary.

[Glad to perceive it. Arrangement good. Now for the results. May you beat yourselves. Ed.] aug20 2t

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a Camp-meeting commencing on the 30th day of October, at Hampton, Linden Circuit, Alabama Conference, new camp-ground.

J. W. LANEY, Pastor.

July 25, 1853. aug20 2t

TEACHERS WANTED

To supply both departments of Pleasant Hill Academy session to commence on the first Monday in October next. As some experience, undoubted scholarship, and good moral character are qualifications that cannot be dispensed with, we therefore require all applications to be accompanied by testimonials from the following gentlemen: Dr. Manly, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Dr. Mitchell, of Summerfield, Ala.; Rev. M. P. Jewell, of Marion, Ala.; Dr. W. Jones, of Greensboro', Ala.; Messrs. Catlin, Pickering, & Prowell, of Dayton, Ala.; Rev. A. H. McBraw, of Selma, Ala., and Gen. E. V. Eslie, of Montgomery, Ala. Recommendations from either of the above named gentlemen will be satisfactory.

A salary of $800 will be paid by the Trustees to supply the male department, and $700 for the female.

Applications will be forwarded to Pleasant Hill, La., directed to

JOHN JORDAN,
D. A. BLACKSHEER, } Executing Committee.
A. R. REMCHET, }

aug6 tf

UNIVERSITY OF NASHVILLE.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third Annual Course of Lectures in this Department will commence on Tuesday, the first of November next, and continue till the first of the ensuing March.

PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy and Physiology.
W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Institutes and Practice of Medicine.
P. K. WINSTON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
ROBERT M. PORTER, M. D.,
General and Special Anatomy.
J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy.
WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for students on the first Monday in October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures will be given by the Professors, commencing also on the first Monday in October.

The students will have free access to the State Hospital.

Fee of each Professor, $15; Matriculation ticket, $5; Dissecting ticket $10; Graduation fee, $25.

Good board can be obtained in the city at from $2 50 to $3 per week. Further information may be obtained by addressing the undersigned.

By order of the Faculty,

J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D., Dean.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 1853. jy23 6t

General Intelligence.

CLAIMS OF THE COLORED VETERANS.—From the Washington Star of the 14th inst. we select the following:

"Since writing on this subject (the claims for bounty land due the colored veterans of this city) yesterday, we have taken occasion to look further into it, and have satisfied ourselves that Mr. Wilder, of New Orleans, the agent who presents the claims, obtained the information on which he based them legitimately and properly. That is, not from Government records, but from data within his reach in New Orleans. This fact entirely exonerates all Government employees from the suspicion of using (in this connection) their positions, regarded for a different purpose for that of hunting up grounds for demands upon the Government; a practice which has prevailed more or less in Washington, to the manifest injury of the public service, as well as greatly to the scandal of gentlemen in public employment here who properly appreciate their whole duty to the respective trusts imposed upon them.

In the list of claims for service in this battalion which Mr. Wilder has presented, we understand that there are a large number of persons whose names are not to be found on any record or roll in the Government's possession, which in itself affords ample proof of that they were not originated in Washington. By-the-by, we hear that the facts in three cases were ascertained principally through the reminiscences of the war times in New Orleans, still fresh in the memories of many gentlemen who in person furnished much of the money with which this battalion was rendered fit to take the field, just before the battle of New Orleans, in which its members participated with great credit to themselves. These gentlemen are said to have aided Mr. W. greatly in unraveling the confused mass of tradition concerning the facts of the service of this remarkable colored corps in their country's cause, confused so as to be "worse confounded," from the fact that many of those in whose names or in the names of whose heirs the applications are made, were too ignorant to recognize their old commanders, except by their Christian names.

LOUISIANA INTELLIGENCER.

The Texas and Red River Telegraph Company was organized at Shreveport on the 10th inst., and organized by electing the following officers:

D. S. Wilder, President; J. G. Battelle, Secretary. Directors: L. P. Crain, D. P. Reysdon, J. W. Murray, of Shreveport; L. B. Wallinsley, M. H. Rives, of Natchitoches; H. Lynch, M. Ryan, T. J. H. Smith, of Alexandria.

The stock was fully represented, and the best spirit prevailed. No doubt is entertained of the completion of the line by the 1st of October.

The Cahawba Gazette of the 12th inst. has the following items:

On Saturday, the 6th inst., the telegraphic posts had been put up six miles beyond Hendersons.

We have advices that 267 miles of wire is on the way for the Red River and Texas lines.

We learn from the Flag of the Union that the posts of the Shreveport and Galveston Telegraph Company have been set up as far as Henderson.

On the New Orleans route, we suppose, they have nearly reached Natchitoches.

The streets of Baton Rouge are to be lighted with Coupes—so says the Comet of the 13th inst.

The St. Landry Whig says that Captain J. Johnson has nearly completed a new boat, to run down B. you Lafourche. The boat is being built at Louisville, and when completed will be called the Alice Glaze.

The same paper says the cotton and cane crops in that parish are good, and the weather fine.

The same paper, of the 13th inst., has the following:

The report has gained some currency that we were visited with yellow fever. How it could have been fabricated we are unable to say. Our town was never more healthy than it is at present. There is no appearance amongst us of any kind of contagious disease.

LARGE PEACHES.—We have received from Mr. Wm. Bladock, of Grand Cotteau, in this parish, a dozen of the largest peaches we have ever seen in Louisiana. One of them measures 9½ inches in circumference, and weighs seven ounces. [Opelousas Courier, 13th inst.

OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.—Colonel Ives, of the firm of Bates, Benson & Co., contractors of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, informs us that there is now employed on that road, between Bayou des Allemands and Tigerville, upwards of five hundred hands, and that the work is progressing rapidly, although the present rainy season has been, and still is, a great hindrance or draw back. The draining of the swamp on the West bank of the Lafourche will soon be undertaken, as the bayou is falling rapidly. The bayou, when at low water mark, is four feet below the lowest level of the swamp. [Minerva.

VICKSBURG AND SHREVEPORT RAILROAD.—The Shreveport Democrat of the 11th inst. has the following:

We are informed by Mr. Tourtandre, that he is proceeding with the final location of the railroad track between Shreveport and the Texas line. Several of his hands have been sick, otherwise the location by this time would have been completed. We are happy to learn that there is no difficulty in getting the right of way from our planters. In about two weeks, contracts for clearing and grubbing will be let out, and immediately thereafter advertisements will be inserted in the papers inviting proposals for grading, etc. The cost of the track will not exceed the original estimate. Responsible parties near the line of the road have already made known their wish to undertake heavy contracts.

We now regard the success of this great work beyond a reasonable doubt. Subscriptions to a large amount have already been obtained, and still they are daily increasing on the whole line, from Vicksburg to Texas.

Mr. Tourtandre, the Chief Engineer, and Col. Coleman, the President of the road, are entitled to much credit for the zeal, skill, and energy with which they have managed the important interests of the company. Every thing looks bright for the road, and our readers at a distance may be assured that the Pacific Railroad is about being commenced, and with an earnest zeal, the certain guarantee of success.

The Iberville Gazette of the 13th inst. has the following items:

Bayou Plaquemine, that awful stream that is such a terror to flatboats and fishermen, is now nearly dry. In a few days we shall be able to cross on terra firma. Then those close old misers who hoard up their gold will have an opportunity of visiting our town, and of staying all day, without spending a sixpence.

We have been blessed with a number of warm growing showers of late. The cane and crops are prospering finely. It is thought that the cane crop is more backward this season than usual.

SUGAR CANE.—The Feliciana Whig of the 10th inst. says:

We are indebted to our former fellow-citizen Major D. S. Rhea for a fine cane, measuring eight joints, six of which are well matured. It was raised in West Feliciana on the banks of Thompson Creek. This we believe is the first season the Major has planted a full crop of cane on his land.

YELLOW FEVER ON THE COAST.—The Planters Banner (Franklin) of the 13th inst. says:

On the last trip of the steamboat Planter from New Orleans to this place she landed three passengers at Mr. Mackell's saw mill, near the junction of the Atchafalaya and Teche, all of whom were attacked by yellow fever.

Verbally we learn that the epidemic has broken out at Plaquemine, and that numbers were leaving that town. We give this as we heard it, premising, by the way, that the Sentinel of Saturday last is silent on the subject.

LATE DISPATCH.—A fatal difficulty, says the Sidney Post Democrat of the 4th inst., occurred on board of the steamer B. M. Jones on Friday last, early in the morning, whilst lying at the mouth of the Black Bayou, between the engineer of the boat, E. A. Hornish, and a mainly the name of Peter Kizer, who had been engaged in playing cards the previous night. Kizer accused Hornish of stealing five dollars from him. This Hornish denied and retired to his berth. Finally, a little after daylight on Friday morning, Hornish got out of his berth, and in the course of the difficulty that ensued immediately after, struck Kizer on the forehead with his fist, and knocked him down back wards. In the fall his head struck against something on the boat, which resulted in the dislocation of his neck, and, of course, instant death. Hornish was brought up on Tuesday, 2 inst., for examination, and was bound over in a bond of $300 to appear at the next term of the District Court of this parish.

The Minden Herald of the 6th inst. says:

"The weather is assuming a natural phase again—got so wet and cool as it has been for some time past. The cotton crops look encouraging, but it is thought they will stop now. The country is generally healthy."

The Ouachita Register of the 2d inst. says:

"Since the late rains the corn has improved very much and it is now thought there will be very near an average crop throughout the parish. As to cotton, we hear some complaints the weed is growing too fast, causing the bolls to shed.

The Shreveport South-Western of the 10th inst. says:

The river continues to decline. The recent dry weather has greatly improved the cotton in this parish, and give promise that the crop will be a good one. A merchant of this place, just returned from a journey through Eastern Texas, informs us that, with the exception of Harrison county, the crops of cotton and corn will be larger in that section of country than at any time during the last three years.

A late issue of the Planters' (Franklin parish) Banner regrets the death of Mrs. Jane A. Slaine, relict of the late Gen. Alex. R. Slaine, on the 9th inst., aged 53 years.

The National (parish of Plaquemines) says the mail was robbed at Pointe la Hache, on the 9th inst., by a negro man, who has been arrested.

The Jackson (East Feliciana) Mirror, of Thursday last, says the weather had been excessively hot during the week, and all the reports of the crops were favorable.

The Plaquemine Gazette, of Saturday last, says:

We have been blessed with a number of warm growing showers of late. The cane and crops are prospering finely. It is thought that the cane crop is more backward this season than usual.

A correspondent of the Gazette, writing from Bayou Grosse Tete, on the 10th, report the corn and cane crops promising.

The National, (parish of Plaquemines,) of the 12th, reports unusually warm weather and some heavy showers of rain during the week.

MATERIAL AID.—We learn from the Baton Rouge Comet that the ladies of Baton Rouge are raising a fund to be sent to the Howard Association, to aid in the relief of the indigent and suffering families of the dead and dying.

ENTERPRISE CONQUERS.—We select the following account from the St. Francisville Chronicle of the 12th inst.:

One of the engineers on board the steamer Planter was landed from that boat at Bayou Sara on Sunday evening last, about 9 o'clock. He went to the Planters' Exchange Hotel to obtain lodgings, and the proprietor being absent, the bar-keeper told him he could remain there until the proprietor came in. The man had the yellow fever; and so soon as the proprietor came, he told him that it was impossible for him to accommodate him; as his boarders would all leave him in the event of his doing so; but said that he would have him removed to other quarters and furnish him with a bed and other conveniences. He was accordingly, between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock on Sunday night, moved into a warehouse which was unoccupied, on Main street, and the proprietor of the hotel accompanied him and remained with him until 3 o'clock in the morning.

The next morning the man got up and went to the steamboat landing to get a passage on a steamboat for New Orleans, but the captain refused to take him. He then went back to the house on Main street, when some persons residing in the neighborhood of the house where he had been taken the night previous objected to his remaining there, as they apprehended danger from so near a proximity to the fatal disease. He was accordingly taken from thence to a house near the Railroad Depot, out of the limits of the corporation, on Monday evening. A kind gentleman attended to him on Monday night, and on Tuesday morning he was placed in charge of some persons, and while they were temporarily absent he got up and left the house, and was, about twenty-four hours afterwards, found dead in the woods, near the premises. A jury of inquest was immediately called together and returned a verdict of "Died of yellow fever."

MISSISSIPPI—Yellow Fever at Biloxi.—The Sea Shore Sentinel, (Biloxi,) of the 13th instant, says:

From the best information we have been able to gain, by consulting with the only two American physicians practicing in the place, we are in our own mind justified in saying, not only that the yellow fever is among us, but that it has taken off some of our resident citizens. We are, however, free to admit that there may not be quite so much danger as some apprehend: while on the other hand, to tell the truth, times look equally. It is just as in all similar cases; some of our old citizens seem much alarmed, while others seem but little to regard it. We cannot advise strangers to visit here without caution—we dare not do so, for we base our opinions on the judgment of some of our best physicians. We, however, disavow any intention of creating a panic. We have no such notion, nor do we wish to create one. We merely endeavor to discharge our duty, without having one other motive to actuate us.

MOBILE ITEMS.—The Advertiser of the 16th has the following:

Health of the City.—The Board of Aldermen have passed a resolution placing $1000 at the order of our energetic Mayor, to be expended in the necessary precautions for preserving the health of the city. This is an excellent move, and will doubtless be concurred in by the Common Council.

The Watering Places across the Bay were never so full of visitors as during the present season, the number of families from New Orleans far exceeding the usual average. What with fishing, hunting, music and dancing, the crowd seem to enjoy themselves most thoroughly. We trust they may continue to do so.

Mail Robbery.—The Mobile Tribune of the 16th says:

The mail between Atlanta, Georgia, and Montgomery, Alabama, has been robbed of several packages of letters intended for Mobile, New Orleans, and Montgomery. The bags appear to have been opened on several occasions about or since the first of July. From $20,000 to $30,000 have been thus abstracted.

IMPORTANT FROM HAVANA.—The New York Herald has received important advices from Cuba, which state that a demand or request had been made by the British Government for a mixed commission with authority to search estates, and all places in Cuba, where new importations of Africans are supposed to be sheltered, and the Spanish Government had granted the demand. The Captain-general, previous to receiving orders to this effect, had searched several estates, and taken a great many negroes from them.

The present agreement between England and Spain, as proposed by the former, is substantially as follows:

In the first place, England will consent to the importation into Cuba of apprentices from Africa, to serve ten years' apprenticeship.

Secondly, a new census of every slave in the Island will be taken by the Mixed Commission authorized to search every slave in the Island, so that in future they can ascertain whether new slaves have been introduced.

Thirdly, in fifty years from the acceptance of these propositions, and a treaty based thereon, the present slaves and their children are to be set free.

The deepest artesian well in America is now in progress at the sugar refinery Works of Belcher & Brother, at St. Louis, where it has reached the extraordinary depth of 1750 feet, far below the level of a great portion of the bottom of the Mexican Gulf. The boring is to be continued until good water is reached, which is expected to be at the depth of about 2000 feet, and this will be the deepest well in the world. The work thus far has cost $10,000, and the only result has been streams of salt and sulphur water. The hole, which is three and a half inches in diameter, is bored with an auger driven by a steam engine, the instrument penetrating about four feet daily. The rods measure thirty-three and a fourth feet in length, and are put together with screws.

Late from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Mexico we have full files of Texas papers, and dates from Galveston to the 12th inst. The Galveston News has the following:

THE TELEGRAPH.—Colonel Chilo commenced putting down the telegraph posts in the city on Monday last, beginning at the Post office, in the second story of which he will have his office. The posts by this time are all put down as far as the cane ingoin' the bay at Deer Island. The wire is expected by enclosing the wire in gutta percha, and laying it under water. The line, we understand, is completed from Houston to Virginia Point, and the whole line from this city to Houston will now soon be in operation. We observe that this line in the Eastern part of the State is progressing as fast as circumstances will permit. The weather has been very unfavorable for some time past, and disasters incident to the unavoidable delay.

EARLY CROPS.—We learn from Major Howard, of Fort Bend county, who is now in Galveston, that he commenced picking cotton on the 3d of this month, averaging over one hundred pounds to the hand. Accounts from all parts represent the crops as unusually promising.

CROPS.—From what we can learn, the prospect of crops in this and the adjoining counties bid fair to exceed the highest expectations of the farmers; the accounts we receive from different sections of the State are cheering indeed.—Galveston Herald.

GEN. LAMAR NOT DEAD.—The Journal says: "A letter having been lately received here from Gen. Lamar, dated at his residence near Richmond, Fort Bend county, we are led to believe that the rumor of his death, published in the San Antonio Ledger and copied into our last issue, is entirely without foundation."

SANITARY REGULATIONS.—The city of Galveston has established a Board of Health. The Board recommends the establishment of quarantine regulations, to prevent the importation of yellow fever from New Orleans.

GALVESTON AND RED RIVER RAILROAD.—Mr. Kose, the engineer of the Houston and Austin, or Galveston and Red River Railroad, has recently surveyed another line from the Cypress to Cobrant's Sinuals on the Brazos, a few miles below Hill's Ferry. There are about twenty hands still at work on the road, and they will probably increase the number of hands to one or two hundred in autumn. The section between Houston and the Cypress will probably be graded in the course of the winter. The crossties for that section will probably be furnished in a few months. [Houston Telegraph, 5th inst.

Dreadful Railroad Accident

FOUR OR FIVE PERSONS KILLED—A WOMAN WAS SCALD.—The following particulars of an accident on the Camden and Amboy Railroad we take from the New York Herald of the 19th inst:

About twenty minutes past four o'clock yesterday afternoon, a collision took place between two tr

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Details of Foreign News.

FURTHER BY THE STEAMSHIP BALTIC

The Baltic had a very heavy cargo, and nearly a second cargo had to be refused for want of room. On the 20th, the following notice was posted on Liverpool Exchange:

"Cargo for the Baltic, for New York, will be received at the Huskisson Dock to morrow, at 8 o'clock. In consequence of the great pressure of goods, shippers will have to determine their priority of shipment of goods now in town and ready for shipment, by casting lots at Brown, Shipley & Co's office this afternoon."

In accordance with this invitation over 70 merchants assembled and drew lots for precedence. The export to America has seldom, if ever, been so active from Liverpool as it is at present.

Silas Schwabe, a leading merchant of Manchester, is dead.

An unsuccessful attempt to launch the new ninety gun ship Cæsar was made at Pembroke, July 21. The ship slid along the ways about half the distance, and there stuck fast, where she still remains.

A grand review of the fleet, at Spithead, by the Queen, is spoken of, to take place in the beginning of August. Twenty-seven ships of war, carrying 1,423 guns are to take part in the manœuvres of these vessels fourteen have auxiliary steam and six are paddle-wheel steamers.

The operative carpenters and joiners of Nottingham have banded together to resist the introduction of morticing machines, and refuse to fix any work prepared by steam power, with the exception of floor boards. The employers are, in the meantime, compelled to submit.

The strikes at Manchester are mostly adjusted with all the operatives, except the dyers, dressers and fluishers, who demand an advance of 15 per cent., which the employers refuse to allow. Over five thousand miners and colliers employed at the Dowlas (South Wales) Iron Works have struck work.

IRELAND.

The Queen is expected to visit Dublin about the 5th or 6th of August.

O'Connel's house, in Merrion Square, South Dublin, for forty years the residence of the late Liberator, was sold the other day for £250 to John O'Farrell, barrister.

A camp of exercise, similar to that now on Chobham Heath, is to be formed in the Curragh of Kildare, Ireland, this fall.

The accounts of the potato crop continue hopeful, and so far there is every reason to believe that the disease, if it has at all made its appearance, is so limited in extent as to be scarcely worth noticing. Another fortnight, or less time, will set all doubts at rest.

All kinds of grain are said to be very healthy, and fast progressing to maturity.

FRANCE

The Court of Cassation had quashed the judgment of the Imperial Court of Paris in the affair of the foreign correspondence, that recently made some noise, and has decided that the Prefect of Police has no right to break open letters in the post-office.

The transport ship Fortune left Brest on the 23d, for Cayenne, with another detachment of political prisoners.

M. de Beauregard, one of the oldest members of the French press, had died suddenly of apoplexy. He was, during the past twenty-five years, one of the leading writers in the Gazette de France.

SPAIN.

On and after the 1st of June next a revolving light will be shown on the south point of Cape Finisterre, and after the 20th of July a fixed light on the northernmost projecting peak of Isla Major, the largest of the Sisargas Islets; also, from same date, a light, varied by flashes every three minutes, will be established on Cape Creux.

Vine disease had appeared in the provinces of Valencia, and the olives were also slightly touched.

Mme. Munoz (Queen Cristina) is said to have deeper plans than appear as the ostensible object of her residence in Paris. Madame's plan is to marry her eldest (Munoz's) daughter to Prince Napoleon, and to set up the young couple with a royal or imperial throne in one of the South American States. Mexico is the most desirable State for the purpose, but the difficulty arises that Santa Anna wants to be king himself, and is trying hard to effect an alliance with Spain with that object. Although this looks pretty much like gossip, there is believed to be considerable truth in it.

PORTUGAL.

A petition to the Chamber of Deputies had been presented by several manufacturers to restore the protective tariff.

Disease had appeared on the vines in the province of Douro, and as the farmers apprehend the malady is the same that devastated the vineyards of Madeira, prayers had been offered in the churches to check its spread.

FURTHER BY THE AFRICA.—A dispatch to the Charleston Courier gives fuller details by the Africa. We copy the following:

Relative to the Turkish question all that has transpired is, that the Sultan of Turkey had signed the agreement dictated by France, England and Austria, and was about to send an Embassador to St. Petersburg. The protest of the Porte against the occupation of the Principalities by the Russian troops is said to have been temperately written. The Foreign Bourses regard peace as secured, and continue firm.

Italy is in a feverish state, especially the Roman Territories, and symptoms of an approaching insurrection are almost apparent, as riots have occurred at Bologna, Ravenna, Rimini, Frinli and Ferrara, principally on account of the high price of bread. Ravenna, indeed, is reported to be in a state of siege, and numerous assassinations had taken place, amongst others the Secretary of the Republic of San Marino, had been murdered. Rome, also, was in a very excited state, and it was rumored that several Patriot leaders were in the city. The police, however, were on the alart.

The export of Breadstuffs had been prohibited from Ancona.

The Costa affair at Smyrna was precisely in the same condition as reported by the last advices. Another Hungarian, however, who had escaped from Beyrout, had arrived at Smyrna, and went on board Lloyd's Austrian steamer, where he was arrested by the Captain as an Austrian subject, when he jumped overboard, and applied to the American Consul, who granted him protection, and compelled the Captain of the steamer, also, to deliver up the refugee's wife and children.

A political crisis had occurred between the Ministry and the House of Representatives in Denmark. The cholera was raging fatally in Copenhagen.

Gen. Concha, the late Captain General of Cuba, has written a full exposure of the maladministration of the Cuban authorities, and asked permission of the Spanish Government to publish it.

News from St. Domingo.

The New York Herald of the 8th inst. says: Our latest advices from St. Domingo are to the 4th ult. El Progreso of the 3d gives the following intelligence:

On the 29th ult. the capital commemorated the happy birthday of her illustrious liberator. It was not one of those obligatory voluntary festivals, in which the quantity and duration of the enthusiasm are matter of programme—nothing of this kind; for neither the Ayuntamiento nor the Minister of the Interior took any part in exigencies, which always appear out of place when called forth for one single man.

It was a feast of gratitude, love and respect. Every true-hearted, disinterested Dominican, who sees in the President Liberator one of those men who, as secret envoys of Providence, comes to take the lead in certain perilous situations, to restrain men from the commission of great crimes, to realize great and good things, to effect the triumph of great reforms—every one, we repeat, entertaining these sentiments, was proud and happy to bring his humble but sincere tribute of adhesion and homage to this great man.

A unanimous feeling caused an immense mass of citizens, foreigners, employees of every character and rank, to his house, while bands of music and the sound of artillery led the way.

At nine in the evening, after the bands of music had retired, a number of citizens collected together to give a serenade to the President; the music was exquisite.

The illustrious Chief Magistrate, with that frankness and simplicity peculiar to him, went out from the house to greet his friends—for Santana views men in the most favorable point of view, and considers that, though subject to error, they preserve an inalienable part of dignity, [illegible] well calculated to assist him in the immortal work of consolidating his country's independence.

The hurrahs at the sight of Santana were enthusiastic in the extreme; these he answered by the exclamation, in which his soul is pictured, Viva la Union! (long live our Union) for in the eyes of Santana there are no enemies but those who conspire against public tranquility, and he has no fear among those who are not hurtful to the republic, however bitter against him generally.

The President received with courtesy and cordiality all those present; he provided them with abundant refreshment, and accepted with affability several toasts in his honor.

At eleven in the evening the whole concourse retired to assist on the following day at the celebration of mass at the cathedral. At the ceremony, accompanied by the thunders of artillery, the President was present, with all the employees of the Government—civil, administrative, judicial, etc.—and with the diplomatic corps.

May Providence grant us a repetition of yesterday's scene for many years to come, and may Santana ever see with happiness and satisfaction the same beaming joy and the same heartfelt enthusiasm and admiration which greeted him yesterday.

EUROPEAN ITEMS.—The following items of European intelligence we select from various correspondents of our Northern exchanges:

A very extraordinary experiment has just been made at l'Orient, which proved quite successful. Chlorotorm has been applied to steam navigation on board the steamer Gallilie, in the presence of the Minister of the Navy, and she ran, during four hours, at nine knots an hour. The economy of fuel is said to be fifty per cent. less than if coal or wood was employed.

The fashionable Mrs. Octavia LeVert, from Mobile, is now in Paris, accompanied by her father, the celebrated Col. George Walton, formerly Governor of Floride, who is now, we believe, the only surviving son of a Signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mrs. LeVert has come to Europe for the first time, and her sweet and lovely daughter is also with her. She has received here the visits of all the fashionable people to whom she had dispensed the elegant hospitalities of her house in the United States. She intends visiting Italy and Switzerland.

GOLD DISCOVERIES IN OREGON.—The Newark (N. J.) Advertiser publishes a letter from a correspondent at Port Oxford, Oregon, giving accounts of new discoveries of gold in that territory. The writer says:

I am now washing out gold at the rate of ten dollars an hour. Two others by the side of me, with the assistance of a squaw, (for an Indian man is not worth his food) are making $50 a day. We will have thousands of inhabitants here in a few months, as gold is everywhere in this vicinity. All the soldiers in the garrison are at work, making $20 a day and upwards, but none less than $16. No person would work for the gold until my partner tried, and after two or three hours' work he was offered 35 for what was in his machine, which he took. The next day he worked about four hours, and again sold his sand for $40. On investigation it was found that he had sold $80 worth of gold for $35, and $80 worth for $40. We have taken out $80 worth in two hours and forty minutes, then let escape $10 worth. This was the first mining done here, and now it is ascertained that it will yield a rich reward everywhere along the bench.

THE SENATORIAL CONVERT.—An announcement that an American Senator, sojourning in Rome, has been received as a convert into the Church of Rome, and the subsequent surmise that this means Senator Douglas, is thought by a New York journal to be an error, and that the Hon. Joseph R. Chandler, of Philadelphia, a well known Catholic, now in Europe, must have been mistaken for a Senator.

The following table shows the number of visitors and cash receipts for the third week at the Crystal Palace:

	Sale of Tickets.	Transient Visitors.	Receipts per Day.
Monday....	950	2,824	$1,177 00
Tuesday....	1,196	3,220	1,573 50
Wednesday.	1,227	3,280	1,597 75
Thursday...	1,428	3,490	1,712 00
Friday.....	1,856	3,668	1,790 00
Saturday...	475	1,425	700 00
Total.....	7,072	17,907	$8,556 00

The deaths in New York, for the week ending the 6th instant, numbered 571, of which 225 were of children under the age of one year.

During April, May and June, there were 2,255 deaths in the city and liberties of Philadelphia—a falling off of 15 per cent. compared with the same months of last year.

The rush of visitors to the Falls, the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser says, is greater this season than any former year, and most of the public houses are filled to overflowing.

COUNTERFEIT INSURANCE COMPANY.—A concern calling itself the "Protection Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Boston," and professing to have a capital of $400,000, has proved to be an entire swindle, no such company being in existence in the State of Massachusetts; and no such town named in the Boston Directory as any placed at the head of this spurious institution, the Western headquarters of which are at Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE TELEGRAPH IN TEXAS.—The Flag of the Union, of the 4th inst., published at Henderson, Texas, says:

We are informed that the posts for the New Orleans, Shreveport and Galveston Telegraph Line are up to within a few miles of this place. We hope to be able in a few days to treat our friends to something fresh and interesting in the way of a telegraphic dispatch.

JUDGE EDMONDS ON SPIRITUAL RAPPINGS.—Judge Edmonds, of New York, is out in a long article on the spiritual rappings. It throws no new light upon the subject, but reiterates the writer's implicit belief that the rappings and table-movings are the works of spirits, and repeats that he has had important communications from the dead. He professes to have sought earnestly for the motive of these manifestations, and to have found it out, but he reserves telling what it is until he publishes his book on the subject.

FRESHET ON THE EASTERN SHORE.—The heavy rains of last week occasioned a heavy freshet in the Eastern Shore counties, and did considerable damage. The Easton Gazette and Dentog Journal both speak of the fall of rain on Wednesday as unequalled for years past. Most of the bridges on the county roads were swept away and mill-dams broken down. In many places the grain in store was materially damaged, and large quantities of wool were carried off by the torrent. During the freshet Mr. Jas. Higgins, in attempting to cross a branch near Denton, had his horse and buggy swept away, and very nearly lost his life. [Balt. Amer. 5th.

THUNDER AND HAIL STORM.—The Baltimore American of the 5th instant says: "At six o'clock yesterday afternoon a violent storm of thunder and hail suddenly rose in the southern quarter of the heavens, after a day of great heat, and continued twenty minutes. The power of the wind was so great at the commencement of the gust that the most sheltered portions of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Depot were filled with a subtle mist, penetrating through cloth. Many trees were prostrated in various parts of the city, and part of the scaffolding at the Custom-house was blown down. The hail stones were very large, and many windows were broken. The streets were flooded in an instant, and in many places the side-walks quite submerged.

The rain storm at New York on Saturday did considerable damage in that city and vicinity. At the Crystal Palace, much injury was done. The imperfect manner in which the roof is constructed suffered the water to beat in, and, in consequence, many of the wares were badly damaged. Some statuary was stained by the mixed tromrust and water, and goods of a more delicate order were almost spoiled. At Westchester, Brooklyn, Newark, Paterson, and other places, great damage was done by the overflowing of embankments, submerging of railroads, etc. At Paterson the banks of the Morris canal gave way and damaged the town to the amount of $10,000. [Balt. Amer 6th.

A MODEL STATE.—In New Hampshire there are but seventy-six persons, between the ages of 14 and 21, unable to read or write.

Things in Washington.

The home correspondent of the Washington Republic of the 5th inst. says:

Quite a scene is said to have been enacted at Mr. Marcy's quarters on Sunday morning. It seems the Secretary did return on Saturday; and on Sabbath morn M. Bodisco, having somehow obtained a copy of the Union, (probably some neighbor's, as he don't take it since he stopped it a few days ago,) he was fired with indignation because of its article on the Kossta affair, and proceeded forthwith to the Secretary's room, and complained most piteously of the horribly discordant music of the organ, which had so entirely unfitted him for Sabbath duties. He also raved consistently against Kossta, declaring him a felon, and that he was arrested as such for having stolen the crown and regalia of Hungary. Mr. Marcy assured him that the latter fact had not been made known to the Government in any other shape, and approved the sentiments reprobated by M. Bodisco. So the story is told me, and I think there is little doubt of its accuracy. These magnified and insulting attempts of a foreign embassador to muzzle the American press are certainly becoming too frequent for toleration. Would it not be well for the President or Mr. Marcy to indite a Hulsemann letter for the Russian Minister's especial benefit?

The Star of the same date has the following:

NEWS FROM THE FISHING GROUNDS SQUADRON.—The Government this morning received advices from Commodore Shubrick, at Eastport, just before he sailed for Halifax. All well with the squadron, the vessels of which were cruising around the fishing grounds. They will probably all shortly rendezvous at Halifax. The Commodore is said to have written that no fishing vessel sailing from Eastport or its vicinity had armed, and that there need be no apprehension that any from that immediate section would so conduct themselves as to embarrass the Government's action in the settlement of the question.

THE CHARGES AGAINST COMMODORE ANLICK.—Charges were preferred some time since against Commodore Anlick, by Mr Schenck, late Minister to Brazil, Captain Inman and others, which (says the Washington correspondent of the Republic,) seem not to have been very serious, the President and Secretary of the Navy having refused to subject the Commodore to a court-martial investigation.

The home correspondent of the Republic of the 10th inst. says:

Mr. Wilder, of New Orleans, is here, pressing applications for bounty lands for many members of the black regiment who served in the battle of New Orleans. Of course, if the evidence required in other bounty land cases is forthcoming, these claims will be allowed.

The President, it is understood, contemplates sending a special agent to Minnesota, to assist Governor Gorman in investigating the enormous Indian frauds committed there.

Daniel Van Vorhis has been appointed Postmaster at Brooklyn, New York, vice G. S. Silliman, removed.

Under the recent notice published by the Secretary of the Treasury, the outstanding Government stocks are coming in in handsome amounts.

About a thousand land warrants for military service were issued to Creek Indians by the late administration; but Secretary McClelland has refused to allow claims of this character, expressing the opinion that no provision of law covers them.

From the Star of the same date we select the following:

The Secretary of the Interior's last trip to New York is now said in Washington to have been undertaken to obtain information concerning international affairs in Europe not to be had here, or at all, except through investigations cautiously made by a Government officer in high position.

The death of Lieutenant Colonel Bliss promotes Brevet Major Haskell to be a Major in the Adjutant General's Department, and Brevet Captain U. S. Grant to be a Captain in the 4th Infantry, and second Lieutenant John C. Bonnycastle to be a first Lieutenant in the same regiment. It also leaves a vacancy in the list of Captains in the Adjutant General's Department.

Mobile Items.

The Tribune of the 13th inst. has the following items:

THE CHAPTER SHIP.—The arrangements for building this ship are steadily progressing, and within a few weeks timber will be on the ground for a commencement. Mr Porter, the builder, has constructed a model which may be seen at the office of Messrs. James Reid & Co., St. Michael street. It is of most beautiful proportions and symmetry, and any one at all conversant with the rules of naval architecture will be convinced that a ship built upon the model must be a fast sailer. The dimensions will be as follows: length of keel, 181 feet; breadth of beam, 41 feet; and depth of hold, 36 feet. The tonnage is estimated at 1592.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—During the rain storm which occurred yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock, the lightning struck a house on the West side of Conception street, North of Eslava street, and, as we learn, tore off almost the entire roof throwing the shingles on to the adjoining houses. Fortunately, however, no person was hurt.

From the Advertiser of the same date, we select the following:

The weather during the past week has been intensely hot and very variable. Yesterday afternoon, about two o'clock, with the thermometer standing at 92 degrees, there came up a heavy thunderstorm that deluged our streets with water; the lightning being of the most vivid, and the thunder of the loudest kind. We hope the rain may be local only, as at this season if general in the interior it would be of serious detriment to the cotton crop.

ALABAMA.—The Southern (Huntsville) Democrat, of the 10th inst., says:

The abundant showers are causing cotton to grow too rank, and if the season continues to be wet the crop will be materially injured.

A CONVICT KILLED.—On Tuesday last, John Wilson, sent from Mobile, and who was one of the eight who broke out of the Prison last spring, but who was re-captured, was shot by one of the guards, Mr. Cole. The load entered his thigh just below the groin, and he died in about three hours after the occurrence.

It seems that Wilson had disobeyed the orders of Mr. Cole, his overseer, and upon being reprimanded, he appeared refractory, swore he would kill Cole, and thereupon threw a chair at him with great force, which Mr. Cole dodged. Cole then went for his musket, returned, and shot him.

Mr Cole has been examined before Magistrate Williams, and committed. The killing of Wilson was adjudged as justifiable homicide. [Wetumpka State Guard.

The Montgomery Advertiser says that the Artesian Well at the Court-House, is now 660 feet deep—pouring out at the rate of twenty-five gallons per minute.

ALABAMA.—The Auburn Gazette of the 12th inst. says:

The crops in this section were never better, and indeed they ought to be fine, for they have not suffered for rain, and have had the finest grass pastures to run in for over two months. We have heard some little fear expressed that the rust would injure the cotton crop, it having been noticed on one or two farms. But it would be contrary to human nature for planters to acknowledge themselves satisfied with Providence, in every respect, and we conclude, from what we have seen, that the harvest will be abundant. We have long been satisfied that this section of country is the choice spot of Alabama.

The Pee Dee Times of the 10th inst. says:

We have had another rainy week, during which a large quantity of water has fallen. The crops of rice and corn and potatoes are fair, and may be regarded as made, and will yield an average harvest. The pea crop is the only one now at any hazard. If the rains continue the blossoms may shed. The rivers are all full, and we are not without our fears of a freshet. We have a humid atmosphere, with a sickly heat from the earth—the very kind of weather to generate fevers. But we have very few subjects, and no more sickness than is common at this season of the year.

The last news from Gen. Sam Houston is that he is making temperance speeches in Texas.

FLORIDA.—Pensacola and Montgomery Railroad.—We are gratified to be able to inform our readers that the engineering party under the direction of Mr. A. H. Jones, the principal assistant of the Florida division of the road, started yesterday morning on the work from this place in the direction of Montgomery. At the time we were writing this they had run one mile, commencing at the side water on the bay, at the foot of Tarragona street. The chief engineer, Mr. Samuel G. Jones, is also here, and will continue with the party some time. [Florida Democrat.

FIRST BALE OF THE SEASON.—A bale of new cotton from the plantation of Major Richard Howard, was sold in this city yesterday, to Messrs. Betton & Whitaker, at 13½ cents per pound. The price bespeaks the quality. [Tallahassee Sentinel, 21 inst.

FLORIDA.—Montgomery and Pensacola Railroad.—The Pensacola Gazette of the 13th inst., in relation to this enterprise, says:

The Engineer Corps of this important work has at length been fully organized, and are now actively engaged in the field.

The engineering party started on Tuesday last at high water mark, and at the present moment are somewhere in the neighborhood of the twelve mile house, running a straight line that will probably extend for sixteen miles direct from the city. The Engineers appear to be greatly pleased with the character of the country.

The people of Montgomery, Ala., are pushing forward their railroad connection with Pensacola, to make that city the commercial port of Eastern Alabama in preference to Mobile.

GEORGIA.—There were sixteen deaths in the City of Savannah during the week ending the 9th instant.

Counterfeits.—There are, as we learn from the Augusta Constitutionalist, raised notes on the Bank of Savannah and the Georgia Railroad & Banking Company, in circulation, so perfect that some scrutiny is required to detect them. They are really one dollar bills converted into fives.

New Cotton.—A bale of this year's crop of cotton has been received at Albany, Ga., on the 2d instant, and was sold at auction at 11 cents. The cotton crop of that section of Georgia is represented to be extraordinarily promising.

The Columbus (Ga.) Times announces the arrival at that place of the "Chunnenugge," the first locomotive for the Girard and Mobile Railroad.

WEATHER AND CROPS.—Arkansas.—The Little Rock Gazette and Democrat, of the 5th inst., speaking of the growing crops, says:

From information gathered from farmers from different portions of our State, we are led to believe that the corn crop will rather exceed an average crop, if it does not equal that of last year, which was probably the largest yet gathered in the State. The cotton, too, looks exceedingly well, and exhibits a healthier appearance than is usual at this season, promising to the planter a rich harvest to repay him for his labors.

The Washington Telegraph, of the 3d inst., says:

Every day brings us favorable intelligence of the growing crops. In this and the adjoining counties the prospects for both corn and cotton are highly flattering.

Mail Gatherings.

An immense crop of wheat and corn, it is said, will be produced in Illinois this year.

NAVAL.—The U. S. ship Macedonian was at St. Helena, on the 25th of June.

All vessels from this port, arriving at Norfolk, are to remain at quarantine, until they can be overhauled.

A new political party, to be called the American party, it is said, is about to be formed in New York.

A law has been enacted in the State of New York, imposing severe penalties for the destruction of birds or birds' eggs and nests in public cemeteries.

The engineers on the Florida division of the Montgomery and Pensacola Railroad, commenced the survey of the road, starting from Pensacola, on Wednesday last.

An intelligent printer being asked if a certain man was "crazy," said: "No, the word implies that a person has lost sense; the individual spoken of never had any."

A late German writer says that the people of the United States can burst more steamboilers and chew more tobacco than any other five nations in the world. Complimentary that!

Elisha Riggs, one of the most eminent bankers of this country, died in New York on the 3d inst., aged 75 years. He was a native of Maryland and formerly a member of the old house of Peabody, Riggs & Co., of Baltimore.

PERSONAL.—A mathematician being asked by a stout fellow: "If two pigs weigh twenty pounds, how much will a large hog weigh?" he replied: "Jump into the scales, and I will tell you immediately."

Two living giraffes, one measuring 17 feet, and the other 15 feet in height, arrived in New York in the steamship Washington, from Bremen. They are said to have been brought from Egypt at an expense of $25,000.

The Kentucky papers announce that Professor B. W. Dudley, of Lexington, the founder of Transylvania University, the oldest surgeon in America and one of the most eminent in the world, is now stricken with disease, from which no hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Iowa is being filled up very rapidly. One of our exchanges says that the whole interior is full of settlers. A hundred emigrants were met in one day recently by a traveler; $34,250 were received at the land office, in about six weeks, over and above all lands entered with warrants, which will reach a very large amount. The entries were all by actual settlers.

MADEIRA.—A gentleman, now on the Island of Madeira, says there will be no wine made there the present year. He adds that it will be necessary to root up the vines and get fresh cuttings from abroad, so that many years may elapse before good wine will be made there again. He gives rather a gloomy picture of the prospect for the inhabitants, for whom he thinks there is no resource but emigration.

JAPANESE PORCELAIN.—A late writer on Japan says: "The tea-cups are especially worthy of attention. I have seen tea-cups, a dozen of which, with the saucers, would not weigh three ounces. They are really transparent, and so thin and delicate that one would believe, the dropping of a piece of sugar would break them; nevertheless, this very thinness gives them an extraordinary elasticity."

The London Times says: "In fifty years Ireland will be Protestant to a man. Both the Roman Catholics of Ireland, and the race identified with that faith, are all leaving Ireland. Ere long there will be none left. At the present rate of emigration, which cannot be less than 200,000, chiefly Roman Catholics, in a year, our children will see the time when the Celts will be as obsolete in Ireland as the Phœnicians in Cornwall."

"IRISH NEWS."—There is a column with this heading in every English paper. The intelligence in it is always uniform in its character. It is always the same story of eviction, poverty, sale of estates and emigration. One can trace, day-by-day, the great change that is gradually coming over Ireland. The removal of those who were born on the soil, and the substitution of another race, goes on slowly but inevitably. That is the "Irish News" for this century, past, present, and to come.

A HATLESS POPULATION.—A gentleman passing through Massilon, Ohio, the other day, noticed that the entire population were bare-headed, supposing a funeral was the cause, he uncovered his own head, and inquired the name of the distinguished dead, to whose remains so much respect was shown. It turned out that all the hats in town were put in requisition to the windows which the late hail-storm had riddled. The visiter gave his head a scratch, and, replacing his hat, left town.

DR. J. T. KENYON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.,

Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr K would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently reputable practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.

March 19, 1853. 6mo.

LAND FOR SALE.

The subscriber wishes to sell a most desirable settlement of land, lying 18 miles west of Monroe, on the Ouachita river, and one mile north of Indian Village, Jackson parish, and on the track, as laid off, of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, containing 640 acres, with 160 cleared and in a good state of cultivation, with a good gin and cotton press, with all the buildings necessary for common family purposes. About 160 acres of the land is very level and will not wash, and quite productive, a portion of it having made a good average bag of cotton per acre last year. The place is uncommonly well watered and healthy, myself having lived on it over seven years, with a large family, without having a single bad case of sickness.

There is also many advantages and conveniences too tedious to mention, which can be fully seen upon examination of the premises. It will be sold at a fair price—one third cash upon giving possession, and the balance to suit purchasers.

ISAAC COLLINS.

aug13 3t. Indian Village, Jackson Parish, La.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 54 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz: THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative) THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig) THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church) THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal) AND BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two "	5 00 "
For any three "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews,	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid,

LEONARD SCOTT & CO.
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov 13-1y.]

EDUCATION.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY

REV. THOS. H. RUSSELL, A. M. President
MISS ELIZABETH H. WEEK, Assistant
MISS CLARA G. LEE, Preparatory Department.
MR. F. S. WALTER, Professor of Music.
——, Teacher of Modern Languages

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00
Board, including lodging, washing and fuel	80 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 15th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this Institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Gilascock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

L. C. GARLAND,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Tuscaloosa, Aug 6, 1853. aug20 8t

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M.,
Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Sciences.

H. M. DALY, A. M.,
Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.

MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FULLER,
Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. W. CLARK
Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and fourth gable, convenience of arrangement—its number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session in the collegiate department, one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and fights, all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestrial and celestial, and celestial maps, atlases, charts, plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet contains several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year. Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money or other sums for the use of pupils should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical or other exercise before a select audience, acquaintance with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 16, 1853. aug13 tjanl

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, La.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to old pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board:

Lodging, washing, and English tuition	$200 00
Use of piano, with use of instrument	70 00
French language	30 00

Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to

Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUROSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCE—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. H. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Slaue & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans.

jly1 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND. WM. CLEVELAND. A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. ☞ Refer to

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
AND
☞ No. 66 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jly2 1y

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 4 Magazine street, (a few doors from Canal street,
New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety; Coach clip, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness, Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles, Trace Chains, Medicated tugs, Shelby Hardware; Leather of all descriptions, Coach Furniture and Trimmings, Trunk Trimmings, Saddlers Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools, Oil, Varnish, India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubb r Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.

mh6 52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improvement in YOKES, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enabled him to ascertain the best form for Bells, the

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference. { J. C. KENDALL, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 30. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 134.

LIGHT.

"At evening-time it shall be light."—[Zech. xiv. 6.

'Twas light in that blest time,
When first o'er sea and land
Shone forth the new made sun sublime,
The lamp of God's own hand.

Then sang the morning-stars,
Exulting in that light;
And sons of God, on radiant cars,
Proclaimed His glorious might.

But darkness soon took place;
Its banner Sin unfurled;
Alien from light, and hope, and grace,
Man wandered through the world.

Another sun arose—
The Sun of Righteousness—
To shed its light o'er human woes,
And human griefs redress.

Again was brightness then:
Great joy was in the Lord:
His presence cheered the hearts of men;
His Spirit and His Word.

Yet darkling days came back;
Night spread her ebon wing,
And wintry gloom defaced the track
Of that short hopeful spring.

And now the world grows old.
Its mortal age is o'er;
What then have holy bards foretold
Shall mark its evening hour?

Again there shall be light;
As, after darksome day,
Outbreaketh out, ere full of night,
A sun-bright Western ray.

So, at Earth's evening time,
Shall light once more break forth,
And pour its beams o'er every clime,
O'er East, West, South and North.

Light, as of heavenly dawn,
Of God's own light a ray:
Light, earnest of glorious morn,
Pledge of an endless day.

[Church of England Magazine.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH CEREMONIES.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.—SICKNESS, DEATH AND BURIAL.

Among the many revolutions in this nineteenth century, in the moral and religious world the one resulting in the establishment of various benevolent societies, certainly deserves our most decided approbation. Although the continent of Europe has done comparatively little as yet in this department, yet the spirit has been kindled even there, and is progressing steadily, although slowly. The Jews, however, there have kept the march upon their Christian brethren since they have had benevolent societies for various purposes, time out of mind. Their chief object, however, is visiting the sick, burying the dead, and, of course, assisting the indigent. These societies generally meet every Sabbath to hear a lecture from their Hazan or Baldi. Their surplus funds are invested in purchasing copies of the Law, Holy curtains, chandeliers—made after the model of the lamp in the Temple—and various other articles for sacred use.

When a Jew is taken seriously ill, information is immediately carried to some member of his society; whereupon two brethren will immediately come to attend to all his wants. They then remain with him six hours, at the end of which time they are relieved by two others: and this vigil is continued to the man's burial: the services of course independent of any casual visitors that may drop in. If he recovers from his malady, he publicly offers thanks to God on the first Saturday he is able to go to the synagogue; which is also done after any narrow escape from danger, return from a sea voyage, etc. This act is called "Gomel Bochen."

When a man's recovery is almost despaired of, the congregation goes to the synagogue and prays for him—chiefly reading psalms. On this occasion the name of the patient is always changed—more usually another name added to his. I do not just now remember the exact cause of this latter proceeding, but think it is designed to circumvent the angel of death, and cheat him of his victim, as his commission only extends to the person's former name, and as he now goes under a different name, he is supposed to have a new case for life.

The patient's end is now thought nigh, and all his immediate kin must leave the room, lest they should afflict the dying man by their lamentations, which are often characterised by the excess and vehemence of Oriental lamentation. The whole chebrah, or society, is in the room, and one of them recites the Vidda—a general confession of sins committed—which the patient repeats after him. This done, they all solemnly observe the symptoms with a close watch, in order to be able to cry out "Shema Israel": "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord!" at the very moment of the soul's departure from its earthen abode. This is considered a matter of the very greatest importance, since scarcely any thing else is thought necessary to obtain admission in Paradise, than that the individual should be a son of Abraham, and that the piety of God should have been proclaimed at his death. If he die suddenly, against which calamity the Jews pray daily—and is thus deprived of this privilege, he has to undergo much longer durance in Gehinnum, or purgatory. No Jew, they hold, is to be condemned finally, excepting only those who have apostatized from their faith, i. e. embraced Christianity. They may be scoffers, infidels, and evil-doers, so they are not disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus. The latter, they say, Abraham (the St. Peter of the Rabbins) will never admit within the celestial portals. Of course this has reference to Jewish converts only.

The corpse is "laid out" on the floor, upon some straw, and two "watchers," always remain with it until buried. The remaining brethren sit down, generally also in the same room, to "say Tillim," or read the Psalms, which they do in reciting alternate verses, as in the Church of England. Priests, by descent, not by office, must not come within four yards of the house, though the deceased be their own father; nor must they approach the graveyard any nearer than that. (Vide Pentateuch.) The Jews bury their dead as soon as the law of the land will permit them. All the matrons of the place meet here to prepare the necessary garments, which, however, need not be done for a married man, as his grave-clothes have been prepared since the first year of his marriage, and which he has often worn before, as we shall see anon.

They avoid every thing like pomp in their funeral rites, and often cite Job iii: 19, "The small and great are there, [alike] and the servant is free from his master." Thus, rich and poor, have no other coffin than a rough box, of the necessary size, constructed of unplaned deals, and made by the brethren: for no Gentile carpenter could be allowed to touch it. To assist in the performance of any of these ceremonies is considered highly meritorious, and generally every member of the congregation is present; this the more so as it is a saying among the Rabbins that whatever motive a man may have for an action, this cannot be a selfish one in the case of assisting in the ceremonies of the dead, as no advantage can be gained from the deceased.

They are very scrupulous in the washing and cleansing of the dead, and occupy some time in it. But after the coffin is ready to be closed, the immediate relatives are made to stand on one side of it, and a Rabbi, or some other venerable person, on the opposite. The latter then takes a knife and makes a slit on the right side of the upper garment of each relative—father, mother, son, daughter, sister, brother, husband and wife—as they respectively lean over the coffin for this purpose. They then make the rend deeper, usually some six or eight inches, and wear the garment in this state for thirty days. I need not remind my readers of the antiquity of the custom of "rending garments" on such occasions. After this the children of the deceased (if he be a parent—if not, some one else,) come reverently to the foot of the coffin and ask pardon for any offence they may have given him during his lifetime. Then the Rabbi comes forward, and does the same in behalf of the whole congregation.

From a traditional interpretation of a text of Scripture, the Jews believe that on the day of Resurrection they will all rise in the Holy Land; and those that may have had the misfortune to die outside its limits, must "roll thither, in subterranean evolutions, from their place of burial." But if they can procure a portion of genuine "Erez Israel (Palestine) earth," and put it into the coffin, it will have the desired effect, inasmuch as he was buried in the land of Israel. The wealthy and pious Jews seldom fail to purchase some of this "earth," which is an article of trade among the orthodox Israelites of the Continent; as genuine, I suppose, as Bishop Hughes's annual importations of relics from Rome.

In every Jewish house passed by the funeral they must pour out any fresh water they may happen to have standing in vessels, as it becomes "unclean." The coffin is usually carried to the place of burial on a bier, by different Jews, who consider it both an honor and an act of piety. But ere they arrive—there, they must stop from three to seven times, and repeat the 91st Psalm, together with some Cabalistic incantations against evil spirits.

We now reach the resting place of the dead, poetically called "the garden of life," and at first sight you are very much surprised at the total absence of flowers and shrubbery, inclosures, or any other of the ornaments that throw such charms round our modern cemeteries. The wealthy have indeed of late years added some splendid tombs and monuments to these heaps of ruins, for such nearly all the older church-yards are—very suggestive to a philosophical and reflecting mind of the forlorn condition of the people here deposited. Many of these "cities of the silent" date back into far antiquity. At Prague, tomb-stones have been discovered over 1200 years old: so at Worms, and various other places, the Jews of which pride themselves very considerably upon their ancestry, and the possession of these monuments of antiquity. In fact, these seem to be almost the only monuments the poor Jews have of their forefathers of the Middle Ages, thanks to the holy efforts of Peter of Amiens and his coterie. But where am I going? I must "bury my dead."

When the grave is dug, great care is had that it touch not on any other, either old or recent; for no burial must ever take place on the same spot where a Jew has been interred before. A funeral oration is often pronounced over the body, then it is lowered, and the nearest relatives first throw three handfuls of earth down, then the other friends, etc. Various prayers are recited, beginning with Deut xxxii, 4: "He is the Rock: his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity; just and right is he." These exercises are concluded by the orphans (if the deceased was a parent) saying the Kadesh, or prayer for the dead, which they will have to say for a whole year, and which I have already mentioned in my second article on the Sabbath. Considerable sums of money are distributed by the friends of the deceased among the poor, who congregate in large numbers wherever there is a funeral.

We must now return home again, where we find the ladies (who seldom or never go to the cemetery) already seated on a sack on the ground, they are now joined by the males. Presently the neighbors will bring the "mourning meal," as it may be styled, consisting of boiled eggs chiefly, which are eaten by the mourners sitting on the ground. Eggs are deemed peculiarly appropriate, as their roundness reminds us of eternity! This is the Rabbinical reason. I think it is Raschi (or some other commentator) tells us that Jacob cooked those famous "lentiles" in token of his mourning for his grand-father Abrahum, who is supposed to have died about that time. Lentiles and peas being, like eggs, emblems of eternity. Visitors come and go all day, generally preserving profound silence, as salutations are not allowed to be exchanged in the house of mourning. Morning and evening a number of friends come and have service here. During the day the mourners are not permitted to read any thing but the Book of Job, or the Apocryphal tale of the Maccabeenn mother and her seven sons: the Book of Jeremiah also, and Lamentations. This lasts seven days, and is hence called Shibah. On Sabbath they may sit on chairs, and go to the synagogue; but on Saturday the mourning posture must be again resumed. Their seven days of strict mourning are derived from Gen. l. 10, and the three weeks following, in which this severity is somewhat relaxed are called Sihughon, making thirty from the day of burial, and are observed after Numbers, xx. 29. During these thirty days the "rent garments" must not be removed, the beard be allowed to grow, and various other regulations are to be observed.

The time of mourning for parents extends to one year, when they fast and light a lamp, both of which are done on every subsequent anniversary of the death of father and mother: and on these days the son must repeat the prayer for the dead again. This is observed down to old age, even. None of the above ceremonies take place for an infant under one month old: but for all others. Anniversary only for parents.

The Ner Tamid, or, "Perpetual Light" should have been mentioned before. This is a light (of wick and oil usually) standing at the head of the deceased before burial, and retaining the same place during the next seven days: after which it is carried to the synagogue, where there is a place especially set apart for it. The lamp should not be allowed to go out for the first thirty days. Only the very pious keep it burning the whole year.

By the lamp also stood a basin of water and a clean towel during the first seven days. They believe that the soul of the departed repairs hither every night, and performs the customary ablutions, and thus the water must be changed every morning.

If absent relatives hear of the death within thirty days, they must sit Shibah, and perform the various ceremonies pertaining to the seven days of strict mourning. But if they only hear of it after this time, they only sit on the ground for one hour. I should, perhaps, also mention that Shibah is observed by the parents and kin of a Meshumad, convert to Christianity: for they consider him dead to them and to Israel!

This is a very long article, and I must beg the indulgence of the reader. I could not well have abridged it, nor could I have put off any for the next time, as this number will close this part of the subject, i. e.: all the accidental ceremonies of the Jews. If I proceed (which I may do, if editor and readers are not too tired already) I shall give an account of the "times and seasons," the various festivals and fasts of the Jews, in the order of their occurrence. Until then, adieu.

JOSEPHUS.

Columbia, S. C. August 1, 1853.

"HEADS AND HEARTS."

BY REV. J. C. MILLER.

The heart of man, of which a poet writes,—

> Heaven's Sovereign saves all beings but Himself
> That hideous sight, a naked human heart. [Young.

The heart is the man. We gain the head, but we do not gain the man; we coerce the body, but we do not gain the man. We gain the heart, the man is ours—heart, head, body. And thus God's demand is not head, nor body; but, "My son, give me thine heart;" because with the heart, head and body will be given also. Remember what your heart is, you are. The heart is the moral man. To know yourself, to estimate, to understand yourself, you must not stop short with the being who is presented in daily life to the eyes of his fellows. Your outer life is lived under checks and influences; for eyes see and ears hear you. There may be much of unsuspected hypocrisy. But your heart is you, your moral self, the nature ripening for heaven or hell.

And where is God's witness concerning it? "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" Note the solemn answer; "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins." (Jer. xvii: 9-10.) Upon this heart is God's provision of grace brought to bear. "The new heart," illumined, softened, sanctified; the heart in whose "fleshy tables" the law of God is put: this is one of the two foremost provisions of the "better covenant," of which Immanuel is the Mediator. This, together with the righteousness which is by faith, makes up the gospel. "No condemnation" to the justified, such is the state; "a new creation," such the character. The legal want met by Christ's blood and righteousness: the moral want by Christ's Spirit. The title secured, once, fully, finally, irrevocably, on Calvary; the meetness wrought daily, hourly, by the indwelling Spirit. And this latter process carried on and accomplished by its Divine Agent, by the efficacious application of the things of Christ, "the things freely given to us of God." "Purifying their hearts by faith," "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."

> Talk they of morals? O thou bleeding Love,
> Thou Maker of new morals to mankind!
> The grand morality is love of Thee. [Young.

The heart is never right until Christ is upon its throne. The man is never right. His intellect may be soaring high, and ranging far and wide. As an astronomer, he may be mapping the heavens, and discovering planets hitherto unknown; as a geologist, penetrating into earth's bowels, and classifying her strata, and exhuming and cataloguing antediluvian remains; as a linguist, he may be poring over manuscripts in the Bodleian, or the Vatican, or the Museum, collating passages, fixing readings, his laboratory may be the birthplace of chemical discoveries which may benefit the human family: the submarine telegraph may be the marvelous product of his study of the laws of electricity; but if the moral nature be unrenewed, the heart unenlightened by divine illumination, unelevated and unpurified by divine principles and affections, the man is not right—not right for time, not right for eternity. "Thy heart is not right in the sight of God."

Nor is the man right whose heart is thus unsurrendered to God, and unchanged by God's grace, however deep be the tenderness of his moral nature, however exquisite his sensibilities, however warm its affections. Take not the average texture of men's natures; not the yearnings of pity, nor the response of sympathy, nor the promptness of generosity, nor the sweet ties of friendship, nor the doings of fond lovers; but that mightiest and most marvelous of the heart's affections, a mother's love; a mother's love at its deepest, a mother's love at its strongest. But though this be marvelous, and beauteous, and touching, and mighty, there is a loftier elevation, to be reached: there is a deeper depth to sound: there is yet a mightier influence of which that heart is susceptible: not of the earth—the earth has done its utmost with that heart; not natural—nature has done her utmost: but the influence of grace: the work of God the Holy Ghost; a Saviour's love: the response of a broken, hardened, trembling, believing heart to a bleeding Saviour's challenge, "Lovest thou me?" to a reconciled Father's demand, "Give me thine heart!"

Then is the heart right when God is its centre of affection and aspiration; when all in God and God in all is the rule of its hopes, and pleasures, and joys; when Christ is on its throne, and the Holy Ghost is its tenant. The severance between heaven, and earth, and hell, between angel, and man, and fiend is not mainly an intellectual, but a moral severance. Satan has carried his intellect with him—impaired, perhaps, and dimmed, but a mighty intellect to hell. The elect angels, who keep "their first estate," stand not by knowledge, but by love. Man, midway between the unfallen and the lost; man not unfallen, nor fallen and unredeemed; but fallen and redeemed; on his way to join "the elect angels," or the hosts of the damned in eternal fellowship, is what he is, because his heart is alienated from his God. Heaven is heaven to angels, because angels' hearts are true to God. Paradise was paradise, because the hearts of its tenants were true to God. Hell is hell, because every heart is irrevocably estranged from God. Earth is neither heaven nor Eden, because man's heart is in rebellion against God; but man is not a devil, because his heart is capable, under the provisions and the influences of Divine grace, of restoration to His image, His favor, and His service.

That restoration will find its consummation in the world to which we are hastening. Religion, we have seen, is for head and heart, the Bible for head and heart; God for head and heart: and heaven for head and heart. Now "we know in part;" "we see through a glass darkly;" and, alas! we love but in part and coldly. Then, sir, and there, in yon world of glory, the unfathomable sea of God's perfections; the infinite glories of humanuel; the boundless realms of an outspread universe; the thrilling review of his dealings with his world, with his Church, and with ourselves: and, towering above all, the retrospect of the cross of Christ; and present to us, and around us, and before us, an eternity of glory: these will suffice alike for the intellect and the affections which shall tenant the glorified body. Then, sir, and there, will be no collision between one element and another in our compound nature. "Head" will not be against "heart;" nor "heart" against "head." But as, with angels for our guides, we pass from place to place, and, with angels for our companions in the research, we dive into marvel after marvel, at every fresh discovery in those exhaustless wonders—at every fresh accession to our wisdom and knowledge—the affections of our enraptured hearts shall keep pace with the advances of our expanded intellect; and, with angels for fellow-worshippers, we shall sweep with intenser touch the strings of our golden harp, and heart and head will renew with fuller strain their part in the song of heaven.

> Mount, mount your hopes holes of [illegible] and love,
> And bear my kindred faith, and turn against to bless me.
> For [illegible] my trust is strong to dwell in many worlds,
> And call of many brethren there, sweet knowledge ever new.
>
> I yearn for realms where fancy shall be filled, and the > resources of freedom shall be felt,
> And the soul reign gloriously, risen to its royal destinies:
> I look to recognize again, through the beautiful mask of > their perfection,
> The dear familiar faces I have somewhile loved on earth:
> I long to talk, with grateful tongue of storms and perils > past,
> And praise the mighty Pilot that hath steered us through > the mighty rapids:
> He shall be the focus of it all, the very heart of gladness
> My soul is athirst for God, the God who dwelt in time!
> Prophet, Priest and King, the sacrifice, the substitute, > the Saviour
>
> Rapture of the blessed in the limited line of earth, the
> Paradise in the vision.
> How in my centuries of joy concentrate in that theme!
> How often a Methuselah might count his thousand years > and leave it unexhausted!
> And, lo! the heavenly dome along, with all its gates one > pearl—
> That pearl of countless price the door by which we > entered!
> Come tread the golden streets and join that glorious > throng,
> The happy ones of heaven and earth, the redeemed times
> blent-all!
> Hark! they sing their song and cast their crowns before
> Him!
> Their souls alight with Love, Glory and pride and > immortality!
> Veil thine eyes, mortal of time may see that holy vision
> And even the Seraph at thy side hath covered his face > with wings. [Pupper

Great works are performed not by strength, but by perseverance. [Johnson.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

THE GOOD CLASS LEADER.

Mr Editor. I have just finished the perusal of the little volume entitled "Father Reeves, the Methodist Class leader," and have seldom met with a sketch of character with which I have been more impressed or better pleased. It is a model of its kind, and as near faultless as mortals often get to be; and as such it surpasses any instance I have met with in the range even of Wesleyan Biography, which is peculiarly rich in that department.

The faith of Carvosso surpassed that of Father Reeves in its approaches to the omniscient and its unlimited efficiency: but, as a model, his character falls behind Mr. Reeves. To the mass such a faith as that of Carvosso may be said to be unattainable, it seems to be the gift of a peculiar few. On the contrary, in the life and character of Reeves, while there was harmony and perfection in every part, their principal excellences were attainable by all. Such system; such diligence; such skill; and such devotion, are seldom met with, and in modern times, we soberly believe, never beyond the limits of Wesleyanism. And if that system had accomplished nothing more than produce that character the past century, this would have justified its labors and outlays. Regarding him as an illustration of New Testament piety, and few will be disposed to say he overdoes it, the inference is irresistible that the mass of Christians are lamentably below the mark: and the inquiry should be, how can they be elevated?

The conviction fastened upon my mind is, that the want of Methodism at the present juncture is the right kind of Class Leaders. I hold this to be even more important than an improvement in the ministry. With such Leaders as Father Reeves, it seems to me that the Church would do better without the Ministers than it is doing now with both Ministers and Leaders. This may be regarded as heterodox: but it has a strong show of reason to my mind, for such a class would give themselves to their one work; whereas, the present pastorate imperfectly attends to its own and the work of Leaders. It seems to be the case at present, unfortunately for the Church and for individuals, that if a brother's mind is moved to a higher activity, and greater usefulness, it is almost certain that the first and only sphere to which it is directed, as a path of usefulness, is that of a Public Teacher.

There seem to such to be no intermediate positions where spoils can be won from Sin to the Saviour. This, I must be permitted to say, I regard as the result of a morbid state of the public mind; especially as many of this class do not hesitate to say that they have not the tact, and cannot succeed in class leading, etc. We are equal to the higher and more responsible sphere, but not to the lesser one! We can succeed in teaching the thousands, but not the few! Far be it from me to affirm that God has not so constituted some minds that they can move successfully in these wider circles; but cannot accommodate themselves to the lesser ones. But I must think that this is not the highest style of talent or genius; and that this class is small. I think the Lord endows but few men with this kind of impracticable and inconvenient greatness.

The result of the present state of things is, that while one class of laborers has an hack, the other is very poorly supplied. It is easier to find five fair preachers than to find one good Class Leader. Is it saying too much to suggest that there is great reason to fear that some of us have spelled out our calling wrongly? That many would be far happier and more useful in the humbler, but not less important office? Do we not too much forget that there is such a thing as a "call" to the Leader's office? And may we not suppose that the ignoring of this fact, and the consequent course of action, will account for much of the coldness and barrenness with many men! Read Father Reeves, and you will believe that if ever John Wesley was called of God to his mission, he was called to the Leader's office.

J. HAMILTON.

August 16.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trustees measures were taken to introduce into the Female Department a cheap, neat and appropriate uniform; but, as time and circumstances did not allow them to settle all the preliminaries, I take this method to inform the patrons, and all concerned, that for the next Term, as far as the every-day dress for the school-room is concerned, we shall not confine the pupils rigidly to a uniform only their dressing must not be extravagant or costly; but for the Sabbath, or any public occasion, their dress must be for the winter, worsted—solid green; and for the summer, white cambric or muslin.

The Trustees have been driven to adopt these measures on account of the excesses into which young ladies away from home are liable to fall in matters of dress. A few of the rich, perhaps, are able to bear such extravagance; but their example influences others to indulge whose parents are not able, nor are willing to allow any such excesses. Some, perhaps, may be opposed to the principle, but I have no doubt that the practical operation will soon convince all of its utility and propriety: for my experience authorizes me to say that some young ladies spend more for dressing than for tuition, board, and every thing else connected with their regular college course. Parents and guardians will please bear in mind that this rule was made to be kept, and when they send up their children next Term, be good enough to retain at home all silks, satins, jewelry, and such like, not compatible with the rule.

A. H. MITCHELL.

Summerfield, August 16, 1853.

[From the Presbyterian (Old School).]

PRESBYTERIAN STATISTICS.

On comparing the statistics of the present year with the corrected aggregate of last year, as published July 21, 1852, we find the increase of the ecclesiastical year just passed, to be three Synods, three Presbyteries, eighty-one ministers, ninety-seven churches, and seven thousand two hundred and seventeen communicants. There is also a slight increase in the number of candidates and licentiates reported. This, considering the general dearth of revivals, is encouraging. It shows the Church to be in a tolerably healthful state.

An important fact to be noted in these figures is, that the Old School branch of the Presbyterian Church has now become as large as both New and Old School were at the time of the division, fifteen years ago. The following will show the comparative numbers before the division and the present year:

	1837.	1853
Presbyteries	135	143
Ministers	2140	2130
Churches	2865	2870
Communicants	220,557	219,263
Licentiates	130	252
Candidates for ministry	199	363
Additions to church members, [illegible] examination and certificate	16,931	20,026

From the above it appears that we have eight more Presbyteries, and fourteen more churches than there were before the division; whilst the number of ministers lacks but one of being the same, and the number of communicants fall short but 1291. Another year, at the same rate of progress, will place us, in every particular as to numbers, ahead of where we stood before the secession of the New School. Probably no denomination of Christians has ever recovered from so large a loss of numbers in so short a period as fifteen years. As to thoroughness of organization and efficiency, the Old School Presbyterian Church is far in advance of the state of things in 1837. Considering her intelligence, wealth, numbers, sound doctrine, and thorough scriptural polity, she ought to have accomplished more than she has done; but there is reason for encouragement in the constant, gradual increase which appears from year to year. Let there be more united prayer to God, and more faithful labors, and the years coming will show still more cheering results.

The following will show the present relative strength and progress of the New and Old School Presbyterian bodies. The statistics of both are those of the present year:

	N. S.	O. S.
Synods	23	28
Presbyteries	168	143
Ministers	1,570	2,130
Churches	1,626	2,870
Communicants	149,032	219,263
Licentiates	130	252
Candidates for ministry	199	363
Additions to church members, [illegible] examination and certificate	10,931	20,026

From the above it appears that the Old School exceeds the New School in numbers, 5 Synods, 35 Presbyteries, 560 ministers, 1253 churches, 78,811 communicants, 102 licentiates, 161 candidates. The excess of communicants in the Old School over the New is almost equal to the entire number of communicants in the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country. The number of New School ministers very nearly equals the number of churches, there being but 56 more churches than ministers—whereas, in the Old School the excess of churches over the ministers is 740. This indicates a more rapid territorial extension on the part of the Old School. The more prosperous condition of the Old School, however, will appear more clearly from the following particulars, showing the relative rate of increase in the two bodies the last year:

	N. S.	O. S.
New Presbyteries organized	2	5
New Synods organized	2	3
Licentiates	33	78
Ordinations	26	74
Churches organized	58	84
Additions to members	10,931	20,026

After all, however, we shall accomplish but little unless we realize that our strength is not in numbers, but in the presence and power of the Spirit of God.

One of the Breakers.—Rev. H. W. Beecher, in speaking of the contribution of a blind man in his church who gave two shillings—all he had—for church-building in the West, thus moralizes:

Many a church is destroyed through an ambition of having strong and wealthy men, only rich, not holy. The pulpit, perhaps unconsciously, is baited with all manner of rhetorical delicacies, and they are solicited with most flattering personal attentions. When they have conferred upon the church the favor of their presence and membership, they are thenceforward the curse of the minister and of the church. They add nothing to the moral power of the church. They bring in worldly wisdom only. The truth must always be spoken with such prudence as the fear offending them inspires. They sit in their pews as so many insensible conductors; and the pulpit never flashes, or thunders, or strikes; all its fire of heaven is prudently and silently withdrawn by these conductors.

It may be very easy to sustain a church that has great wealth and little piety; but it is not worth sustaining. It is not a moral power. It may be difficult to sustain a church whose members are poor, but full of faith and zeal, and but for these what would become of religion in this world? But is it necessarily so difficult to sustain a church of the poor? Something may be said on that subject.

The salary from the British Government to Queen Victoria is about $3,000,000 a year His Holiness, the Pope, has about the same. This is at the rate of $8,000 a day, or, on the supposition that the Pope's average work-days equal about the numbers of Sabbaths in the year, he receives some $10,000 a day. Surely Pius ought to live on so liberal a salary! Why could he not help some of the tens of thousands of blind and broken-legged beggars that swarm about Rome, Naples, and other of the most sanctified and holy of the Catholic cities!

The Lord will make it up.

Let your exertions in the cause of God be according to the benefit you have received. "God loveth a cheerful giver."

There was a good man and his wife in Hampshire; they were, in humble circumstances, but they felt their obligations to Divine Grace, and gave a helping-hand to the plans which were formed for the conversion of sinners. At last, the man began to reason with his wife that they were going behind hand, and must do less. She still urged, that while so many were perishing around them, they should not relax, saying that they must trust to the Lord, who could make it up to them in a way they least expected; and they still kept on doing good, and the Lord did appear for them in a way they least expected.

They had a prodigate son, who had for years been the grief of their hearts; who had impoverished their substance, by draining them of all the money he could procure from them. Shortly after the circumstance to which I have adverted, a letter came from this son; the mother opened it. Her heart yearned over her son; though he had well nigh broken it. The letter was too much for her: she laid it aside till her husband returned from labor, and then she told him: "Here is a letter from our son." "Oh," said he, "do not give it to me; I suppose it is only asking for more money to consume upon his sins." However, on her entreating, he took it, and began to read it; and soon the big drops rolled down his cheeks, when he found it filled with professions of penitence for his sins; for the Word of God had come with power to his soul, and he had become a new creature; and he now declared that it would be his endeavor to study their happiness, and as long as he had hands to work, to contribute to their support during the remainder of their lives. [Rev. Wm. Jay.

Disobedience to Parents.—There is too little respect paid to parental authority at the present day. It is grievious to go into many families and hear the language daily used by the children. "I will;" "Don't care;" "It's none of your business;" "I am old enough to know what is right;" and the like expressions are painfully common. Large boys and grown-up girls, even, do not hesitate to give their mother the lie, and break from their express commands. They will do as they please, and go where they have a mind. We wish such children could only see how they appear in the eyes of their acquaintances, and if they have any shame, it must flush their cheeks. There is truth as well as rhyme in a couplet by Randolph:

> "Whoever brakes his parents' heart to bleed, > Shall have a child who will revenge the deed."

If one thing we are certain; an undutiful son and a disobedient daughter cannot long prosper. For a season they may appear well to the eye of a stranger, but their self-will and stubbornness are soon discovered and they are despised. A child who disobeys his parents will not hesitate to abuse anybody. Neither age nor talents receive respect from him.

Salaries.—The Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, in reviewing our history, says:

The word "salary" is never used in reference to the pecuniary allowance of traveling preachers, but the term "support," and hence the allowance was intended to correspond with the necessity. The services of a single man, for instance, may be as valuable as those of one who is married, yet the disciplinary allowance was always estimated differently. The settled theory, then, as well as the practice of Methodism, shows that the "need" of the preacher was to regulate his allowance for support. When this has been departed from, the contributions of the membership have been greatly restricted; as everybody could point to a beneficiary who was better provided for than hundreds of the contributors. Let the Conferences adhere to the theory and practice of Methodist economy, from the beginning, and their claims will be irresistible. No people love their preachers better than the Methodists do, and none will more cheerfully provide for their wants.

A Suspicious Mind.—It is difficult to tell who suffers most from suspicion, he who entertains it, or he who incurs it. There are few evils more intolerable in life than the coldness and distrust of friends and acquaintances. But the pain of discovering an unworthy trait, or a vile deed, in those whom we have trusted, is hardly more distressing. God has made us social beings, and the social instinct cannot be outraged without pain. There is hardly any habit more unfortunate than that of readily taking up an evil report, or of easily imbibing a suspicion of the conduct or character of our fellow-men.

The Passage of the Red Sea.—Pope described the following lines as the finest he had ever read in the English language:

> When Egypt's king God's chosen tribes pursued,
> In crystal walls the admiring waters stood;
> When through the desert wild they took their way,
> The rocks relented and poured forth a sea.
> What limits can Almighty goodness know,
> When seas can harden, and when rocks can flow?

Influence of California.—The settlement of California is to have a powerful influence on the evangelization of Asia. The result already is a large Intercommunication. The Secretary of State, in California, has recently furnished a statement of the number of Asiatics in that country. There are, according to this table, 22,185 Chinese; 1,125 Australians; 836 Sandwich Islanders; 39 New Zealanders; Manillo, 6; Malays, 28; Bombays, 10; Hindostan, 5; Van Diemen's Land, 5; Society Islands, 21. In Toulumne County there are 2,480 Chinese, 40 Australians, 14 Sandwich Islanders, 4 New Zealanders, and one from Van Diemen's Land.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, August 27.

NO RECEIPTS THIS WEEK.

This monthly acknowledgment to agents and subscribers cannot be published this week. It will hereafter appear. The chief printer lies ill of the prevailing epidemic.

Meantime, we hope our friends will not be forgetful of the weekly needs of the Advocate. We need money much, just now. In the present stagnation of trade and scarcity of labor here, financiering is a dead business: cash is in demand, expenses are high, and we depend for material aid entirely on the prompt generosity of our friends and patrons abroad. We are working for them under much local embarrassment, and hope they will not forget to work for us.

Those of our subscribers who may have fallen in arrears we have only to remind, and it will surely be enough, that the Advocate at so low a price can only be afforded on its published terms—Cash in Advance. In every instance where this is departed from a loss is suffered which the Advocate can ill afford to bear.

Now, we tell them how to make amends to us, and themselves, too; (for we know their consciences are distressed whenever they think of "that little matter"): if the preacher be convenient, don't wait to be called on. Call on him. Good man; he has enough to do, but will cheerfully attend to this; for he counts it part of his work, and likes the Advocate. But, if he is not near, the post-office is. Send us a friendly letter (making no apologies) inclosing a bill that will certainly cover all back-duss and a handsome payment in advance. Then you can go to sleep on it, and we will grind away heartily, sending you your meal weekly, and will not wake you up till the hopper runs out.

There, now! Is not that as kind a dun as ever editor indited! Whether or not it be a good one, we wait, anxiously, to see.

Health of Ministers.—To those numerous friends who have expressed in their letters to us solicitude for the welfare of our ministering brethren in this city, in the present trying time, we are happy to say that they are at their posts. Rev. J. B. Walker was absent in North Alabama for the health of a sick family at the time the epidemic broke out, and his congregation and friends here judged it urgently expedient that he should not return, as he was unacclimated. The rest were acclimated, except the Rev. R. L. Childers, of the New Orleans Circuit. He has been lying ill of the yellow fever for the past week; and although on Monday and Tuesday serious apprehensions were entertained about his recovery, his diligent and skillful physician, Dr. Austin, authorizes us to say, at the time of going to press, that he is convalescent.

Rev. O. L. Nash.—The Mississippi Conference and the Church have lost a zealous, faithful and very efficient preacher and paster in the death of Rev. Orsamus L. Nash. He died on the 8th August, in the parsonage at Natchez, Miss., after a protracted illness of two months. For about thirty years has he stood on the walls of Zion, and many are they, in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, now adorning the Church, who were brought in by his instrumentality. He has gone—but carried sheaves with him.

Warren Circuit, Miss.—Rev. H. J. Harris writes, 17th inst.: "We are having some glorious revivals of religion in this part of the country. Not so great in Warren Circuit as in some adjoining; but, thanks be unto God! He has visited us graciously at some points on this Circuit. We had several happy conversions and valuable accessions to the Church within the last few weeks."

☞ Under the head of "Notices" we would direct attention to the systematic operations of the Tuskegee Circuit.

Our John.—We seem to have a clever, and rather facetious friend over the water, who has never made himself known to us under a more specific name than "John Bull." This "John of ours" is a capital fellow. He sends us that very readable article on Sheridan as the initiative of a series on leading literary characters. "Accept"—indeed! We should be unfaithful to the editorial instinct were we to do otherwise. This is the note, prefatory:

To the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate:

Rev. Sir:—American-like, you have been hitting Johnny Bull pretty hard again. But he does not care. You may smite, but he forgives; and, in proof, sends suclosed the first of a series of papers, to embrace such names as Lord Byron, Cowper, Burns, Scott, Southey, Moore, Crabbe, etc., etc., if you will accept. Faithfully, J. B.

Struck by Lightning.—Rev. W. C. Boothe writes from Washington county, Miss., that on the 12th inst., a little after dark, the stately residence of Major Hunt was struck by lightning and took fire, and was soon leveled to the ground. The family being absent and the doors shut, the flames had enveloped the porch opposite from the dwelling, where the servants were, before discovered. The whole loss estimated by our correspondent at from $15,000 to $16,000.

DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

It has before this been suggested, and we beg leave to renew and respectfully urge the suggestion upon our honorable Mayor and municipal authorities, that a day be appointed and the whole city invited to suspend business, and, fasting and praying, to gather in the various temples of worship, and humble ourselves and confess our sins before God, whose hand is so heavy upon us, and supplicate the Lord our Maker to stay the pestilence that is destroying us.

This is right and proper. We believe the people are prepared for it, and would take gladly such an appointment and keep it.

The interments on Sabbath last (known in our calendar as the "Dark Day") were 315, on Monday 283, Tuesday 258, Wednesday 222, Thursday 219. The deaths, up to this date, by yellow fever, are over 6,000. Estimating our population now at 75,000, this is one to every twelve! The whole mortality, from all diseases, from the 1st of June, sums up over 8,000! More than decimated in less than three months! And still the pestilence rages!

With commendable solicitude, our city authorities have done whatever lay in their power, with the remotest probability of success, to stay its progress. Lime has been distributed, cannon have been fired for several evenings; if peradventure by the concussion, some more healthful atmospheric condition might be induced. This, after doing much real injury to the sick, and its sanitary effect being doubtful, it was judged proper to discontinue. Barrels of tar are nightly burned at the corners of the streets, illuminating our impotent distress, and sending up their vain incense to the skies.

All this avails not. What shall be recommended next? The people are at their wits' end. Death still reigns. The grave diggers have more than they can do. Surely it is time to call upon God!

WORKS OF ARMINIUS.

In the first number of this paper—the specimen number, issued July 10, 1850—was an article with the above caption, and it opened with these words:

"It is a singular fact—one upon which we have often thought and regretted—that the works of the justly celebrated and admired Arminius are not in the list of our "Book Room" publications, and have never been given to the world by a Methodist press. An edition was published in England some years since, as a private enterprise; but they have never been issued in this country by any party. The Church, whose theological system takes its name from this great man, have failed to send down his works to posterity, or even to furnish them to the present generation. This fact is a reproach alike to gratitude and our theological literature, and a defect which, we hope, may soon be removed. It would be of great service, both to the Church and the world, to have these works placed within the reach of both friends and enemies."

What the Methodists have failed to do for themselves, these enterprising publishers, Derby & Miller, of Auburn, N. Y., have done for them and the rest of the world.

We have been for some time in receipt of the three volumes, large octavo, substantially and neatly done, but have not had opportunity of noticing them before. They claim to be the only English translation of the entire theological writings of Arminius ever published.

The system of doctrines known as Arminianism did not, as is well known, originate with Arminius, but he first gathered them into well digested form, nearly three centuries ago, from the early Christian authors, explained and defended them. Of course, the library of no clergyman or well-read layman will be considered complete without them.

The article above quoted from holds the following promissory language, which the appearance of these volumes verifies:

"The addition of these works to our theological literature would confer on us, as a Church, a benefit far outweighing the expense or trouble. A thorough perusal of them would be of incalculable service to our ministry. They would see that these champions of God's truth and grace thought as well as wrote. And though they would find some points earnestly discussed that have nearly ceased to agitate the Christian world, and some views of truth which no one doubts at the present day, argued with logical severity; yet they could not fail to profit by a view of the reasons brought in support of truth two hundred and fifty years ago. They would also learn to whom they are indebted for many of the strongest views and best arguments which they now urge against Calvin's errors. And, while they would see doctrines stated and discussed with the exactness of scholastic disputation and mathematical conclusiveness, they would also find those discussions developing abundant elements of thought, and worked by a deeply pious spirit. The study would give new modes of thought, a wider range of ideas, and greater copiousness of language."

Coming up to the Apportionment.—Rev. W. H. Turnley, Harrisonburg, Louisiana Conference, sending up $60 to the Treasurer of Conf. Miss. Society, says: "I think we shall reach our apportionment by the Conference. We have no signal revival, but I think times are rather encouraging on several places in the Circuit.

Are all the preachers keeping in view the Conference apportionments? It will stamp system and stability upon our operations, and give confidence if we reach those figures, and maintain them with healthful increase.

THE ENGLISH CONFERENCE.

On July 27th, the 110th assembly of British Wesleyan Ministers was opened in Bradford, Yorkshire. The first business, after the usual devotions, was filling seven vacancies in the Legal Hundred—the ecclesiastical Corporation.

As was predicted a year ago by our knowing correspondent, "X. Y.," Rev. John Lomas was elected President without opposition. Rev. J. Farrar re-elected Secretary.

The preliminary Committees had held their meetings with much interest. The Watchman of 27th ult. gives full reports of their doings and discussions. In these committee meetings, as our readers may be aware, the various matters that are to be finally acted on by the Conference are digested, shaped, and pretty definitely determined. Their recommendations are seldom rejected. In them all the details of British Wesleyanism are brought out.

The General Relief Fund (a project to raise £100,000) was reported prosperously. The amount already subscribed was £64,000, and the balance expected.

The Education Committee reported the number of Day Schools taught by the Connexion, 365, being a nett decrease of 4; the total number of scholars 39,426, an increase of 1,154; the average number in attendance was 30,233, being an increase of 468; salaries of teachers, £18,884; total annual cost, including salaries, £24,194 18s. 9d.; being an increase of £848 18s. 8d.

The larger portion of this (£15,037) was raised by the "children's pence." In this department the Church employs 214 trained and 154 untrained Day Schoolmasters. To train these in sufficient style and number is the work of the noble Normal College at Westminster.

The number of Sabbath Schools in the circuits was 4,084, a decrease of 191; the total number of scholars, boys and girls, 399,239, a decrease of 42,502; number of children attending day-schools, 159,082; the number of children in the Society, or attending select classes, 21,617; number of teachers, 73,266; being a decrease of 8,938: number of teachers in the Society, 49,080, and the total annual cost of the Sabbath-schools, £24,502 8s. 2d.

Some attributed this decrease mainly to the effects of Puseyite diligence in connexion with day-school education. But the loss of the past year must not be assumed to result principally from that cause; the decrease being due, in a great measure, to the loss of members to the Connection at large during the preceding two years.

A good deal was said in the Sunday School Committee about the necessity of bringing those Schools into closer union with the Wesleyan Church, and more under the superintendence of the Ministry. It seems that the week day-schools, established by the wealthy Church of England and others, operate against this department of Methodist influence and usefulness in places where they have not their day-Schools. This discovery was fully made, and will doubtless infuse a new energy into their movements. Said one of the wisest speakers:—"Our people send their children to the weekly schools of others, and they are gradually withdrawing from our Sunday-schools in consequence: sometimes they are required to do so, and in many instances they are not so required: but associations and connexions lead them to go on a Sunday, where they go on a week-day: and this gradually diminishes our numbers. I was in a town lately, and it was stated to me, that they had now only half the number they used to have, though there had been no division and no loss of scholars from agitation. The simple reason was this—the children go to a week-day school, and they go to the Sabbath-school connected therewith. You may depend upon it, that this will operate gradually, but extensively, to the thinning of our Sunday schools. If we mean to have the hold of the rising generation, by our Sunday schools, that we have had in former years, we must have our week-day schools. We have 39,000 attending our own week-day school, and there are 169,000 of our Sunday school children attending other week-day schools somewhere, and you will see where they will go by and by. The subject which had been introduced that morning was no new one, and though it was now beginning to be practically felt to be of importance, yet it had been entertained in that committee for years. The evils had been foretold, that, owing to the establishment of day-schools, and the number of Puseyite Clergy, taking up the subject, large numbers had been abstracted from their Sunday-schools."

It was resolved to recommend to the Conference the appointment of a Sunday School Visitor, or Children's Missionary, whose one work it would be to labor throughout the Connexion in organizing Sunday Schools, bringing those already existing into closer union with the Church, impressing on all a more uniform system of instruction, etc.

In this place we are reminded of what the Sunday School Editor of the M. E. Church North, who has recently been abroad, has observed and written, not a little to our surprise. He says:

"English Sunday schools have many obstacles in their way from which ours are happily free.

"Under this head may be mentioned not only the greater prevalence of popular ignorance, but the distinctions and grades in society, owing to which, chiefly, none but the youth of the poorer and middling classes are ever sent to the Sunday school. Besides, the Sunday school in England rarely secures its true and proper position, namely, that of an integral element and agency of the expansion and perpetuity of the Church itself. It is too much an extra; a very good thing just outside of the Church, but not thoroughly incorporated with it.

"In several important respects, our American Sunday schools have decided advantages over those of Great Britain, e. g.:

"1. We have generally much more pleasant and agreeably located Sunday-school rooms.

"2. Our Sunday schools are generally much better fitted up for the convenience and comfort of scholars and teachers.

"I did not see but one Sunday-school room in England, where seats were furnished with backs, simple movable benches were the prevailing kind.

"3. Our American Sunday schools are generally much better supplied with books, and books of a more suitable character. Sunday-school books here are much cheaper, and being published in great numbers for this specific object, there is a better supply, which may be much more easily obtained by the several schools."

The Chapel affairs are in better condition than common. They are trying, with good will and awakened consciences to roll away the ponderous stone of reproach that has grown up here.—what seemed, indeed, a Sisyphean business. Fifty encumbered chapels have been sold out and quit mostly £100 concerns, amounting in all to £5,000. But other erections, enlargements, &c., have been made during the year to the amount of £16,500.

It sounds strangely to us, who are praying for more laborers, to learn that our English brethren have more than they can work—young men of piety and education, just turned out from their Theological Institutions. For a year or two, no additional ones are to be called out, or but sparingly. This year they have twenty-nine young men for whom they can find no places at all! They are to be kept in the Institution at supererogatory studies: the expenses of their support are borne by the Connection till their services are called for.

Since the above was written, the letter of our English correspondent, who is a member of the Conference, came to hand. It bears date Aug. 1st, and will be given in our next. It presents a graphic sketch of the new President, with other items of interest. About 350 Ministers are in attendance. Our correspondent says: "The Conference has been strongly characterized, in its opening session by unanimity, kindness, confidence and hope."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate]

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. T. W. MANNING.

Mr. Editor:—Death has again entered the ranks of the Alabama Conference, and culled from a field of extensive usefulness one of our most efficient young ministers—Rev. Thomas W. Manning—who died in Lowndes county, Mississippi, on the second day of July, after a protracted illness of fifty-two days.

Brother Manning was born in Limestone county, Alabama, March 9, 1824. His parents settled in Pickens county, Ala., in 1831, where he professed faith in Christ when about sixteen years of age, at a camp-meeting held at Union Chapel. On the 4th of Jan., 1846, he was married to Mrs. Martha Meek, and settled himself on his plantation in Pickens county, with a prospect of much domestic happiness: but, in a short time, his earthly prospects were blasted by the death of his excellent wife, who fell a victim to consumption in 1849. Having always been remarkably zealous as a Christian, he commenced exhorting not long after he experienced religion, and obtained license to preach the Gospel after his marriage.

When he lost his wife he immediately devoted himself to the work of the ministry, by attaching himself to the Alabama Conference, which he joined in 1850. He was appointed the first year to the Columbus Circuit, in conjunction with myself. His labors were greatly blessed; we had a gracious revival of religion throughout the Circuit, and he was universally beloved for his zeal and devotedness to God. The next year the Greene Circuit was assigned him; he was placed in charge without a colleague. Here, again, his labors were owned and blessed of God. He had several revivals of religion, and the Circuit prospered under his administration. In 1852 he was put in charge of Athens Circuit, to which he was reappointed at the last Conference. He had a most glorious revival on his Circuit last year; nearly every church on the Circuit was blessed with a revival of religion, and there was general desire for his return. On the 23d of November he was married again to Mrs. Harriet Robinson, of Lowndes county, Miss.; a lady every way calculated to promote his happiness and usefulness: but, alas! how short-lived are all the flattering prospects of earth; in a few short months death rudely severs that nuptial band, and bears his victim to the tomb, leaving the bereaved one with a lonely and bleeding heart to mourn her untimely loss.

I have been intimately acquainted with the deceased for several years, and always regarded him as one of the best young men of my acquaintance: he was a pure-minded Christian, and had the cause of God greatly at heart, and zealously and faithfully applied himself to doing good. He was a good disciplinarian, kept his churches in order, held class meeting invariably after preaching, preached a present, free and full salvation; and was manifestly improving. There was great unction and power in his preaching, and he prayed with extraordinary earnestness and faith. He was eminently a man of prayer, and, like Israel, he had power to prevail with God and man.

During his last illness I visited him several times, and conversed with him in regard to his spiritual state and prospects; he always expressed himself as enjoying the presence of God, and the consolations of religion. On the morning of his death, he bade his weeping friends farewell, requested that I should preach his funeral, gave directions about his burial, and expressed his strong confidence in Christ, and lively hope of immortality. He was buried by the Odd-Fellows in their grave yard in Columbus, Miss., being a member of that Society, where his body sleeps in Jesus, until the resurrection morn, when it shall rise immortal, spiritual and glorious, like the glorious body of our Lord Jesus Christ, and be caught up, together with all the ransomed hosts of the Lord, to share his triumph, and dwell in his presence forever. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!"

Geo. Shaffer.

To the Members of the Alabama Conference.

The firm of Carver and Ryland having been dissolved, and the business being in course of liquidation, the copies of "Summers on Baptism" remaining on hand have been transferred to C. K. Randall & Co., and are subject to your orders as before. Brother R is well known to many members of the Alabama Conference as an upright, experienced bookseller in Mobile, where he has been doing business for many years. And to those who are not acquainted with him, I will say that no man will attend to your orders more promptly or satisfactorily. He informs me that he keeps on hand a general assortment of Methodist publications, both of the general and Sabbath School catalogues."

Brethren, allow me to add, in view of letters received both from Dr. Early and Dr. Summers, that there are pressing reasons why these books which we ordered, should be taken and disposed of by us, and the money remitted as soon as practicable. I hope this will not be neglected, and we find ourselves embarrassed and perplexed about them at the next Conference. Forward your orders to Bro. Randall. I also have yet a supply.

Aug. 15. J. Hamilton.

Letter from England.

[Special Correspondence of the Advocate.]

Leek, July 25, 1853.

The Right Hon. R. B. Sheridan.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan was the son of Mr. Thomas Sheridan, author of "The Life of Swift," and was born in Dublin, in the year 1751. He was educated at Harrow School, which he left at the age of eighteen, to become a student of the Middle Temple; but he abandoned the study of the law, for pursuits more congenial with his habits and disposition. At the age of twenty he married Miss Linley, a beautiful and accomplished young lady. The marriage was a private one, and was the occasion of his being twice engaged in duels, in the first of which he was the acknowledged victor; but some dispute afterwards arising as to the issue of that contest, the parties again met, when Sheridan received a wound which for some time threatened his safety. In 1780 he first took his seat in Parliament as the representative of Stafford. He soon became one of the most formidable opponents to ministers, and took an active part in the successive debates of a period, in its importance, unparalleled in the history of the country. After the death of Mr. Pitt, he held, for a short time, the office of Treasurer of the Navy. In 1792 he had the misfortune to lose his wife, which event affected him deeply. A sincere mutual attachment appears to have existed between them, and to have remained undiminished to the last. He afterwards married Miss Ogle, daughter of the Dean of Winchester. His health, which had been for some time declining, at length totally failed him, and he died in Saville Row, on the 7th of July, 1816.

At the time of his decease, he appears to have been in a state of utter destitution. In the Life which has been published by Mr. Moore, is inserted a note received from him by Mr. Rogers, a day or two previous to that event. Its concluding paragraph strongly exhibits the agonized state of his feelings:

"They are going to put the carpets out of the window, and break into Mrs. S.'s room, and take me: for God's sake let me see you a-less."

Mr. Moore tells: "The Sheriff's officer arrested the dying man in his bed, and was about to carry him off in his blanket to a sponging house, when Dr. Bain interfered, and threatening the officer with the responsibility he must incur, if, as was but too probable, his prisoner should expire on the way, arrested this outrage."

Such were the last moments of Sheridan!

His constitution, naturally remarkable for its vigor, had been undermined by frequent and excessive potations, and so habitual had this vice become in his late years, that the warnings and entreaties of his medical advisers were of no avail. On one occasion his physician, while remonstrating against the course he was pursuing, told him that if he persisted in it the coats of his stomach would be destroyed, and rendered incapable of performing the functions necessary to digestion; upon which he is said to have replied, with melancholy humor, "Then my stomach must digest in its waistcoat, for I cannot help it!"

Humor was in him an instinct no circumstance could suppress—no presence restrain it. Its shafts were ever ready, and never fell short of their mark. His writings, which are chiefly dramatic, bear the impress of genius, and abound in wit and metaphor. His character was wayward and veering, and its grand defect, the absence of a ruling and guiding principle, not only caused him to be involved in difficulties through the whole period of his life, but, as we have seen, was the occasion of much misery at its close, and it has robbed his memory of that claim to our respect which otherwise it would possess. We may admire him as an author, or an orator, but can never respect him as a man, for his negligence and recklessness amounted, where himself alone was concerned, to a deficiency in common prudence, and where, as was generally the case, others were affected by it, of common honesty. Numerous are the anecdotes of his lavish and improvident extravagance, and more numerous those of artifices which he put in practice when required to discharge debts which he had thus incurred. It is impossible to resist being amused by the dexterity and ingenuity which he displayed on these occasions, in extricating himself from dilemmas which would have baffled the skill of almost any other man. But when we contemplate these unprincipled pieces of waggery in a moral point of view—when we divest them of the glitter which his genius threw even around his worst actions, we admit their injustice and their cruelty. Did the individual who had trusted him—did the family who were dependent on that individual for support—suffer less by the withholding of the sum for which he had a just claim, because his frequent importunities were evaded with humor and address?

"Is the shaft the less fatal because it is bright?"

After having been defrauded, was it any alleviation to be outwitted into the bargain? But it may be said, and we are willing to admit its truth in the fullest extent, that the misery he thus occasioned he did not contemplate; that the debts which he thus contracted he intended to discharge; but, granting that his thoughtlessness and profusion were alone the causes of his injustice, was he the less criminal on that account?

Such were the moral blemishes of a man whose splendid abilities introduced him into all circles, and made him the pride of each. Although his genius displays itself in his writing, for a knowledge of those efforts which proved the consummation of his fame, and on which it chiefly rests, we depend on the testimony of others. His speeches on the impeachment of Mr. Hastings, on charges grounded on his conduct while Governor of India, are not to be preserved to us by reports—that is, by accurate and complete ones; and, even did we possess such, they could present us with nothing which would enable us to judge of the merits of those orations, or to appreciate their beauties. What idea could the frigid and dry skeletons convey to our minds of the beauty which had clothed and the spirit which had animated them! His first speech on this subject was delivered in the House of Commons, February 7, 1787. The following are a few and the most remarkable eulogiums on its magnificence and power which sprung from the lips of all parties at its close:

Mr. Burke declared it to be "the most astonishing effort of eloquence, argument, and wit united, of which there was any record or tradition."

Mr. Fox said: "All that he had ever heard; all that he had ever read, when compared with it, dwindled into nothing, and vanished like vapor before the sun."

Mr. Pitt acknowledged "that it surpassed all the eloquence of ancient and modern times, and possessed every thing that genius or art could furnish to agitate or control the human mind."

The speech having attained its object, in order for the impeachment, he was appointed one of the Committee of Managers and in that character made his celebrated oration in Westminster Hall on the 3d of June, 1800, and the three following days, for, to quote the words of Gilham, who was present, "That display of genius blazed four successive days."

The following passage, which has been preserved, is complete in itself and possesses great beauty. Dead to the best feelings of our nature must be the heart in which it does not arouse an echo:

"And yet, my lords, how can I support the claim of filial love by argument, much less the affection of a son to a mother, where love loses its awe and veneration is mixed with tenderness? What can I say upon such a subject? What can I do but repeat the ready truths which, with the quick impulse of the mind, must spring to the lips of every man on such a theme? That love! the morality of instinct! the sacrament of nature and duty!—or rather, let me say it is unselfed a duty, for it flows from the heart without effort, and is its delight, its indulgence, its enjoyment. It is guided not by the slow dictates of reason: it awaits not encouragement from reflection or from thought; it asks no aid of memory; it is an innate, but active consciousness of having been the object of a thousand tender solicitudes—a thousand watchful cares—of much anxiety, and patient sacrifices, unremarked and unrequited by the object. It is a gratitude founded upon a conviction of obligations not remembered, but the more binding because not remembered—because conferred before the tender reason could acknowledge or the infant memory record them—a gratitude and affection which no circumstances should subdue, and which few can strengthen—a gratitude in which even injury from the object, though it may blend regret, should never breed resentment—an affection which can be increased only by the decay of those to whom we owe it, and which is then, most fervent when the tremulous voice of age, resistless in its feebleness, inquires for the natural protector of its cold decline."

This speech carried his fame to its zenith. The country, lost in astonishment at its grandeur, resounded with eulogies on its author. How enviable does the situation of Sheridan appear at this time! But it, ye lowly and humble gifted, envy not the lofty and the talented; suffer not yourselves to be dazzled by the lustre of their achievements! for too frequently the brilliance which encircles them serves but as a beacon, by the light of which may be discovered the barrenness of the rock on which their happiness has been shivered. By their elevation they are exposed to many a storm which passes over the heads of others, many a disquietude foreign to other bosoms.

"He who ascends to mountain tops shall find
The loftiest peaks most wrapt in clouds and snow;
He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
Must look down on the hate of those below.
Though high above the sun of glory glow,
And far beneath the earth and ocean spread,
Round him are icy rocks and loudly blow
Contending tempests on his head.
And thus reward the toils which to those summits led."

But one fate awaits those idols of the fickle world. It fondles them for a time as the child does his toy, then, like him, flings them aside, to be neglected and forgotten. Envy not Sheridan, therefore: the gay, the gifted Sheridan, courted as he was by peers and by princes, who in the noon of his prosperity thought it their proudest privilege to be admitted to his company; who bore him along on the tide of their patronage while his sails were filled and his streamers were flying; but, when the storm had gathered around him, ebbed from him and left him alone on the barren sands a motionless and unheeded wreck! Yes, they left him withering in the bleakness of decline, enfeebled by sickness, and borne down by calamity. They will tell us he had been imprudent; they will tell us his misfortunes were the results of his vices, and truly; but this plea will not avail them. They never reproved his irregularities; they fostered, they admired them; and it was not until in the catalogue of his vices were added those blackest of all, in their estimation—poverty and misfortune—that their deformity was discovered. He was prosperous, and they courted him; he was admired, and they sought distinction by associating with him, he was vain, and they flattered him; he had wit wherewith to enliven their halls of festivity, and they feasted him; he was in penury and in sickness, and they deserted him! Their vanity had battened upon him until it could yield no further gratification, except, indeed, at his funeral, to which accordingly they crowded in all the display of pride—with all the pomp of ostentation; but when his house was besieged by bailiffs—when death was laying his cold hand on him, and none were near to console or relieve him, we may ask, in the words of his biographer, "Where were they all?"

The life of Sheridan is not without its moral. It should teach us that genius without virtue is but a fire which consumes its possessor: and that he who casts anchor in the applause of the multitude, will be driven by the first gale on the quicksands of ruin.

J. B.

New Relief Association.—The citizens of the City of Jefferson held a meeting on Wednesday evening, the 24th inst., and formed a Relief Association. Resolutions were passed soliciting from the City of New Orleans a portion of the contributions handed in, for the relief of the City of Jefferson, where, it was stated, the epidemic was decimating the population.

Relief from St. Louis.—The St. Louis papers were, at last dates, urging upon the citizens to adopt measures for the relief of the sufferers here by the epidemic. Committees had been appointed, and there was every prospect that the collections would be large.

More Aid.—The Corporation of Charleston has appropriated $2000 for the relief of the sufferers here by the yellow fever. The Courier of the 18th remarks:

"We trust, however, that the contributions from Charleston will not be confined to that amount, but that the charitably disposed of the city and State at large will aid in this humane work, and to enable all inclined to do so, we have placed in our office a list, and shall be happy to forward the sums subscribed to the Howard Association in New Orleans."

More Aid for the Sufferers.—The Baltimore Sun of the 19th inst. states that a mass meeting has been called in New York for the purpose of raising $25,000 more, in addition to the sum already raised, for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in this city.

In the Washington Star of the 18th we find that the Mayor has transmitted $2000 of the $3000 collected through Messrs. Corcoran & Riggs, who have a branch of their banking establishment in New Orleans. The balance will be forwarded in a few days.

The Star of the same date says:

"We learn that Mr. W. M. Foster, the dramatist, is making arrangements for a grand dramatic and musical entertainment, to be given at Odd Fellows' Hall, on Monday evening next, the proceeds to be applied to the benefit of the New Orleans sufferers. Success to the benevolent movement."

The Fever in Mobile.—There were seven interments in Mobile on Tuesday—five of which were of Yellow Fever.

THE FAIRER LAND.... By T. B. Read.

All the night, in broken slumber,
I went down the world of dreams,
Through a land of war and turmoil;
Swept by loud and labouring streams,
Where the masters wandered, chanting
Ponderous and tumultuous themes.

Chanting from unwieldy volumes,
Iron maxims stern and stark,
Truths that swept, and burst, and slumbled
Through the ancient rifled dark;
Till my soul was tossed and worried,
Like a tempest-driven bark.

Hot noon, within the distance,
Silent the village vanes aflame,
And the sunshine, filled with music,
To my cell-casement came;
While the birds sang pleasant valentines
Against my window frame.

Then by sights and sounds invited,
I went down to meet the morn,
Saw the trailing mists roll inland
Over rustling fields of corn,
And from quiet hill side hamlets
Heard the distant rustic horn.

There, through dappled dales and byways,
Met I forms of fairer mould,
Pouring songs for every pleasure—
Songs that hearts could not withhold—
Setting all the birds a-singing
With their delicate barge of gold.

Some went plucking little fly-bells,
That withered in the hand;
Some where sailed a summer ocean,
Gathered pebbles from the sand;
Some, with prophet eyes uplifted,
Walked unconscious of the land.

Through that Fairer World I wandered
Slowly listening, all and long,
And no one behind the reapers,
Without any thought of wrong,
Loitered, gleaning for my garner
Flowery sheaves of sweetest song.

HYMENEAL:

Married.—August 4th, by Rev. D. Carmichael, A. Beal to Miss Margaret Ramsay, all of Calmba, Ala.

OBITUARY:

Died.—On the 24th inst., of yellow fever, happy in the Saviour's love, Robert-Wright Sterling, son of the late Rev. James Sterling, Wesleyan Minister, Tullamore, Ireland.

Died.—In this city, of yellow fever, on the 18th inst., in his 21st year, Wm. A. Van Horn, a native of Tallahassee, Fla. Mr. Van Horn had been for some time connected with this office as mailing clerk. He was a young man of amiable and pure character.

Died.—In Cahaba, July the 10th, Margaret Elder, about 44 years of age. She was a native of East Tennessee, and her maiden name was Deaton. In October 1851, she professed religion and joined the M. E. Church. Her illness was protracted, but she suffered like a Christian and went down to death in the confidence of the Gospel, "fearing no evil, leaning on the staff of God." We felt, as our farewell gaze parted with sister Elder:

"How blessed the righteous when he dies,
When sinks a weary soul to rest;
How mildly beam the closing eyes,
How gently heaves th' expiring breast!

D. Carmichael.

Died.—Of epilepsy, July 24, 1853, in Union Co., Arkansas, Mrs. Malinda Yarbrough. She was born in Lawrence district, S. C. May 21st, 1807; and converted and joined the M. E. Church in 1816, and continued a faithful member until called to join the Church above. Sister Y. had been subject to spells of epilepsy for about 14 years, of which disease she was a severe but patient sufferer. She held herself in readiness to obey the call of her Master at any time from suffering to reward. Though she was not permitted to speak in her last attack, and tell a weeping husband and affectionate children and friends the triumph of grace in the last conflict, yet no one who knew her doubts of her safe entrance into Paradise.

William Moores.

☞ Alabama Baptist please copy.

It becomes my painful duty to record the death of Sister Martha E. Kennedy. She was at our last Quarterly Meeting, and to all human appearances, bid as fair for long life as any there. The Friday following she died. She was about 19 years of age, and for the last three years had been a consistent member of the M. E. Church. Sister Martha was one of those ingenuous, noble-hearted girls, that not only attracted attention, but won on the heart's best affections. She was raised piously, but like too many, when she first grew up, she was disposed to try the pleasures of sin for a season. The cup was mixed with bitterness, for in 1846, she was called to weep over the grave of a sainted mother. Martha was too young to appreciate her loss. In 1849, her father died also. Her loss was sanctified to her good. God grant that this may be the case in reference to her surviving brothers and sisters!

T. Killough.

Aug. 2, 1853.

Died.—At her father's residence in Marengo Co., Ala., on the 1st day of July, Miss Laura Jones, aged twenty years.

She possessed a vigorous and well-cultivated mind, a kind and sympathetic heart.

At a protracted meeting in Demopolis, last year, she sought and obtained the remission of her sins through faith in Jesus Christ.

Hitherto she had been generally admired and loved for her gentleness and amiability; but now, to these natural endowments, were added all the graces of the Christian character; and rarely do we witness so great a proficiency in so short a time. I knew her intimately for several years, but never, until her conversion, had we corresponded.

She then opened a correspondence with me, on purely religious subjects, her letters breathe a spirit of pure and heavenly devotion. In one of them which is now before me, she remarks:—"I am more contented and happy than I ever was—I do love to read my Bible and pray."

Her illness lasted ten days. A little while before she breathed her last, a young female friend, with whom she had been on terms of the strictest friendship, and who had acted the part of a faithful watcher during her sickness, observed her lips to move, and stooping to catch her last words, heard her faintly articulate:

"Safe in the heaven guide
O receive my soul at last!"

Thus died one of the loveliest young women I have ever known. Her parents, brothers and sisters, and a large circle of friends mourn her loss. But, thanks to God, we sorrow not as those who are without hope.

John D. Fisher.

Algiers.—The town of Algiers, over the river, has opened an infirmary for the relief of the sick. It is situated on St. Peter street. Here is another opening for the active benevolence of the Howard Association.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

Advertisements, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion $1 00
Each subsequent insertion 50
One Square, one year 15 00
One Square, six months 10 00
Two Squares, one year 25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. Advertisement inserted until paid for.

☞ MINISTERIAL SERVICES. — Persons desirous of having the Sunday good Sacrament administered, and having the dead, during the preaching thereof, will please send word to either of the undersigned between the hours of 8 A. M. and 2 P. M. At which time they can make arrangements.

Rev. H. N. McTYEIRE, corner Magazine and Felicity streets.
Rev. L. PARKER, 185 Camp street.
Rev. J. P. KEENER, Carrollton, cor. Theard and Dublin sts.

NOTICES.

WARRIOR STAND, Macon Co., Ala., August 10, 1853.

To Editor.—Please publish the following resolution and appointment for Protracted and Missionary Meetings on our Circuit: Alabama Conference, as adopted by our Third Quarterly Meeting, held at this place on the 6th, 7th and 8th inst. JAMES R. HALL.

Resolved, That this Quarterly Meeting appoint a committee of five persons, composed of Bros. J. W. Gills, who shall be in charge, and I. A. M. Samford, junior preacher, and three other brethren of the Conference, whose duty it shall be to appoint an Exchange for Protracted and Missionary Meetings at every appointment on the Circuit, and that the brethren so appointed be allowed their own choice as to what stage of these meetings they will take collections.

Resolved, That the Conference appointed Rev. J. R. Hall, Rev. J. Zachry, and Bro. Stafford C. L., to co-operate with Bro. Ellis and Samford.

Resolved, That immediately after the adjournment of Conference the Presiding Elder and the Preachers in charge, and I. A. M. Samford, junior preacher, request the other brethren of the Conference, whose duty it may

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Letter from New York.

NEW YORK, August 12, 1853.

The cold, damp, rainy weather we had last week has been exceeded by the most overpowering, unendurable, indescribable heat, unmitigated by breezes, and continuing even during the nights with unremitting intensity. You, with your soft south winds and deliciously cool nights, can form no idea of our sufferings. The city seems like an immense oven, heated to the highest degree; and the inhabitants feel as if they were being roasted alive. Deaths from the effects of the heat are of frequent occurrence. Yesterday twenty persons died from exposure to it. An incredible number of pocket-handkerchiefs are daily drowned in perspiration, and there is no counting the mint-juleps, sherry cobblers and other cooling beverages that are daily and nightly quaffed. Ice carts are hailed as blessings, and old signs of "coal" are regarded as worse than eye sores, as positive aggravations, insults, injuries. The thermometer yesterday stood at 96 in the shade, at three o'clock P. M., and at 88 all night long. Were it not for the yellow fever we would return to New Orleans to enjoy cool weather.

I visited the Crystal Palace on Tuesday last. The exterior is beautiful, resembling an oriental palace; but the effect is somewhat marred by the additional wing being still unfinished. It is impossible to carry away any clear impression of the interior, or one-fiftieth of its contents, during one visit. The multiplicity of objects is bewildering. The statuary attracted more of my attention than anything else; but owing to my ignorance of art, I almost fear to express an opinion on the subject. Christ and the Apostles, a group by Thorwaldsen, is exhibited in an enclosure by itself—the enclosure, however, being small, and the figures very large (that of Christ colossal) the work is seen to great disadvantage. I noticed in the figure of Christ what seemed to me a fault, and one quite common in Scripture, viz: the great thickness of the hair where it parts on the forehead, having the appearance of a wig. The drapery is beautiful, falling in soft graceful folds. St. James and St. John struck my fancy more than any of the others, particularly the latter; the face is upturned and the expression winning in the extreme. This being the only figure without a beard, I had the pleasure of admiring the beautiful chin, a feature which, when well formed, should never be concealed, even by the most jetty and bushy of beards.

In the very centre of the building, right under the dome, stands Marochetti's colossal equestrian statue of Washington, in bronze. Seen from below, "the Father of his Country" presents a burly, stumpy appearance, very unlike the elegant proportions with which he is usually represented. Seen from the gallery the figure, though less ungainly, is still clumsy. Of the horse I will not presume to speak, never having observed that animal when bestrode by the nobler ones.

Not far off is a piece representing a young Amazon on horseback, aiming a spear at a tiger which is clinging to the breast and neck of her horse, and fixing its fangs and claws into the flesh of the terrified creature. The face and form of the woman are strikingly beautiful, and her attitude so expressive of strength and determination that one almost wonders, on taking a second look, to see the spear still poised, the blow still unstruck.

Behind the statue of Washington, at some distance from it, stands a statue which, but for the attitude and roll of parchment in its hand, would be taken for a countryman returning from a fight. The figure is clothed in a rough looking great-coat, and the face disfigured by an immense swelling in the centre of the forehead. This figure, I was informed, is a statue of Webster, by an English artist named Carew. No body would ever have recognized the noble head of the Great Expounder in that deformed cranium.

In the Austrian department there are several heads of veiled females. The effect is strange and beautiful; the features are distinctly seen, as through a thin gauzy texture, and it is almost impossible to realize that the whole is of marble. The veil is represented as touching the face, and gathered together under the chin. In the same department I observed a copy of Cupide. The little wicked urchins are struggling to escape from the confinement to which some benevolent power has consigned them. Female figures almost, and some quite, nude, are scattered profusely around; but my companions passed them all without lingering, and I did not like to shock their modesty by gratifying my taste for the beautiful in that line.

When next I visit the Crystal Palace I intend to go systematically to work, and examine each department separately; by which means I shall be enabled to give a more satisfactory description of its wonders than is possible after one ramble through it.

GREENWOOD CEMETERY.

Reader, have you ever been to Greenwood Cemetery? If not, you have still a great pleasure in store, even if your visit is postponed until you have "shuffled off this mortal coil." A more beautiful spot for one's last resting place could not possibly exist even in the imagination of a poet. As you ride, or ramble through it, your mind becomes attuned to the soothing solemnity of the spot; the unpleasant associations usually connected with a graveyard never occur to you. Your eye rests on the bright, green, undulating sward, the dim recesses, the waving foliage, and the snowy shafts raised to departed friends, and you almost envy the ghosts their pradisiacal domains.

You wander about drinking in the beauty of the scene, and forgetful of the real nature of the place, you never think of reading the inscriptions on the tombstones until you find yourself in front of the elegant monument erected to Charlotte Canda by her bereaved lover. Here you pause. Your companions point out the beauty of the whole design, call your attention to the figures of angels as large as life, kneeling each side of the tomb, remark that the initials C. C. are engraved on each flower-pot, and tell you the cost of the monument; you gaze on the lovely figure of the maiden, and muse on her fate: killed suddenly on her seventeenth birth-day. You think of her youth, beauty, goodness, happiness and sudden death: your imagination pictures the silent grief of the father, the wild agonizing screams of the mother, the deep despair of the lover; and yet you think her fate a happy one. She died in the flush of youth and happiness, ignorant of grief, and surrounded by an atmosphere of love. You pass on slowly, turning often for one more look.

The pleasing melancholy of your thoughts is disturbed by the remarks of your companions, who are commenting on the appearance of a short, stout figure with a quadrant in his hands, standing on an elevated pedestal, and looking very like Captain Cuttle. On inquiring who it represents, you learn that the original, a Portuguese sailor, is still living, and visits his futura residence frequently. Not wishing his remains to remain unhonored for the length of time which would be required to prepare the monument after his death, he has anticipated that event, and has the advantage of being sure that his tomb is to his taste.

You are filled with admiration at the magnificence and elegance of some of the family vaults. The monuments to the Firemen, and that to the Pilot who was lost in the discharge of his duty, are extremely costly and beautiful. The latter, a tall shaft of white marble, is ornamented with a representation of a ship at sea during a storm, beautifully carved: and is surmounted by a statue of a female figure, leaning on an anchor, which you suppose to be Hope. You notice a double shaft entwined with a wreath, marking the final resting-place of some wedded pair. Kneeling, infantile, marble angels, guarding little tombs; lambs, symbolizing the deceased over whose remains they repose; and innumerable eulogistic lines commemorating the virtues of the departed. One tomb stone attracts your particular attention by its suggestive simplicity. It is of pure white marble, and contains only the name "Julia," enclosed in a wreath. No date of birth or death; no tribute to her goodness; not a line to tell if she were maid, wife or widow. "How lived, how loved, how died she?" are questions to be answered by the imagination alone.

Suddenly you come upon a beautiful little lake embosomed in trees. You long to throw yourself down on the ground and enjoy your sensations; but are minded, by your more prudent companions, of the lateness of the hour, the dampness of the ground after the recent rain, and the plentifulness of the musquitoes; and so you continue the "Tour."

Many of the enclosures surrounding the tombs are furnished with rural chairs or sofas; you wonder if the ghosts ever use them; if they meet together at midnight, and recount the deeds that were done in the flesh. How you would like to be present at some of their spiritual conversations, and listen to their experience. You don't think you would be afraid—that is, by moonlight.

When you have finished the "Tour," or principal avenues, you find it is too late to linger any longer; so, you reluctantly depart, with the intention, however, of more fully examining the place at some future period.

LAURA LEA.

Further by the Africa.

From the foreign files by the Africa from Liverpool to the 30th ult. we make up the following condensed statement of news:

ENGLAND.

In the House of Lords, the Earl of Clarendon stated that the fleet on the coast of Africa has been maintained in its full efficiency, and that no exertion would be spared to suppress the slave trade. In the House of Commons, Sir J. Packington introduced and carried a clause enacting that the monopoly of salt should entirely cease, and that the manufacture and sale of salt in India shall be absolutely free, subject only to excess or other duty. This motion was carried against the Government by a majority of ten.

The chief event in the domestic history of Britain for the week had been a strike of the London cabmen. The new act, reducing cab fares in London to a sixpence a mile, caused the cab proprietors to refuse to allow their vehicles to plyat the reduced rates. They consequently withdrew all hackney carriages from the street, and reduced the Londoners, with whom cabs are necessaries of life, to the verge of insurrection. Carts, vans, and butcher's traps were put into requisition to meet the passenger traffic to and from the railways. The commissioners gave notice that for the sum of five shillings they would grant short licenses, until January, to any one applying, whereupon the refractory became submissive.

Lord Huthven, a Scotish nobleman, is dead. The London Police are demanding more pay, and threatened to strike, as the Manchester force did, if not granted.

FRANCE.

Since the attempt to assassinate the Emperor at the Opera Comique, neither the Emperor nor Empress had gone to a public theatre, but had arranged a series of representations at the private theatres of the palaces; the first taking place at St. Cloud.

An anniversary service was celebrated on the 26th, in the Church of St. Leu, for the repose of the soul of the Emperor's father, Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, ex-king of Holland, who died July 26, 1846. The Emperor, Empress, and Court were present at the service.

Menet, who assassinated the Mayor of Uzes, last winter, has been condemned to death, after a long and exciting trial, at Grenoble. After his sentence he broke a bottle, opened the veins of his wrists, and buried pieces of jagged glass in his breast, seeking to reach his heart. He was unsuccessful in committing suicide.

The ultra-Bonapartists announce a political banquet in the Department of the Seine, on the 15th of August, at five francs per head, but had not decided where it should take place.

A lady aeronaut, named Emma Verdier, fell from a balloon the other day at Montesquieu, and was killed.

The distribution of medals, to the successful artists of the exhibition, took place in the grand saloon of the Louvre, on Tuesday, 26th. Prince Napoleon presided and made a speech, in which he flattered the Emperor and the artists about equally.

ITALY.

The Pope's health is reported to be precarious. He has been suffering for some time from an attack of asthma, and from general debility. He is 61 years of age, and his death would without doubt be the signal for important movements in Italy.

A good deal of excitement prevailed among the population of the Romagna, and in several, assassination was becoming rife.

Intelligent travelers state distinctly that the state of things in upper Italy and Lombardy rests on a very insecure basis; that in South Germany, Baden more particularly, the possibility of civil war from religious dissensions is far from unlikely; at Frankfort the local government, as well as the Bund, has its attention called imperatively to the activity displayed by choral unions, gymnastic associations, and other excuses for organization, which is noticed to bear a strong similarity to that which preceded the outbreak of 1848.

The Parliamento of Turin, of 24th, says that Ferrara had been placed in a state of siege, and that a proclamation had been issued, but its purport is not quoted.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

Upon the receipt of intelligence that the Russian army had crossed the Pruth, had entered Moldavia, and was marching upon Wallachia, the Turkish Government addressed to the Court of St. Petersburg, and to the powers of Europe, a formal protest, under date of July 14. This document is extremely temperate in its language, and, in substance, maintains precisely the ground which the Porte has still always assumed. It briefly recites the well-known incidents of Menschikoff's mission, and the sudden disclosure of certain peremptory demands, inconsistent with the sovereignty of the Sultan, after the question of the Holy Places had been apparently adjusted.

It repeats the firm determination of the Sultan to retain inviolate, and even to extend, all the rights and privileges enjoyed by his Christian subjects; but, at the same time, the protest declares that the independence of a Sovereign State is at an end if it does not retain among its powers that of refusing, without offence, a demand not authorized by any existing treaty, the acceptance of which would be superfluous for the object in view, and both humiliating and injurious to the party so declining it.

SPAIN.

The plan of the first electric telegraph yet projected in Spain was submitted very recently to the Minister of the Interior.

It is said that Queen Christina intends going to London with her husband and family, for the purpose of visiting the Orleans family; and it appears that the project of marriage between Prince Napoleon (Jerome) and Mademoiselle Munoz is abandoned for the present, if it was ever seriously entertained.

AUSTRIA.

The late Austrian Consul at Smyrna arrived at Athens on the 15th inst. He had been dismissed on account of the late events in Smyrna. The American Charge d'Affaires at Constantinople had written to the Austrian Government that "Martin Costa owes no allegiance to the Emperor of Austria," and that the imprisonment of that person, after he had rendered a civil oath to the American Government, "is not only a very regretable violation of international law, but an act of disrespect, which will not soon be forgotten."

At Vienna some forty or fifty persons have been arrested, but whether they are accused of compassing the death of the Emperor, or whether their crime is that of carrying on a criminal correspondence with the revolutionary party of South Tyrol, we cannot say.

SMYRNA.

A letter from Smyrna, of the 17th, in a Marseilles journal, announces the departure of Ali Pacha, the late Governor, after receiving an address from the European colony. On the day on which he left the Consuls displayed their flags, and the vessels of war fired a salute—with the exception, however, of the Austrian Consul and the commander of the Austrian vessel.

CHINA.

From China we have important intelligence as to the progress of the rebels. They have added the considerable city of Amoy to the country in their possession.

We shall, probably, next hear that Ning-po and Shanghai on the north, and Canton on the south, have fallen into their hands. They will still have to defeat the Tartar armies, which are to come from the north if the empire, before the question of their entire success is settled. Our present advices confirm the previous reports of their hostility to Paganism, and their ferocity toward their conservative opponents.

There is at this time an unusual demand for telegraph wire, and several tons are produced daily. Messrs Morewood & Rogers, of Birmingham, are now preparing a very large order for the East Indias Company. The same company has an order from the Botanical Gardens of Sydney for ten tons of galvanized labels for flowers. The Birmingham houses have received almost unlimited orders for general hardware goods from Australia.

Details of the Foreign News by the Humboldt.

NEW YORK, August 16.—The steamer Humboldt arrived this evening from Southampton and Havre, bringing 150 passengers and Liverpool dates of the 3d inst. The America arrived at Liverpool on the 31st, and the Glasgow at Greenock on the 30th ult.

Among the Humboldt's passengers is S. G. Goodrich, late Consul at Paris.

ENGLAND.

A Frenchman, named Edward Reynaud, has been arrested at Southampton on the charge of having conspired with others to murder the French Emperor. He was taken to London for examination.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

The Eastern question wears a less favorable aspect. It was feared that the Emperor of Russia would decline to withdraw his forces from the Principalities, as stipulated in the propositions of the Three Powers. The English and French fleets would, in that case, be ordered to pass the Dardanelles, and a peaceful settlement of the dispute greatly jeopardied.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Constantinople, July 20, states that the Porte and the representatives of the great powers had accepted the proposition of the Austrian Minister, which arranged that the English and French fleets should withdraw from Besica Bay, while the Russians evacuated the Principalities. Turkey would then send an Embassador to open negotiations at St. Petersburg. Conferences were also to be opened at Vienna, by the consent of Russia.

A decline in the funds has been caused at London and Paris by an article in the Constitutionelle, declaring that France and England would not consent to the arrangement which had been proposed at Constantinople. Great uneasiness had also been created by a decree of the Czar, ordering a fresh levy of recruits throughout the Empire. This was interpreted as looking to war.

The statement is reasserted that the United States had offered to assist the Porte with money and active forces.

The intelligence from the Principalities was important. Moldavia had declared itself independent of the Porte, and refused to pay further tribute. A similar movement is expected in Wallachia.

It is asserted that the Porte intends addressing an ultimatum to Russia, in which, after paying due regard to the rights of the Sultan's Christian subjects, that Sovereign declares, that if, in spite of these repeated assurances, the Czar should persist in offering war, the Porte is resolved to accept it, but that the responsibility must lie with Russia. It is also asserted that this document has been communicated to the Embassadors of France and England. Orders have been sent to the Hospodars of Moldavia and Wallachia, ordering them to quit the Principalities and retire to the right bank of the Danube.

The Egyptian fleet arrived at Constantinople on the 19th ult., with 12,000 men.

Admiral Dundas, of the English fleet, with all his Captains, had been on a reconnoissance of the fortresses.

Another ministerial crisis was feared at Constantinople.

There was a rumor in Vienna of a secret treaty between the United States and the Porte, and the probable cession of Maroniavizza. Three American frigates were said to be in the Bosphorus.

Russia had demanded of Persia the cession of the province of Tauris, in lieu of the 80,000,000 roubles due her.

THE ROYAL FAMILY OF RUSSIA.—The following enviable family-picture may be interesting at this time, when Russia is thrusting her ursine nose into the politics of Europe:

Peter I, the founder, as he may be called, of the present imperial family, was the murderer of the two daughters and the son of his brother Ivan, and the murderer (it is asserted, according to more than one of the annalists of his reign,) by his own hand of his son Alexis. He was himself murdered by Menschikoff, (a name that has again risen up in history,) the favorite of his wife Catherine, and who, when united to Peter, was already the wife of a living husband, and their children declared afterwards incapable of reigning, because born in sin. Anne, the eldest daughter of Ivan, put 14,000 Russians to death, and banished twice as many. A revolution displaced the younger Ivan to put on the throne Elizabeth, daughter of Peter I, and her reign was remarkable for her drunkenness and debauchery. Peter III, her successor, was notoriously the offspring of crime, and was dethroned and strangled by his wife, Catharine II, the same infamous woman who had assassinated the dethroned Emperor, Ivan, and whose own son, Paul, the father of the present Emperor, Nicholas, was strangled by his courtiers.

From the New York Evening Post.

Foreign Items.

Mrs. Willes Maddox, the celebrated painter, so much employed by Beckford, is dead.

John B. Gough is giving temperance lectures at Exeter Hall and the Whittington Club.

The Bavarian Government has decided that executions shall no longer take place in public, but in the interior of prisons.

The new Vaccination bill has passed, by which children are to be vaccinated before three months of age, or parents to pay penalties.

A recent writer says that Pyc. ngeras was a great dandy. He wore a white robe, with Persian trowsers, and a golden crown on his head.

The very best painter of animals, and especially of that difficult one the horse, possessed by the French, is a woman—Mademoiselle Rosa Bonheur.

The foreign papers arriving at Warsaw and St. Petersburg are almost entirely cut to pieces, and all the important news extracted, before reaching the subscribers.

Preparations were made in Paris on a grand scale for celebrating the birthday of Napoleon III, the anniversary of which occurs on the 15th August. He is 45 years of age.

Baer, a German astronomer, calculates that when we shall have a telescope nine times more powerful than that of Lord Rosse, we shall be able to discery objects in the moon as small as a man.

Among the recent deaths in England was Henry Cockton, the author of Valentine Vox, Sylvester Sound, and some other works, which have enjoyed an extensive popularity with a certain class of readers.

Much agitation prevails in the Roman States from fear of famine. There has been a short wheat harvest in Tuscany, and much uneasiness at Ravenna, Faenza and Imola. The exportation of corn has been forbidden.

The culture and sale of flowers for the Paris market are two branches of trade which are continually increasing. Ten times the quantity of flowers are now raised that were produced ten years ago, and the prices of plants instead of falling, have risen.

Among other novelties projected in London is a "subterranean railway," which is to run from the lower end of Edgware Road to King's Cross. The capital raised is to be £300,000, and a responsible contractor has undertaken its construction, for a sum considerably below that amount. The length of this road will be less than two and a half miles. The line is to be in full operation in less than twelve months.

A letter from Rome states, "that the Pope has been laid up with a scabbed foot." Punch says he does not wonder at this, since the Holy Father has been for a long time in hot water."

News of the 12th, from Rome, states that the health of the Pope is daily becoming more precarious. He is suffering from a severe attack of asthma and general debility. The Pope is 61 years of age.

The astronomer Arago, a few weeks since, returned to the South of France, in hope that his native air would impart some vigor to his old and nearly exhausted frame. It was more than once reported, since his absence, that he was actually dead. He was partially restored, and, at last accounts, was making his way back to Paris by slow stages, accompanied by his two sons and a niece.

M. Theodore Tellerean has laid a paper before the Academy of Sciences at Paris, in which he asserts that he has produced gold by artificial means. He believes that there are very few simple substances in nature, and considers the forty metals now assumed to be such, are in reality compound ones, probably of one radical with some unknown body, hitherto not studied, but which Liebt alone gives the properties of this radical, and thus presents as apparently with forty bodies, while, in reality, there is but one. He asserts he has discovered this body, by which the radical is converted into gold.

News Items by Mail.

Gen Paez, ex-President of Venezuela, has become a permanent resident of New York city.

Mr Bancroft will publish the third volume of his "History of the American Revolution," being the sixth of his "History of the United States," in October.

Professor A. D. Backe, of the U. S. Coast Survey, has been elected President of the American Association for the Advancement of Education.

The quantity of pine lumber manufactured in Wisconsin is very great. The amount of pine lumber produced in the State is 211,000,000 feet, which amount includes sawed lumber only.

It is now thought that the Hon. Robert J. Walker will yet be able to proceed to China in the iron steamer Allegheny, which will be ready for service in about two weeks.

The dish, called in the West Indies man dram, which is resorted to to excite appetite, and which is certain to do so, is a mixture of bird-pepper, shallots, or onions cut small, a little lime juice, Madeira wine and sliced cucumbers.

A young man in Wilmington, Del., the other night, during his sleep, dreamed that he was fighting Indians, and under this idea struck out so fiercely that he struck the bed-post, washstand, or something of that sort, and broke his collar-bone.

The ship which conveyed Gen. Wolfe to Quebec is still afloat, under the name of "William and Ann." She was built in 1759 for a bomb-ketch, and was in dock in the Thames recently, sound, and likely to endure many years yet. She is now engaged in the Honduras and African timber trade.

The valuation of real estate in the city of Boston, for the present year, as ascertained by the assessors, is $145,251,000; personal estate, $90,951,400; total valuation, $235,420,400; number of polls, 30,000; and the ratio of taxation adopted for the present year is 76 cents on one hundred dollars.

In the Municipal Court of Boston, on the 11th inst., Lemuel N. Clark, on a charge of larceny from a dwelling house, was sentenced to two years in the House of Correction. At his particular request, however, the sentence was changed to the State Prison, as he said he preferred that institution, which he had visited twice before.

A premium of $200 is offered, on behalf of a liberal citizen of New York, (to which another proposes to offer $50 or $100 if the work fulfills his expectations,) for an essay, not exceeding 200 12mo. pages, on "The more perfect exemplification in Christian life of the doctrines of the Gospel, and with special reference to the conversion of sinners to Christ.

Rev. Mr. Johnsen, of the Baptist Church in Saugerties, N. Y., with his wife and infant child, took a sail in a small boat a few days ago, and on their starting to return home Mrs. J. stumbled and fell overboard, with the child in her arms. Mr. J. caught hold of his wife's dress and was also drawn overboard. They both went down together, but in the struggle they became separated and Mrs. J. and the child were drowned. Mr. J. reached the shore nearly exhausted.

A late London letter writer says: "The third volume of Macaulay's history is to appear in a few weeks, the celebrated auth r having at last delivered his MS. to his publisher. His friends never believed that he would be able to finish it, as the excessive use of opium, to which he is addicted, has destroyed his health, and prevents him from any continued mental exertion. A tory author, whom I saw a few days back, remarked about the expected third volume of Macaulay, 'it will be his story, but not History.'"

A very interesting case has recently been decided in Ireland, in which it was declared by the court that a nun is not dead in law, but could succeed to an estate as the lawful heir. The statutes of mort-main were declared not to apply to a person in her condition. The case is regarded as important, not only for the consequences resulting pecuniarily, but as making void, so far as the law can, the vow of poverty taken by professed nuns. The decision will make some noise in the world, and is taken to the British House of Lords on appeal.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The New York Herald of the 12th instant says:

There were indications at the Palace yesterday that the two millions we spoke of the day before, as expected to visit it, had commenced pouring in. During the forenoon the crowd was very large, which tended to enliven the appearance of the exhibition, every nave and section swarming like a hive of bees. The thousands of our country friends who are now delaying their visit to the Palace, with the belief that at some future day it will be more complete and interesting, may now dispel any such idea, and come on immediately. There are a few articles yet to be received and arranged, but in such a large collection these additions would be hardly noticed. There is enough displayed already to warrant the commencement of the journey of the most distant visitor.

The number of visitors to the Crystal Palace yesterday was 5027. The contributions to the Washington Monument were $48 45. Total contributions, $1,181 68.

A NEW LAND WARRANT.—The New York Evening Post thus explains the origin of a new land warrant, called "Virginia Scrip," which is about being issued:

"A new job, perpetrated in Congress last winter, has just come to light. Many years ago, the State of Virginia set apart some public lands for the benefit of the revolutionary soldiers, for which land warrants were issued. It appears that a large number of land warrants were never located, the lands assigned not proving valuable. These warrants have been sought out and bought up for a trifle, by a number of speculators, who contrived last year to get a bill passed through Congress making them available for purchases of Congress lands anywhere, and that without the necessity of paying the $2 50 per acre which ordinary land warrants are liable for, on being registered. These Virginia land warrants are to be registered free of charge. These new warrants are now offering for sale in the market."

REPORTED BURNING OF A SHIP.—The following is said to have been picked up on the beach on Long Island a few days ago:

"At sea, July 5, 1853.—Ship Mingo on fire; 50 passengers burnt; captain is very ill; in half an hour we will all be lost.

"SIMON BRATTLEBOROUGH, of Worcester, Mass.

"Ship Mingo, L. S. Moore, Captain."

We have never heard of such a vessel. If there is such a one, she is most likely to be British, and bound from some port in Great Britain to a port in the British North American Colonies. [Journal of Commerce.

The New York Herald gives the following list of the accidents by railroad during each month of the present year up to the 12th of August:

Months.	No of Accidents.	Killed.	Wounded.
January	12	25	40
February	6	6	11
March	14	24	52
April	4	25	54
May	8	51	49
June	5	6	13
July	11	8	22
August	5	26	70
Total to Aug. 12	65	176	333

MENSURATION OF THE EARTH.—The Russian Government is about to have measured the degrees of the meridian from the North Cape, in lat. 71 deg. north latitude, to the mouth of the Danube, in 45½ deg. of the same latitude—that is, on a line which traverses Europe in its whole length, and forms a fourteenth part of the entire circumference of the earth. The measurement will exceed by three degrees the largest ever before executed—that which the English carried from the Himalays to the southern point of British India.

DR. J. T. KENYON,
Cooper's Well, Miss.

Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr K would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the accommodation of ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.

March 19, 1853, 6mo.

LAND FOR SALE.

The subscriber wishes to sell a most desirable settlement of land lying 18 miles west of Monroe, on the Ouachita river, and one mile north of Indian Village, Jackson parish, and on the track, as laid out, of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, containing 840 acres, with 450 cleared and in a good state of cultivation, with a good gin and cotton press, with all the buildings necessary for common family purposes. About two acres of the land is very level and will not wash, and quite productive, a portion of it having made a good average bag of cotton per acre last year. The place is uncommonly well watered and healthy, myself having lived on it for seven years, with a large family, without having a single bad case of sickness.

There is also many advantages and conveniences too tedious to mention, which can be fully seen upon examination of the premises. It will be sold at a fair price one-third cash upon giving possession, and the balance to suit purchasers. ISAAC COLLINS.

aug13 3t Indian Village, Jackson Parish, La.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

LEONARD SCOTT & CO No 34 Bold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Conservative)
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Bold st.

Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

EDUCATION.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV THOS. B RUSSELL, A. M. President.
MISS ELIZABETH J MEEK, Assistant
MISS FLARA G LEE Preparatory Department.
MR F S WALTER, Professor of Music.
——, Teacher of Modern Languages.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department $12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each 20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each 22 50
Music 25 00
Use of piano 2 50
Contingent fee 1 00
Board including lodging, washing and fuel 80 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 15th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex Hamrick, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

L. C. GARLAND,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Tuscaloosa, Aug 6, 1853 aug20 8t

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV JAMES K ARMSTRONG, A. M.,
Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M.,
Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. POINDEXTER, English.
MISS PIERE FULLER,
Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK,
Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS L. J. ARMSTRONG Governess.
MRS REBECCA CLARK Matron and Nurse.

This Institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for its genuine convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—as members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and nursing faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is not one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges date from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestrial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are observed respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in March, but will the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a free, familiar and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaintance them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 16, 1853. aug13 1jan1

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY,
BATON ROUGE, La.

This institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Special and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and discharged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be, after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition $200 00
Music on Piano, with use of instrument 50 00
French language 30 00
Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

H. DUROSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PROVIDENCE, La

Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Bonald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jly1 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND, WM. CLEVELAND, A. P. CLEVELAND,
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 6

JOHN HOLMES, L. FLAUSS.
HOLMES & FLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRATTER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS

SAM HENDERSON, JACK HENDERSON
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
No 66 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jy2 1y

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.
S. ROBB & Co.,
No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,
New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety, Coach, Gig, Buggy, Bearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Mule Rigging; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings, Saddlers Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish, India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.

mh6 52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH, FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with movable arms are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business by their late father, enables them to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and durability on large sizes, which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sust

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KLENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. BOWMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 31. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 135.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

[Special Correspondence of the Advocate.]

ENGLAND, August 1, 1853.

On Wednesday of last week the Wesleyan Conference commenced its annual sittings in the rising town of Bradford, Yorkshire. There are upwards of 350 ministers assembled, and these are hospitably entertained by the Methodists of Bradford and its vicinity. Our Methodist Church has been subjected, for the last two or three years, to the fiery ordeal of bitter trial; and this has given to the Conference an aspect of solemn awe. Connected with and consequent upon the righteous expulsion of Messrs. Everett, Dunn and Griffith in 1849, there has been a ruthless onslaught upon our portion of the Church; the infidelity of the nation has coalesced with the agitating trio; and as the calamitous result we are about 90,000 members less than we numbered in 1849. We have been learning lessons from our trials, and now it will be for us to apply them. Possibly we may have been reposing too much upon externals, and glorying too much in men: but our merciful God by a process of severe discipline has been teaching us momentous lessons, the effect of which will be most salutary to ourselves and most advantageous to the world.

The Conference was opened by the retiring President, the Rev. John Scott, who after some verses of the hymn beginning, "And are we yet alive," etc., were sung, called upon the Rev. George Marsden and Dr. Newton to engage in prayer, which they did with great fervency and power. Before the business of the Conference can be entered upon all the vacancies in the legal hundred must be filled up: this is, according to Mr. Wesley's Deed enrolled in Chancery, defining and making tangible the Conference. It was found that seven vacancies had occurred in the course of the year, five of which were filled by seniority and two by election. The five selected by age entered on their itinerancy in 1812 and 1813, viz: the Rev. R. Heafe, H. Powis, T. Wevill, P. Crehard and T. Stevens. The others chosen by nomination and vote are always from a younger class of ministers, and they have this honor bestowed upon them for some eminent service they may have rendered to the connection. The Rev. F. J. Jobson was first proposed for election by Dr. Hannah and this proposal was seconded by Dr. Bunting. Mention was made of the "Vindicator," which Mr. Jobson so ably conducted during the fiercest tempest of the agitation, and of the service he is now rendering to our funds and chapels as one of the ablest Secretaries of the "Relief and Extension Fund," the amount of which is, up to the present time, £64,000. By the overwhelming majority of 191 Mr. Jobson was elected one of the legal hundred. On the election being communicated to him, he returned thanks; he disclaimed any special claim to this mark of distinction, except it was an intense love to that form of doctrine and discipline by which he himself had been saved. "I am," he said, "wedded to this system—shall cleave to it in life and death—and by the help of God, I shall exercise that additional power which you have confided to me with all possible fidelity." Next the Rev. S. Tindall was proposed by the Rev. Thomas Jackson, who said Tindall had served the connection in a season of great difficulty in the county of Norfolk, had taken the helm when the Chairman of that District broke down, and amid the painful trials of that period had manifested great temper and judgment, and whose courage never quailed, however furious the storm. Dr. Beecham seconded the proposal: he said the men who fight our battles should have any honors that we have it in our power to bestow. Mr. Tindall is worthy of the suffrages of this body. As will be anticipated Mr. Tindall was elected by the triumphant majority of 214. Mr. Tindall in returning thanks, said he was deeply affected by this kind expression of confidence from his fathers and brethren. "In what I did in Norfolk when Methodism was cruelly assailed I always felt that I had the approbation of God, and though the course I felt it to be my duty to pursue, subjected me to opprobrium, this honor more than compensates me for all that I had to suffer."

The hundred having been filled up the time had come for the election of the new President. This is done by ballot, every preacher who has traveled fourteen years, writing upon a slip of paper the name of the individual he would wish to occupy the Presidential Chair, when these slips are collected and counted by the out-going President, who then announces the name of his successor in office. The votes were: For Dr. Dixon 1; Dr. Beaumont 2; Dr. Banting 3; S. D. Waddy 5; J. Keeling 7; W. Naylor 9; J. Farrar 15; and J. Lomas 219. The Secretary, is Rev. J. Farrar, who received 247 votes. President Lomas is a man of the highest mark in Methodism. He is somewhat diminutive in size, and about 55 years of age, having been in the ministry 33 years. He is almost unique among Methodist ministers in this country, having never been married. His forehead is indicative of intellectual power, and the general aspect of his countenance is most mild and benignant. He is far from being robust in body, which accounts for his feebleness of voice, but though feeble, its silvery melodious tones fall like music upon the listening ear. Mr. Lomas has a modest sensitiveness, almost to a fault; this was seen in his pale countenance and trembling gait when he took possession of the presidential seat. But all this passed away as he proceeded with his inaugural address to the Conference. He expressed his profound and cordial gratitude for the vote implying so much affectionate confidence on the part of his fathers and brethren. "Though not," he said, "to arraign the wisdom of the Conference in placing me in this high position, yet I cannot help feeling that there are others who by their habits of business, energy of character, and loyalty to Methodism, have a far stronger claim than I can have. I have some trepidation too when I think of the sagacious talent of my immediate predecessor, Mr. Scott, and when I think of all who have preceded him: yet I will cast myself upon God and your prayers, and regard myself as the proprietor of all the wisdom and talent of all who have occupied this chair in the years that are gone. "If," continued Mr. Lomas, "I had any misgivings of the character and high destiny of Methodism, I should be filled with apprehension, but I have none. Our Church has been put to a severe test, and the hate and tumult of controversy is far from being favorable to the formation of a correct opinion; but nothing throughout the agitation has been said, written or done to shake my confidence as to the truth, purity, permanency and usefulness of Wesleyan Methodism. In saying this I say nothing against other churches. I say nothing against the united church of this land, having the prestige of antiquity and endowments—I don't envy it either the one or the other. And as to the Dissenting Churches, I should not rejoice if they were not, or if they were decaying. Still, I love most ardently our Methodist Church; true, we have been tested, but we shall be refined by these fires of sanctified trial, and be thereby the better fitted for God's high purposes of mercy. This in some respects is a crisis: there will be some practical questions difficult of adjustment arising from the diminution of our numbers, and the giving up of ministers in various parts of the kingdom. This must be of necessity a practical Conference; but my confidence is in God; we cannot fail so long as the spirit of Wesley, who declared himself to be a man of one Book (the Bible) animates us." Mr. Lomas, in conclusion, apologized for his defective vision, (he is almost blind,) but the Secretary must be eyes to me. "And further," he said, "if there be any members of this Conference who shall be too fond of roving about, I shall be in effect to them like the gods Homer introduces into the battle enveloped in clouds, but I beg of any such, if such there be, not to take advantage of my inability to see them. Order is time, and time is especially valuable to Christian ministers, and once lost is not recoverable."

The Conference has been strongly characterized in its opening sessions by unanimity, kindness, confidence and hope. All with whom I have held any intercourse are anticipating a Conference that shall be unexampled for present good, and give a powerful impulse to the Methodism of the future.

A. Y. Z.

The following article, from the pen of the eloquent and lamented Cookman, originally appeared in the Christian Advocate and Journal fourteen years ago:

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

A FEW REMINISCENCES BY GEORGE G. COOKMAN.

"Watchman, what of the night?"

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Although not a very old man, I have lived long enough to see some things I love, and some things I hate: and some things I am very indifferent about. Let us classify:

1. GOOD SIGNS.

When a boy at school I saw that remarkable little Welshman, Dr. Thomas Coke, in Scarborough Chapel: that cosmopolite in feeling; that Foreign Minister of Methodism—and I hope never to forget him—with a countenance like a cherub, with a heart large enough to contain four continents, and a pair of shoulders broad enough to sustain the Atlantean weight of our missionary enterprise: "and he died;" but his example lives and speaks forever.

Immediately upon his death I heard the master-spirits of Methodism preach a missionary crusade though the length and breadth of the land. I heard Robert Newton, the Apollo of Methodism, preach his first missionary sermon from this text: "There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying: Come over into Macedonia and help us;" and Jabez Hunting, the William Pitt of Methodism, sounding forth in tones as clear and musical as the bugle amongst the mountains, the startling echoes of which reverberated from John O'Groat's house to the Land's End: "Curse ye, Meroz, said the angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty!" And heard them sustained by the profound philosophy of Watson, and the colossal learning and full-hearted sincerity of Adam Clarke.

And, blessed be God, I have lived to see in this, the hundredth year of Methodism, the white spotless banner, "Scriptural Holiness," planted on every continent of the earth, and almost every inhabited island of the sea, sustained by the hands of hundreds of devoted missionaries, aided by hundreds of thousands of dollars pouring into the missionary treasury.

Fourteen years ago I saw (for I am certain I was in the body) in the city of Philadelphia some things which I am very positive it is lawful for a man to utter. I saw in that great city but two parsonages, six Methodist Episcopal churches, about four thousand members, and five hundred Sabbath-school children.

I have lived to see in that beloved city nearly all the old churches either renewed or rebuilt, new ones erected, making a grand total of twelve churches, and eleven well-furnished and commodious parsonages, nearly eight thousand members, and probably as many Sabbath-school teachers as fourteen years ago, there were scholars.

Ten years ago I attended the Baltimore Conference Missionary Society, and we took up about eighty dollars. I have lived to see the day when we could lift eight hundred dollars in Light street Church at one single meeting.

In the same year I attended the anniversary of the Parent Society in New York, when we rejoicingly reported the enormous sum of ten thousand dollars, as the whole receipts for the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the year. I have lived to see a single Conference Missionary Society raise more than the whole Church at that time, and the Parent Society report upwards of one hundred thousand. A noble progression, ten for one.

As a natural consequence, I have lived to see those Churches which have contributed the most liberally, and those ministers who have engaged the most actively in the missionary cause, the most prosperous, the best supported.

I have lived to see the Methodist Episcopal Church, instead of dwindling down to a sectarian point, expanding into a sphere, living for the benefit of the world, educating her children well, vigorously and incessantly promoting the great cause of human happiness. I have not wondered, therefore, that "the earth helped the woman."

II. BAD SIGNS.

1. I have lived to see men who were liberal when they were poor, have become covetous and selfish now they are rich.

2. I have known members of the Church expend more hundreds of dollars in one night's party than they give to the cause of God in one year.

3. I have known very plain religious parents suffer their fashionable sons and daughters to attend dancing parties.

4. I have known pious, promising young preachers marry unconverted women, who could not accompany their husbands to the hardships or privations of their appointments.

5. I have seen popular preachers leave the Methodist Episcopal Church, that nursed them, to serve other churches and congregations.

6. I have seen people much fonder of singing than praying.

7. I have seen professors of religion sacrifice their usefulness on the altar of party politics.

8. I have seen others barter away their peace for a profitable speculation in lands or stocks.

III. INDIFFERENT SIGNS.

1. Croaking about good old Methodism. Methodism is called not a form, but a spirit, and in outward conventional matters will, and ought, to adapt itself to the circumstances of the times: it will go either by steam, wheels or hoof. We want to get along; and it is of little consequence whether we ride on wooden or elliptic springs, so we come safely to our journey's end. "Good old times these, indeed." Ah, brother, the times will not wait for us. The times are new, and you and I are getting old; when we were young we were simple and livelier in religion, and things looked differently. Perhaps we are leaving our first love. The fault is not so much in the times as ourselves: we have not the "good old" religion we once had. May the good Lord have mercy on us, and help us, and help us to croak less, and pray more.

2. Judging by the manner rather than the man, and glorying more in the man than in the Lord that made him.

3. Sweeping denunciations against education. Educated men and ministers are not always the most proud, neither are the uneducated invariably the most modest and humble.

4. The popular phrase, "Our Church."

Upon the whole, we have much to be thankful for; many things to regret, more to forgive, a few to pity, and a multitude patiently to endure. May the grace of God be sufficient for us!

Washington City, May 18, 1839.

THE LITTLE WORD "NO."

Last winter I spent a short time in a pleasant family, in a neighboring State. They were wealthy, influential, and, so far as I could judge, a Christian family. The father had at different times occupied a prominent place in the legislative and judiciary departments of his State. He held office in the Church; he had erected and preserved, through years of trial, that made him prematurely gray, the family altar; and as one who knew him well remarked, it was doubtful if a shadow could be cast upon his character. He was honorable and upright in business; courteous, kind and forbearing in his intercourse with the world. The mother, an estimable woman, professed herself willing to do and suffer for Christ, hoping to die and reign with him. The only daughter was a mild, lovely girl; but the sons—and here was a mystery.

The eldest, a child of uncommon promise, entered at an early age upon a vicious career of drinking, gambling and licentiousness, which ended in forgery and crime, until he was cast out of the family circle as one unknown; and after a term in prison, found his home in one of the vilest haunts in a Southern city. The second, following in his footsteps, was awaiting in the county jail a trial that might sentence him for years to the State Prison. Children of prayer, of pious teaching and example, the fact to me was inexplicable. I expressed my wonder in the hearing of an old man who had known them from birth. Said he, "I can explain in a few words; it is from the father's want of power to say, 'No.'"

When they were beautiful children, and it needed but a word to guide them, he neglected to say, No. As years rolled on, and he noticed the first steps in the way of wrongdoing, he excused them on the plea of youthful exuberance of spirits. And when they went too far, and he strove to curb them, the boys, by caressing, arguing or bickering, had their own way; for it grieved him to say, No. In after years, when their souls were blood-stained with crime, when, with all the yearnings of a father's heart, he took them again to his home, striving by gentleness to win them to the way of life, he dared not say, No.

Christian parent, learn to pronounce, at proper times, the simple word, No. On it, under God, may depend the welfare and happiness of your children for time and eternity. [American Messenger.

POSITION AND INFLUENCE OF THE JEWS.

The existence of the Jews is the living miracle of the world. They are scattered and down-trodden, and yet, according to the most accurate statistics, are as numerous as they were when they left the land of Egypt, the returns made to the sparse giving about three millions. Expatriated, they become citizens of the world: and wherever tolerated they commence traffic and become thrifty. Every where they are at home. They may be banished, but cannot be expelled; be trodden down, yet cannot be crushed. Only in the United States, France, Holland and Prussia are they fully citizens; but in spite of the British statutes, the Russian ukase and Turkish curse, they prosper still. The great nations of antiquity, the Egyptians and Assyrians, the Romans and Saracens, as well as the modern Turks and Christians have attempted to destroy them, but in vain; while penal laws and cruel tortures have only served to increase their number and reinforce their obstinacy.

But the Jews exist not only as a monument and a miracle; Jewish mind has exerted a powerful influence on the world. Favored by Napoleon, the Hebrew race at once developed power which had never been suspected. Soult, Ney, and Massena, who thus altered his name from Manasseh, to escape the odium of being an Israelite, were all Marshals of France under the eye of the greatest warrior of his age. In politics the Jews have Metternich in Austria, D'Israeli in England, a convert to the Christian faith, while the Autocrat of Russia has had a Jew for his confidential counsellor, and Spain a Prime Minister of the same race, and Russia her Minister of Finance. In the United States, Jews begin to figure in our national councils: Mr. Yulee, late member of the House, and Mr. Soule, recently Senator from Louisiana, being of the Hebrew stock. Mr. Cremieux, one of the most eminent lawyers of France, was what we should call Attorney General upon the flight of Louis Philippe.

In money power the Jews hold in their hands the destiny of kingdoms and empires, whose governments become bankrupt, and their sovereigns turn beggars at a Hebrew's nod. Half dozen Jews can do more to preserve the peace of Europe by sitting behind their desk and persistingly saying, No! to the royal applicants for money, than all the Peace Congresses and Conventions in Christendom. The Rothschilds, the Barings and Sir John Montefiore are all Jews, and with their banking establishments scattered over Europe and Asia, wield a sceptre more powerful than monarchs hold.

Coming to the literary profession, and inquiring into the lineage of many of the most distinguished scholars and men of science, we find the Jews prominent here as well as in active life. The most renowned in astronomy have been the Jews, as the Herschels in England, and Arago in France, the astronomer-royal under Louis Philippe, and who has filled the world with his fame. Those German works which are deluging the world are for the most part the production of Christianized Jews, as those of Henstenberg, Tholuck, Schleirmacher, Gesenius, Neander, Niebuhr and others, whose learned treatises, Biblical criticism, didactic theology and general sacred literature, are found in the library of every Theological Seminary, and in the hands of every theological student. Spinoza, the famous infidel, was a Jew, and so are Ronge and Czerski, who took the lead of a new religious reformation in Germany in our day.

Such have been and are the Jews. Mysterious nation! Inexplicable enigma! A living, perpetually omnipresent miracle! A race so indomitable, so imperishable, must have been raised up and preserved for some grand purpose. [Congregational Journal.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

THE PROBLEM OF "SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS" SOLVED.

Mr. Editor—I was called into a neighboring community some twelve days since, to aid in the labors of a protracted meeting, and on my arrival amongst the people, I found spiritual manifestations to be the reigning topic and interest. So shocked was I at the state of things, that I remarked to a brother minister, the first work to be done was to preach upon the wickedness of such experiments, and if possible banish the dreadful evil from the place.

The hold it had upon the community, however, I soon discovered to be too strong, for such means to break it. Our only alternative was to betake ourselves in prayer to Almighty God, for special help under such alarming circumstances, for the best and most intelligent of the people were consulting with spirits (?) upon the dearest interests of time and eternity. We prayed not in vain—for the first night, God's presence was sensibly felt by the entire congregation. Spiritual manifestations continued to prevail, however, and mediums were furnishing communications from the spirits? in reference to the meeting! but as God's power was present—from twenty to twenty-five, at the altar of prayer all the time—and from four to six conversions every day, we preserved our peace and called to heaven for help.

Finally, a communication came to me, through a medium of acknowledged piety, and was of such a character, as most deeply to impress me, with the wonderful power of the agency for good or evil, and, unable to cast it from my mind, I concluded it was a proper subject of prayer and inquiry to God, for it claimed to be an agency of spirits authorized and used of God for purposes of salvation. Therefore took up the pen in the spirit of prayer to God, that if there was a reality in it, and that reality was divinely appointed, I might be led to the knowledge of the truth. Wonderful for me to realize, things were written through the agency of my own hand, which, not only were not in my mind, but were not known to me at the time. This brought upon me the intensest spirit of prayer I ever experienced. Things were written to me as the person conducting the meeting, in relation to its plans and success, and I found myself in a most fearful position. A reality, I knew there was, as well as I knew my existence—a reality of presiding intelligence and active power, and then, that intelligence claimed the right, by God's authority, to direct the meeting!

I was terribly wrought upon, but as far as I could to preserve truth and consistency, I kept between myself and my God, the mighty struggle that was passing, and the more earnestly and constantly called upon him to give me to know the truth. To recount from the position that there was a reality in the manifestations, I could not, without basely telling a lie to escape responsibility. No alternative was left me then, but to lay all at the feet of Christ, upon the altar of his truth and solemnly promised him that if he would give me to know this strange manifestation to be the ministry of departed spirits, I would proclaim it and abide the results.

Still, I called upon God—for the influence declared that on Sunday at 11 o'clock I should proclaim in the presence of a vast audience the doctrine of Spiritual Manifestations through the agency of departed friends, the influence that was with me, claiming to be the spirit of my mother, giving forth to me in detail the will of God concerning his work.

Now, then, my position became more and more fearful. A tremendous fact was upon me, involving it might be immeasurably the interests of my own soul, and those of others; and Saturday night, after preaching, so heavy was the burthen upon me—so unspeakably awful the responsibility at hand, that I left the congregation and went far off into the woods where no eye could see me but the eye of God, and there, prostrate, for more than an hour, agonized with God to give me the truth—renewing my pledge, to proclaim it at all costs if he would but give me to know what it was. I ought to premise, this struggle of prayer, however, with the remark, that during the day on Saturday, while praying to God, the influence that had been using my hand in communicating gave me to understand that there would be no more writing, but that for the purposes of giving me to know (for to know was the condition of my promise) the communications to be spiritual and from God, they should go on in the soul itself; and thereafter, wonderful to realize—as are the communications of the spirit of God, only stronger and clearer than I had ever experienced those—so communications commenced within, and the question was propounded, "Do you not now know?" I trembled and said, surely the necessity is upon me. Yea, and said the inspeaking influence, you now know for the first time what is meant by that passage of scripture, "Our conversation is in heaven." You are the first man to whom God has unlocked its hidden meaning, and upon you he lays the obligation to proclaim the blessed privilege of conversing with friends in heaven to the universal world.

The scene was now changed from the world without to the soul within, and fiercer still grew the struggle that was on me. "To-morrow," said the inward voice, "you are to proclaim the Millenium at hand, for this special ministry now made certain to you, is to usher it upon the world, and you, as its grand herald, shall make the circuit of the world, speaking all tongues, and nations are to be born in a day."

Under these and like exercises, not here to be enumerated, I went into the woods as aforementioned, and after wrestling for "more than an hour," amid the most awful throes that ever agitated human breast, I felt the struggle to pass off, and exhausted nature was permitted to cast itself down for rest between eleven and twelve o'clock. The morning came and I awoke. I looked within, but as when I ceased to pray the night before, I just realized that the awful power that had been upon me was gone, while a parched void within craved to be filled and refreshed. Instantly I lifted my heart to God for directions what to do. My promise was given, and I must redeem it. I called, oh! I called upon God, until after a short season, sweet peace and joy flowed into the soul, and the text, "Quench not the spirit" as a new sun, fresh from the ocean bed of darkness rose upon my soul and poured through all the realm of mind and heart, a heavenly light and glory, such as it had never seen before. From this time on for two hours until the services commenced, it was within me continually, "proclaim it all a lie, a lie. It is the Devil, the Devil, the Devil." Eleven o'clock came, and the congregation was met—friends around me trembled for fear, for they had known something of the exercises through which I had been passing, but had received no information of the result. I went into the pulpit happier than ever before on earth, and after setting forth the offices of the Holy Spirit, whose agency the Devil seeks to substitute, I "proclaimed" by God's authority, yes, glory be to God, by his authority I "proclaimed" to "mediums" and all, that the manifestations were from the Devil—that God had solved the problem in me, and I stood before them, with reason, but a witness.

Four facts, then, are definitely and positively ascertained:

First. That there is no deception with the mediums, they display facts.

Secondly. The agency is a spirit, for he passed into the spirit.

Thirdly. That spirit is the Devil.

Fourthly. His assumed character, "An Angel of Light."

Now, then, to all "Mediums," let me say, withdraw from your tables, you are the "Mediums" of the Devil. Be not offended, for I, too, was a medium. Through me, he fan the whole course of his stratagem, and in the end I was only saved from his power by the superior power of the "Spirit of all truth,' upon whom I called day and night.

With no feeling of disrespect, then, and intending no reflection upon character, mind or intelligence, let me say again, withdraw from your tables and lay aside your pens—you are not deceivers, but deceived. There are no evil spirits or good spirits connected with the whole manifestation. "It is the Devil" you serve.

To those that are not mediums—seek not to become such—to do so, will be voluntarily to place yourselves in the power of the great "Adversary of Souls."

To men of physical science, that have been laboring so long and so praise-worthily to unlock the mystery, and set at liberty the public mind from the deep and subtle power that has so bewildered and distracted it in many parts of the world, "stand still" with your agents—Electricity and Odd Force (!) and "see the salvation of the Lord." Physical laws cannot reach a spiritual cause.

Christians familiar with the spiritual operation of both the divine and satanic presence, have the key to this experience, and they will be able to interpret it. To the unregenerated, we can only say in the language of the Saviour to Nicodemus, "Marvel not that I say unto you, you must be born again." "The wind bloweth where it listeth, thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh nor whither it goeth."

Considerations of pride would tempt me to withhold from the public this experience; in connection with an agency which so many acknowledge to be mysterious, but at the same time regard as a "ridiculous humbug." The same motive that pressed me into the investigation, the same influence that urged me to "proclaim" the result, enjoin it upon me to yield up the truth that is God's for the benefit of his creatures. May those every where who suffer under the delusion be relieved and withdraw from its power, and those who are not yet involved, beware and stand aloof.

A. H. POWELL.

Mobile, August 25, 1853.

[From the London Leader, April.]

STORY OF THE DRESS.

Among the sights of London I encountered one that I little expected to see—it may not be uninteresting to some of our readers down South. I was looking at the Palace of the Kings—not at all equal to the White-House, which is open to every citizen—and it was there that a sight struck me which was not quite pleasant for one of Uncle Sam's nephews. A bevy of fair ladies were leaving a great house, with a crowd of folks looking at them and police to keep order. The ladies had been tending a meeting to sympathize with Uncle Tom—that benighted old negro whose jargon prevents our real statesmen from making our men of the South ever listen to reason. The poor ladies, however, looked more fit for a ball or morning concert than for any political work in earnest, and their countenances were guilty of nothing worse than a little holiday bustle, newly spiced with black pepper.

But something was to happen beside this "Uncle Tomery." In a crowd I saw a young couple who were waiting out of mere curiosity. You could see that by the eye of the girl. The young man also watched the ladies as they came out, but evidently his care was the girl. At last a lady issued from the door—a tall, handsome woman, with fine aristocratic features, bold, yet delicate; a very voluptuous countenance, if the sensuous look had not been rendered harsh by a slight habitual sneer or scorn, very common with English people of "high birth," her face being also, if it is not rude to say so, a little hardened by time. She must have been a glorious creature, and she looked to think herself still so. She was in no hurry—haste would have spoiled her costume. I wish I could describe it, but that would need a less republican pen than mine. Her noble throat rose out of a wide expanse of delicate and brilliant silk, softened with a large white shawl and a variety of lace, or whatever else it was: but the taste of the arrangement disposed the mass of soft stripes so as to display, and not to disguise, the grace of her tall and rather slender figure.

"That gown," said I to the young man, "cost more in making than in the stuff."

"It might in your country," he answered, turning round sharp to look at me, though I did not know that I had any peculiar accent; "but in this country the labor is the least part of the cost, except to the laborer." His had an accent not quite English.

"What have all these fair ladies been doing, sir?" I asked.

"Meeting about 'Uncle-Tom,'" said he. "I wish they would look to the slaves in their own country."

"We don't get up abolition meetings for the white niggers of Manchester, sir," said I.

"No;" said he, "I wish you did. But Manchester is not our South. There are worse places than's not so far off.

The fine lady came down the steps, and the young woman, who had not attended at all to us, stepped close to the lady and spoke to her. A policeman came forward to remove the girl; and my blood boiled to see a fellow in a glazed hat attempt to touch a female; but the lady herself stopped him by a wave of the hand. The girl repeated what she had said. I did not hear it. The lady looked not surprised—she was too proud for that—but unbelieving. The girl again spoke, and the lady again replied; and then the lady motioned the girl to get into her carriage. They both got in, and after a few words to the footman—a fine gentleman, in a lovely delicate blue coat, with white gloves, and cheeks like a girl's—the carriage drove off.

The young man looked for an instant into my face and then asked me if I could run. Without reply I joined him in following the carriage. We ran barely a mile, and then we arrived at the door of a poor house, in a small street, before the carriage. The young man followed the woman, and I followed him, no body stopping me—I suppose, because I did not look as if I expected they would. A scene of silence came over us as we went up stairs, and the rustling of the fine lady's dress was the loudest noise as we crept up. We all entered a small room, and, as we did so, a child began to cry. The young woman took it from another who held it to suckle it, and so to stay the little voice which disturbed the quiet room with its healthy discontent.

The silence lay thickest at the further end, on a narrow white bed, which the lady approached and gazed upon. On it lay a young woman, but partially undressed, ghastly pale, with her eyes closed. By her side, with its head pillowed on the arm that partly clasped it, lay a little child; like its mother in paleness, like her in its closed eyes, but unlike her whose breath was scarcely heard, in its short and painful breathing, which would have been loud and it not sunk to the hurried whisper of departed life.

We all gazed for a minute in silence and in reverence for mortal suffering which calls alike republican and aristocratic, rich and poor, to account. The lady looked at the sick woman, who kept her eyes fixed on the lady; the proud woman's look seemed to ask why she had been brought there.

"Jessy wished me to fetch you," cried the happier mother, for she could not nourish and quiet her child. I noticed that there was no ring upon her finger, however.

"Poor thing!" But I would have assisted her without," and the lady put her hand into her pocket for her purse.

"No, it is too late for that. You must do something else for her; and you are bound—you are doubly bound."

Again the lady's proud eyes looked a question. There was no fear in her face, but her glance around implied a challenge of the right to keep her there.

"It was your haughty haste that killed her; it was yours that brought her so near death. Yes, lady Julia! I do not wish to offend you, but you ought to know the truth—such as you ought to know it. That is a beautiful dress you have on, very beautiful, far too beautiful for poor Jessy to wear. But when did you order it? Was there time for human hands to make it before 'you came to leave it' for this very day? And who set the finish to that beautiful dress? Whose aching fingers put the last work in it? Jessy's there; and when I took it from her last night she lay down to die."

The proud lady was silent, her eyes bent upon the dying woman, without retort, and her haughty features softened to a gaze of reflecting sorrow, for those English women have hearts in their bosoms, haughty and cold as they seem; at least some have. Suddenly the lady's manner altered, as if she threw off some mantle of pride and restrain, and turning once more to the girl who brought her, with a low simple direct way of speaking, she said:

"And what can be done now?"

"One thing—to let the pride of luxury come and do homage to want and misery, when death raises the lowly above the high."

"I have done that."

"Next, to bring justice and consolation to parting life. On that bed lies, half unconscious, the poor seamstress who died at her needle; it is a common end enough. But that same woman, not half your age—do you see her child?"

The lady bowed.

"How much would you rate his life worth? Why is it there at all? Why come into this world only to look for a few uncertain days upon its misery? Who called it?"

The girl paused, as a sigh from the dying woman summoned her attention; but she went on, bent to take out the retribution where redemption could not come.

"Lady Julia, do you know what it is to have temptations—hopes of the heart where no straight path of hope appears? You can not. If ever you are tempted—and you are—and you yield—your face tells it—you have not been driven by total wretchedness and despair. Love never visits you in misery, and privation, and endless toil; never came from a distant world of pleasure and power; never whispered in your wearied ear that pleasure might in itself be a release from slavery; never won you to one short dream of delirious delight, and then left you back in that nightmare of pleasureless toil, to take the consequences of pleasure taken, pleasure granted, pleasure without bond exacted. But it did come to poor Jessy there."

The lady began to look impatient. I notice of these English that they can never listen to any narrative of suffering save when they tell it of themselves.

"You are looking at my hand," said the girl, holding it out, to confess by the act that it was ringless; "but it was not deserted. Trouble and sorrow have it, but not despair. Bertrand, take the darling." She gave her own baby to the young man, and stooped over the other's child. "Now, Lady Julia, look closer and see if in this poor death-stricken little creature's face you can trace a proud likeness. Jessy, on her death-bed, has conceived a longing to see the father of her child. Both will be gone soon, and why should not that little wish be gratified? Would the father grudge that trouble? He took more to persuade Jessy out of her hard poverty into his pleasure! Would he be too much of a coward to visit this poor room, where suffering and ghastly death have succeeded love?"

Lady Julia looked to see if an answer was expected to question that seemed so abstract.

"Do not be amazed, for it is you only can answer. Poor Jessy's last toil was to finish the gown you wear. The father of her child is your son."

A dead silence followed this somewhat startling announcement, and the girl evidently took a pleasure, which Bertrand shared, in driving home the knife. Doubly had poor Jessy's life been sacrificed to the pleasure of Lady Julia's blood.

The lady stooped down and kissed the child not hastily; and then stooping lower she kissed the moveless hand of its mother.

"Send for him," said the girl.

"I will fetch him," said Lady Julia, rising. "I see the likeness. But take this, my poor girl," and she tried to force her purse into the reproacher's hand.

"It is too late."

"I hope not—skilful aid," she added, yielding to the hopelessness plainly written on the aspect of that cheerless room, "if not for them, at least for yourself and your—"

With a passionate burst of tears the girl dashed the clanking purse upon the ground, and then kneeling to the dying woman, whom her grief startled from the apathy of death, she cast her arms over her and cried:

"Forgive me, Jessy—my darling Jessy; I could not help it, dear, I would not bear that offer to me here, by your bed-side. Get better, dear, he will come; and do not tell me that I killed you by my thoughtlessness.

Jessy's faint lips moved with a smile that died in coming. The girl laid her head upon her friend, and gently sobbed.

"For Heaven's sake try to calm her," said Lady Julia to Bertrand; "I will go fetch him. I will bring him myself."

She left the room with a head less proudly lifted than when she entered it; but I thought her face looked far more beautiful in its downcast tears than it was confronting the public gaze in the great portico.

Bertrand, who is a young Frenchman, bred in England, told me the whole story; but there is little more to add. We left Jessy to die alone with the father of her dead child, who was honorably brought back to her. And some atonement has been made to Anne, her friend. I think she had the subscription meant for "Uncle Tom" many times multiplied; but that did not, truth makes me confess, rein her tongue when she found that Jessy could no longer be disturbed by the reproaches showered upon the recreant lover.

I must confess, too, that he boldly did his duty in undergoing the penance, which I believe of those demoralized young Englishmen would have the manliness to bear, and which it lieved Anna's heart to inflict. Also, he did his duty in attending as mourner when we buried Jessy. But how much better if he had thought of his penance before; how much better if well-meaning, easy-going reformers, who to teach us in America how to put the world right at a blow, would think of the path which their own luxuries reach their own dainties! How many Jessies, each [illegible] other as she perishes, it [illegible] Julia through all the [illegible]

Nothing is more distinctive of true natural acquired politeness. It [illegible] consists a ling abnegation of self, [illegible] pelled recollection of others.

That calm and elegant satisfaction [illegible] vulgar call malancholy, and [illegible] devils, is the true and proper delight [illegible] knowledge and virtue.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, September 3.

☞ The death of our chief compositor and the scarcity of printers just now, on account of the epidemic, has made it very hard to get out this week's Advocate. The foreman suggests, on going to press, that this apology is due our subscribers, and doubtless they all will accept it.

REV. S. M. STEWART.

He died of yellow fever Thurday, 1st inst. Since January last he has been clerk in this office—a young man of lovely spirit and exemplary life. Mr. S. was sitting at his desk a week ago, in good health. As a licentiate he has been preaching for six months with much acceptability and promise of usefullness, and was preparing to offer himself to Conference at its next session, to which he would have been a valuable accession. This purpose of his heart has been broken off!

REV. R. L. CHILDERS.

This amiable, pious and promising young minister, pastor of the NewOrlsans Circuit, died Tuesday, 30th ult., at 8 P. M. The crisis of the yellow fever had passed and we sanguinely hoped for his recovery and last week held the language of encouragement to his numerous friends. But our hopes were vain! His convalescence was arrested by a glandular swelling (which has happened in a few other fatal cases,) and, enfeebled by sickness and of frail constitution, he sunk to the grave.

He was seized violently of the prevailing epidemic on Sunday evening, the 21st ult., after preaching. The text of this, his last sermon, was: "God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever." (Ps. 73: 26.) He might have gone away, but he chose to stay at the post of duty, and, if need be, to die at it.

We can add, now, no more words to this sad announcement. The Church to which he had consecrated himself and the Louisiana Conference will need none to assure them of their great loss and his gain.

THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDY.

Rev. James Ward Hardy, President of Lagrange College, Ala., died 14th August. President Hardy was a native of Georgia. He graduated at Randolph, Macon College, Va., about 1835-7, and has ever since been ably and religiously connected with education in the Church. He had been licensed to preach only in the last three or four years.

We cannot here pay that tribute to our friend, brother and instructor that we would. "There is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel." The loss and urgent destitution incurred by the M. E. Church South in the death of J. W. Hardy makes all who knew him pray: "Help, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth."

Dr. Rivers, President of Centenary College, writes:

"A letter just received from Prof. Ross, of Lagrange, informs me that President J. W. Hardy died on the 15th inst. Bro. Hardy was only 37 years of age, had just assumed the delicate and responsible office of President of the College. He had held the office sufficiently long, however, to prove himself a worthy successor of Paine and Wadsworth. He was sustaining the Institution with an energy that assured the highest prosperity and complete success. But he is gone, the noble, gifted, pious, self-sacrificing educator; the eloquent preacher; the able writer; the good man; the profound scholar; the deep original thinker; the head of the College—its life and its pillar is gone! He died of erysipelas, very unexpectedly; but he was ready, and died in great peace.

Deeply do I sympathize with his stricken family—with the College of which he was so bright an ornament, and with the Church to which he had so recently consecrated his talents as a minister."

THE DEATH OF INFANTS.

Those who never lost a child are unable to understand how great a void the death of one little one can make. There is, we think, nothing on earth that can cast so long and wide and black a shadow as a small coffin. It is emphatically the shadow of death which freezes the parent's heart.

Small as is an infant's tomb, it sometimes is capacious enough to hold all the brightest hopes and dearest joys of a whole family circle. The little child is often the bright focus where all the rays of gladness centre, and from which they are reflected again over happy hearts; and when this central light is eclipsed, great darkness falls over all.

How many there must be in Heaven, gathered up from all climes, even from heathen shores, who have died so young as to retain no memory of earth, and to whom that world of glory seems as their native land, whose souls were washed and regenerated so early that no stain of this world was ever visible upon them.

Whatever wound of sin there may have been, is healed without a scar; their every thought has been moulded by the society and scenery of Heaven, and they stand continually before the face of the Father. In how true a sense may we say, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven!"

QUARANTINE AND HEALTH.

The opinion is gaining ground that New Orleans should protect herself and tributary commerce, from the pestilential diseases of the West Indies and South American coast by quarantine. That yellow fever is transportable by ships and cargoes and infected persons is probable enough, from the experience of this and past years, to warrant this trial. The month of the Mississippi is the Thermopylæ pass of tropical pestilence into all the South and West. Let it be guarded.

This may cost injurious restrictions to commerce, at certain seasons, with those regions. But a single epidemic costs more. And, even in this view, the matter is as long as it is short: for on the appearance of an epidemic here, the commerce of the city is restricted by quarantine—as in Galveston and cities on the river and on the Atlantic coast.

Should the experiment prove futile and yellow fever appear under the enforcement of quarantine, its local origin will thereby be proved to other cities, and they will not enforce quarantine against this city.

The majority of the doctors do not favor this sanitary measure. But with all deference to this worthy class of citizens, we think they are not the ones to devise means to make a city healthy. It looks very much like calling a convention of planters to make cotton cheap!

Though there is a numerical falling off in the mortality, we advise persons at a distance not to be deceived by this and return too early. We see no proportional falling off, and certainly the epidemic is as virulent as at any former stage. It often runs its fatal course in 48 hours. Creoles and citizens of long residence, who passed the summers of 1839 and 1847, have been the victims of this. The last fortnight has been marked by the death of many young men—some of our finest.

The proclamation of the Mayor, appointing the 2d inst. as a day of humiliation and prayer throughout the city, has been accepted by the people and observed in a spirit that shews these heavy chastisements have not been wholly lost upon us.

SAYING (AUDIBLY) AMEN.

A correspondent of the Presbyterian thinks it according to Apostolic usage for the congregation, at the conclusion of public prayer, to respond, audibly, amen, and inquires why the General Assembly, in its Directory for Public Worship, does not adopt and revive this practice.

While few occurrences in public or domestic worship are more annoying to a devout mind than the too often and unmeaning use of the word amen—as, for instance, in the middle of a sentence of petition; yet it has its fervor and its force in the right place. It assures every praying person that he is not alone in approaching the mercy seat; that even here he enjoys the "communion of saints." The contrary practice is quite chilling—at least to one not hardened to it. The solitary prayer seems to be uttered in an atmosphere of cold criticism, and not concurrent devotion. A sermon is put forth to be listened to, understood and applied; but a prayer is to be joined in by those occupying "the place of the laity." They are worshippers then, not hearers only or spectators. "And let all the people say Amen."

So we are right well pleased to find our friends of the kirk entertaining such sentiments as these:

"The apostle Paul (1 Cor. xiv. 16) gives a direction to the Corinthian Christians, from which it is plainly deducible that it was an apostolic usage to respond audibly, "Amen," at the close of public prayer.

"The apostle is giving directions as to the use of charisms, or miraculous gifts in public worship. He says that a man ought not to pray in an unknown tongue in public worship; for if he does, 'how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?' The phrase, 'occupieth the room of the unlearned,' should, according to Olshausen, be translated, 'the place of the laity' or private Christians.

"The question, then, is equivalent to this: 'If the person who leads in public prayer use an unknown tongue, how can the private worshippers make this prayer their own by saying, i. e. audibly responding Amen at its close, seeing they do not understand it?'

"Three inferences seem quite obvious from this passage:

"1. The Corinthian Church used extempore prayers in their public worship. If the person leading the prayers of the assembly only repeated in an unknown tongue a form of prayer in common use, and well known, then the apostle's reproof would not be pertinent to this offence; for the congregation would understand what he was saying, although they would not understand the words in which it was said. The apostle plainly refers to extempore prayers, in which the congregation were expected to follow the speaker with their understandings, and to respond at its close Amen audibly, thus making it their own prayer.

"2. It follows that this response was in ordinary use in public prayer in this church.

"3. The apostle pleads for and sanctions its use.

"Finally, as the minister acts as the representative of the assembly, using audible words, what is more proper than that the laity should make this prayer their own, by saying audibly, Amen, 'So may it be?'

On Tuesday, the 23d ult., 6527 persons visited the Crystal Palace, and contributed $60 79 to the Washington Monument.

PUTTING AWAY HIS WIFE.

When, on good authority it was announced that the Pope had divorced ex-Bishop Ives and his wife, for no other cause than to make the former a Priest, the Papists squirmed and the people were indignant. They were not ready for such as that, and the cause was likely to suffer in honest public estimation. "There now; see that: what will not Popery do?" was the exclamation.

By-and-by, Bishop Hughes' journal of New York denied the statement, and it was taken up and echoed over the land. "Too fast," said these apologists; "Popery does no such thing." And another Protestant slander was triumphantly notched down.

Before this denial got out the editor of the the Baton Rouge Comet published the paragraph that Mrs. Ives had been sent home a widow, and added some caustic rebuke—this was a pretty "piece of business to be transacted in the nineteenth century," &c.

"A Catholic Priest" of Baton Rouge, smarting under this, and taking the fact for granted, published a defence. We have been at some pains to get this back number (July 31) of the Comet, for the sake of this rather prompt defence:

"Editors of the Comet.—Dear Sir—You state in your number of the 26th inst. that Dr. Ives, recently Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of North Carolina, who having resigned his commission, embraced the Catholic faith, is about to be consecrated a Priest by the Pope; and that Pius IX, has notified Mrs. Ives that she must no longer consider Dr. Ives her husband.

The severity of the judgment you pass on the conduct of the reverend gentleman, is sufficient evidence that you are not correctly informed in reference to the discipline of our Church on that point. You will allow me then to acquaint you with it, and help you to repair an injustice.

The celibacy of the Clergy is a law of our Church, which even in this enlightened age and country, the Popes declare binding; and, in spite of the many objections and misrepresentations which it has caused, they are not at all willing to dispense with it. Dr. Ives, of course, if he wish, if he thinks himself called to be a Priest, must submit to the common law. But since he is already married, how can he be a Priest at all? Are not those two states incompatible? That you may better understand the principle of the Catholic Church than that, let us suppose that Dr. and Mrs. Ives are as yet Protestants, residing in North Carolina; and that they make, for any private reason, a joint application to the Legislature of their State, for being lawfully divorced. On hearing of that, would you inquire any further than about the fact of their common consent previous to the taking of such a step? I suppose not. Well then, in that supposition you have our exact idea of the discipline and regulation of our Church. When a married man having his wife still living, applies to be ordained a Priest, the Pope must, by himself or any other Bishop, before granting any such request, inquire from the wife herself, whether she be willing to give her consent or not; viz: that from the moment of consecration of her husband, there must be a perpetual separation between them. If the Pope or the Bishop, having given time to the wife for reflection, do not receive a full consent from her: moreover, if he might suspect that her consent is not perfectly free or spontaneous, no ordination will ever take place. Such is the discipline of our Church, such has been the teaching of our Divines; and such has been, I maintain it most positively, the conduct of the Pope."

These doctrines of a Catholic Priest don't suit this latitude. Society will have become more corrupt than we hope ever to see it when such a law of marriage is accepted. A mere copartnership of the slightest tenure. Joint application, mutual consent of the parties enough to dissolve it! The Mormons have hardly made divorce so easy. We do not consider marriage as does this Priest, who is teaching the people of Louisiana, conducting the education of their sons and confessing their daughters—we do not consider it a sacrament; and yet heretics hold it more sacred.

If Mr. and Mrs. Candle don't agree and think they can each try again and marry to suit them better, Mr. Caudle has only to apply to the Pope or a Bishop to become a Priest. Mrs. Caudle consents to the application, and they are lawfully divorced!

TWO CHARACTERS.

Some murmur when their sky is clear
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue;
And some with thankful love are filled,
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's great mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied;
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has lit their nid
(Love that not ever seems to tire)
Such rich provision made.

A Suspicious Mind.—It is difficult to tell who suffers most from suspicion, he who entertains it, or he who incurs it. There are few evils more intolerable in life than the coldness and distrust of friends and acquaintances. But the pain of discovering an unworthy trait, or a vile deed, in those whom we have trusted, is hardly more distressing. God has made us social beings, and the social instinct cannot be outraged without pain. There is hardly any habit more unfortunate than that of readily taking up an evil report, or of easily imbibing a suspicion of the conduct or character of our fellow-men.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Aberdeen, Miss.—I returned last Saturday from Aberdeen, where there is a gracious revival going on under the pastoral care of Rev. Wm. Hyer, pastor in charge of that station. Up to the time I left there had been upwards of ninety conversions in a little less than two weeks, and the interest unabated.

Aug. 22. Thos. W. Dorman.

Perryville Circuit, Ala.—We have recently had two protracted meetings, of a week's continuance each, on the Perryville Circuit, both of which were seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. One was held eight miles east of Marion, and the other in Dallas county, six miles from Summerfield. The Church at both places was greatly revived, and some ten or twelve added. Methodism is certainly advancing in this section of country. Query? Were the measures of heaven hid in Marion during the session of our Annual Conference there last winter? The heavenly visitations with which Perryville, Union Town, Hamburg and Greensboro', as well as Marion itself, have been blessed, incline us to such an opinion, and we are not alone. Will we not learn wisdom by these peculiar and wondrous workings of our heavenly Master? We expect to make a good Missionary collection on this circuit; have only made one collection, and considering the strength and wealth of the membership, our success was admirable—the handsome sum of one hundred dollars by cash and subscription.

Aug. 17. J. W. Shores.

Montgomery, Ala.—The Lord is graciously pouring out His spirit in our midst. Several have been converted—penitents are coming to the altar—backsliders have been reclaimed—some of God's people have been powerfully blessed. A number of unconverted men attend upon religious services with great seriousness and interest. The meeting seems improving in interest and widening in influence. May the good Lord baptize His own cause and give it mighty success. Rev. Bro. Alexander Speer came among us a few days ago, and has labored much to our profit.

Aug. 23. C. D. Oliver.

Cottage Hill.—A meeting of twelve days' continuance closed at this place on last night with the happy result of great spiritual blessing to the church, and an accession of 41 whites and 2 colored to the membership, and 35 conversions. The city churches to some extent shared the benefit. Bro. Starr was with us all the time, rendering most efficient service. Bro. Garrett, our P. E., called in and preached several sermons for us.

Near Mobile, Ala., Aug 24. ***

Houston, Texas.—A friend writes (27th ult.): Quite an interesting protracted meeting has been going on in the Methodist Church in this city under the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. Petway, formerly of New Orleans. I learned from him this morning that there had been nineteen conversions up to this date. Many of these are quite interesting young gentlemen and ladies.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—Rev. O. K. Blue writes 22d ult.: We, too, have been scourged by the malignant dysentery. Several of our families are in mourning. Sister Sparks (widow of the late Rev. G. P. Sparks) has entered into rest. Sister Glaseock was struck down as in an instant; and Brother Vaughan mourns the loss of a lovely daughter, just grown. So you see that we are not unreminded that "the graves are ready for us."

PARTNERSHIP IN CRIME.

Extract from the address of Judge Johnson, of Georgia, in pronouncing the sentence of death for murder in September:

"Nor shall the place be forgotten in which occurred this shedding of blood. It was one of the thousand ante-chambers of hell, which mar, like plague-spots, the fair face of our State. You need not be told that I mean a tippling shop—the meeting place of Satan's minions, and the foul cess-pool, which, by spontaneous generation, breeds and nurtures all that is loathsome and disgusting in profunity, babbling, vulgarity and Sabbath-breaking. I would not be the owner of a groggery for the price of this world converted into precious ore. For the pitiful sum of a dime he furnished the poison which made the deceased a fool, and converted this trembling culprit into a demon. How paltry this sum for two human lives! This traffic is tolerated by law, and therefore the vender has committed an offence not cognizable by earthly tribunals. But in the sight of Him who is unerring wisdom, he who deliberately furnishes the intoxicating draught which inflames men to anger, and violence, and bloodshed, is particeps criminis in the moral turpitude of the deed. Is it not high time that these sinks of vice and crime should be held rigidly accountable to the laws of the land, and placed under the ban of an enlightened and virtuous public opinion?"

Does it not appear that the law that tolerates this traffic, yea, legalizes, and as far as possible respectableizes it, is also particeps criminis? Consequently, every one voting for and upholding such a law!

The Passage of the Red Sea.—Pope described the following lines as the finest he had ever read in the English language:

When Egypt's king God's chosen tribes pursued,
In crystal walls the admiring waters stood;
When through the desert wild they took their way,
The rocks relented and poured forth a sea.
What limit can Almighty goodness know,
When seas can harden, and when rocks can flow?

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

The NewYork Correspondent of the Delta (27th ult.) gives an item of news and reflections thereon:

For some time past, arrangements have been maturing in this city for the formation of a new party in which pure Americanism was to be the prominent element. The programme was issued some time ago. It embraces a great variety of principles, the most prominent of which, I think, will turn out to be, in action at least, the "support of free schools, independent of the control or interference of any religious sect," and "opposition to any legislation which shall vest property, devoted to charitable uses exclusively, in the hands of the clergy." The simple announcement of these two planks, in the platform of the new party, will, I presume, sufficiently indicate the purpose of its formation, as well as the antagonists it will hereafter be pitted against. It has been long foreseen, that the course pursued at the North and North-west, by a portion of the Roman Catholic Clergy would eventually lead to some such an organization as the "American party," the name which has been chosen for it. It disclaims, however, all connection with the "native" American party, but calls upon the natives of every country who are in favor of its principles, to join with it. Last evening a meeting was held in the Ninth Ward, of citizens friendly to this movement, when a ward organization was effected, and delegates appointed to the general committee. This meeting, I understand, was fully attended, and showed considerable spirit in its action. It is intended that the party shall be pretty thoroughly organized throughout the city during the coming autumn, so as to act in our municipal election. If this be done, and the new party wields anything like the strength which its principles ought to command, much good can be effected by it, in the way of purifying our elections. As parties are generally divided in this city, the balance is held by a gang of three or four thousand besotted, priest-ridden tools, who generally vote this or that way as directed by an unscrupulous and ambitious hierarchy, who are ever ready to barter their political influence to which ever of the two parties is willing to bid the highest. To counteract this hateful influence on our elections, is the principal object, as I understand it, of the American party. With such a party in the field, powerful in numbers as well as in talent, the unscrupulous leaders of the other two will be very cautious how and what they bid for the "foreign votes," and Cross and Crosier will be at a discount at the polls.

COURAGE OF A NOBLE LADY.

The London correspondent of the New York Tribune relates the following anecdote of the wife of D'Israeli, the British writer and statesman:

"Mrs. D'Izzy, as the mob call her, showed an admirable instance of fortitude lately. Her husband wished to be conveyed in the carriage to the House of Commons, where he was prepared to make one of his greatest speeches. After he had alighted he had walked some yards, when he heard a frightful scream. Mrs. D'Israeli had inadvertently left her hand touching the hinge of the door, and the servant slamming it together, had crushed off a joint of Mrs. D.'s finger. She had the resolution to pretend nothing was the matter, so the husband went away in peace, and made a most eloquent oration, which he could not have done had he known she was carried fainting to a doctor's, and was most severely injured, though her enthusiasm for her husband's fame enabled her to conceal her agonies. It was well-directed courage."

THREE REGRETS.

"I regret that John Huss was not burned sooner than he was.

"I regret also that Luther was not punished in the same way.

"And I regret that there was not found at that time a King wise enough, pious enough and politic enough to organize a crusade against Protestantism."

So writes the editor of the leading Catholic journal in Europe, the Universe, and just now the special protegé of Pius the Ninth. These amiable gentlemen certainly need the sympathy of all the faithful. They would do something worthy of Hildebrand, but they can't. One cannot but think of Bunyan's poor Giant Pope in the cave, growling at the Pilgrims as they pass on their way to the City of God, but unable to do more. The old nature remains, the real genuine love of blood and bones; but alas, the teeth and claws, how time has played the mischief with them!

To the Members of the Alabama Conference.

The firm of Carver and Ryland having been dissolved, and the business being in course of liquidation, the copies of "Summers on Baptism" remaining on hand have been transferred to C. K. Randall & Co., and are subject to your orders as before. Brother R. is well known to many members of the Alabama Conference as an upright, experienced bookseller in Mobile, where he has been doing business for many years. And to those who are not acquainted with him, I will say that no man will attend to your orders more promptly or satisfactorily. He informs me that he keeps on hand a general assortment of Methodist publications, both of the general and Sabbath School catalogues.

Brethren, allow me to add, in view of letters received both from Dr. Early and Dr. Summers, that there are pressing reasons why these books which we ordered, should be taken and disposed of by us, and the money remitted as soon as practicable. I hope this will not be neglected, and we find ourselves embarrassed and perplexed about them at the next Conference. Forward your orders to Bro. Randall. I also have yet a supply.

Aug. 15. J. Hamilton.

PROCLAMATION.

Mayoralty of New Orleans, August 30, 1853.

Whereas, It has pleased the Supreme Being, in the dispensation of an All-Wise, but inscrutable Providence, to lay the heavy hand of Pestilence on our devoted city, and by this fatal unsparing messenger, has recalled unto Himself the breath that gave life, thought and feeling to thousands of our dear friends and brethren:

Whereas, It is meet and proper for us, while bearing our affliction with calm fortitude and resignation, and bowing the head in submission to the decrees of the All-High; also, to petition Him in his Mercy to spare us the last drop of bitterness, and thereby make us more sensible of his Goodness and Omnipotence;

And whereas, It is usual for cities in such visitations and with such belief, to set apart a day for the general voice to rise in supplication to Almighty God, that he may be pleased to lighten the heavy burthen of grief, sickness and death:

Therefore, I, A. D. Crossman, Mayor of the city of New Orleans, sympathizing deeply with the affliction of my fellow-citizens, do recommend and request that without distinction of sect, nation or age, on FRIDAY next, the 2d of September, they refrain from their usual avocations of business, close their stores, offices, shops and public places, in order that while rendering thanks to the Most High, that He hath implanted in the hearts of our fellow men and countrymen, those feelings which have led them to share with us out of their abundance in our hour of need, we may all observe the said day as one set especially apart for solemn, though religious exercise—fit appreciation of general sorrow, due reverence for the behests of the Creator, and earnest supplication for the safe journey of ourselves and those who are dear to us through the valley of gloom and distress.

2t A. D. CROSSMAN, Mayor.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS.

THE APPROACHING WINTER.

That class of persons who predict a succession of accumulated misfortunes from one calamity past—those birds of evil omen who croak nothing but notes of despair—are beginning to prognosticate that the epidemic which has decimated our population will operate deleteriously on the business prospects of the approaching season. They argue that the universal terror that has spread throughout the land from the frightful ravages of death will prevent others from coming here to fill the places of those that are gone; that our population will consequently remain reduced; that the business of our port will decline; that our wharves will rot, our buildings fall to decay, and that our goodly city, like a land on which there is a curse, will become a desolation and a waste. In brooding over our past calamities, they sigh a sad farewell to our commercial greatness, and tell us that the supremacy of our city is numbered with the decayed relics of the forgotten past. Whether these dark prognostics are justified by the experience of the past, they do not stop to inquire, or whether in former years a like mortality has had the effect which they for the future so dolefully predict.

We have had epidemics before, and death has laid his unsparing hand upon us not less heavily than now. We have had fevers and cholera, and every ill to which human nature is heir. We have had filthy streets and democratic Councils, and a consequent dreadful mortality; yet our city has shaken off the blasting effects of all, and now lifts her head among the great commercial emporiums, looking forward to a future as prosperous as that of the first in the land.

Epidemics have not made our streets desolate heretofore, and it is fair to suppose that they never will. On the other hand, we contend that the present dreadful mortality, instead of thinning out our population, will increase it. Life and activity follow not less naturally in the desolating track of pestilence than crows flock to the scent of carrion. Where the lion has been, laying low the herds, there will follow the jackal, to gather the offal which has been left, and to crunch upon the bones. The death of one man will attract two to fill his place. The news will go abroad that our city has been decimated: that men have died, leaving vacancies to be filled, with fat salaries. Clerks and merchants, lawyers, laborers and physicians, will learn that many of their class have died, and will flock in to fill their places. The news will be trumpeted abroad that the laborers on our public works have fallen off by scores; that competition has declined, and that the price of labor has advanced. With the first frost, men of all classes, complexions and nations will pour in upon us in such hordes that it will be a wonder to see. Before the 1st of November these will begin to arrive, and, ere a month, every place will be filled, and our streets will be thronged with such scores of idle men and painted women as we have not seen for many a year. Every avenue of trade will be filled, every profession and calling overstocked, and every energy of an adventurous and unscrupulous mass will be taxed to support the expense of their mad rushing hither.

We venture to assert that we will have a larger population, by many thousands, this winter, than we have ever had before—more workers for the business—more amusements—more honest tradesmen, more thieves and vagabonds—more votaries of pleasure, and more criminals and scape-graces, than we have ever had in one season before.

An epidemic will not drive people away. There are always adventurers to brave its terrors, and a reckless class who felicitate themselves on the honor attached to the risk of braving death. These will swell our population, and bring about competition in active pursuits, to such a degree that our city will never suffer for the want of people. Trade will pursue its channels as of yore; and when frosty weather has set in, and before the last echo has died of the last funeral bell, we shall have an influx of strangers that will give to our streets a lively, bustling air, as if pestilence had never made here its chosen charnel.

There is a good time coming for the fortunate who live to see it. [Crescent.

WHO MOST NEEDS AID,

THE SICK OR THE STARVING?

We have understood upon the authority of one of the members of the Howard Association, that in the disposal of the foreign charities placed under their control, they do not think their authority extends further than administering to the sick, and that they have no right under their charter to aid the destitute. Widows and orphans of those who have fallen victims to the epidemic, and those who by the palsying hand of pestilence have been reduced to helplessness and to the verge of starvation, do not, under this interpretation of the powers vested in the Howard Association, come within the number of those who are entitled to aid by means of the thousands generously donated by sympathizing strangers. If the constitution of the Howard Association does not permit them to aid the indigent—those who have been made indigent and helpless by the epidemic—then is its organization radically wrong, and a proper subject for reformation; or, there must be something wrong in handing over to their administration the thousands that are continually poured in upon us "for the aid of the sufferers by the epidemic." Those stricken down by sickness are not the only sufferers by the epidemic. There are scores of widows, made so by the epidemic, and they are sufferers by the epidemic. There are hundreds of children orphaned by the epidemic, and they are sufferers by the epidemic. There are families that have lost members of their household, and who by the expenses attendant on sickness and funerals and loss of time and watching by the bedside of those dear to them, who have been deprived of the means of subsistence and who are also sufferers by the epidemic. These are the description of sufferers, who in the designation "sufferers by the epidemic" are intended to be benefited by the large sums that are constantly being forwarded here. It will not be contended that these charities are intended to ameliorate the condition of the sick alone. If such was the intention it would be so expressed. The sick are often in affluent circumstances and have friends or servants to take care of them. The destitute have no friends, neither servants, and though they may not be sick, they may be destitute by reason of death from the pestilence, and consequently "sufferers by the epidemic."

The members of the Howard Association have done all that by the constitution of their body they deem they have a right to do. The money that are confided to them they expend for the use of the sick. Those suffering otherwise than by the prevailing sickness, they conscientiously think they have no right to aid. Under the state of things, and considering the fact that the large donations from other cities are, as they express it in their dispatches, intended for the aid of "the sufferers by the epidemic," would it not be well for the authorities entrusted with the disbursement of the large contributions to set apart a portion of the sums for the relief of that distinct class who are not sick, but sufferers in consequence of sickness?

We make these suggestions, not in a carping spirit, but for the general good. We know that the design of those who have contributed so much was to relieve distress caused by the epidemic, no matter in what shape that distress may be presented—whether in the person of the stricken man with the delirium of fever—of the pauper in rags, sweltering in the dank atmosphere of the hovel, or of the helpless mother with her starving infants, in whose cold eye is cavernously the gaze of famine and despair. It is for relief it is sent, and to that object should it be applied. Leave the question as to the right of the that association to give aid here or there, to be decided when we have beaten back the destroyer from amongst us. [Ibid.

THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.

We find on inquiry among the members of this Association, that they have already administered to over five thousand of the sick and destitute, and that the cases now under treatment amount to about two thousand more. These cases have been treated at an average expense of fifteen dollars each, making the total expended for medical attendance and treatment alone, amount to $75,000. They have also expended over $10,000 in groceries and other necessaries of life, given to the convalescent and those rendered helpless by the sickness of themselves or their families, and this expenditure is still going on.

Since our article touching this Association in yesterday's issue, we understand that the number who gave us the information on which our article was based, misapprehended the duties and powers of the Association. From information derived from that member, we were led to understand that the members of the Association did not consider they had any right under their charter to extend aid to persons in indigent circumstances, but that they were restricted to ministering to the sick alone. Our present information from members of the Association is that they extend relief to all who are sick, who, from causes connected with the epidemic, have been rendered destitute.

The Association has now three Asylums, with a large number of orphans under its charge, who are taken care of at its expense in disbursements now, for the assistance of those who are convalescing, or who have been made destitute by the causes above stated, are not less than $500 per day.

Aside from the legitimate duties of the Association, the members have many applications from those who have not been sick themselves and none of whose families have been sick. Many of these apply for tickets (issued by the Association for groceries furnished to the agent) in order that they may sell them for liquor. This has repeatedly been found to be the case, and instances can be shown where idle and depraved have offered tickets sold for one dollar, for seventy-five cents cash. This an abuse to which all public charities are liable, and particularly an association whose sphere of action is so wide, and whose self-imposed duties are so multifarious.

Persons who have not been sick themselves, and none of whose families have been sick, the Association does not consider proper objects for relief, as they are not any worse off than they would have been if no epidemic had taken place.

The Association has ample use for all the funds received, in relieving distress arising from the epidemic, without going about paying for rent and furnishing the necessaries of life to poor families who have become destitute from other causes.

The impression seems to have gone abroad that the Howards are in a situation to relieve all the poor in New Orleans. We can only reply to those who entertain that opinion, that if they will visit the Treasurer's Office, and see the enormous sums daily paid out by him, they will find that the destitute who are subjects for relief on account of sickness of themselves or families, will absorb the contributions of every city in the United States.

In addition to the expenditures of the Association in the city, relief has been extended to Carrollton, Jefferson City, Gretna and Algiers to the full extent of their wants.

We further understand that no contributions hereafter received will be handed over to the Howard Association unless specially directed to it; but that the Mayor will retain in his hands whatever sums are sent without any special designation as to whom it shall be given, to be used by such other charitable organization as, for the purposes of humanity, shall require it. [Ibid.

Facts About the Fever.—A few months ago a merchant of this city took to his home and heart a youthful bride, and went to reside in the Fourth District. Wishing to live in privacy he engaged only one servant—a fresh Irish girl, from the Emerald Isle. She took the fever and in a few days died. Another was hired and shared the same fate. A third and a fourth filled the vacancy in the household, and followed in succession the sweeping summons of the pestilent destroyer. Following the impulse of a natural dread, the merchant went to Mobile to avoid the destructive visitation of the scourge. But the next day buried his young and beautiful bride. Disgusted with a home where nothing but empty chambers served to call up the memories of departed joys, he returned to the city, sold out his household, determined to leave a locality to him so suggestive of sorrow, and died the next day. When our informant visited the premises, there was but one living creature there. It was a solitary parrot, swinging in its lonely cage, and wailing unwittingly its desolate state. Alas, poor Poll! [Ibid.

Relief for New Orleans.—The City Richmond, Va., had contributed, on the 23d ult., $1041 for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic.

The amount collected at Nashville is $2...

A public meeting was held at Pittsburg on the 22d ult., the object of which was to raise funds for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in this city.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY.

DIED—Of yellow fever, 27th ult., in his 26th yeer, MILTON ARTHUR. He was a native of Springfield, Mass., and for some time has been chief compositor of this paper. He impressed himself on us and all who know him as modest, amiable, capable and honorable. On our last visit to him—the evening before death—he looked upon the black vomit he was casting up and calmly interproting; the sign, said: "Sir, this has been a pretty hard world, but I hope soon to find a better." May he rest in peace!

DIED—Of yellow fever, 27th August, Mrs. MARIETTA L., wife of the late Rev. A. F. DOBB. Mrs. D. was in her 38th yenr: a native of Queen Anne cninty, Md., and daughter of Joshua and Pamela Massey. She leaves six children, and has fulfilled with exemplary fitness and piety the delicate and arduous duties of a minister's wife.

DIED—Of yellow fever, 29th ult., NINA, aged 3 yeare, daughter of W. S. and P. MOUNT.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

NOTICES.

WARRIOR STAND, Macon Co., Ala., August 10, 1853.

MR. EDITOR—Please publish the following resolution and arrangement for Protracted and Missionary Meetings on Tuskegee Circuit, Alabama Conference, as adopted by our Third Quarterly Meeting, held at this place on the 5th, 9th and 7th inst.

JAMES B. HALL.

Resolved, That this Quarterly Meeting appoint a committee of five persons, composed of Bros. J. W. Ellis, preacher in charge, and A. M. Samford, junior preacher, and three other brethren of the Conference, whose duty it shall be to appoint and arrange for Protracted and Missionary Meetings at every appointment on the Circuit, and that the brethren so appointed be allowed their own discretion as to what stage of those meetings they will take up collections.

Whereupon the Conference appointed Rev. J. B. Hall, Rev. E. Zachry, and Bro. Stafford, C. L., to co-operate with Bros. Ellis and Samford.

Immediately after the adjournment of Conference, the brethren colored upon the discharge of their duties, and therewith send you the result of their deliberations:

Warrior Stand—Sermon by Rev. S. Armstrong, P. E., which was preached on Sabbath of the Quaterly Meeting.

Mount Zion—Sermon by Rev. J. W. Ellis. Meeting to commence on Saturday before 4th Sabbath in September. Assistant—Rev J. D. Hall and others.

Society Hill—Sermon by Rev. John E. Jones. Assistant—Rev. John H. Lockhart. Meeting to commence on Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

Tuna—Sermon by Rev E. Zachry. Assistants—Revs. Wm Manifee and E. Story. Meeting commences Saturday before 2d Sabbath in September.

Asbury Chapel—Sermon by Rev. J. W. Ellis. Assistants—Revs. E. Zachry and W. Patillo. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

Rocky Mount—Sermon by Rev. N. Patillo. Assistant—Rev. Wm. Barrow. Meeting commences Saturday before 2d Sabbath in September.

Nolanlga—Sermon by Rev. S. Armstrong. P. E., 4th Quarterly Meeting, 22d and 23d October.

Segrest Chapel—Sermon by Rev. E. Story. Assistant—Rev. W. N. Sears. Meeting commences Saturday before 2d Sabbath in September.

Franklin—Sermon by Rev. John Motley. Assistants—Revs. Robert Adams and Chrittberg. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

Providence—Sermon by Rev W. N. Sears. Assistants—Revs. Wm. Manifee and Breedlove. Meeting commences Saturday before 2d Sabbath in September.

McKendree Chapel—Sermon by Rev. D. Perry. Assistant—Rev J. Motley. Meeting commences Saturday before 3d Sabbath in September.

Pine Chapel—Sermon by Rev. J. Tally. Assistant—Rev John E. Jones. Meeting commences Saturday before 4th Sabbath in September.

Scale Chapel—Sermon by Rev. A. M Samford. Assistants—Revs D. Perry and Wm. Parrow. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

New Hope—Sermon by Rev. J. Tolly. Assistants—Local brethren in the neighborhood. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September.

Perry Chapel—Sermon by Rev. John H. Lockhart. Assistants—Revs. A. F. Moore and Garner. Meeting commences Saturday before 3d Sabbath in September.

Mount Nebo—Sermon by Rev. Garner Assistant—Rev. Breedlove. Meeting commences Saturday before 1st Sabbath in September

So, you perceive, the missionary spirit upon this circuit is not dead, as was predicted by the faithless and unbelieving. Yours respectfully,

JAS. B. HALL, Secretary.

[Glad to perceive it. Arrangement good. Naw for the results. May you beat yourselves. ED.] aug20 2t

CAMP-MEETING.

There will be a Camp-meeting in Abbeville Circuit, at Lawrenceville Camp-ground, to commence on Friday evening before the second Sabbath in October next. Preachers, traveling and local, together with the people generally, are invited. A Missionary Collection will be taken up on the Sabbath. JOHN WILLIAMSON, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a Camp-meeting, commencing on the fifth day of October, at Hempden, Linden Circuit, Alabama Conference, new comp-ground.

J. W. LANEY, Pastor.

July 25, 1853. aug20 2t

PICKENSVILLE, ALA., FEMALE INSTITUTE.

R. BRANDRAM, A. M., PRINCIPAL.

The next session of the Pickensville, Female Institute will, with a full corps of able teachers, commence on Monday, October 3. Catalogues, containing every necessary information, can be had by applying to the Principal.

Professor C. F. Yeagle continues at the head of the Musical Department. PEYTON KING, August, 27. President Board of Trustees.

TEACHERS WANTED

To supply both departments of Pleasant Hill Academy session to commence on the first Monday in October next As some experience, undoubted scholarship, and good moral character are qualifications that cannot be dispensed with, we therefore require all applications to be accompanied by testimonials from the following gentlemen: Dr. Manly, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Dr. Mitchell, of Summerfield, Ala.; Rev. M. P. Jewell, of Marion, Ala.; Dr. W. Jones, of Greensboro', Ala.; Messrs. Catlin, Pickering, & Prowell, of Dayton, Ala.; Rev. A. O. McCraw, of Selma, Ala., and Gen. E. Y. Fair, of Montgomery, Ala. Recommendations from either of the above named gentlemen will be satisfactory.

A salary of $800 will be paid by the Trustees to supply the male department, and $700 for the female.

Applications will be forwarded to Pleasant Hill, La., directed to

JOHN JORDAN,
D. A. BLACKSHER,
A. R. REMBERT, } Examining Committee.

aug6 4t

UNIVERSITY OF NASHVILLE.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third Annual Course of Lectures in this Department will commence on Tuesday, the first of November next, and continue till the first of the ensuing March.

PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy and Physiology.
W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Institutes and Practice of Medicine.
C. K. WINSTON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
ROBERT M. PORTER, M. D.,
General and Special Anatomy.
J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy.
WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for students on the first Monday in October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures will be given by the Professors, commencing also on the first Monday in October.

The students will have free access to the State Hospital.

Fee of each Professor, $15; Matriculation ticket, $5; Dissecting ticket, $10; Graduation fee, $25.

Good board can be obtained in the city at from $2 50 to $3 per week. Further information may be obtained by addressing the Dean.

jy23 3t J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D., Dean.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb., 1853.

The Epidemic.

We sicken with the contemplation of a subject so often adverted to and so much on the tongues of our stricken population, and submit our statistical table, leaving our readers to draw their own conclusions.

Week ending	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
May 28	140	1	139	..
June 4	142	1	141	..
" 11	154	4	150	..
" 18	147	7	140	..
" 25	167	10	9 21	158	589	..
July 2	177	25	152	..
" 9	188	60	128	..
" 16	344	204	140	..
" 23	617	429	188	..
" 31	884	2210	692	1409	192	801	..
August 1	142	106	25	11
" 2	135	115	14	6
" 3	148	124	17	5
" 4	166	135	15	16
" 5	160	128	9	13
" 6	238	194	30	11
" 7	299	1180	165	967	40	150	4	09
" 8	219	187	23	9
" 9	201	166	21	14
" 10	230	193	33	4
" 11	223	162	13	18
" 12	207	180	25	2
" 13	214	179	22	13
" 14	232	1526	191	1288	24	103	15	75
" 16	217	187	24	6
" 17	193	163	10	11
" 17	219	191	21	7
" 18	219	188	22	9
" 19	234	203	15	16
" 20	224	184	29	4
" 21	209	1575	230	1310	24	153	15	68
" 22	243	230	21	15
" 23	258	220	24	14
" 24	222	188	23	11
" 25	218	180	19	13
" 26	193	151	29	13
" 27	185	161	20	8
" 28	118	1507	117	1243	24	160	7	81
Total	8790		6304	2154			293

This total does not include the interments in St. Patrick's, which the Secretary of the Board of Health computes at 243. Add this number, and the grand total would be 9033.

Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., Saturday, 27th August, 1853:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	4	3	1	—
Cypress Grove, No. 1	3	3	—	—
Cypress Grove, No. 2	46	41	—	1
Odd Fellows' Rest	7	6	1	—
Charity Hospital	10	9	1	—
St. Patrick's	30	25	0	5
Catholic No. 1, Second District	2	2	—	—
Catholic No. 2, " "	0	3	3	—
St. V. de Paul, Third	48	38	5	2
Lafayette, Fourth District	23	15	5	—
Hebrew, " "	1	—	1	—
Total	185	151	20	8

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec. Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, 28th inst.:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	12	10	2	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	1	1	—	—
Cypress Grove, No. 1	4	4	—	—
Cypress Grove, No. 2	34	27	6	1
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	29	19	1	—
St. Patrick's	(No returns.)
Catholic, No. 1, Second District	1	1	—	—
Catholic, No. 2, " "	5	2	3	—
St. V. de Paul, Third District	30	25	11	3
Lafayette, Fourth District	24	20	3	1
Hebrew, " "	5	5	—	—
Total	148	117	24	7

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock A. M., on Monday, August 29, 1853.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	10	8	2	—
Cypress Grove No. 1	3	3	—	—
Cypress Grove No. 2	37	32	4	1
Odd Fellows' Rest	3	3	—	—
Charity Hospital	15	15	—	—
St. Patrick's	(No returns.)
Catholic No. 2, Second District	6	5	—	1
St. V. de Paul, Third District	21	18	2	1
Lafayette, Fourth District	17	12	5	—
Hebrew, " "	2	2	—	—
Total	114	99	14	1

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Secretary Board of Health.

Daily Report of the interments in all the Cemetries for the 24 hours ending at 0 o'clock, A. M., on Tuesday, 30th inst:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	5	5	—	—
Hebrew, Metairie Ridge	1	—	1	—
Cypress Grove No. 1	5	6	1	—
Cypress Grove No. 2	45	42	2	1
Charity Hospital	15	11	—	1
St. Patrick's	25	16	2	7
Catholic, No. 1, Second District	1	—	1	—
Catholic, No. 2, " "	4	4	1	—
St. V. de Paul, Third District	22	21	1	—
Lafayette	15	9	5	1
Total	139	114	14	11

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Wednesday, the 31st inst.

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	2	0	2	—
Cypress Grove, No. 1	6	6	1	—
Cypress Grove, No. 2	34	32	2	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	2	2	—	—
Charity Hospital	11	9	2	—
St. Patrick's	21	4	3	13
Catholic, No. 1, Second District	7	4	3	—
Catholic, No. 2, " "	4	1	3	—
St. V. de Paul, Third District	33	20	7	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	11	6	4	2
Hebrew, " "	1	1	—	—
Total	137	95	27	15

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

BOARD OF HEALTH.—Daily report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the city for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Thursday, the 1st inst.:

	Total.	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Not Stated.
Protestant, Girod street	5	2	2	1
Cypress Grove No. 1	3	3	—	—
Cypress Grove No. 2	25	23	2	—
Odd Fellows' Rest	4	3	1	—
Charity Hospital	10	8	1	1
St. Patrick's	21	14	2	5
Catholic, No. 1, Second District	2	2	—	—
Catholic, No. 2, " "	2	2	2	—
St. V. de Paul, Third District	31	28	3	—
Lafayette, Fourth District	13	10	3	—
Hebrew, " "	1	1	—	—
Total	110	96	16	7

J. C. SIMONDS, M. D., Sec'y Board of Health.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock Friday night:

Admissions.....30 | Deaths.....21
Discharges.....33 | By yellow fever.....20

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of this institution for the 24 hours ending at 0 o'clock Saturday evening;

Admissions.....240 | Deaths.....148
Discharges.....238 | By yellow fever.....135

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of this institution for the 24 hours ending at twelve o'clock Saturday night.

Admissions.....20 | Deaths.....2
Discharges.....37 | By yellow fever.....18

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report for the twenty-four hours ending at 12 o'clock on Sunday night:

Admissions.....31 | Deaths, yellow fever... 0
Discharges.....22 | Other deaths..... 1

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock, Monday night, 29th inst.:

Admissions.....47 | Deaths.....18
Discharges.....40 | Yellow Fever.....14

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Tuesday, 30th inst.:

Admissions.....31 | Deaths.....14
Discharges.....36 | Yellow Fever.....13

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Wednesday, 31st ult:

Admissions.....31 | Yellow fever deaths.....15
Discharges.....26 | Other deaths.....4

MONTHLY REPORT OF THE CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Admissions, 1040; Discharges, 1142; Deaths, 1030. Of these 1800 were from foreign countries, 120 United States, and 14 unknown. H. VANDERLINDEN, Clerk.

Charity Hospital, Sept. 1, 1853.

—YELLOW FEVER IN ATLANTIC CITIES IN FORMER YEARS.—The yellow fever visited the city of New York in the years 1741, 1742, 1791, 1795, 1798, 1799, 1800, 1803, 1805, 1819 and 1822 The deaths were as follow; 732 in 1795, 2086 in 1798 (population 55,000), 670 in 1803, 280 in 1805, 23 in 1819, 360 in 1822. In 1805, 37,000 of the inhabitants (out of 76,000, the whole population,) fled from the city. In 1804, 40 persons died with it in Brooklyn, but New York escaped. Philadelphia was nearly desolated by it in 1793, and again in 1708. 4031 persons died in 1793, and 17,000 (population 50,000) fled from the city. In 1798, the mortality was great, and 50,000 out of the 70,000 inhabitants fled. Several thousands died, and the greatest number of deaths in one day was 117. Baltimore suffered from this disease in 1798, 1819 and 1821.]

General Intelligence.

The Comet.

A correspondent has sent us the following observations on the celestial visitor at present visible in the heavens:

Messrs. Editors—I have noticed for the last few evenings, at different hours, a curious phenomena in the heavens; it is somewhat larger than an ordinary size star, with a long ray or tail (though not very bright) attached to it and inclining upwards, which appears, when viewed with the naked eye, some ten or fifteen feet long. I noticed it last evening about half-past seven o'clock; it was gradually descending Westward, and in half an hour it entirely disappeared beneath the horizon.

Having not seen it mentioned in any of the papers, I deemed it must be owing to it being not generally known—though I am aware that it has been noticed by a number of persons, and have heard various surmises in regard to its indications—therefore I have thought fit to call your attention to it, and hope some of our "scientific men," or if we have any Astrologers among us, that they will immediately investigate the matter, and let us learn their conclusions. "CHEMISTRY."

The "phenomena" above spoken of is a comet, and was discovered June the 10th, at Gottingen, by Mr. Klinkerfues. It was first seen at the National Observatory, at Washington, on the 28th of July, and was then probably visible to the naked eye. It has been observed on every favorable night since, and has constantly increased in brightness. It is not at present identified with any previous comet. It was probably near its maximum brightness on the 27th of August, when it passed its perihelion.

The New York Commercial Advertiser furnishes the following description, which perhaps is more satisfactory to those unskilled in the astronomical ascensions and declensions:

"Probably our Astronomers will take up this subject, and report the name, rate, period, etc., of the 'illustrious stranger.' Meantime, to an unprofessional eye, through a good telescope, it presents the following appearance: The nucleus is clearly defined, circular, and of a pale white, shade. The tail shoots up in nearly a perpendicular line, gracefully spreading as it goes, and diminishing again to a point; the length of the tail being about ten times, and the extreme width about twice the diameter of the nucleus. The entire apparent length does not much exceed one degree; this comet, therefore, is much smaller than any we are accustomed to see."

[Communicated.]

Messrs. Editors—While watching by the sick beds of three in my family, an idea has arisen before me which, if acted upon promptly, would, no doubt, alleviate the sufferings of thousands in our midst, even at the eleventh hour. When we find that burning tar has done little or no good towards removing the sickness from us, if we find one system of treatment better than another, it is our duty to make it known to all, and I am astonished that no abler pen has taken pains to do so.

It will be admitted by all that God has sent this scourge, but he has also sent us the means whereby we may conquer it, if we would but use the means for the end.

I would respectfully suggest to the Howard Association that they lay out of their funds from two to five thousand dollars, for the fitting up of an infirmary for the exclusive use of the homeopathic physicians, so that they may have a fair trial of their skill in curing the fever. Give them one hundred patients, and publish the result. I will venture to say that ninety-five would come out cured in four to five days. Why is it that the physicians do not try homeopathy in the Charity Hospital? It must be on account of their great prejudice against it. If they would but try it for ten days, then all of our drug-stores might shut up, and the money now expended in grave digging could be laid out in furnishing every poor family with a box of homeopathic medicine and a book treating on all diseases, especially one by Pulty, which treats on Yellow Fever, and can be bought at the book-store of Thomas L. White. If this was carried out on a general scale, men might then expect to live at least half the age of their forefathers. Then let all hands take the fever, apply the means of cure, and the scourge is robbed of its terrors, and the opening grave will not come to the view of the patient as it does now. I leave this subject with you, hoping and praying for a great reformation in the practice of medicine in our city and throughout the land. The cause of suffering humanity demands a change, and that speedily. I subscribe myself one once a scoffer at, but now a firm believer in,

HOMEOPATHY.

THE FEVER IN MOBILE.—The report of the interments in Mobile for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock P. M. on the 30th instant showed a total of 14, of which 10 were from Yellow Fever.

The Tribune of the 31st ultimo contains the following in reference to the fever. The scenes described are most appalling:

We think that there is no exaggeration in saying that two-thirds of the sick are unable to get proper attention. In the first place, many of their domicils are too small to allow of those conditions upon which restoration depends; in the second place, they are too poor to secure immediate attention. Many physic themselves, when physic ought to be administered only by the direction of a doctor. Many lie sick indifferent to the necessity of immediate attention, and thus, before aid is applied, they are past all help.

We could describe some scenes which have occurred that appeal stoutly to the hearts of those who have the means to give more vigor to and increase the operations of our charitable societies. In some families every member is sick, while one perhaps is dying. Day before yesterday one of our doctors entered a room where a dead body had lain eight hours unattended to, while the only two living inmates were sick with the fever, without aid or the first dose of medicine. A few such instances as this will account for the largely increased mortality of the past few days.

There is a great want of nurses and other attendants of the sick. Many families which in health live comfortably are unable in sickness to obtain any help beyond their own circles. We heard yesterday of a widow woman and her two daughters, who ordinarily perform their own domestic duties, but are now all sick and dependent entirely upon the charities of their neighbors—charities which are so often in such time considered as necessarily the abode of home. Besides, many of those who are disposed to help their neighbors have apprehensions of the communicability of the disease, and cannot approach it without dread.

There is every indication now that we shall have a season unparalleled by any of the past, except 1839, and the charity of the public will necessarily be taxed to the utmost. Those who are absent we are sure will not forget us, while prompt aid will be doubly valuable. The necessity exists with twofold force in the first stages of the epidemic. It is then that the poor are most assailed.

The total number of deaths in Mobile from yellow fever, for the three weeks commencing August 7 and ending August 27, was 87.

NAVIGATION OF THE AMAZON.—Capt. Brown, of the brig Chatsworth, which arrived at New York on Wednesday, from Para, (July 27,) reports the steamer Rio Negro, Deal, had arrived there from Rio Janeiro. She is the second steamer of the company for the navigation of the Amazon river, and will run from Para to the Rio Negro. The first one of the line, the "Marsgo," will hereafter ply between the Rio Negro and the town of Nanto, in Peru. The R. N. has to make a trip on the 28th to Canzeta, a distance of 90 miles, taking passengers at the rate of 15 and 11 reis, or 8½ dollars, each way.

HIGH PRICE FOR SLAVES.—The Easton (Md.) Star states that on Thursday last, Mr. William H. Haghlett purchased of Mr. John S. Martin four male servants, for which he paid four thousand and fifty dollars, being $1012 50 each, which is the heaviest price ever paid for servants in that section of country.

Letter from New York.

NEW YORK, August 22, 1853.

Messrs. Editors—Having, woman like, resolved to write a letter without anything in particular to write about, I may be excused for substituting some comparisons between this city and New Orleans, for want of more interesting matter.

You complain a great deal about your dirty streets, and blame those in authority for allowing such a shameful state of affairs; but a walk through the eastern section of this great metropolis, would open your eyes as to the amount of public endurance in such matters, which may be acquired by long habit and judicious management. I think it is Punch who suggests to the authorities in London the propriety of collecting one per cent. (scent) on the various odors emanating from their filthy streets. If such a plan were adopted here the public treasury would be well filled.

I have also frequently seen in your papers remonstrances addressed to omnibus owners and drivers upon the expediency of limiting the number of persons in their vehicles, so as to promote the comfort of their passengers. Why, bless you! you know nothing about the capabilities of an omnibus until you see those of this place. I have myself been in one of ordinary size, which was made to hold twenty-one inside, and seven on top; and even then the driver was constantly raising his whip to intimate to those on the side-walks that there was "plenty of room." An omnibus intended for twelve seldom travels far with less than twice that number; and in fact, the term "full," as applied to public conveyances in this city, is an unknown quantity, to find which would puzzle the oldest arithmetician.

A very striking difference between the two cities is observable in the fire department. Here the engines are dragged by men instead of horses, and they go much faster.

Another feature which attracts the attention of the stranger is the number of working girls. Crowds of them may be seen shortly before sundown every day thronging Chatham street and the Bowery, on their way home from their daily labors. It is a sad sight—a melancholy satire on Women's Rights Conventions. Just think of a few learned ladies meeting together and, after much palaver, gravely resolving that women are capable of filling the highest offices of honor and profit, while hundreds of their sisters are toiling from daylight till dark for a miserable pittance. What profit is it to them to hear that they have such high capabilities, when they cannot even obtain the paltry place of clerk in a thread and needle store. If the sprightly Lucy Stone, or the Rev. Antoinette Brown, could persuade men to open to women some more profitable avenues of industry than those to which they are now limited, there would be some sense in their speeches and sermons; but perhaps after all the fault lies partly in women themselves. If they were better educated, more persevering, less vain and frivolous, willing to marry poor young men instead of working hard for the purpose of buying dress and ribbons to attract richer ones, they would be better off and happier. Wherever the fault lies, Women's Rights Conventions do not seem to have power to effect a cure.

Considering that I commenced with nothing to say, I have managed to spoil a considerable quantity of paper; and perhaps I had better postpone giving my opinion on other subjects, until I see what reception this meets with.

Yours, etc., CHERRY.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune relates the following tough story:

On the evening of Sunday, August 7, our circle assembled as usual, for the purpose of holding intercourse with those departed from our earthly sphere. Seating ourselves in the usual order, we had not been joined in the chain of harmonial brotherhood longer than fifteen minutes when our medium (Miss Austin) gave indications of approaching friends. Calmly awaiting their first manifestations, we sat attentively watching her movements, when all at once, and to the no small astonishment of those present, she gradually commenced rising from her seat, and rose until she had assumed a position over the table, at an altitude of five feet from the floor. In this position she remained for some time, until she was gradually lowered to within one-sixteenth of the table, when the following directions were spelled out by raps: "Take your hands off the table, move back from it three feet; then join hands and form a complete circle." In accordance with this, we moved to the positions assigned us, when the medium was again raised to her former position, the table following at the aforesaid distance. In this position they remained suspended, until the medium was, by the same invisible power, brought to a position directly under "the table." And now commenced one of the grandest and awe-inspiring scenes it has ever been the lot of human eye to witness.

The room was filled with melody the most sublime; a choir of angel voices seemed discoursing heaven's choicest harmony, while the well known raps responded in tones of sweetest unison to these enchanting strains. Slowly and sweetly did the music of the spheres recede, until the listening ear could only catch its lingering cadence in the distance. Oh, it was a happy glimpse of immortality, and dull, indeed, must be the soul that would not have responded to the joyful call. But as yet, the most startling part of the phenomenon is to be told. After the medium had again been permitted to resume her place in the circle, we were directed to open the window, and take our places by the table again as usual.

After we had sat there for a few seconds, the table began to vibrate violently—so much so, indeed, that we were compelled to break the circle, and mark in silence the new development. Long had we not waited before it became suddenly quiet, and, rising gently from the floor, it passed out of the window without a human hand being on it. It was thus, and while the table yet remained outside, rapped out: "Take it in"—an order we immediately proceeded to obey; but judge our astonishment, when we found that the table could not be again brought back, its narrowest width being more than eighteen inches wider than the window through which I ever it passed.

REPLY OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL TO MR. EVERETT.—An official correspondence is published in the English papers, between Lord John Russell and Minister Crampton, respecting the proposition for a tripartite treaty, in order to guaranty to Spain the continued possession of the island of Cuba. The answer to Mr. Everett, the late Secretary of State, to this extraordinary proposition on the part of England and France, forms the chief theme of Lord John's comments. Mr. E., it will be recollected, declared that "the United States would not see with indifference the island of Cuba fall into the possession of any other European government than that of Spain." By way of response, Lord John, while admitting the right of this country to reject the proposal, pointedly observes that "Great Britain must at once resume her entire liberty, and, upon any occasion that may call for it, be free to act, either singly or in conjunction with other powers, as to her may seem fit."

A MAN SHOT BY A SNAKE.—A letter in the Philadelphia Ledger states that, a few days ago, a man named Louman, store-keeper in Siddonsburg, York county, was out gunning, when he discovered a large snake, and in order quickly to secure it from running away, he placed the butt of his rifle, loaded with a ball at the time, upon the body of the snake, with his hand directly across the muzzle. The snake, in its writhings to free itself, coiled around the gun stock, and with one of its coils struck the hammer, which was down upon the cap at the time, hard enough to discharge the gun, the contents of which entered the ball of the hand near the wrist, and, in a diagonal direction, came out between the junction of the little finger and the one next to it. Happily, no bones were broken.

TELEGRAPHIC.

ARRIVAL OF THE HERMANN

Interesting from Europe.

JUSTIFICATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

NEW YORK, September 1.

The New York and Bremen steam packet Hermann arrived here last night, bringing dates from Southampton and London of the 17th August. The most interesting item of intelligence embraced in her advices is the announcement by the London News that the Austrian Government has addressed a long memorandum to all the Governments of Europe respecting the affair at Smyrna. The design of the note is to show that this action is the first step taken by the United States towards the realization of the Monroe doctrine.

Great Fire and Loss of Life.

Several warehouses at Dover have been destroyed by fire, involving the destruction of property worth fifty thousand pounds sterling. The intense heat during the fire caused a portion of Dover Cliffs to fall, killing a number of the firemen.

More Loss of Life.

The scaffolding of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham had fallen, killing eleven persons and badly injuring twenty others.

Further by the Europa—New Complication of the Eastern Question.

BOSTON, August 31.

The steamer Europa arrived here this morning. Her advices embrace the following additional particulars relative to the Eastern question:

It was rumored at Vienna that in the event of Russia making an inroad into Servia, Austria would occupy the fortress of Belgrade.

Advices from St. Petersburg state that notwithstanding the negotiations that are going forward, the War Department is as active as ever in making its preparations.

The acceptance by the Czar of the Vienna propositions was not unconditional. He would not consent to evacuate the Principalities until the Porte should sign an agreement tantamount to the concession of all the points in dispute.

The Embassador of Persia has assured the Porte of the assistance of that nation, and notified the Sultan that a large force was collecting in Persia which would be placed at his (the Sultan's) disposal.

The Sultan has ordered the Greek Bishops to return immediately, the Bishoprics having been unsustained.

Russian emissaries continue to foment disorders in various parts of the country.

France.

Louis Napoleon has relinquished his contemplated visit to Dieppe, in consequence of the new complication of the Eastern question.

Sailing of the Humboldt.

NEW YORK, August 28.

The New York and Havre steampacket sailed to-day for Southampton, with over three hundred thousand dollars in specie. Mr. Jackson, Charge to Austria, is among her passengers.

New York Cotton Market.

The Cotton market is active, and to-day sales embrace 3000 bales at firm prices.

Contributions for New Orleans.

NEW YORK, August 28.

The collections in this city for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in New Orleans, now amount to thirty-five thousand dollars.

Star of the South.

NEW YORK, August 28.

The steamship Star of the South has arrived from New Orleans.

New York Cotton Market.

NEW YORK, August 29.

The Cotton market here is dull to-day, and the sales have been limited to 400 bales.

Refugee Case.

NEW YORK, August 29.

Judge Edwards, of the Circuit Court in this city, has discharged the Scotch refugee who was claimed by the British authorities under the Ashburton Treaty.

Mayor Arrested.

NEW YORK, August 29.

The Mayor of Montreal has been arrested, charged with murder, for causing the death of sundry persons on the occasion of the Gavazzi riots. He has, however, been released on giving bail.

Contributions for New Orleans.

BALTIMORE, August 30.

The Jewish congregation in this city has contributed six hundred dollars for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in New Orleans.

Appointments.

WASHINGTON, August 30.

The Washington Union of this morning contains the official announcement of Carroll Spence as Minister to Constantinople, of Georgs Sanders as Consul to London, and of others previously reported.

Riot at Niagara Falls.

NEW YORK, August 29, 1853.

A dispatch from Buffalo states that a riot took place yesterday at Niagara Falls, arising from the arrest of a negro named Watson, charged with having murdered a Mr. Jones, at Savannah, three years ago. A mob of three hundred negroes collected and attempted to rescue Watson from the officers, but the latter called in the assistance of a number of Irish laborers, and a desperate fight followed. The negroes had succeeded in taking Watson from the officers, but he was recaptured and the negroes were entirely defeated. Watson was immediately sent South.

Relief for New Orleans.

M. Jullien announces a grand concert for the relief of the sufferers by the epidemic in New Orleans.

Free Democratic Convention.

NEW YORK, September 1.

The Free Democratic Convention met at Syracuse yesterday and organized by appointing John Jay President. John P. Hale, chairman of the committee, reported a series of resolutions, in which an effort was made to make the Maine law a portion of the platform. The measure was however voted down. The Convention was addressed by GERRIT SMITH and Senator Atchison, (!) whose speeches were enthusiastically received.

Sale of Ashland.

BALTIMORE, September 1.

The Lexington Observer denies that the sale of Ashland was directed by the will of Mr. Clay. The property is to be sold by public auction on the 20th inst.

Ohio River.

PITTSBURGH, August 31.

The river here is falling, with barely two feet four inches water in the channel.

CINCINNATI, August 31.

The river here is still falling slowly.

LOUISVILLE, August 31.

The river here is falling slowly. Boats now carry out three and a half feet water to the mouth of the Ohio.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, September 1.

There is a good demand for Pork and Lard at firm prices. Beef, however, is heavy.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN CINCINNATI—Cincinnati, August 30.—The committee of citizens in this city report that their collections for the sufferers in New Orleans now amount to ten thousand dollars, besides twenty-five hundred sent by the Masons.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN PITTSBURGH—Pittsburgh, August 30.—Five thousand dollars have been sent from here for the New Orleans sufferers, and the collections are still going forward. They will probably reach $8000. [Eve. papers.

FROM THE PLAINS.—St. Louis, August 25. The Santa Fe mail arrived at Independence on the 23d instant. There was considerable difficulty throughout New Mexico on account of the Mesilla question. The Mexicans are loud in their dissatisfaction.

The Indians were quiet. Among the causes of excitement was a difficulty between Messrs. Weightman and Thomas.

Business was very dull, both at Santa Fe and the points below. Fort Arkansas would so Late from Washington.

The [illegible] arrived [illegible] and Lower [illegible]

The [illegible] to Acapulco [illegible] lights, [illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] at Panama [illegible] steamer [illegible] Pacific [illegible]

On the [illegible] vessel [illegible]

[illegible] morning of the [illegible] and New [illegible] ward and [illegible] gun and [illegible]

The [illegible] following [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] Abrica [illegible] Berry [illegible] Jas. [illegible] Parker [illegible]

From the [illegible] we take the following:

Indian Depredations.—A party [illegible] Indians, who have been [illegible] mitting depredations upon [illegible] Tuolumne county, lately [illegible] daring in their outrages that the [illegible] under the necessity [illegible] them. A volunteer [illegible] chased the [illegible] left without overtaking [illegible] the effect, doubtless, [illegible] time.

Mining.—The present [illegible] able to mine, in all [illegible] miners seem to be generally [illegible] sessing [illegible] remunerating by the [illegible] extinguishing the rainy [illegible] stores, the coal [illegible] months cannot [illegible] be larger [illegible] the opening [illegible] effect. It [illegible] gage than [illegible]

Wife Case.—In Marin [illegible] dered in the Supreme [illegible] that will attract [illegible] prise in the Atlantic [illegible] that the unlawful [illegible] of Calabomia, [illegible] State that the [illegible] in them and [illegible] over them. The [illegible] lands remaining [illegible] only the minerals themselves. [illegible] decision establishes [illegible] will not, it will prevent [illegible] the State by making the [illegible] revenue, which has never [illegible] they are receipted [illegible] and Government.

Strikes.—The shipwrights [illegible] struck for more wages [illegible] day, and have succeeded [illegible] now.

The long-shore men [illegible] nine hours for a day's work, [illegible] succeeded.

The Crops.—The winter crops [illegible] parts of the State are safe. [illegible] it is said will yield twenty [illegible] five per cent less than last [illegible] erwise. The [illegible] has advanced the price [illegible] and the farmers will [illegible] their crops, between [illegible] the fall.

From the Placer Times and Transcript we [illegible] the following:

Emigration.—Large numbers [illegible] emigrants are [illegible] Carson river and [illegible] all represent the [illegible] scarce along the [illegible] droves of cattle have [illegible] Valley. The crops [illegible] Salt Lake were backward [illegible] provisions and vegetables [illegible] that arrive [illegible]

Arrival at Last!—The San [illegible] of the 1st inst. says:

The steamer [illegible] days from Panama. [illegible] of this vessel will [illegible] of the Commodore [illegible] on the Pacific [illegible] with the latter [illegible]

Peppers.—[illegible] ages to grow [illegible] State. In [illegible] been in [illegible] arrests having [illegible]

At last accounts [illegible] predatories [illegible] mated number [illegible] house [illegible] certain [illegible] county [illegible] Mr. Day [illegible] but [illegible] valley [illegible] Los Angeles [illegible] opposed [illegible] The people [illegible] was put [illegible]

A person [illegible] as the principal [illegible] at North [illegible] Deputy Sheriff [illegible] the Court [illegible] mated Dawson [illegible] having [illegible] the U. S. [illegible] summons [illegible] same [illegible] officer, [illegible] Dawson and [illegible] Judge [illegible] with [illegible]

There [illegible] over. The [illegible]

Bays:

The [illegible] sailing [illegible] unusually [illegible] chandlers, [illegible] some [illegible] of [illegible] upper [illegible] Europe [illegible] Jurisdiction [illegible] Washington [illegible]

By the Atlantic [illegible]

Wings to Washington [illegible]

BANK NOTE LIST.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES

EDUCATION.

[illegible] FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

WARREN NEWSPAPER AGENCY.

MRS. PEYO'S SEMINARY,

DR. J. T. KENYON,
Cedar's Well, Miss.

BUSINESS CARDS.

[illegible]

[illegible]

S. A. HENDERSON & CO.,

[illegible]

S. ROBB & Co.,

[illegible]

A NEW RELIGION!

Price's Patent Tea Pots.

SOUTHWESTERN BOOK STORE.

[illegible] BOOKS

JEFFERSON STORE.

Druggist and Stationer

$100,000 WORTH OF Clothing, Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods, &c., at Retail.

CHEEVER, DAMERON & CO.,

Carpeting, Oil Cloths, Matting, Curtain Goods, Upholstery Goods, etc.

26 Chartres and 21 Customhouse Streets.

T. H. JACKSON & CO.,

FASHIONABLE CLOTHING,

AND

GENT'S FURNISHING STORE,

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1853.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & Co.,

MATTHEW HEADEN'S

CLOTHING

Watches, Camden & Co.,

MERCHANTS.

WILLIAMS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

[illegible]

Mc'Kimmie & Carter.

New-Orleans Christian Advocate

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference. { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. W. DORSEY, W. MURRAH, } Publishing Committee of Mississippi Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 32. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER [illegible]

HYMN FOR THE EVENING.

Come! come! come!
Come to the place of prayer;
The day is past and gone,
And on the silent air,
The voice of praise is borne.
Sweet is the hour of rest;
Pleasant the heart's low sigh,
And the glow within our breast,
And the hope beyond the sky.
Yes, tuneful is the sound
Of glad hearts as they sing;
Welcome the glory round
Shed from the Spirit's wing.
But bliss more sweet and still,
Than aught on earth o'er gave,
Our weary souls shall fill,
In the world beyond the grave.
Earth with her dreams shall fade,
And our bodies turn to dust,
But our souls shall soar and sing,
In the mansions of the just.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate]

WE WILL KNOW EACH OTHER AFTER DEATH.

On this difficult subject we merely give our opinion, and hope for respectful cogent light upon it from others.

The peerless parable of the rich man and Lazarus, recorded in the sixteenth chapter of Luke, is in a certain sense a peculiar celestial triangle telegraph, one end on earth, one in heaven, one in hell, connecting these three worlds. Communications have been made. The rich man and Lazarus recognize each other after death, remember their own history in this life, were conscious of their future state, became personally acquainted with Abraham, conversed with him in a manner which showed that they and he were familiar with these three worlds. Abraham said of the five brothers of the rich man, who were yet on earth, "They have Mosee and the prophets." This shews that the rich man and Lazarus lived in the Mosaic dispensation. But Abraham died about 330 yeare before that dispensation began, and of course at least that long before their lifetime—therefore he was not cotemporary with them. Nevertheless he and they became personally acquainted with one another after death. And such is the state of things that Abraham was not unhappy when he saw the rich man tormented in the flame of hell. And so it must necessarily be with all saints in heaven. Even in this life Christians are happy and rejoice in hope of the glory of God, notwithstanding the sufferings of their fellow-beings. Mankind after death will, no doubt, have vision and knowledge to see from world to world, and analyze to a vast extent the works of nature. Surely the pure souls in the paradise of God would delight in such employment. Let us contemplate the interesting, rapturous and glorious associations that will take place in heaven. Those who walked on earth in christian pilgrimage side by side will meet together there. Others who never saw each other in this world will become fully acquainted. The great and holy men of the church below will doubtless be in ratio great in the church above, and hold divine convocation from time to time as the endless cycles of eternity roll on in supreme grandeur. Millions of parents will find their own dear little children and babes, small in stature as when they died, but O, how changed—incorruptible, immortal, intelligent and happy. See that father when he enters heaven embrace his lovely child, and that mother her sweet babe and press it to her bosom. O, what joy, peace and love will fill their souls unutterably full of glory and of God.

But the contrast on the other hand is awful. All sorts of incorrigible sinners assembled to dwell together in endless misery. And the fact that they will then recognize their former wicked companions, and remember their sinful career on earth, will contribute vastly to their eternal anguish.

The parable of the rich man and Lazarus, like many other passages of Holy Writ, has a two-fold, or present and future signification. First, it shows that the souls of saints are happy, and those of sinners miserable, between their death and the final judgment. For the circumstances and conversation between the parties took place while the five brothers of the rich man were yet in this life. Second, it refers to our state in eternity. The rich man said, "Send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue." Now, the "finger" of the one and the "tongue" of the other, are yet in their graves, and will remain there till the resurrection. After that, Lazarus with his finger and whole body, will have physical, mental and moral happiness eternally. And the rich man, with his tongue and whole body, will have physical, mental and moral misery without end. St. James says, "The tongue, [of the sinner] is a little member, and boasteth great things; it is a fire, a world of iniquity; it defileth the whole body; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." No wonder that the tongue which does so much evil in this life, and will not repent, shall endure endless pain.

The doctrine that we will recognize one another after death, is in accordance with the whole tenor of Scripture. It gives life, interest and grandeur to the Bible. It unfolds the sublime spirituality of the christian religion and the final condition.

But if this doctrine be not true, what then? Shall we wake up in a future state, like new born babes in this world, surrounded with objects and beings, but know nothing at all about them? Shall the saints find themselves in heaven, but not know how or why they came there? Must they remain in perpetual ignorance of all they ever knew in this life. Or must God again reveal himself to them? Will they, then, like infants, begin to learn? Again, shall the wicked in the world of no less misery, in like manner be ignorant? Will they not know the reason why they suffer?

Christian reader, shall we pursue this dismal hypothesis any farther? No, no! Let us into the broad daylight of the Bible. Let us, after death, leave the school of time and enter the college of eternity and take with us all other knowledge we had in this life, and then begin to learn the higher branches of nature and divine revelation, and "the love of God which passeth knowledge."

D. KINNEAR.

Louisiana, August, 1853.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

SCARCITY OF PREACHERS.

WEAK LUNGS.

It is unquestionably true that many of our preachers fall and retire partially from the pulpit, and not unfrequently die prematurely from feeble or diseased lungs, brought on by preaching. This is a matter of undoubted importance, and deserves more than the present passing thought.

If I am not mistaken, this great evil is brought on improperly and unnecessarily by the preachers themselves. I am inclined to think that preaching, as a vocation, is of great advantage to persons who are supposed to be laboring under disease of the lungs. I have not much faith in the notion of weak lungs, at best, though I have no doubt many persons labor under diseased lungs, or those which are predisposed to disease. Such persons will, in my estimation, derive advantage from a vocation that will bring the lungs into vigorous, but healthful exercise, such as public speaking, singing or the like.

The idea that feeble men, or men having what are supposed to be weak lungs, cannot preach as much or as well, on account of their lungs as other men, is a great error in my judgment.

Many instances might be cited of persons whose lungs are in a very diseased and wasted condition, and who are able to preach as much as the stoutest men.

The Rev. John C. Burruss, well-known to many, it was supposed twenty-five years ago, had lost one entire lobe of his lungs, and yet there are few men able to preach more than he. Rev. Preston Cooper, of the Mississippi Conference can preach as much as the next man, with lungs known to be excessively diseased and wasted away. Both these gentlemen preach with vigor and tone sufficient for any camp meeting. The venerable Father Garrett, now of the Mississippi Conference, is near ninety years of age. He is very small and excessively feeble—a child has more strength than he—and yet he is able to hold a camp meeting congregation an hour and a half, bound to his stentorian voice, so that the farthest man in the congregation shall distinctly hear every word. The writer of these observations was, ten years ago, according to the doctors and all reasonable appearances, dying rapidly with consumption. He has preached some since that time, and is now as far from consumption, apparently, as any other man, and as to his physical ability to preach, he is second to but few. These men and many others that might be named, will not die of preaching. They live of it.

Now, how is this? Many persons are really dying from exertions in the pulpit. The difficulty with them is that they breathe unnaturally while preaching. They make vocal sound in the throat or upper part of the lungs, while the lungs themselves are exhausted of air. Breathe naturally—make sound in the abdomen—let the abdominal muscles perform the labor of sound making, and the lungs will play as easily as though you were asleep.

It is very much doubted whether the lungs labor any more, if used properly or naturally, while speaking to an audience, than at any other time.

This is believed to be a matter of great importance. Our preachers must learn to utter sound naturally, or die of the pulpit. It is worth thinking about.

It would perhaps appear strange to one of these weak lung preachers, if he were to see a person of one-twentieth part of his physical strength, utter, in the course of an hour, as much vocal sound as would be necessary in preaching a sermon. And if he were to see him do this several times a day and grow fat in the practice, he would perhaps not be so ready to complain of his lungs.

What, one-twentieth part of a man's strength? Impossible! No, not impossible. It is a very common occurrence See that little fellow in the cradle, of three or six months old. Make him mad and give him a chance, and he will make every one hear within a quarter of a mile. He will keep it up an hour at a time, if need be, or if necessary requires, and grow fat on it.

And yet a man complains of being so feeble that he cannot perform similar or even less labor.

But notice that little fellow, and see how he breathes while preaching. He breathes naturally. His abdominal muscles perform the labor of vocal utterance. His lungs are kept constantly inflated—no squeaking in the throat with lungs exhausted of air. He throws the sound downward, and with open throat gives free and full utterance to the sound.

See a dog panting, when very tired. You can learn a good lesson here. He breathes (like the baby) according to the best and most perfect rules of rhetoric—naturally. The abdominal muscles perform the labor.

The writer pretends to know but little of the science herein alluded to. He fully believes, however, that had he continued preaching as formerly, he would long since have occupied a consumptive grave. The way he was in would have led him to death from weak lungs. He did not lessen his quantity of preaching, but on the contrary increased it. He endeavored, however, to breathe naturally in the pulpit, and took some pains to [illegible] himself to that course of preaching.

The course recommended will not only improve health and preserve life, but it will improve the preaching otherwise, greatly, rendor it much more pleasant and effective. The preacher can be heard further, and much more distinctly in the open air, his voice will be more full and clear, and in every respect his oratory will be improved; and above all, the lives of many preachers will be saved.

But the change cannot be made, in most cases, without care, labor and much rigid discipline. A bad habit long indulged in of this kind, cannot be broken off in a moment. We must go back to elements of vocal utterance, and train ourselves from the first principles. You cannot make the change in the pulpit, until after you have become somewhat accustomed to it by close training elsewhere.

Now, all that has been said above, is well known and perfectly familiar to many of our preachers, but there are many others who either do not know or do not think of these things, and hence I have thought it not amiss to speak of them. You may rest assured the remarks are made by a

PREACHER'S FRIEND.

NO IMPROVEMENT.

The arts and sciences are the inventions of man. What man invents, as it is of course imperfect, he may improve without end. Religion is a revelation from God. Like its author, it is perfect, and is incapable of improvement. It admits no change, no progress, no diminution, no addition. Christianity was complete and consummate in its very infancy. Or rather, it had no infancy. Like the first parents of the human race, it came from the hand of its author, mature in all its faculties, perfect in all its attributes. By every past attempt to improve it, it has only been deteriorated and debased. Nor is anything better to be anticipated for the future. Far sooner might weak, aspiring mortals hope to add lustre to the sun, or beauty and order to this fair and well adjusted creation, and to improve, by the refinements of learning and philosophy, that religion which has come to us direct from heaven, and which, in all its features, bears the impress of its perfect and divine author.

These remarks are so self-evident that no argument is required to sustain them. But at the same time it must not be forgotten, that while christianity or the religion of the Bible admits of no improvement, our apprehensions of that religion may and ought to be improved. Our ignorance leads us into many mistakes in our interpretation of the inspired writings. In the Protestant as well as in the Romish Church, false views have been imbibed from those writings—views as unphilosophical as they are unscriptural. This, too, is so obvious, that it will not be called in question by any intelligent man. Even during the Reformation, reformers differed among themselves; Melancthon differed with Luther, and Luther in his earlier years differed with Luther in his latter years. Thus, all found it necessary to rectify and modify their apprehensions of divine truth. Now, to maintain that those great men extracted the whole truth from the Bible, and mingled no human error with it, is a mark of folly—of arrant nonsense, such as no intelligent mind ought to consent to have charged upon it. Luther himself believed in sorcery and witchcraft, the frequent personal appearance of the devil, and other errors. So did other reformers; so did John Arndt at a later period, etc. Those crudities are now rejected; has the Bible or the Christian religion changed? no, that remains unchangeably the same. But we have learned to understand the Scriptures better. The world has been progressing in science and in the knowledge of God's word ever since, and hence our apprehensions of the divine teachings have been improved, and there is still room for much improvement. [Lutheran Observer.

THE HAPPY MAN.

The happy man was born in the city of Resignation, in the parish of Repentance unto Life; was educated in the school of Obedience, and now lives in the plain of Perseverance; he works at the trade of Diligence, notwithstanding he has a large estate in the county of Christian Contentment, and many times does jobs of Self-denial. He wears the plain garments of Humility, but has a better suit to put on when he goes to court, called Christ's Righteousness. He walks often in the valley of Self-abasement, and sometimes climbs the mountain of Spiritual-mindedness. He breakfasts every morning on Spiritual Prayer, and sups every evening on the same. He has meat to eat which the world knows not of; and his drink is the sincere milk of the word. Thus happy he lives, and happy he dies.

Happy is he who has gospel submission in his will, due order in his affections, sound peace in his conscience, sanctifying grace in his soul, real divinity in his breast, true humility in his heart, the Redeemer's yoke on his neck, a vain world under his feet, and a crown of glory on his head. Happy is the life of such a man. In order to attain which, pray fervently, believe firmly, wait patiently, work abundantly, live holily, die daily, watch continually, guard your senses, redeem your time, love Christ, and long for the glory which comes by Him. [From an ancient manuscript.

COST OF PUBLIC WORSHIP.—Suppose a congregation to consist of 500 individuals, and the whole expense of the society to be $2000 per annum, what is the cost to each individual each Sabbath? Ans. A little less than eight cents! Eight cents a week for religion—enormous! Neighbor, if you are crushed under the burthen, just smoke two cigars less in the seven days, and it will relieve you; buy a couple of oranges less, and the saving will pay the minister's tax.

LESSONS BY THE WAY.

Sparks from "The Lamp and the Lantern." By James Hamilton, D. D., of London.

When you cast your eye over this British commonwealth, and over the equally numerous trans-Atlantic Republic: when you call the lesser companies of believers in France, Italy, Switzerland, the goodly bands in Prussia and Holland, and the missing churches of Polynesia, India and Africa; when you think what all the Bible has been to you; when you think of the the Saviour, whom it has revealed, of the earthly home it has gladdened, and the bright hereafter which it has opened and insured: and when you further consider, that all which your Bible has been to you is as nothing compared with what it has been to more vivid believers—to those not only for whom, but to whom Christ lives "to whom all its promises—re "yea, and amen"—to whom its heaven is not a mere futurity commencing by and by, but a blessed present, which can never cease; when you consider all this; you will allow that it would be a less calamity which would withdraw the sun from the firmament, or the oxygen from the atmosphere, than that which would rob regenerate humanity of the vital air and cheering light of revelation. * * *

Countless instances might be quoted, where, to every range of intellect, from the little child up to the learned philosopher, and in all emergencies, from a matter of daily routine up to a question of life or death, the all-fitting and all-foreseeing word of Christ has been the antidote of temptation, the incentive to duty, the joy in tribulation. On its anvil, fastened in a sure place, thousands have suspended their earthly future, as well as their eternal all, and they have not been confounded. With its sword turning either way, they have put to flight armies of doubts and fears, and whole legions of Satanic suggestions. Times without number, on the guilty conscience or the troubled spirit has a healing leaf descended, fresh from the Tree of Life, and charmed into the evening's ecstacy the morning's anguish. * * *

Under God's eye read God's own book, and pray for that Comforter's teaching, who can make the literal Scripture a living message, and a transforming power. Then, when your principles and rules of action are derived from this celestial source, you will understand how a man, by becoming truly scriptural, becomes "a temple of the Holy Ghost;" and if you cannot say it yourself, when Christ's word dwells in you richly, you will understand how another could say it, "I live, yet not I; Christ liveth in me." Believing God's truth, and receiving God's Spirit, as long as the Lord lives you need never want a friend, nor is long as he has a cause in the world, need you ever want a pursuit.

* * * * *

Fond as you are of books, there is only one that you will value at last; and with your head on the pillow, you will hardly care to be told, that a new volume of the great history is published, or a marvellous epic, outpeering all its predecessors. "No; read me the twenty-third Psalm. Let me hear the fourteenth of John." When your strength sinks yet lower—when your interest in all under the sun has faded away, and ebbing life affords not even a parting tear—it will for a moment rally the worn faculties to hear the whisper, "My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever." "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." And when all is over—when to orphan children and desolate kindred the world is grown a great sepulchre, and the most tender friends are vain comforters—when letters of condolence lie unopened, and words of compassion fall like hail-stones on the heart, the first thing that sends a warm ray into the gloom, and brings to the eye tears that are not bitter, is when Jesus himself breaks the silence, and you hear, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

* * * * *

The world is full of sufferers; and if you do not meet with them in the streets, city missionaries and others will soon direct you to their dwellings. There, as in the public hospital, you will find them, bed-rid, consumptive, palsy-stricken, blind, wasting away in direful diseases, and what can you do for them? What can philosophy do? What can mere human philanthropy do? The one would discourse on the pain-conquering power of a resolute will, or would expatiate on the lot of mortality, as if writhing anguish could be mesmerized by stoic saws, or a fever could be cured by fatalism; and the other, wiser and kinder, would seek for the tossing sufferer better attendance, or a purer air, or a less uneasy couch; but it is a short limit to which, when humanity has gone, it can go no further. The best skill cannot cure old age; the rarest cordial cannot tempt the sickly palate; the purest air, the softest couch, the kindest nursing cannot conjure into health those that are doomed to die. But, in his mercy, God has provided an assuagement for such misery—an effectual antidote to the worst ingredient in the cup of woe. Visiting your poor neighbor, you will probably find that antidote already in the house, but its value is still unknown. It is your privilege to be the ministering angel, and to point out to the dying Hagar the hidden well. Putting into the words as much of Christ's own tenderness and kindness as you can, you read or repeat some appropriate passage; and, just as the scanty strength can bear it, you add here a little and there a little, and renew your visits, till, in an arrested ear and an opening heart, God crowns your love and answers your prayers; and those only who have seen it, can tell the difference between the sick chamber where there is no hope, and one lit up with immortality—between the dull endurance, or the rebellious resistance of the stricken transgressor, and the patient cheerfulness and prophetic joy of a Lazarus, whose sorry couch is spread in glory's vestibule. * * * * *

Would it not be good for every one to keep for himself a little store house of Bible illustration? Every work that elucidates Scripture is useful; but to each person, the most serviceable of all commentaries would be one of his own compiling. Were any one to get an interleaved Bible, or still better, perhaps, a blank paper book, and whenever, in reading a theological treatise, or a work of Eastern travel, or in listening to a sermon, he found a dark saying expounded, or a trite saying happily applied, he treasured it up, his casket would soon fill with treasures of great price. Even although, as is usually the fate of such experiments—even although the record was imperfectly kept up, its value would be unspeakable. Every text thus illustrated becomes, in turn, an illustration; not only an enlightened surface, but a luminous source—a torch to a hundred parallels—a candle to all the context; and although you never made more than a few dozen entries in such a book, they would shed more meaning over the Bible than days of careless and cursory perusal; and when you had nearly forgotten all other books and sermons, the biographical incidents, the theological elucidations, the illustrative maxims and memorabilia, which you had thus garnered up, would survive, as interesting and instructive as ever.

HE IS ABLE TO SAVE TO THE UTTERMOST.

He. Who! Not Peter. Not Paul. Not Isaiah. Not Moses—but Jesus.

Is able. Mark that word. He is willing. It is impossible to doubt it. He is more than willing. It would intensely gratify him. The manger, garden, cross—all touchingly attest it, Was ever love so strong! It drew him from the bosom and throne of God, to the form of a servant, and the grave of the crucified! But has he power? Can he do what he would? Power? All power, in heaven and on earth. There is his creative power, by which, when he spake, it was done. There is the power of his infinite merit, by which he satisfies and honors the divine law. There is the power of his illimitable grace, by which he arrests, convicts, renews, ennobles the soul.

Is able to save. Have you ever thought of it? Salvation demands power—marvellous power—power like that which wrought in Christ, when God raised him from the dead. Who that has observed the force of depravity in others, can doubt it? Who that knows his own heart, but feels it? When the Son of God converts a sinner, it is not as when he created the world. Matter has no will. To the divine voice it offers no resistance. It heard the creative fiat and obeyed. The soul of man resists—often with desperation. God speaks, but it disregards, controverts, contemns. It sets itself in battle array against God! Yet Jesus is able to save.

Is able to save to the uttermost. There. The power of language is exhausted. It can go no further. What sinner need die without hope? Not one. To the uttermost! If you limit that, you sin against the Saviour.

It may refer to number. No matter how many come unto God by him, he can save them all. Let the guilty millions of earth come. They shall feel his grace: They shall rejoice in his love. They shall be enthroned with him in glory.

Or it may refer to character. No matter who or what they are that come, the king, or the peasant, the child or the aged one, the ignorant or the wise. Though they have made themselves abominable, like Manassah; or have had seven devils, like the Magdalene; or have breathed out threatening and slaughter against him and his people, like Saul—still he is able to save them. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.

Or it may refer to duration. He can save those who come to him, not for a day only—or a year—or for ages—but for ever! His blood will always be efficacious. His atoning merits will always be infinite. His Almighty power will never fail. No—he hath obtained for us an eternal redemption.

POWER OF GOD.

"And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places." Eph. i. 19, 20. "Observe with what variety of expression the Spirit of God labors to give us some adequate conception of that power by which we believe—power, greatness of power, exceeding greatness, exceeding greatness of His power. What Angel in heaven can tell us what all those amount to? God (with reverence be it spoken) sets His whole force to this work. It is compared to no less than the working of His mighty power which he wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead. To raise any one from the dead is a mighty, an Almighty work; but to raise Christ from the dead, carries more wonder with it than to raise any other; He had a heavier grave stone to keep him down than any other besides, the weight of a world's guilt lay upon Him, yet notwithstanding this, He is raised with power not only out of the grave, but into glory. Now the power God puts forth upon the soul in working faith, is according to this of raising Christ, for indeed the sinner's soul is as really dead in sin, as Christ's body was in the grave for sin. Reader, art thou any way acquainted with such a power of God to have been at work in thee? or dost thou think slightly of believing, and so show thyself a stranger to this mystery? Certainly this one thing might resolve many that they have no true faith, because they make faith so trivial and light a matter, as if it were as easy to believe, as to say they do; and it were of no more difficulty to receive Christ into their souls by faith, than to put bread into their mouth. Ask some, whether ever such a day or, time of God's power came over their heads, to humble them for sin, drive them out of themselves, and draw them effectually unto Christ? and they may answer as those did Peter, when he inquired whether they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed? 'We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.' So these might say, We know not whether there be any such power required to the working of faith or no."

SONGS OF THE NIGHT.

"Light is the countenance of the Eternal," sang the setting sun. "I am the hem of his garment," responded the soft and rosy twilight.

The clouds gathered themselves together and said, "We are his nocturnal tent;" and the waters in the clouds, and the hollow voices of the thunders joined in the lofty chorus, "The voice of the Eternal is upon the waters, the God of Glory thundereth in the heavens, the Lord is upon many waters."

"He flieth upon my wings," whispered the wind; and the gentle air added, "I am the breath of God, the aspirations of his benign presence."

"We hear the songs of praise," said the parched earth; "all around is praise; I alone am sad and silent." Then the falling dew replied, "I will nourish thee, so shalt thou be refreshed and rejoice, and thy young infants shall bloom like the young rose."

"Joyfully we bloom," sang the refreshed meads; the full ears of corn waved as they sang, "We are the blessing of God, the hosts of God against famine."

"We bless thee from above," said the gentle moon; "We, too, bless thee," responded the stars; "and the lightsome grasshopper chirped, "Me, too, he blesses in the pearly dew-drop."

"He quenched my thirst," said the rose; "and refreshed me," continued the stag; "and grants us our food," says the boasts of the forest; "and clothes my lambs," gratefully added the sheep.

"He heard me," croaked the raven, "when I was forsaken and alone." "He heard me," said the wild goat of the rocks, "when my time came, and I brought forth."

And the turtle-dove cooed, and the swallow and other birds joined the song; "We have found our nests our houses; we dwell upon the altar of the Lord, and sleep under the shadow of his wing in tranquillity and peace."

"And peace," replied the night, and echo prolonged the sound, when chanticleer awoke the dawn, and crowed with joy: "Open the portals, set wide the gates of the world! the King of glory approaches. Awake! arise! ye sons of men; give praises and thanks unto the Lord, for the King of glory approaches." [The Friend of Israel.

PATRONAGE IN THE ENGLISH CHURCH.

The Hon. and Rev. S. G. Osborne, writing to the London Times, relates the following case, upon the authority of two respectable persons, one of them a clergyman:

"There is in Cornwall a certain parish called St. Ervan. In or about the year 1851, by the death of the then incumbent, the living became vacant. The patron wished to sell said living (the next presentation or the advowson, I am not informed which,) at the highest price he could obtain. A gentleman was found, very infirm, paralytic, utterly incompetent to do duty, and giving every prospect, from his state of health, of affording to the purchaser speedy possession. To this gentleman the living was given. It was some time before he was brought to the spot for induction, etc.; he had then to be supported up the aisle by two persons; jelly and wine, says one informant, wine and water, says another, were supplied him at the reading-desk. He was not able to get through the Thirty-Nine Articles in the morning; becoming very unwell, he was removed from the desk to the inn, in an almost fainting state. In the afternoon, however, he was again brought down to the church, and did succeed in finishing the reading of the said articles. Another clergyman from a neighboring parish had been sent for, to be ready to finish the service, in case this new incumbent should, through weakness, fail to do so. So fatigued was the poor man with the effort, that he was detained in the neighborhood under circumstances causing great apprehensions for his safety. He never resided; within these few weeks the living has become vacant. 'The whole scene,' says my correspondent, 'was one calculated to inspire unqualified disgust.' Now, how this poor paralytic man passed muster before the Bishop of Exeter I cannot understand. If this story is true, and I challenge investigation into its truth, and will not withhold the name of my first informant, if it can be proved substantially false, the Spetisbury case, different as it was to all concerned in it, [illegible] me a far less flagrant breach of [illegible]

PREPARATION FOR DEATH. Who [illegible] down at night, [illegible] were not to awake till [illegible] more. And when you [illegible] ling, consider that [illegible] live accordingly. [illegible] day that night [illegible] of which you will never see the night, but which of your mornings or nights will be such you know not. Let the mantle of worldly enjoyment hang loose about you, that it may be easily dropped when death comes to carry you into another world. When the corn is forsaking the ground, it is ready for the sickle; when the fruit is ripe, it falls off the tree easily. So when a Christian's heart is truly weaned from the world, he is prepared for death, and [illegible] him. A heart [illegible] a heavenly one, and [illegible] heaven, when our heart [illegible] [Burton.

SUBDUE YOUR ADJ[illegible]

The exaggerated ty[illegible] favorites are fr[illegible] taken off in the [illegible]

"Coming out of the Ath[illegible] ing," says the Boston H[illegible] sion of the opera, three beautiful young ladies who were walking before me [illegible] selves in giving utterance to [illegible] performance. Their dialogue [illegible] something after this fashion: The italics are their own:

Animated Young Lady. Oh, Julia, did you see that elegant dimple on [illegible] arm?

Enthusiastic Young Lady.—Certainly I did love, and the dimples all over her dear, large beautiful face and neck. Is not she an angel?

Unimpassioned Young Lady.—Why, how you rattle on. I am sure I only saw a large fat girl, with a pretty face and good voice. Your angel is a monster for size, if she is an angel.

Animated Young Lady. How can you say so, Mary! I am sure she is divine. What a celestial voice she has, Julia.

Enthusiastic Young Lady.—Is it she sublime? Oh! I never, in all my life, heard such heavenly notes.

Animated Young Lady. I'd give the whole world if I could [illegible] like that. I have felt as though I was in Paradise all the evening. She is certainly a [illegible] creature.

Unimpassioned Young Lady.—Pooh! do not talk such nonsense. Alboni is well enough as an opera singer; but she is not an angel, nor in any other sense a divine creature. The newspapers call her [illegible], and spoil her and the public, too, but [illegible] are paid for that.

FATHER GAV[illegible]

EMPLOYMENT AND [illegible]

And what are th[illegible] To pray it is not nec[illegible] yont. And also, gen[illegible] prayer of nuns is [illegible] prayer must be very [illegible] the direction of Paul [illegible] known tongue. But [illegible] behalf of the unlearned [illegible] try they paint [illegible] they work at [illegible] take care of [illegible] which is to make a pul[illegible] and they [illegible] to be [illegible] Queen [illegible] sugar-p[illegible] in a bad [illegible] sugar-pl[illegible]

[illegible] These [illegible] the u[illegible] A[illegible]erican and C[illegible] fore nothing [illegible] from [illegible] lips touchi[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] alas! if [illegible] ma to rev[illegible] tery! Yo[illegible] I fled [illegible] called [illegible] of Christ;" but [illegible] they enj[illegible] looks, win[illegible] [illegible] even [illegible] th [illegible] The you [illegible] a yo[illegible] If a nun, that [illegible] pe sacrifice of her li[illegible] monasteries M[illegible] thro despair, a[illegible] re of the[illegible] t pelled to be nu[illegible] or confessors; [illegible] y their death in[illegible] Miss Tal[illegible] in a nu[illegible] B[illegible] four hundred [illegible] wh the priests of [illegible] don [illegible] rangement. W[illegible] astute relation, sh[illegible] inmate of [illegible] Lady Howard

[For the [illegible]

A RECIPE FOR NO[illegible]

UPO[illegible]

The follo[illegible] obser[illegible]arefully, [illegible] utte[illegible] ty-[illegible] in It is [illegible] I[illegible] w[illegible] soul [illegible] might be [illegible] had a go[illegible] ing; be [illegible] especiall[illegible] time

The

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OUR FRIDAY SABBATH.

Friday, the 2d i[nst.] was set apart by our Mayor for religious observance, humiliation and prayer before God, in view of the [sickness] prevailing upon the city, [as shown] in the calendar, as [of the] 4th." Long may it be ere [it occurs] again.

[The day] was early and very generally sustained. [All] places of public resort closed, not excepting being closed even on Sabbath. The various churches opened, and divine service attended by a stricken population with marked solemnity. Afflictions spring not out of the dust. It is the prayer and expectation of many hearts that a season of religious awakening and interest may follow this last loud call of God. Let all pray and labor for it.

The Mayor of Mobile, under similar circumstances, has appointed Tuesday, 6th inst., as a day of humiliation and prayer. The people, judging by the tone of the press, have gladly accepted it. We see, by a published card, that the Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists were to meet together in one church—the St. Francis street. For fellowship this is good; but if this arrangement was made, under the apprehension of thin houses, our Mobile friends will be mistaken. The churches here had good congregations. People were in the house of God, not wont to be there.

In this connection, we gratefully record the abating of the fever. The mortality lists show a great falling off. And though this is the month and the time of month, at which the yellow fever as epidemic is highest, we hope soon to record its disappearance. Ten thousand graves have been filled in the three months, closing at this date.

CORPUS CHRISTI.

Rev. H. S. Lafferty says, in a communication before us, 13th ultimo, that he was appointed to this "outside mission" by Bishop Paine, at the last Texas Conference, and that he is trying to break ground. He speaks of many discouragements, but thinks people are there worth saving, since Christ died for them, and that the Church can be established there, since it was meant for every where in all the earth. He asks for aid, and we let him tell it in his own words, premising that he has been preaching to good congregations, who deport themselves well, in a rented school house, without pulpit or "regular seats":

"But in this world, and especially in the southwestern part of it, we have learned to take things as they are, and not as they should be, and bow to necessity. We commenced the building of a Methodist Church on the first of this month. The walls are to be ready for roofing by the first day of October. For want of material out of which to institute a building committee, I had to make myself responsible, superintend, and became almost a regular day laborer, and after prayer and reflection, I have concluded to bring the case before the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate."

Help him, if you can.

SOME PEW DIFFICULTIES.

Our Methodist people and preachers are sometimes out of heart while struggling to keep up a church, by gathering the poor dimes and soliciting donations here and there, and then not always keeping it up comfortably, and never stylishly. The more so, when they cast an eye over the way, and see how swimmingly their pew friends get on. No picayune collections—no passing the plates around there. None of it. The thing is done by checks on the bank. Select congregations and money easy!

Our plan works badly sometimes, and never with opulence. It needs development and improvement. But the other has its difficulties, too—not less serious than ours. Let us endeavor to realize the idea of a Christian Church, and worshipping congregation, and look on this, then on that. Our opulent neighbors have consciences and can read. They wake up sometimes to their position, and see it in the light of the Gospel—a full treasury, and a fine audience; but the poor—where are they?

The Register, an influential paper of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia, in its issue of the 20th ultimo, holds the following language:

"There is something radically defective, or it may be wrong, in the way in which some matters in connection with the Church are managed in our larger towns. A church, for instance, is built by means of the so-called contributions of a number of persons who expect to have the amount repaid them out of the sums obtained by the sale of the pews; or they take into their own hand so many of the pews, at such and such prices, as will remunerate them. Now it may, or it may not be, that if this were not done, the church would not be erected. Be this as it may, we ask, is this the true way to build churches to the glory of God's great name, and the due furnishing of the means for the celebration of His high praise? In saying unhesitatingly that it is not, we know full well that we are going in the teeth of public opinion as exhibited in the general practice. But let any one look at what has been the effect of this system in all or any of our larger towns, as well as in many of the smaller.

"The first effect is, that such large sums are paid for pews, in order that one may have the privilege of paying the annual [assessment] of a very large number of persons [for] their privilege altogether. The [effect] is, that the church gets filled with those who are rich, or would be esteemed such. The result of this is, that the representative of our Lord, the pauperes Christi, are, so far as that congregation and its ministrations are concerned, almost, or it may be entirely, lost sight of. But we envy not the position of that Rector, or of those Wardens, whose boast is that they have no poor. These poor—and they will never cease out of the land—are not able to build for themselves fitting churches; yet the poorest of the poor are as much entitled to have a fitting church to go to, as are the richest of the rich. It is insulting—not the poor, but Almighty God—to talk, as some have done, of building plain churches for such people. We repudiate such a notion; for we believe that in the Lord's house the rich and poor ought to meet together, and that in proportion as they do so, they both shall be the better for it.

"Rich and poor are only comparative terms. But all these are to meet in the House of the Lord, as they shall all die and mingle with the clods of the valley, and rise again and stand together at the bar of judgment, and receive each for himself according to that he hath done with his talent or talents, be it one, or five, or ten. But now, under existing circumstances, can these all meet together in the house of God? We venture to deny that they can; and we say so, because we know that they do not; and we believe that if they could they would. Now, we are inclined to think that the buying and selling of pews in churches has far more to do with all this than may at first appear. It makes the house of prayer a place of merchandize, and too often he is the greatest who can give the most for what is put up, or esteemed as the best place. This, with weak human nature, gendere too frequent strivings of pride, and spurning of the less favored. The seat in the sanctuary is occupied on the same principle as the seat at the opera, because it has been paid for; or like the room at home, because it is our own property. This latter reason is often urged when anything is to be done to the church. Does it need painting, for instance, or does it need a new roof, why, we are urged to give money to pay for repairs in order that we preserve our own property. And yet this house has been given to God, and, by solemn consecration, devoted to His service. This notion of property, which is the result of purchase and sale, brings with it the notion of exclusion. Hence we see the stranger, sometimes walking the length of the middle alley, wistfully look to the right and left, but no door is opened, and he slowly retires; or we see a knot of such waiting at the door until they are ushered by the door-keeper to some empty seat, lest, helping themselves to seats, they should not be long there before the rightful owner—he who has bought it—should come with his family or friends and peremptorily intimate to the strangers to find another place, as this is theirs, and so betake themselves to their fans and their devotions."

This is plain speech, and coming from the quarter it does, commends itself to consideration. Let aristocracy build its softly feathered nest some other where than around the altars of God. This religious aristocracy may be a very convenient and popular thing, but there is one difficulty about it—religion forbids it.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Blackwood, August.—The last (or one before the last) number, contained a comforting defence of those who like a "little drop." Yet the writer was a friend to Temperance, etc., etc. In this there are coarse and bitter jests upon Methodism, worked into "Lady Lee's Widowhood." Since the day of Sydney Smith others may be allowed to try their hand at this business.

London Quarterly.—The July number contains a very review of the lately published memoirs of Tom Moore, by Lord John Russell. It brings singular charges—that the Irish poets inspiration was from books, not nature!—and that in books he was soon over his depth in shallow water. Better sustained charges than those against his true inspiration, as a poet, are gathered from the dates, facts and confessions of his diary and correspondence.

Westminster Review: July.—Under the usual review of "Cotemporary Literature" is the opinion—"Literature in America is stirring onward." The Westminster joins with the London Quarterly in pronouncing Lord John's editorship of Moore's Journal slovenly.

YELLOW FEVER ABROAD.

From all parts of the country we have the most appalling accounts of the spread of the yellow pestilence. Places that from their high and salubrious situations have been heretofore considered exempt from its visitation, have been attacked, and indeed it would seem that there is no location free from it. In some instances quarantine regulations have failed to prevent its ingress, and in others, where free communication has been allowed with our pestilence stricken port, the disease has not made its appearance until late in the season, and until the inhabitants had been lulled into a false security from a long exemption. At the eleventh hour it has appeared at these places, and with a destructiveness most appalling. The city of Natchez, with its high and airy situation, perched as it is on a bluff, exposed to healthful breezes and free of every thing productive of local malaria, has been visited by it, and in a most destructive form. Mobile, with its sea breeze and its dry and sandy soil, for a long time exempt, although in constant communication with New Orleans, has also been attacked, and the disease now rages there with a virulency unprecedented.

Even our boasted watering places on the Gulf shore, if report say true, have not been without their share of the malady, and there seems to be no security in any of our Southern towns.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Newbern, Ala.—We have just closed a long protracted meeting here, which has resulted in great benefit to the church, as well as in the conversion of sinners. About forty have professed faith, thirty of whom have attached themselves to the different branches of the church, and yet others will join. Considering the fact that the white population in the country around is very sparse, and that most of the inhabitants were already religious, this is a very considerable revival. Some of the oldest and most rebellious have been brought to the simplicity and affection of little children, and in fact the work has been principally among adults. "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thee, O Lord, give glory and strength."

I cannot close this without making suitable acknowledgment of the services of our efficient Presiding Elder and several of the neighboring Methodist ministers, as well as some of other denominations.

Aug. 29, 1853. Francis M. Grace.

Geneva Circuit, Ala.—We have just closed a meeting of interest at Pleasant Hill Church. It commenced 20th inst. (third quarterly conference.) There seemed to be a manifestation of the power of God from the commencement. On the Sabbath Brother Dickinson preached a most excellent sermon, that was attended with grace. The meeting was protracted two days, during the time twenty joined the church, sixteen whites and four blacks. Many professed the forgiveness of their sins, and the church revived. Our preacher in charge, Brother James Mills, reports the circuit as being in a prosperous condition, having received about seventy in the church during this quarter just closed, to which I would say, to God be all the glory, for that which our ears have heard, our eyes have seen and our hearts have felt.

Aug. 26, 1853. B. F. Paice.

Clayton Circuit, Ala.—I feel constrained to ask a small space in the Advocate, gratefully to record the loving kindness of our gracious God to us, on this (the Clayton) circuit, Alabama Conference. Our third quarterly meeting was held in this place (Clayton) on the 16th and 17th of July. Our Presiding Elder, Rev. S. F. Pilly, was with us, and preached in demonstration of the spirit and of power, and so encouraging were the prospects, that we protracted from day to day for twelve days, which resulted in the accession of twenty-six white and ten colored members to the communion of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Immediately on the close of the meeting in Clayton, we commenced a three days' meeting at Tabernacle, which continued five days, with the addition of twenty-five members to the church, twelve white and thirteen colored. Once more, at my regular appointment in Louisville on Sabbath, 14th of this inst., the congregation was so large, attentive and serious, that we protracted the meeting eleven days, and in closing at this place we number something near eighty accessions. In those meetings many of the most influential, who have long heard and withstood the calls of the Gospel, have yielded, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and professed faith in Christ. To God be all the glory.

In all of the above meetings we are greatly indebted to the Rev. H. B. Banks for the part he took in the protracted labors, and in the last named, we were favored with the additional efficient labors of Rev. James Shanks.

And now, sir, let me ask the prayers of the Church, that we may have wisdom, patience, etc., to teach and guide these new recruits in the paths of righteousness, that they may be useful in their day and generation.

Aug. 29. Wm. B. Neal, P. C.

Centre Circuit, Ala. Conf.—On the 9th July, assisted by local brethren, I began a two days' meeting at Ashury Chapel, which we protracted till the ninth day. The results of this meeting were about thirty conversions, and twenty-three additions to the church. This was a meeting of great interest. On Tuesday 26th July, I commenced a meeting at Lebanon, which was continued a few days. The church was much built up—12 or 15 conversions and 11 accessions to our army. On the 10th day of August, we began a two days' meeting at Edward's Chapel, which was continued nine days, resulting in between forty and fifty conversions, and fifty-four additions to the church. There were at this meeting the greatest number of bright, powerful conversions that I ever saw before, at one meeting. Many of the accessions were young men of great promise; and withal, this is considered to be the most glorious revival with which this country has been blessed. The circuit is generally in a healthy condition. J. M. Towles.

Crawford Circuit, Ala.—The Lord is still reviving his work in our circuit. Since I wrote the local preachers held a four or five days' meeting at Shady Grove; thirteen whites joined the church, and several conversions and stirring up of the members was the result.

They also (namely Rev. J. Ardis, J. C. Ardis, Dr. Kennon and M. Y. Pruitt) commenced a meeting at Salem. Myself and Brother Turner joined them after two or three days, and held on two weeks, which resulted happily. Accessions 14 whites, and 44 colored members. About twenty-seven conversions among the whites, besides numerous backsliders reclaimed, and the members generally quickened. We had another at Flint Hill; four joined, and several were converted. We commence our Camp meeting to-night at Salem, and expect, with the prepared state of the people generally, to have a good meeting. Lord grant it!

September 1. Wm. P. Miller.

Jacksonville Circuit, Ala.—Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, Pastor of this Circuit, in Benton county, Ala., numbering 26 appointments and 4 Camp Grounds, divided by a range of mountains, to be crossed and re-crossed, often gives cogent reasons why it should be divided. But in these mountains the Gospel succeeds. He writes September 1: "The growing importance of this country imperatively claims our attention. The Selma and Tennessee Railroad will soon develop the unknown resources of these valleys. In keeping with the genius of Methodism, the duty of prompt occupation is at once seen and felt; the proportion of itinerant labor is sadly deficient in comparison with other portions of our Conference, not more important. The population is dense, and an extensive religious interest now prevails throughout the Circuit, and we confess ourselves not a little surprised at the ease and earnestness with which the Arminian (or as I prefer Methodist) doctrines are preached by those who hitherto took special delight in ignoring or abusing them. They are now found to be exceedingly useful, and from present indications, we are warranted in the prediction that a few more as successful efforts will decide entirely in their favor. I have held one protracted and two Camp Meetings, which resulted happily. A considerable accession to the Church, and many clear and satisfactory conversions. The churches at these places have been very much strengthened and confirmed. My warm-hearted friend, Brother Hamill, with a part of his corps of efficient and whole-souled local preachers, came very opportunely to my help at both Camp Meetings. My gratitude to them may not be expressed on paper. We are trying the Missionary spirit of the Jacksonville Circuit, and if the results of the Cold Water Camp Meeting, and the White Plains Camp Meeting, furnishes a correct indication, our report will disclose an unprecedented liberality in this cause in the history of this upcountry.

"We are inclined to think our report will show hundreds instead of tens. I am persuaded to hope that the beautiful and proverbially liberal Jacksonville will be finely represented in this cause. I think I shall complete the thirty subscribers for the Advocate. A few more will reach that number."

New Salem Circuit, Texas.—The Lord has blessed his work all round (or nearly so) this Circuit. It is the Southern part of the old Henderson Circuit, and now supplied by a young man, Brother Simpson, who has done well. I have been with him most of the time—done little else for last two months, than attend meeting. I. Taylor.

Aberdeen, Miss.—Rev. T. W. Derman writes September 1: "I have just returned from Aberdeen again; the meeting is closed; results, 122 conversions; a majority of whom have already, and others yet will join the church. Truly, a glorious work of grace."

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDY.

LaGrange, August 15, 1853.

At a meeting of the officers and students of LaGrange College, held August 15, 1853, a joint committee of six being appointed to draft a preamble and resolutions relative to the death of Rev. James W. Hardy, President of this institution, reported the following, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, God in his wisdom has, by his afflicting hand, removed from earth our kind and honored President, and has, by this dispensation of his providence, taken from the Church one of her humble and most faithful watchmen, from society one of its most invaluable friends, from education one of its strongest and most energetic supporters, from the bosom of a grieved and sorrowing family a husband and father, and from us, one whose counsels we respected, whose instructions we appreciated, and whose meekness and gentleness of spirit and goodness of heart we admired and loved. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That whilst we mourn the loss of one so amiable, and regard with the most profound sensibility this afflicting visitation, we bow in meek submission to the will of God, and in the language of our revered and departed friend, can say, "He that trusteth in the Lord shall be saved,"

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his bereaved family, who, of all others, are most sorely afflicted, and recommend to them Him who was the comforter of the departed in his last hour, and who has promised to be a "husband to the widow."

Resolved, That we who have long known and loved him, will cherish with affection his memory, strive to imitate his virtues, and as a mark of our esteem, will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of the deceased, to the Nashville, Richmond, Charleston, Memphis, and New Orleans Christian Advocates for publication, and that a copy also be recorded in the College register.

O. F. Cassey, S. P. Rice, J. J. Hutchinson, Jr., B. J. Wier, A. Monefee, John C. Jones, Committee.

SMITH W. MOORE, Chm'n.
Wm. H. Bibb, Sec'y.

An Acceptable Present.—The Philadelphia Bulletin suggests to the good people of Boston and New England, the sending of a cargo of ice to the New Orleans sufferers. It would doubtless be a most acceptable present.

METHODIST PRESS.

Mission in New Mexico.—The Pittsburgh Advocate says: "We learn from a communication of Dr. Schon, in the Nashville and Louisville Advocate, that the Methodist Episcopal Church South, are about establishing a mission at Santa Fe, and Rev. Joseph Nicholson, of the Mississippi Conference, brother to Rev. E. G. Nicholson, of the Pittsburgh Conference, has been selected for the important work. These two brothers in Christ and in the flesh are thus likely to be associated in their future labors in this distant and most interesting field. May their joint labors be crowned with the divine blessing. Rev. J. Nicholson has considerable knowledge of the Spanish language and character, having resided both in Spain and Mexico."

Spiritual Manifestations.—Some persons have already communicated their satisfaction and some their surprise (as we expected) at the article published by us on this subject last week. The former declare it, coming from the source it does—a well-balanced, educated, sincere and religious man—the best thing they have yet seen. Others declare it "humbug." For our part we declare nothing; only that we did not feel at liberty to decline such grave testimony, seriously given, on an unsettled question. There it is; do with it as you please. Rev. Abel Stevens and Professor Mattison have lately been having a controversy in the Advocate and Journal on "Spirit Rappings." We quote a few words from a communication furnished that paper by Stevens, August 18th:

"There are three theories respecting this odd affair. One admits its alleged supernaturalism, as in Rev. Mr. Beecher's 'Report.' I have denounced this dangerous concession, and endeavored to counteract it. A second ascribes it to jugglery, imposture, etc. This, I understand, is Mr. Mattison's view, as presented in his book. It was originally mine. A third attributes it to some physical cause—some 'imponderable' agency—similar to electricity, magnetism, etc. This view is presented in the book of my valued friend, Mr. Porter, of the New England Conference. I have chosen Mr. Porter's solution rather than Mr. Mattison's, and have endeavored to counteract, by it, the prevailing abuses of the subject."

The following remarks from the editor of the Memphis Advocate are excellent and timely. He is discoursing about camp meetings:

"To our ministering brethren we offer the following thoughts, which they may take for what they are worth:

"In our experience we have found three kinds of preachers, and three kinds of preaching, of very little use in revivals. The preacher who is flippant and too forward, or one who is too modest and backward, or the lazy preacher, who loves his ease too well to make a long continued, laborious effort—neither of these will profit the church much, at any time; but if you have a revival progressing, put no such man up to preach, unless you are willing the work should be greatly retarded, if not entirely stopped. With regard to preaching, we have generally found that pretty sermons, long sermons and controversial sermons were out of place at a revival. Short sermons upon some vital point in experimental religion; short, warm, pithy exhortations; short, often-repeated prayers; and singing with the spirit and with the understanding, hymns and spiritual songs suited to the occasion; these we have always found to be best. Another point: at a camp meeting the people may be cold to be at home—night meetings, therefore, may be admissible; but if you are holding a meeting in the country, the best policy is to have your meetings altogether in the day, otherwise preachers and people will soon become so worn as to oblige you to close, though you should leave scores of mourners unconverted.

"Finally, we call upon the Church generally to be with one accord constantly engaged in prayer to God for a general outpouring of his Spirit upon all these meetings, and may we soon have the pleasant task of recording in the columns of the Advocate the conversion of hundreds of precious souls in every quarter of our wide-spread field."

Department at Conference.—The editor of the Northwest Advocate is offering the preachers some advice on this subject. He begs they will consider it by no means rebukatory but cautionary. After quoting the Discipline as to deportment in Conference (which, by the way, can't be bettered,) and warning against tobacco in all its forms—filthy weed breeding filthy habits, and doing unknown damage to clean floors, furniture, etc.—he gives an extract from Dr. Clark's letter to a Methodist preacher:

"He who despises little things shall fall by little and little. Do not, therefore, disregard the following small rules: Give the people where you lodge as little trouble as possible; never desire any of them, not even their servants, to do anything for you that you can conveniently do for yourself. It is a mean thing to see a person whose character should be the servant of all, pressing everybody into his service; giving unnecessary trouble wherever he comes; turning a house upside down; and being dissatisfied with everything that is done for him. I have always seen that those who require most attendance are the most difficult to be pleased; they are generally of a proud or discontented spirit, and such a spirit is never satisfied. Be more of a truly Christian and noble spirit. It is the highest interest to do [as] few trouble as possible, and esteeme it a luxury to [wait] on our own necessities."

Life of Bishop Bascom.—The Nashville Advocate of the 25th ult. says:

"The biography of Bishop Bascom is completed, and is ready for publication. But where and by whom it is to be published has not been determined. If published soon and in good style, we predict for it a very extensive circulation."

As to Jesuit schools, Dr. P. suggests that we say, yes; "That if the Methodists are determined to patronize Jesuit schools, as it seems they are, and thank [God] that the Roman system of education [is] [not] universal[ly]

our own to develop the mind, the moral Conference ought to establish College of its own, for their accommodation. And if Methodists think that dancing is so necessary to education, as to lead them to send their daughters away from home to seminaries where that art is a special and important department of the institute professorships of the same in our own seminaries, and so have it at home—that is, if the home education would be as good as the former.

Young Men's Aid.—The Advocate is still discussing, and inculcating the principles and objects of the Minister's Aid Society, putting to rest fear or suspicion, and showing it to be thoroughly Wesleyan.

Western Tour.—The S. C. Advocate of the 2d inst. informs us that: "Bishop Soule, accompanied by the editor of the Nashville Advocate, Dr. Jonkins, is on his way to Louisville to attend the annual meeting of the Western Missionary Board, which meets next week. He will afterwards proceed to Cincinnati to attend the session of the St. Louis Conference; the editor of the Advocate, Dr. Jenkins expects to accompany Bishop Soule in place of the editor of books."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE LABORER AND HIS HIRE.

Mr. Editor—The communication in your paper concerning the proper allowance of our preachers, has attracted my attention, and caused me to think on the subject some thought. The allowance of a hundred dollars per annum is considered a shame to the church, and fully satisfied it would long since have been raised, had it not been for the meanness of our preachers, in legislating for themselves.

I have not an unkind word to say of either Williams, or "Common Sense," and in my view I may differ from them, but in twenty years and more I have labored hard, and have ever felt it my duty to see the preacher paid. I remember, that in the change from [illegible] since the one hundred dollars was considered an allowance for a single preacher, the prices of every kind has advanced, and in some more abundant; so much so, that one hundred dollars is of no more value now than one was at that time. This I have a fear of successful refutation.

We like the idea of a self-denying ministry, men who give up all, to preach, but would we hold out a bribe to tempt men to enter the Itinerancy, but I say, [illegible] asking and expecting too much of men to labor and toil for the salvation of souls at their own expense. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." In our own State, [illegible] field hands, are hired for $150 per annum, clothed and fed into the bargain. I am aware that some of our people think we are taxed to the support of the ministry, and of charity, while there are no claims more deserving of remuneration for their services, than all want ministers of intelligence, piety and moral worth. Such men as we could get for many other kinds of employment, (not half so arduous or laborious) for three, or four times as much as we pay, or $200. In all conscience that is enough, and the man that can't live on a hundred dollars a year, is not fit for the ministry, fit to be a preacher. Let us be economy, in providing for the wants of her ministry, should not tempt one to lay his hand with wealth on the one hand, and poverty or want. Let the minister see that his services are appreciated, by a liberal return a good support. Give him a support with which he may purchase for himself and family something to the various benevolent enterprises in our church. The wants of the ministers have to make, to do as much as those passes that of any other class of men in society around us. We don't want to plant the standard so that they should have more than enough to clothe them. We want them to have the means of saying to their "flock" in all obedience, as well as in Christian example, "follow me, as I follow Christ." Many of our ministers, in many instances, are not so provided for, but in a few instances the Quarterly Stewards, by a liberal allowance for traveling expenses, may enable them to live in comfort; hence we might tempt many of our brethren to precipitate marriage with a view to a better support. I shall, therefore, propose to the Quarterly Conference, of which I am a member (if some one else does not) a petition to the next General Conference to raise in all cases the disciplinary allowance, or to double the present amount, and I think the same will be generally done throughout the Southern Conferences. I am sure Brother Williams will go for it.

September 2, 1853. A Bi[illegible]

A Contemptible Opinion.—This is one of many who use the words contemptible and wrong in the same sentence. "Professor [illegible]son, in a discourse he appended at by the [illegible] Mr. Porter, I beg leave to tell my opinion [illegible] is a perfectly [illegible] Porter [illegible], I never [illegible] of your [illegible] which was not [illegible]."

The Cholera.—By reference to the [illegible] of deaths, it will appear that the disease is [illegible] diminishing in fatality as rapidly as it [illegible] soon the infection will have gone from the residents, and will have spent [illegible] upon any the unprotected strangers who have come under the influence of it. We have been deceived. We expect to hear of no more deaths among [illegible]

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY.

...n—Sister ELIZABETH McLEOD, wife of Chas. McLeod, (formerly a member of Ala. Conference,) and daughter of John Frances Wamack, was born in Washington county, Ala., January 8, 1812, married ...8, 1851, and died in Tuscaloosa county, August 6, 1853, leaving a husband, an ...daughter, and many friends to mourn ...parture. About fifteen years ago she ... the subject of converting grace, and ...ed herself to the Methodist Episcopal ... of which she continued to be a faithful consistent member till death. A acquaintance was sufficient to assure ...that she had a strong mind and a generous heart. It is enough to say, she lived and ...a Christian. The last words she was ...to utter were, "Lord, receive my spirit."

J. C. HUCKABEE.

...thern Christian Advocate to please copy.

CAROLINE STUART GILLESPIE, wife ...e Rev. C. C. Gillespie, of the Ala. Conference, and daughter of Charles ...d Sarah Stuart, of Mobile, departed life in Tuskegee, Ala., on the 15th day ...gust last, aged 25 years, 5 months and 1 ... She was born in the city of Mobile on ...4th day of March, 1828, was baptized ... Rev. William Murrah about the year ... was converted to God and joined the ...Franklin Stroot Church" under the min... of the lamented Rev. Giles P. Sparks in ...r 1844, and was married on the 17th ... of November, 1848. She left three little ...n, one nearly five years old, one nearly ... and one, her only daughter, a little ... of four months. Death, to one so young, ...with such a lovely and dependent charge, ...sually solemn and trying, ...quently, during the first part of her ill... she was heard to pray, and seemed to ... in soul for her children. During the ...ree or four days, she was, most of the ...delirious. But on Sunday, the last day ...she lived, she was rational during most ...forenoon, and was constantly engaged ...yer. Once she prayed aloud and with ...fervor for some time. Her petitions ...that God would "spare her life" and ...e her to health," to the society of her ...nt mother and friends," that she might ...the comfort of her husband, the guide ...children," and that she "might live a ...devoted and useful life;" that she might ...e as "not to grieve God any more." ...then called upon the name of Christ, ...viour, acknowledging that "he was ...y help in this her hour of need," that ...m, and not in any human help, was ...y dependence," that there was "no one ...m she could come to God but him." ...en made humble confession of her ...acknowledging that she "had not ...s closely with God as she ought to ...done;" that she "had not loved and at... the ordinances of God's house, espe... the preaching of the gospel and class ..., with that fervor and diligence that ...her duty;" that she "had not been as ...al in private and in her family, in ...g the Scriptures and in prayer, as she ...to have been." She prayed God to ... her, and search her heart as with a candle." Afterwards she was heard to ...gain, much in the same manner. To... noon she became delirious, and re... so until she died, which was Monday ... just as the day...n rose.

...bbath, two weeks before her death, ...ed quarterly meeting and partook ...Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. At ...me remarked to the brethren present ...she was unwell. On Monday she took ... with her mortal sickness. She suf... on during her short life, frequently ...others knew it not.

...was a woman of quiet deportment and ...pensive spirit, though very cheer... well, and in the society of her ... She was reserved and modest in ...om, but warm and consistent in her ...ents.

...ved her children with a great love. ...her health permitted, she always ...her two little boys to bow at her ...before retiring to rest at night, and ...the beautiful, appropriate and com... prayer she had taught them. Her ...happiness she sought almost entirely ...the limits of the home circle. She ...desire for display, and was as free, if ..., from vanity and ostentation, as ...an being the writer of this has ever ...

...brought up with great strictness ...nurture and admonition of the Lord." ...became a scholar in the Franklin ...Church Sunday School, and was after... ...mistake not, a principal teacher ...time. When a girl, she always ...matter of principle to attend class-... Those habits maintained their in... upon her character and life until ... Not long before her death, she was ...seen to rise from her bed, just ...ng, and kneeling down, to pray ...vently. She had great sympathy ..., the sick, and the sorrowful in ...loved to visit them.

...a woman of most excellent wis... the management of her household ...care of her children, and longed ...h not impatiently, for that bless... to the wives of most itinerant permanent home. Such a woman ...ood according to all her worth ...gone. She is no more! She is ... God alone can comfort the be... for a faith, an assurance, in refer... spiritual state, and a living hope ...st and the resurrection, sufficient ...that dark scepticism of the heart ...which overwhelms us like the night of death in the hour of bereavement!

C. C. GILLESPIE.

Southern Christian Advocate will please copy.

DIED.—In New Orleans, of yellow fever, on the 10th of August, 1853, JOSEPH S. HORNE, aged 26 years, third son of William and Elizabeth Horne, of Clifton, Cloggan, County of Galway, Ireland.

The deceased was a dutiful son, an affectionate brother, and the highly esteemed friend of all who knew him during a residence of ten months in this city.

DIED.—September 4, of yellow fever, Rev. M. T. BROOKS, aged 35 years. He was a native of Vermont, but for the last six months a resident of this city. At one time he was an itinerant preacher in one of the Northwestern Conferences, but bronchitis stopped his preaching, and he was making his living by mechanical labor. In the suburbs of the city he had raised up a Sabbath School, the nucleus of a future congregation and church, and in many ways was improving his talents. Till stricken down, he was engaged relieving the sick and destitute, and by pureness and labor and love, had endeared himself and his faith to many.

DIED—In Autaugaville, on the 2d day of August, 1853, Mrs. CLARISSA DAVIS, consort of Dr. B. T. Davis, daughter of Robert and Penelope Motley. She was born 1824, joined church 1847, professed religion the same year, and lived a pious servant of our Saviour. The morning of the day she died, being asked if all was well, she replied emphatically, "yes, I am not afraid to die."

We had prayer. Oh, how inspiring it is to talk to and pray with one in sight, as it were, of home, sweet home. We could tell you many things in connection with the history of this good sister that you and all that love our Lord Jesus Christ would delight to read, but enough to say that she lived for God, and died in the faith.

J. T. REESE.

Autaugaville, August 30.

DIED—Near Black Hawk, Miss., on the 15th August, after a protracted illness, Mrs. MARTHA P. ATCHISON, wife of Samuel Atchison, Esq., and daughter of Joseph and Ann Winn, aged 39 years.

In early life she dedicated herself to God, and connected herself with the Church, and was a faithful member. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

The bright and joyful testimony she left behind, gives us abundant assurance that our loss is her eternal gain.

J.

DIED—On August 2, CHARLES WILLIAM, infant son of Rev. T. H. Fosler, aged 1 year, 6 months and 9 days.

The Epidemic.

The following table shows (as near as can be ascertained from the best authority) the total number of deaths, by yellow fever and other diseases, in the city of New Orleans, from the week ending May 28 to September 8:

Week ending	Total.	Yellow Fever.		Other Dis.	Not Stated.
May 28	140	140	1	139
June 4	142	1		141
" 11	154	4		150
" 18	147	7		140
" 25	167	610	21	158	589
July 2	177	25		152
" 9	188	59		129
" 16	344	204		140
" 23	317	429		188
" 31	884	2210	1409	192	801
August 1	142	100		25	11
" 2	135	115		14	6
" 3	140	124		17	5
" 4	166	135		15	10
" 5	150	128		9	13
" 6	238	194		30	14
" 7	299	1186	967	40	150	4	60
" 8	216	187		23	9
" 9	201	166		21	14
" 10	230	193		33	4
" 11	223	192		13	18
" 12	207	180		25	2
" 13	214	179		22	13
" 14	232	1520	1288	26	163	15	75
" 15	217	187		24	6
" 16	193	163		19	11
" 17	210	191		21	7
" 18	210	188		22	9
" 19	224	203		15	10
" 20	224	184		29	4
" 21	360	1575	1346	21	153	15	68
" 22	283	230		34	15
" 23	258	224		24	14
" 24	222	188		23	11
" 25	218	186		19	13
" 26	193	151		29	13
" 27	185	151		26	8
" 28	1185	1507*	1243	24	169	7	81
" 29	114	99		14	1
" 30	139	114		14	11
" 31	137	95		27	15
Sept. 1	119	96		17	7
" 2	133	103		23	1
" 3	110	87		20	9
" 4	110	803	684	15	120	5	49
" 5	98	71		26	1
" 6	95	65		25	5
" 7	79	48		17	5
" 8	56	48		8	3

*This total does not include the interments in St. Patrick's, which the Secretary of the Board of Health computes at 243.

†Only six days reported from St. Patrick's this week.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of this institution for the week ending at 6 o'clock Saturday evening 3d inst:

Admissions	236	Deaths	102
Discharges	191	By yellow fever	86
Yellow fev. discharges	116

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report for the twenty-four hours ending at 12 o'clock on Sunday night, 4th inst:

Admissions	26	Deaths, yellow fever	0
Discharges	0	Other deaths	2

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report from this Institution for the 24 hours ending at 12 o'clock, Monday night, 5th inst.:

Admissions	48	Deaths	11
Discharges	22	Yellow Fever	0

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Tuesday, 6th inst.:

Admissions	39	Deaths	9
Discharges	28	Yellow Fever	8

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the 24 hours ending at midnight on Wednesday, 7th inst.:

Admissions	27	Yellow fever deaths	8
Discharges	25	Other deaths	3

NOTICES.

CAMP-MEETING.

There will be a Camp-meeting in Abbeville Circuit, at Lawrenceville Camp-ground, to commence on Friday evening before the second Sabbath in October next. Preachers, traveling and local, together with the people generally, are invited. A Missionary Collection will be taken up on the Sabbath.

JOHN WILLIAMSON, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a Camp-meeting, commencing on the fifth day of October, at Hampden, Linden Circuit, Alabama Conference, new camp-ground.

J. W. LANEY, Pastor.

July 25, 1853. aug20 2t

PICKENSVILLE, ALA., FEMALE INSTITUTE.

R. BRADSHAW, A. M., PRINCIPAL.

The next session of the Pickensville, Female Institute will, with a full corps of able teachers, commence on Monday, October 3. Catalogues, containing every necessary information, can be had by applying to the Principal.

Professor O. F. Yeagin continues at the head of the Musical Department.

PENTON KING, President Board of Trustees.

August, 27.

General Intelligence.

THE EPIDEMIC.

Although it has been authoritatively stated that the pestilence is on the decrease, a contrary impression prevails; and lest the news may go abroad that it has abated we have thought it not unfit to embody the opinions of certain persons learned in such matters, that thereby our absent friends may draw what conclusions they may.

The daily list of interments shows a marked falling off in the mortality, and taking the naked figures for guidance there might be some foundation for the assumption that the disease was greatly on the decline. It is true that the reported deaths are now about two hundred less than the highest number two weeks ago, but this proves, not that the disease is less destructive, but that there has been an exhaustion of the material. It was estimated that when the fever first broke out there were about thirty thousand unacclimated persons in the city. Of these about seven thousand have died, being a fraction over one-fourth of the entire population liable to the infection. If, out of the number stricken down, we estimate that three-fourths have recovered, it would appear that twenty-eight thousand, or nearly the entire number liable, have already passed through the ordeal. This we would gladly hope has been the case, and that in a short time we would be spared the frightful record of mortality which we are daily forced to give.

But we are aware that what is called acclimation does not exempt persons from the prevailing scourge. It is not the unacclimated alone who are subject to it. We know of persons who have before had the yellow fever, and who have received certificates to that effect from learned physicians, in the shape of full-sized bills for medical attendance, who have had the present prevailing malady, and many of whom have died. We are also aware that natives of the city have died with it, and those of them, too, who were never in their lives out of sight of the spire of the Cathedral. What, then, of the theory of exemption through long residence, and how are we to estimate what proportion of the population is subject to attack and what not? Any definite opinion on the subject, in such a state of facts, becomes an impossibility.

One thing, however, is certain, that in no previous year, at this particular date, has the mortality been so great as at present. The horrors of 1817 were as mildness in comparison thereto. Then, when the deaths amounted daily to seventy or eighty, the number of inhabitants was but little short of what it is now, and the fever had the entire population to work upon. Few, or none, had become exempt; no thousands had tattened the cemeteries, and Death entered the field as a reaper in the prime of harvest-time. Now the destroyer is among us only as a gleaner, stalking through stubble and gathering a morsel, as it were, only here and there. It is evident that but little will be left—that but few can hope to escape the present disastrous infliction. We look for sad times yet among our sorely stricken people. Ninety and a hundred a day is no small contribution to pay down daily to the exactions of the grim visitor. Few, indeed, are the numbers left, but the insatiate extortioner is clamorous for his tribute, and will exact to the last farthing, however poorly able the debtor may be to meet such strict accountability.

[Crescent, Sept. 6.

THE NEW ORLEANS TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.—Among the many noble and charitable institutions for the relief of the unfortunate and suffering sick during the prevalence of the epidemic, none have been more active and unceasing in their praiseworthy efforts to administer to the wants and alleviate the sufferings of their sick brethren than the New Orleans Typographical Union. With a zeal and philanthropy worthy of the craft, they have formed a Relief Committee, whose duty it is to attend personally to the sick of their calling, and by timely and constant attention relieve their wants and sufferings. Out of an association of about one hundred and fifty members, at least thirty-five have been attacked with the prevailing epidemic, seven of whom have died. Quite a number are still sick, but fortunately are in a fair way of recovery. The expenses incurred in attending on the sick and burying the dead have been considerable, and, so far, borne by the Union; but we understand their treasury is now entirely exhausted, and further relief will necessarily have to come from the fortunate few, who, at present, are but little prepared to render much assistance. As it will yet be some time ere the fever disappears, we sincerely hope that the typos may be spared further infliction, for truly they have had their share.

YELLOW FEVER AT THIBODEAUXVILLE.—The following endorsement was written on the mail bill from Thibodaux, September 2, which arrived here on Sunday: "Stores closed—town abandoned—151 cases of yellow fever—twenty-two deaths—Postmaster absent—Clerks all down with the fever. Respectfully,

J. C. WHITE, Ed. of Minerva."

YELLOW FEVER AT THIBODAUX.—By the arrival on Tuesday evening of the Donaldsonville packet B. M. Jones, Capt. Hagan, the reports previously received here, of the prevalence of yellow fever at Thibodaux, are fully confirmed. The Minerva of Saturday, 3d instant, states that the disease is of the most malignant type, and has created a panic among the citizens verging on frenzy. All places of business are closed. The streets are deserted, and look more like a path in the wilderness than the public thoroughfares of a thriving commercial town of 1500 inhabitants. The citizens are flying in every direction to get, if possible, beyond the pestiferous atmosphere which seems to hang over and around our before salubrious village. Up to the 27th ult. the number of cases was 22; on the evening of the same day the number had greatly increased. Mr. Anderson, of the Minerva, was attacked while engaged in making up the form.

The Editor goes on to say that all his compositors had fled. The disease spread rapidly up to Saturday evening, and the number of cases exceeded 160.

Never have we witnessed scenes of greater distress and abandonment to fear. Parents abandon their offspring, and children forsake their parents, and leave them to the protection of the benevolent stranger.

The Minerva contains thirty obituary notices, all of yellow fever.

BURNING OF THE STEAMSHIP CHEROKEE.—The steamship Cherokee was burned at New York on Friday, the 26th ult. She was loaded with a valuable cargo of silks and other merchandise, and was to have sailed on Saturday afternoon for New Orleans, via Havana. Her value before this destructive fire was estimated at $175,000, and she was not insured. The engines, boilers, and a portion of the hull, will probably be raised, comparatively uninjured, and therefore she is not a total loss.

The total value of the cargo is roughly estimated at about $350,000. She had on board about 1661 packages of goods, some of which were insured; but as it is usual to defer taking out policies until the day of sailing, it is probable that a great portion of the cargo was uninsured.

The El Dorado will take the Cherokee's place in the line for New Orleans, via Havana.

CHARTER OF THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.

At the request of several citizens we publish the charter and the amendment thereof of the above named Association, under which its members are now organized and administering the charitable donations forwarded to them for relief of the sick and destitute.

An Act to incorporate the Howard Association of New Orleans:

Whereas, several philanthropic residents of the city of New Orleans have founded a society, (which has existed since the commencement of the epidemic in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-seven,) the objects of which are to give aid to persons in indigent circumstances, and particularly during the prevalence of the epidemic amongst the inhabitants, to attend to the wants of the sick and destitute; and, whereas, the utility and influence of said Association would be more extended, and greatly increased, by being invested with powers corporate similar to those of other benevolent institutions, Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That Thomas N. Morgan, J. W. Andrews, G. Kurshedt, J. P. Breedlove, P. W. Leslie, and their associates and successors be, and are hereby, constituted a body corporate, under the name and style of the "Howard Association of New Orleans," and by that name, and style shall have perpetual succession; and be capable in law of suing and being sued, of defending and being defended, of pleading and being impleaded, of having a common seal, and the same to make, break, or alter at pleasure, to acquire, have and hold estate, real, personal and mixed, and the same to buy, exchange, sell, mortgage, transfer, pledge, or otherwise encumber or alienate, as the Board of Directors of said Association may deem expedient, and said society shall be capable in law of inheriting, receiving, holding, selling and transferring all manner of property, whether by donation, bequest, devise, or in any other manner or form from any or all person or persons, body or bodies, corporate or incorporate, in or out of this State.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, etc., That the affairs of said Association shall be conducted by a Board of Directors, to be composed of a President, two Vice Presidents, a Secretary and Treasurer, and nine Directors, who shall be elected to office annually, on the first Monday in the month of June, five of whom shall constitute a quorum; and said Board of Directors shall continue in office until a new election is made, due notice of time and place for said elections shall be given by the President, in at least two newspapers in the city, ten days prior thereto.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, etc., That the members of said Association shall make such by-laws as shall seem best to them from time to time for the admission of members thereto and for the guidance thereof, and each member elected shall sign his name to the constitution and by-laws of said society.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, etc., That until the election, to be held on the first Monday in June, eighteen hundred and forty-two, the present officers of said Association, as by its records, shall act as the Board of Directors, and that this Act shall be in full force from and after the date of its approval by the Governor of this State.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, etc., That this charter shall expire at the end of twenty years from the date of the passage of Act. And at the expiration of that time, all funds and property belonging to said Association shall revert and belong to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans, unless this act of incorporation shall have been renewed.

(Signed) WILLIAM C. C. CLAIBORNE, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
(Signed) FELIX GARCIA, President of the Senate.

Approved February 28, 1842.
(Signed) A. B. ROMAN, Governor of the State of Louisiana.

An Act to repeal a part of the fifth section of the Act to incorporate the Howard Association of New Orleans, etc.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That a part of the fifth section of the above act, in the following words, be repealed: "and at the expiration of that time, all funds and property belonging to said Association shall revert and belong to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans, unless this act of incorporation shall be renewed."

(Signed) PRESTON W. FARRAR, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
(Signed) THASIMON LANDRY, Lieut. Governor and President of Senate.

Approved March 14, 1818.
(Signed) ISAAC JOHNSON, Governor of the State of Louisiana.

Things in Mobile.

YELLOW FEVER IN MOBILE.—The interments in Mobile on the 31st ult. were 27, of which 22 were of yellow fever. On the 1st inst. the number reached 32, of which 23 were of yellow fever. On the 2d inst. the interments were 43, of which 37 were from yellow fever cases.

The interments for the twenty-four hours ending at six o'clock, P. M., on Saturday, the 3d inst., were 27, of which 25 were of yellow fever. There were twenty-seven interments in Mobile on the 4th inst., of which 22 were from yellow fever cases. On the 5th the interments were 43, of which 33 were from yellow fever.

The interments in Mobile for the week ending Saturday, the 3d inst., were 159, of which 129 were from yellow fever.

The Rev. Mr. Powell, of the St. Francis street Church, died on Saturday last.

The Barton Academy has been offered to the Samaritan Society as an asylum for the sick.

The Battle House is closed. Most of those who were engaged in it were strangers, and a large proportion of those who remained after the commencement of the fever have fallen before it. The closing of the house, therefore, was a necessity not to be avoided.

WRECK OF THE SHIP ASIA.—The ship Asia, Capt. Robinson, which was cleared on the 27th ult. by Joseph E. Murrell, for Europe, with a full cargo of ship timber for the French Government, dragged and went ashore on the 1st inst., and will, we regret to learn, be a total loss, both ship and cargo. The Captain has furnished the following particulars of the disaster:

"On Tuesday the ship was got under way from the fleet, and proceeded to sea. Upon the dying away of the wind, came to an anchor, half way between Sand Island and the bar, where she lay all night. On the following morning a stiff breeze sprang up from E. to E. S. E. Unable to get under way, let go the second anchor. Between seven and night o'clock began to strike in four fathoms water, and at nine dragged both anchors, and went ashore on the bank—sea making breach over her. The lives of the crew were barely saved; their clothing was all lost."

Another Locomotive.—On board the brig William Conner, from Boston, is the long lost engine and tender called the "Alabama," belonging to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. It may be remembered that the locomotive, with all its etceteras, was wrecked in its original passage from Boston and landed at Key West. The vessel that bore it returned at once to Boston, and the Directors of the road abandoned the article, or articles, to the underwriters. They remained in Key West until the William Condor—being loo bound to Mobile—was chartered to convey the whole concern to our Railroad Company. [Register, 6th.

MORE AID.—One thousand two hundred and twenty-nine dollars and fifty cents have thus far been collected by the Committee at Columbia, South Carolina, for the relief of the sufferers from the epidemic.

The merchants in New York engaged in the cora trade, have raised an additional subscription of $2128 for the New Orleans sufferers.

THE BURNING OF THE CHEROKEE.—The machinery and boilers of the Cherokee are found to be comparatively uninjured, and it is said that one of the leading ship builders in New York offers to raise the hull, and put the vessel in sailing order again for $100,000.

Louisiana Interior.

YELLOW FEVER AT FULTON.—We learn from a gentleman who arrived here last evening from the Ouachita river, that the yellow fever had broken out at Fulton, a village of about three hundred inhabitants, situated about one mile above Monroe, and that the deaths in one day were seventeen. The greatest consternation prevailed, and the inhabitants were fleeing to the country, leaving scarcely any to take care of the sick. The disease is said to have originated from a consignment of coffee, shipped by way of this port from Rio de Janeiro.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM LAST ISLAND.—The visitors at Last Island, as we learn from the Plaquemine Sentinel of the 3d inst., have contributed $651 for the relief of the sufferers here by the epidemic.

YELLOW FEVER IN PLAQUEMINE.—The Sentinel of the 3d inst. says:

On Friday night, the 26th ult., and the day following, two deaths occurred in this place which were pronounced yellow fever. The first was that of a stranger, who had arrived here a few days previous from Baton Rouge; and the last was a German, who had been in this country but a few months, and whose sickness had undoubtedly been brought on by an act of great imprudence. Since then we have heard nothing more of the yellow fever being amongst us; and it may be truthfully said that at present we are entirely exempt from this scourge. Indeed, at the present time, and throughout the past summer, Plaquemine is and has been very healthy; if anything, healthier than usual.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—The South western (Shreveport) of the 31st ult. gives the following account:

Coroner Rowan yesterday held an inquest upon the body of Mr. James Murphy, who came to his death in the following singular manner: While digging a well upon the premises of Messrs. E. T. Taylor & Co., about one mile from town, and being at the bottom of the well preparing to blast a rock, he requested to be drawn up. When the bucket in which he had placed himself had been drawn up, about twenty feet, he fell from it, and, in the fall, struck his head against the rock at the bottom of the well, causing instant death. Verdict of Coroner's Jury, death by accident.

The Caddo Gazette of the 27th ult. says:

The farmers in this region are sadly distressed by the long continued drouth, which is causing the cotton to shed its blooms and forms at an alarming rate. The corn is, of course, beyond the effect of the hot weather, and has been a good crop. The cotton crop will be considerably later than usual, which must necessarily throw back the business season, by a month or more.

THE LIQUOR QUESTION.—The vote was taken at Greenwood, La., on the question of "License," or "No License," on the 16th ult., and resulted in favor of no license, by a majority of one vote.

YELLOW FEVER IN PENSACOLA.—The Mobile Tribune of the 6th inst. says:

We regret to learn that the fever is prevailing to a considerable extent at this time in the city of Pensacola. We were shown a letter yesterday, dated 3d inst., which says: "Mrs. W. W. J. Kelly, wife of purser Kelly, U. S. N., died this morning—sick only three days. Captain Harris, of the brig Ottoman, recently from Mobile, was buried yesterday—sick about thirty hours. Mrs. Kelly's mother died last week, and every member of that family, white and black, is down with fever.

CURE FOR YELLOW FEVER.—We find in the Point Coupée Echo the following prescription by Dr. Warren Stone, of this city, to Captain Dudley, of the steamboat Natchez, for the treatment of any cases of yellow fever that might occur on the boat when away from medical assistance. The Echo says the prescription has been used in several cases on the Natchez with great success:

Fever commences usually by chilly feelings, followed by pain in the head, back and limbs, and heat of skin. A perspiration is easily obtained by placing the patient in bed and the feet in a hot bath under cover, when 20 grains of quinine should be given. If the bowels are confined, 10 grains of calomel may be given, and assisted, in five or six hours (if necessary) by an injection, or a small dose of oil. There is no advantage in purging beyond merely evacuating the bowels. The quinine should be given early in the disease, and the bowels can be opened afterwards. In other words, do not delay giving the quinine on account of the bowels; and the dose of quinine may be repeated in eight or ten hours. Keep the patient perfectly quiet, and as soon as the fever is off, give some nourishing drink, such as thin gruel, broth or tea, and a little stimulants if agreeable to the taste, and of such quality as the patient may choose.

YELLOW FEVER NEAR WOODVILLE.—The Wilkinson (Miss.) Whig of the 3d inst. says that town is, so far, healthy, but that the yellow fever has made its appearance at a factory about a mile from town. The Whig says:

There have been some fourteen or fifteen cases of it there this week, five of which have died. All who could possibly leave the factory have done so, and consequently there are only enough remaining there to nurse the sick. Our own citizens, also, have partaken in the flight—more than a dozen families having left for the country.

The Board of Aldermen of that town has passed the following ordinance:

That all persons coming from cities and places where the yellow fever or other diseases of a like character prevail, are hereby notified that they will be quarantined, and not suffered to enter the corporate limits of said town, for the space of twenty-one days, from the time they may have left the cities and places so infected with the yellow fever or other diseases of like character; and then not until it shall be pronounced by a Board of Physicians, to be appointed by said Board of Aldermen, that we are not likely to incur any danger from such persons visiting and remaining in said town.

That all goods, wares and merchandise, (provisions excepted,) ordered by our merchants or other persons from New Orleans, or other places where the yellow fever and other diseases of like character prevail, shall not be permitted to enter the corporate limits of said town of Woodville until after said goods, wares and merchandise have been exposed to open air for five days, without the limits of said corporation.

That the sheriff of Wilkinson county be required to enforce the foregoing orders, and that he be authorized to employ a sufficient number of persons for that purpose, who shall be paid for their services by an order on the treasury of the corporation.

CURE FOR BONE-FELON.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Clipper says, that a thimble full of soft soap and quick silver, mixed and bound tightly over the felon, will draw it to a head in the course of ten or twelve hours. The core can then be removed, and by the application of the usual poultices the sore will be soon healed. The remedy is said to be a very severe one, but altogether preferable to the disease. Bone-felons, of late years, are quite common, and the remedy, if effectual, will prove a real blessing to the sufferers.

Frost made its appearance in our city and the surrounding country on Saturday morning, 20th August. It gives us a gentle hint that we may expect cool weather ere long. [Cleveland Democrat.

Samuel J. Peters, late Collector at New Orleans, settled his accounts with the Treasury Department on Monday, when a balance of several hundred dollars, it is said, was found due him by the Government.

MONTGOMERY AND PENSACOLA RAILROAD.—Mr. A. H. Jones, Chief Engineer of this road, reports a line highly favorable as far as he has progressed upon the West side of Escambia river. [Pensacola Gazette, 3d inst.

THE MAINE LAW.—Gov. Parsons has officially announced the ratification by the people of the Maine Law, recently adopted by the Michigan Legislature. The vote stood for the Prohibitory Liquor law, 40,449; against Prohibition, 22,054.

Important from ...

MOVEMENTS OF SANTA A... WIDWA...

The following important news fr... select from the San Antonio Texian of ... ultimo:

We are indebted to our townsman, ... ama, who arrived from Zacatecas a day or ... since, for the following highly interesting ... of news, showing the distracted state of affa... in our sister republic.

The inhabitants of the entire country east of the Sierra Madre are openly expressing their dissatisfaction with the rule of Santa Anna. This tyrant of a President has imposed a monthly tax of one real (12½ cents) on every man, woman and child in the country. A monthly tax of one hundred dollars is levied upon every merchant, and mechanics are taxed agreeably to the proceeds of their respective vocations, estimated by the collecting officer. He also requires from each State a certain number of men for the augmentation of his army.

The troops to be raised in this way are to number, in the aggregate, ninety-one thousand. To effect this levy of troops, the peculiar Mexican volunteer system is adopted. As many of our readers may not be familiar with this mode of raising volunteers, we will give a brief description of the operation: Officers are sent into the country to enlist volunteers. (!) Willing or not, the men are forced into rank, tied together by long ropes, and thus led to the recruiting station, where they are distributed among the different corps. That such poor devils of volunteers, when brought into action, usually fight and—run away, is neither new nor surprising. The principal officers of this army are Spaniards.

Military rule is instituted in all the States, much to the discomfiture and dissatisfaction of the people. Many of these living near the Rio Grande are continually crossing to this side, to avoid conscription. Parents are sending their sons over, aiding them, as far as lays in their power, with the means to gain a livelihood in their voluntary exile.

The Mexican people regard war with the United States as inevitable. Many even go so far as to desire war as the only means of obtaining relief from the oppression now suffered, while others deprecate an event which will go far to destroy the nationality of their "much beloved country." There are also those who suffer under the delusion that a new edition of hostilities with this country will result in the redemption of their lost fame as a military people.

A company of sixty men, raised at Aguas Calientes under the levy above mentioned, while on their way to a rendezvous in Durango, turned upon their officers, who were forced to yield to them. They were, however, returned and ordered to be shot.

Another body of men was ordered from Zacatecas to pursue a body of two hundred Indians, who had plundered a hacienda near that city. They refused to obey the order, whereupon the Governor ordered out his own troops and had the rebels (!) shot.

At a town on the Presidio del Rio Grande a conscribing officer attempted to muster the forced volunteers, but, lo! they were missing, almost to a man. If they return, they are subject to a six years' service in the Federal army.

When Mr. Adams left, it was reported that the States of Guanajuato, Guadalajara and Morelia had pronounced against Santa Anna. It was believed that Chihuahua and several of the neighboring States would follow the example.

No provision is made for the mail service. The citizens of the different towns were compelled to carry the mail from place to place, until it reaches its final destination.

Mr. Adams reports the country through which he passed, and the crops, in fine looking order. Corn was yielding a plentiful harvest. Cotton looks well. There had been no want of rain during the season.

TELEGRAPHIC.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE—ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC—COTTON HEAVY—FLOUR ADVANCED—New York, September 8.—The Collins steamer Atlantic has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 24th August, four days later than the accounts by the Europa. Her advices report a heavy cotton market at Liverpool, with sales for the three business days preceding her departure of 15,000 bales, including 1000 for speculation and 3000 for export. Prices, influenced by the moderate demand which had prevailed, were rather more in favor of buyers, but the market closed on Thursday evening without any quotable decline.

Flour was in good demand, and prices for all qualities had considerably advanced. Western Canal was quoted at 28s, and Ohio brands were held at 30s, though sales were made at 29s per bbl.

The Provision market was quiet. Lard was in moderate request, at rates in favor of buyers.

TRADE AND MONEY.—Trade at Manchester was dull. The money market at London was tight. Consols closed at 98¼ to 98¾.

Interesting General News.

NEW YORK, September 8.

The following are the principal items of interest contained in the files of European papers brought by the Atlantic.

The Eastern Question.

The Hospodor of Moldavia has been superceded by the Sultan for persisting in his refusal to leave, but he declines to surrender his office. The English and French Consuls have withdrawn. [From what place our dispatch does not state. Eds.]

Lord Palmerston stated in the House of Commons a few nights since, that the Government was confident that the Czar would evacuate the principalities without unnecessary delay.

Ship Canal.

Capitalists are called upon to construct a ship canal from the lower bend in the Danube to the Black Sea, thus avoiding the mouth of that river.

France—Change of Duties.

A decree has been issued by Louis Napoleon, fixing the uniform rate of 25 centimes duty on breadstuffs imported into France previous to the 31st of December next. Until that date no tonnage duties will be charged on ships importing full cargoes of grain into French ports. Where corn forms part of the cargo a pro rata charge only will be made.

Austria and the United States.

The Austrian protest with regard to the Smyrna affair has been published as sent to all foreign ministers. It takes the ground that Capt. Ingraham had violated the law of nations as explained by Vatell and other eminent authorities.

Affiance of the Emperor of Austria.

The Emperor of Austria has been affianced to the Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria.

Breadstuffs in Sicily and Greece.

The import duties of breadstuffs in the Kingdom of the two Sicilies have been repealed.

The Grecian Government has issued a decree prohibiting the export of breadstuffs from that Kingdom.

Burmah.

The King of Ava has submitted to the conditions of the British, and peace has been proclaimed in Burmah.

Later from China.

Advices from China state that the Imperialists, assisted by the foreigners, had been again repulsed by the insurgent forces, and were driven from Shai-taag.

Later from Venezuela.

Later accounts from Venezuela state that the political difficulties in that State were nearly settled.

Two more earthquakes had occurred at Cumana, but they were not attended with loss of life.

Further by the Atlantic—Prorogation of Parliament.

NEW YORK, September 8.

The Atlantic brings information that the British Parliament was prorogued by the Queen in person, on the 20th ult. The Queen stated her speech on the occasion that she ... rejoiced to hope that an honorable ar... of the Eastern question would ... pished.

Havre Cotton Market.

The Atlantic reports the Cotton market ... Havre dull on the 22d ult., and prices d...

India Trade.

The latest advices from India are ... for manufactures.

The ... ship-of-war at ...

The sloop-of-war ... at Spezzia.

... conspiracy at Aleppo, the object of which was ... ered at Aleppo, the ...

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

...rm has made its ap... that county. The ... for the worm the ... ...r near that Centre... ...w visited by a storm ... fears that considerable ...se to the cotton crop. Con... ...w blown down.

...Advertiser of the 27th ult. says, ... the fears of some of the farm... ...the cotton crop would be cut short, ...noo, all are now well satisfied that ...average crop will be made.

THE NEW CAPITOL.—The Austin Gazette says: A hasty visit to the new Capitol enables us to say that the new edifice is rapidly progressing to completion. The structure of the roof is nearly completed, a portion of it is sheeted and ready to receive the covering. The building even now presents an imposing appearance, and will be, when finished off, a magnificent edifice, creditable alike to the architects and the State. It is built, too, of home material entirely—emphatically a specimen of home manufactures. The contractors, we understand, feel confident of having the legislative halls ready for the reception of the next Legislature.

We also walked over and through the edifice ...ing by Mr. De Chaumes for a Treasurer's and Comptroller's office. The first story is completed and the arches all turned, and Mr De Chaumes informed us that he would have the entire edifice completed by the 1st of December, ready to be occupied. It is of the most substantial and massive character of any similar work we have seen, and very neat withal.

FROM SALT LAKE.—From the St. Louis papers of the 29th ult. we select the following dis... dated Independence, August 28:

Salt Lake mail reached this place yesterday, after having met with many mishaps. Some distance out the stage broke down, and no vehicle being at hand, the mail, provisions, driver and passengers, all were stowed upon the two wheels, and thus reached us. In consequence of this mode of carriage, when crossing a deep creek, the mail was submerged and all its contents thoroughly soaked. The news brought in by it is of little interest. Almost all the trains had passed Fort Laramie.

A few straggling parties of emigrants, intending to winter in the Salt Lake valley, were all that they met. The passengers by the stage were, J. W. Stringfellow and Nicholet.

Respecting the El Paso news, all I can send you is the rumors at Santa Fe. The troops spoken of were approaching El Paso, intending to keep possession of the Mesilla Valley. The Mexican flag was waving there, and would until our troops reached that place. The Mexican troops at El Paso were deserting. Whether any resistance would be made by the remainder, or others to come, was not known. One thing is certain, that if hostilities break out, the majority of the inhabitants in New Mexico will lend them their aid.

FROM BUENOS AYDES.—A private letter dated Buenos Ayres, July 11, 1853, says:

"The condition of things here is growing worse daily, the poor are getting poorer, and the hopeless more despairing. Beef sufficient for a dinner has cost from $50 to $150. Animals which could have been bought in times past for $50, now commend $2000. I write of paper currency, of course. Winter is now setting in upon us; we have had some cold storms and heavy rain, and it is quite as difficult to procure fuel as food. We are no longer blockaded, and breadstuffs and fuel will become abundant, though we will continue to suffer from a scarcity of beef and vegetables. Commanders of army and navy here all have their price, and we cannot predict what sudden event may transpire to relieve us from our present fears." [N. Y. Eve. Post.

IMPORTANT FROM ECUADOR—Revolutionary Movements.—Advices from Guayaquil are to the 2d ult. President Urbina was about to leave Ecuador for Peru, ostensibly to recover his health, but in reality, it is said, on account of the difficulties in his Government.

Captain-General Robles, it is reported, was endeavoring to raise a revolution in the country, in order to throw Urbina out of the Presidency, and get himself elected. It was expected that a general outbreak would take places before long.

AID FOR THE SUFFERERS.—From the St. Louis Democrat of the 29th ult. we learn that a meeting has been held in Alton, and committees appointed to canvass every part of the town for contributions to the New Orleans sufferers. The donations are to be handed to the President of the Alton Bank, and by him transmitted to the Howard Association.

COLLECTIONS IN PITTSBURGH.—The Gazette says it is expected that $6000 will be collected in that city on behalf of the sufferers in this city.

AID FOR NEW ORLEANS.—The Directors of the Crystal Palace have determined to appropriate the net proceeds of the exhibition for one day to the aid of the sufferers by the yellow fever at New Orleans.

The Louisville Democrat of the 26th ult. has the following paragraph:

"The total amount contributed by our citizens for the relief of the New Orleans sufferers is $4102. The committees in the various Wards will renew their exertions to-day, and we hope that by to-morrow the amount will be increased to $5000."

The Charleston Courier of the 2d inst. says:

"The amount contributed at this office yesterday was $208 50, making a total thus far received by us of $7,036 30. Among the donations we notice $5 in a drop letter through the Post-office; $13 50 from the captain, officers and crew of the U. S. Revenue Cutter Hamilton, Captain Rudolph, per S. J. Wagner; $20 from the members of the Pee Dee Lodge, No. 12, I. O. O. F., per E. B. Brunson, of Darlington C. H., Treasurer; $100 from the German Friendly Society, and $100 most munificently contributed, per Cadet C. E. R. Drayton, by the Cadets of the State Military Academy, who, we are proud to record, whenever an appeal of charity is made, are ever to be found in the front rank 'animis opibusque parati.'"

LOUISIANA INTERIOR.—The Feliciana Whig of the 31st ult. has the following:

Such a season as the present, no one here, not even that universally revered oracle "the oldest inhabitant," has ever known. Since about the first of May it has reined here nearly every day. The raine have not only been frequent but very heavy, usually accompanied by wind and much thunder and lightning. The health of the different neighborhoods is generally good. The effects of so much moisture have, however, been disastrous to the cotton crop. The bottom crop will be almost a total lose. It is computed at almost nothing by every planter we have conversed with.

YELLOW FEVER ON THE RIVER.—The St. Louis Republican of the 29th ult. says:

We learned on Saturday, that there was thirteen persons sick at the Quarantine Station, three of them of yellow fever. Of this disease, there were six deaths during the week; and of about twenty cases that have been landed during the season from New Orleans boats, sixteen have proved fatal. Most of them, however, were in the last stage of the disease when put off at Quarantine. Southern boats bring very few cases, and the average mortality on each, ... has prevailed at New Orleans, ... five.

...OR NEW ORLEANS.—The Israelite citizens ...ttimore on the 28th ult. held a meeting in ... Synagogue for the purpose of ...ription for the afflicted brethren ..., who have appealed to their sym... meeting was numerously attend... names enrolled for liberal sums. ... contributed has not yet been

...AMA.—The Selma Reporter of the 1st ... says:

We are informed that worms are not only ...ing the cotton, but they have entered into ...ds, and committing serious injuries upon ... They eat the blades of the stalk, ...ing it naked.

... OF CHARLESTON.—The Board of ... of Charleston reports nineteen deaths in ... during the week ending on the 27th ... ten, and 15 blacks and ...

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

LATE AND INTERESTING FROM BUENOS AYRES—Boston, August 27.—By the arrival at Salem yesterday of the bark Edward Koppisch, we have Montevideo dates to July 11, and also later from Buenos Ayres.

General Pinto, President of the Chamber of Representatives and Provisional Governor of the Province, died at Buenos Ayres June 28, and was buried with great pomp on the 30th—the foreign ministers and naval officers being present.

A letter from Buenos Ayres says that the report brought by the last arrival that Urquiza had escaped, was erroneous. The outside party will not allow him to run, intending that he shall see them out of the scrape, or sink with them.

Official notice had been received at Buenos Ayres that General Flores had landed at San Pedro on the northern frontier of Buenos Ayres with six hundred men, and will soon have a sufficient force to commence his march, when Urquiza will be completely hemmed in. A postscript to the letter says that Col. Dias and over 300 men of the outside party had gone over to the Buenos Ayreans.

The Buenos Ayres Packet of July 2 says that Urquiza, though he may have men, has no means to carry on the campaign, being utterly destitute of ammunition, clothing and money; and that his army is gradually deserting him. The Buenos Ayreans have now at their disposal twenty-three vessels of war, and among them four steamers. Urquiza, on the contrary, by Coe's desertion, has lost all his ships, among them, some he has recently purchased, including the propeller Utah, late of New York.

Since the raising of the blockade there had been a fair number of arrivals at Buenos Ayres, and means will be taken to revive its trade. Doubloons were quoted at 336. There was no produce in the city. The U. S. steamer Water Witch was in port.

The Jamestown had gone to Rio de Jansiro, and Capt. Dornin, her commander, gave the traitor, Com. Coe, a passage, for which he is severely condemned. The price of Coe's treachery, it is said, is $150,000.

The American Chargé, Mr. Pendleton, in his own name, has obtained a partial supply of beef, vegetables, etc., for his countrymen.

The island of Martin Garcia has fallen into the hands of the Buenos Ayreans.

ANOTHER SLAVE CASE AT CINCINNATI.—Cincinnati, August 27.—Three slaves from Virginia, on their way south with their owners, having been landed at the wharf yesterday, were brought before Judge Flinn, on a writ of habeas corpus, and their liberation demanded, under a statute of Ohio, which provides that all slaves brought into the State by their owners shall be free. After an exciting trial, which lasted till near midnight, the slaves were remanded to the custody of their owners.

YELLOW FEVER IN PHILADELPHIA.—Philadelphia, August 28.—The deaths for the past week amounted to 227, including 134 children. There were four deaths from yellow fever, and eleven from other kinds of fever.

THE TRIAL OF THE RAILROAD CONDUCTOR—New Haven, August 29.—The case of Comstock, the conductor of the New Haven road, whose trial has been going on at Danbury, on the charge of manslaughter, growing out of the Norwalk disaster, was concluded without convicting the conductor. The jury stood nine for and three against conviction. The Judge, however, sent them out to reconsider the case.

THE GAVAZZI RIOTS—Montreal, August 29. The Vigilance Committee on Saturday arrested the Mayor, Hon. Chas. Wilson, for murder on the 9th of June, at the Gavazzi riot. He was held to bail in $9000, to appear on the 14th of October. Three rioters of the 9th of June have also been arrested, named Garrett Barry, P. C Brouillet and M. Mozes. The latter is 2d assistant engineer of the Fire Department.

APPOINTMENTS—Washington, August 29.—Col. Polk, of Baltimore, it is reported, has been appointed Consul to Bordeaux; and Ex-Governor Dana, of Maine, Charge to Bolivia.

STARTLING FEAT.—A Paris correspondent of the New York Times gives the following account of the latest amusement devised for the wonder-loving Parisians:

The feat of jumping from a balloon, the jumper sustained by an India rubber rope, was duly performed on Thursday. It was the most stupendous exhibition of daring and address that the Parisians have yet been permitted to witness. From one side of the car of the balloon hung the India rubber cord, descending 150 feet, and then returning and being fastened to the other side of the car. It thus formed a strong loop. The athelete was dressed as Mercury; his body, from the neck to the small of his back, was enclosed in a frame work which enabled him to endure the suspension without wrenching or dislocation. The rope was passed through an eyelet in the middle of the back, placed so that he was held in perfect equilibrium. When the balloon had reached an altitude double that of the supposed elasticity of the chord, the voltigeur appeared on the edge of the car, looked over, shut his eyes, and dove off into space. The eyelet slipped along the rope, so that the first 150 feet were a positive fall through the air, without resistance or hronk. The rest of the way was an elongation of the rope. It stretched four times its length, making in all a descent of 600 feet, accomplished in two seconds. After having attained its lowest point the rope contracted once, perhaps, 200 feet, and then descended again. There was no further rebound, and no oscillation; the voltigeur lay cradled in mid air, and probably spent the leisure he was now permitted to enjoy in recovering his breath and contempleting the prospect. The serenaut above now commenced at the windless, and gradually wound his dangling friend up again. In four minutes he climbed over the side of the car, having made the fastest time that any human being has ever achieved, except such as have been shot from cannon, as Baron Munchausen said he was, I think. Six hundred feet in two seconds, is at the rate of three miles and a half a minute. We are waiting now to knew what will be done next.

A proof slip from the office of the Columbia (Mo.) Statesman contains an account of the hanging of a negro man named Hiram, slave of Major Young, of that county, on the 29th ult., by the excited populace of that town and county adjacent. His crime was the attempted violation of a highly respectable young lady of that county.

The negro confessed the offence the day before he was hung.

This is the fourth negro who has met death in Missouri within the last three months for a precisely similar crime. The three previous offenders were burned at the stake. But they had accomplished their horrible purposes, and added murder, and in one case arson, to the catalogue of their crime.

The mode of punishment is terrible enough to stay the commission of such offences, if there be any virtue in the death penalties.

THINGS IN WASHINGTON.—From the Star of the 30th ult. we select the following:

The New U. S. Coin, etc.—The Treasurer of the United States has recently received a considerable quantity of the new United States silver coin from the Philadelphia Mint, which, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, we understand, he is ready to exchange for gold with those in Washington who desire it.

Just now there are nearly six hundred thousand dollars in the hands of the Treasurer in this city, which, we apprehend, is a larger amount than was ever before in the hands of that officer at any one time. This accumulation probably arises from the fact that heavier disbursements at this point are now required by the laws than ever before.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.—Commenting on the next Congress, the New York Tribune says:

"The House will contain more new members than any that ever met before, except, possibly, that of 1841. Running our eye pretty carefully over the list, we find that about two-thirds of the whole are strangers to any Congressional directory yet published. Our Congresses are becoming more unstable and fluctuating. Of the men of mark in the House a very few years since, hardly one is left."

Here is a specimen of sticking type with a rush. During the last six days, working nine hours a day, Mr. Wm. A. Pace, of the Democrat, New York, has set up 89,602 ems.

That's sticking at a pace hard to beat.

A bale of new cotton has been received at Anderson C. H., and another at Chicraw. Five bales of Sea Island cotton were received at Savannah on the 31st ult.

The yellow fever is raging at Kingston, Jamaica.

Ex-President Van Buren has made arrangements to spend the coming winter in Switzerland.

Fanny Fern's late husband, Mr. Farrington, lives in Chicago, and recently got a divorce from her.

A quantity of frost was observed six miles above Anderson C. H., South Carolina, on the 30th ult.

There was a sharp frost in the lowlands and under the White Hill range, in New Hampshire, on the 26th ult.

The sloops-of-war Dale and St. Louis are to be fitted for sea at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, immediately.

Musquitoes are said to be unusually numerous and troublesome in New York city at the present time.

The favorite cosmetic for removing freckles, in Paris, is an ounce of alum and an ounce of lemon-juice, in a pint of rose-water.

The river was still receding at Nashville on the 1st inst., with about twenty inches on Harpeth Shoals. Weather warm and dry.

Mr. Burwell, late editor of the Washington Republic, we see it stated, has been invited to undertake the editorship of the Baltimore American.

A snake, twenty-one feet six inches in length, was lately seen in Bedford valley, near Cumberland, Md. After being seen he shed his skin, which was found and measured.

SHOPPING.—Jarvy has had an interview with a dry goods Clerk, whose pent-up "feel-inks" he has endeavored to relieve by portraying what fabric declare have suffered from their customers:

She stood beside the counter,
The day in'll ne'er forget,
She thought the muslin dearer,
Than any she'd seen yet;
He watched her playful fingers
The silks and satins toss,
The Clerk looked quite uneasy,
And nodded at the boss.

"Show me some velvet ribbon,
Darege and satin turo,"
She said, "I want to purchase!"
Then gave the goods a jerk;
The Clerk was all obedience,
He traveled "on his shape,"
At length, with hesitation,
She bought a yard of tape.

Lowndesboro' Female Institute

The Fall Session will commence on Thursday, September 29th, and continue twenty weeks.

FACULTY.

CHARLES R. DEAN, A. M., President, and Professor of Natural Sciences.
LORENZO DOW, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Ancient Languages.
CHARLES A. SCHRUDER, A. M., Professor of Music, German and French.
Miss E. PENFIELD, Instructress in Music and French.
Miss S. M KELLEY, Instructress in Ornamental and English Branches.
Miss MARY DOUGLASS, Instructress in Primary Department.

Arrangements are made for the most thorough instruction in all the requisites of complete Female Education. The Latin language, (as the basis of a thorough acquaintance with our own language,) is introduced in the regular course. Yet it is not compulsory. The Modern languages may be pursued in place.

Arrangements are made for those who wish to pursue Instrumental Music or the Ornamental Branches, the Ancient or Modern Languages, or any other studies.

Upon the completion of the regular course of study or its equivalent, a young lady will be entitled to a diploma.

EXPENSES PER SESSION.

Tuition in Primary Department	$12 50
" Preparatory Department	15 00
" Collegiate "	20 00
" Modern Languages	10 00
" Music, Piano, with use of instrument	25 00
" Music, Guitar	25 00
" Ornamental Branches	10 00
Incidental	1 00
Board in the institute, including washing, fuel and light, per month	12 00

Vocal music and the Ancient Languages in the regular course, are without extra charge.

Books and stationery furnished at book store prices.

Payment of board and tuition is required one-half in advance, and the remainder at the close of the session.

Payment of tuition is required from the time of entrance to the close of the session except in case of protracted sickness.

For further information please to address the President.
Lowndesboro', August 22, 1853. sep10—6t

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

The next session will begin the first Monday in October.

FACULTY.

R. H. RIVERS, D. D., President, and Professor of Moral and Mental Science.
J. U. MILLER, Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy.
EMILE LESERE, A. M., Professor of Modern Languages.
H. W. DRAKE, A. M., Professor of Greek Language and Literature.
W. H. SCALES, A. M., Professor of Latin Language and Literature.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
A. E. BLACKMAR, A. M. Professor of Music.
A. G. MILLER, A. M., Principal of Preparatory School.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, per session of ten months ..... $ 50 00
Room rent 5 00
Contingencies 2 00
Use of Library 3 00
Boarding 100 00

For further particulars or for catalogues, apply to the undersigned. R. H. RIVERS.
Jackson, La. August 23, 1853.

Situation Wanted as Music TEACHER.

A gentleman well qualified to teach vocal and instrumental music in all its various branches, who for a number of years has been connected with the principal female institutions in the South, wishes to obtain a situation in a female institute. He will teach on any instrument desired, and can produce the best testimonials of moral character and skill in his profession.

Address A. D. O., Aberdeen, Miss. September 9—2t

TEACHERS WANTED

To supply both departments of Pleasant Hill Academy session to commence on the first Monday in October next

As some experience, undoubted scholarship, and good moral character are qualifications that cannot be dispensed with, we therefore require all applications to be accompanied by testimonials from the following gentlemen: Dr. Manly, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Dr. Mitchell, of Summerfield, Ala.; Rev. M. P. Jewell, of Marion, Ala.; Dr. W. Jones, of Greensboro', Ala.; Messrs. Oatlin, Plakering, & Prowell, of Dayton, Ala.; Rev. A. G. McCraw, of Selma, Ala., and Gen. H. Y. Fair, of Montgomery, Ala.

Recommendations from either of the above named gentleman will be satisfactory.

A salary of $800 will be paid by the Trustees to supply the male department, and $700 for the female.

Applications will be forwarded to Pleasant Hill, La., directed to

JOHN JORDAN,
D. A. BLACKSHER,
A. R. REMBERT,
} Examining Committee.
aug6 4t

UNIVERSITY OF NASHVILLE.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Third Annual Course of Lectures in this Department will commence on Tuesday, the first of November next, and continue till the first of the ensuing March.

PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy and Physiology.
W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Institutes and Practice of Medicine.
O. K. WINSTON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
ROBERT M. PORTER, M. D.,
General and Special Anatomy.
J. DERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy.
WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for students on the first Monday in October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures will be given by the Professors, commencing also on the first Monday in October.

The students will have free access to the State Hospital.

Fee of each Professor, $15; Matriculation-ticket, $5; Dissecting ticket, $10; Graduation fee, $25.

Good board can be obtained in the city at from $2 50 to $3 per week. Further information may be obtained by addressing the Dean.

jy23 5t J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D., Dean.
Nashville, Tenn., Feb., 1853.

DR. J. T. KENNON,

Cooper's Well, Miss.

Tenders his professional services to those who are afflicted with the various Chronic Diseases incident to our climate.

Dr. K. would remark that very many chronic afflictions of long standing, having resisted the skill of eminently scientific practitioners, have readily yielded to judicious treatment and the combined use of this highly medicated water.

N. B. Dr. K. has made arrangements with the Proprietor of the Well to furnish suitable Rooms for the treatment of Ladies suffering from Uterine Diseases.
March 19, 1853, 6mo.

LAND FOR SALE.

The subscriber wishes to sell a most desirable settlement of land, lying 18 miles west of Monroe, on the Ouachita river, and one mile north of Indian Village, Jackson parish, and on the track, as laid off, of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, containing 640 acres, with 160 cleared and in a good state of cultivation, with a good gin and cotton press, with all the buildings necessary for common family purposes. About 400 acres of the land is very level and will not wash, and quite productive, a portion of it having made a good average bag of cotton per acre last year. The place is uncommonly well watered and healthy, myself having lived on it over seven years, with a large family, without having a single bad case of sickness.

There is also many advantages and conveniences too tedious to mention, which can be fully seen upon examination of the premises. It will be sold at a fair price—one-third cash upon giving possession, and the balance to suit purchasers. ISAAC COLLINS,
aug13 3t Indian Village, Jackson Parish, La.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES, AND BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two " "	5 00 "
For any three " "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.

Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. (Nov13-1y.)

EDUCATION.

TUSCALOOSA METHODIST FEMALE HIGH SCHOOL.

The exercises of this Institution will begin on the first MONDAY in October next, and close on the first THURSDAY in July, 1854. There will be a recess of a few days at Christmas.

FACULTY.

REV. THOS. H. RUSSELL, A. M. President.
MISS ELIZABETH J. MEEK, Assistant.
MISS CLARA G. LEE, Preparatory Department.
MR. F. S. WALTER, Professor of Music.
———, Teacher of Modern Languages.

The fees for the first half the scholastic year are as follows:

Primary Department	$12 00
First, Sophomore and Middle Classes, each	20 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music	25 00
Use of piano	2 50
Contingent fee	1 00
Board, including lodging, washing and fuel	60 00

The above fees are required to be paid on the first day of October.

Fees of the same amount, for the second half of the scholastic year, are required to be paid on the 15th of February, 1854.

An extra fee of $20 is charged for French.

The course of study in this institution is as extensive as that in any institution for the education of females, and the instruction is of the most critical and thorough character. Every provision has been made to ensure success. A philosophical and chemical apparatus adequate to all the purposes of instruction has been provided, together with maps, charts, globes, etc. The instructors are experienced in their work, and highly approved for capacity, fidelity and skill.

This institution has just closed the first year of its existence, with the most satisfactory results. And the public may feel assured that the Trustees will watch over its interests with the utmost solicitude and care, and spare no pains to render its system of education as perfect as possible.

The tuition fees have been somewhat reduced, and are below those of many Southern institutions of no higher grade. It is impossible to engage teachers of the highest character for talents, attainments and skill, without paying liberal salaries. But we offer as an equivalent, above all price, a faithful and skillful application of the most approved means of developing and training the mind.

Printed circulars, containing fuller information, may be had by application to Alex. Glascock, Esq., Secretary of the Board.

L. O. GARLAND,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Tuscaloosa, Aug. 6, 1853. aug20 8t

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M.,
Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. DONDURANT, English.
MISS PIERCE FULLER,
Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK,
Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestrial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year. Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but, with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience, acquaint them with the usages of refined society, and give them ease and grace in manners.

For catalogues or further information, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 10, 1853. aug13 1jan1

MRS. READ'S SEMINARY, BATON ROUGE, LA.

This Institution commenced its present session on the 27th of September, 1852, and by a liberal supply of talented teachers, is prepared to aid pupils committed to its care, in acquiring a thorough and accomplished education.

Especial and kind care is bestowed on children in the preparatory Department. In the higher Departments, no effort is wanting which can advance the interests of the student.

Pupils admitted at any time and charged from the time of entrance to the close of the session.

No pupils are received except with the understanding that they are to remain until the session in which they enter is closed, which will be after the annual examination in July.

Expenses per session of ten months, for board, lodging, washing, and English tuition $200 00
Music, on Piano, with use of instrument 70 00
French Language 30 00

Latin, Spanish, Italian, with drawing, painting, etc., are extra charges.

For further particulars apply to
Jan20 M. W. READ, Principal.

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUROSE,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PLAQUEMINE, LA.

Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jel1 1y

GEO. CLEVELAND, WM. CLEVELAND, A. P. CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, BROTHERS & CO.
Commission Merchants, 21 Commercial Place, New Orleans. fe 6.

JOHN HOLMES, L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 9 GRAVIER STREET,
ap30 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HENDERSON, ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
No. 68 Magazine street, corner of Natchez, New Orleans, La. jy2 1y

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.

S. ROBB & Co.,

No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street, New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Mann factory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety; Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish; India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c. mh8 '52—1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improvedcast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the clapper from resting on the bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in this business, by their late father, enabled him to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries; the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonious and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

All communications promptly attended to.
ANDREW MENEELY'S SONS.
West Troy, Albany county, N. Y., 1851.
SLARK, DAY & STAUFFER,
ap10 Agents in New Orleans.

A NEW MEDICINE.

EPPING'S FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

THIS excellent extract is a concentrated preparation of Buchu, with other vegetable diuretics. It is, as medical man will see, designed for that class of diseases which affect the urinary organs. For diseases and directions, see the label on each bottle. It is also a very fine alterative medicine. Dyspeptics, laboring under hepatic derangement, find great relief from the use of this remedy. It is on sale at the store of E. WRIGHT & CO., 151 Chartres street, and the store of J. MACPHERSON, 29 Camp st.

It comports best with my feelings to offer this article to Physicians, Druggists and Hospitals, upon my medical knowledge and Christian reputation, without the accustomed puffing. Dr. L. PIERCE,
my21 Columbus, Georgia.

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an anticeptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers, (see certificates Nos 3 and 4,) and as a preventive to Yellow, Bilious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an anticeptic, (see certificate No. 5,) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecessary to offer any testimonials in favor of this valuable medicine to those who have experimented with it, and only offers a few out of the many highly respectable citizens and others names whose are familiar to the community, for the benefit of those who have not made its acquaintance; and being assured that the TEXAS TONIC only has to be known to be appreciated, he therefore submit the following testimonials:

THO. K. PRICE, 59 Camp street.

1] From President Houston.

CITY OF HOUSTON, May 14, 1842.

DEAR SIR: Having learned that you were about to submit your "Tonic Bitters" to the chances of experiment and public opinion, I take pleasure in rendering you a statement of my opinion. Last May, I think it was, I first learned that such a medicine was in existence. I procured some and commenced its use. I found it of immediate and great advantage to me. My health had not been good since 1834. By the occasional use of your Bitters within the last year (in all not amounting to one bottle) I am satisfied that my general health has not been as good as it is at present within the last seven years.

The use of the Bitters, in proportion to the constitution and the malignity of the disease, will, in my opinion, be attended with the most beneficial effects. I have, in several cases, witnessed the use of a portion of what I had on hand, by others, in cases of head-achs and deranged digestion, and in no case have I known it to fail in giving almost immediate relief. My opinion is so favorable of the medicine that I will keep a supply on hand for family use. With considerations of regard, I am yours, sincerely,
SAM HOUSTON.

2] From Judge Johnson, Galveston.

GALVESTON, May 31, 1842.

JOHN PRICE, Esq., Galveston—Respected Sir: I have used your "Texas Tonic" frequently during the last twelve months, as a remedy for Torpor of the Liver and Constipation of the Bowels. The first doses gave me such immediate relief that I have kept a supply of it on hand and use it occasionally ever since. It is, in my opinion, entitled to the highest degree of public confidence.

RODT. D. JOHNSON, Probate Judge, Galveston.

3] From H. R. W. Hill, Esq., (of Dicks & Hill, N. O.)

NEW ORLEANS, January 22, 1843.

Mr. JOHN PRICE: I have, for the last three years, used your "Texas Tonic." Previous to that time I was subject to sick head-ache. Since I commenced the use of your Tonic I have been entirely freed, and I have no doubt, were the medicine used as a bitter, twice a week, it would prevent the most of the diseases of the South, particularly Chills, which I have known the Tonic to effect a cure of by taking half a wine glass full. So well am I satisfied of its efficiency, that I wish you to prepare me a demijohn of it for my plantation. Wishing your medicine may prove that benefit to the human family that I am sure it will, I remain yours, H. R. W. HILL.

4] From Thomas Aikins, of New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, March 15, 1844.

JOHN PRICE, Esq., Galveston, Texas—Sir: I have used your "Texas Tonic" in my family for some time past, occasionally myself. We think very highly of the article—In one case particularly—a negro woman of mine took a violent Chill; the same evening I gave her one table spoonful, and the result was so favorable that she was well the next day, and so remains until now.

THOMAS AIKINS.

5] From Maj. A. G. Sloo, N. O. Mail Contractor, and Capt. W. S. Fullerton, Proprietor and Commander of the steamer Fashion.

STEAMER FASHION, March 30, 1844.

JOHN PRICE, Esq., Galveston City, Texas—Sir: Early in the year 1842, we commenced the use of your valuable medicine, "Texas Tonic," and have kept a constant supply on hand since. We have found it particularly valuable in cases Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Torpidity of the Liver, a speedy

New-Orleans Ch

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { W. C. KENNEDY, L. PARVIN, J. B. WALKER.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 33.

(From the Church Advocate

INVITATION TO CAMP-MEETING

Tune—"Pop set Two"

Come to the pleasant grove
For our Father will be there
To visit us in love:
To receive him, O, prepare!
When Israel dwelt in deeds
In the silent wilderness,
He visited his saints
With the blessings of his grace.

Come to the pleasant grove:
For our Jesus will be there,
To bless us with his love
O, to welcome him, prepare!
Once in the wilderness
He the covenant Angel led
The people of his grace
And his Father o'er them spread

Come to the pleasant grove
For the Comforter divine
Descending from above
Will your prayers and praise refine
Cast off each enabling care,
And entreat the heavenly dove,
To come and meet us there
And unite us all in love.

Come to the pleasant grove
O, ye poor backsliders, come!
Your Father, full of love,
Bids the prodigal come home.
O, do your first works over!
Now the Saviour interceedes
Come, enter Mercy's door
While the Spirit with you pleads

Come to the pleasant grove
O, ye fallen, dying race!
Seek pardon from above:
This is now your day of grace
All heaven seeks your good
O then, come and be forgiven,
The Saviour shed his blood
That you might escape to heaven

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"THE GOOD CLASS-LEADER"

I have just read an article in your paper of August 27, under the above caption, which has struck me as well-timed, and as one that should be suggestive of serious and prayerful reflection, specially on the part of those who are, and those who ought to be Class-leaders in the Church.

"Father Reeves, the Methodist Class-Leader," of which the article alluded to was a brief notice by J. Hamilton I have not yet had the pleasure of reading. I take it for granted, however, that the points of difference between Father Reeves and Carvosso are correctly stated by the writer. The life of Carvosso I read some years ago; and remember distinctly that I laid it aside, feeling and saying to myself, "with the help of God, I will be a better man."

I then felt, and still believe, that although the mass may not attain to the almost Omnipotent faith of Carvosso, many in our communion would be greatly strengthened and encouraged by a careful perusal of his life, to exercise faith, until by this means it should become so strong and commanding as to enable them to ascend the mount of vision, and come near, if not to the very point of look out, where, for years, ere it came, that Father in Israel waited in readiness the summons which saith "it is enough, come up higher."

Class-Leaders who have not done so would doubtless do well, at once, to procure and read for themselves the lives of these faithful Fathers in the Church. I agree with J. H., "that the want of Methodism at the present juncture is the right kind of Class-Leaders." Nor do I think that he attaches any too much importance to that office. Will it be going farther than the facts of Methodist history would justify to say, that her prosperity has been substantial and permanent only where she has had a supply of Class-leaders who were men of the right stamp. Very many times during a ministry of something over ten years has the writer of this been made to see and feel that we, as Methodist Itinerants work to great disadvantage owing to the fact that this important arm of our service is not better supplied. In many places societies are without Leaders. That this should be the case, for a time, with a Church that is aggressive in its character and movements is what might be expected; but this condition of things too often lasts longer than needful. In other places men are appointed to this office who do not realize its importance as they should—who forget that, as Class-Leaders, they are to be men of "one" work; and that it is their duty to study that they may be qualified for that work. There are instances where, in my humble judgment, it becomes our duty, as far as possible, while present with them, to serve the societies in the two-fold capacity of preacher and Leader; and for the time this sort of double work may answer after a fashion; but being thus circumstanced we must shortly leave and go on our way to preach the Gospel to others. And not unfrequently from two to four, and sometimes six weeks intervene before we are present at the same place again. And now, we ask church members, but specially those who are occupying the place of Leaders, and Officers who ought to be, and who would, doubtless, now be discharging the duties of that important office, both with honor to themselves and profit to the church, had they been making that advance in the divine life which should have characterized them hitherto. We ask these to think how the heart of the Itinerant must sink within him as he moves on his way toward other appointments, reflecting that he has left behind societies that, in all probability, will not assemble once during the time that will intervene before his return, or make use of any means in their social capacity to fan or keep alive the little fire that may have been kindled by his late visit and labors with them. But the ministers discouraging reflections are perhaps the smallest item in the account. The church is suffering. Her members are becoming cold, sliding ahead, and the world blinded by sin and unbelief, are [illegible] those stumbling blocks into her [illegible] are you a Class-leader? do you [illegible] watch over the souls in the [illegible] faithfully? Do you set [illegible] yourself for this work? Have you [illegible] it? Is your heart so [illegible] you persevere, the cry you should [illegible] be one of the number whose gifts [illegible] shall rest assured those gifts shall increase and enlarge in your [illegible] comfort of your own soul and the [illegible] of the church. If these questions [illegible] answered affirmatively then may the [illegible] laid to your charge by them that are [illegible] but if otherwise, it stands those in [illegible] unto us, and call upon the [illegible] to that God will thank us for those that [illegible] perish not.

And you who are [illegible] Leaders, who make [illegible] when the church, the ministry and the [illegible] bishop of souls are calling you to [illegible] What will you have to answer in the day [illegible] eternity? With your formal religion, [illegible] tame and tasteless piety, you may [illegible] with this cold, dead world, and under the [illegible] crying necessities of the church, [illegible] some extent neutralizing a trust [illegible] position, my brother, bear in mind [illegible] beyond to which you are hastening, [illegible] yourself at such excuses as are [illegible] will not [illegible] any way if there [illegible] whether they will [illegible] quiet [illegible] silence them or meet the [illegible] of the tried Judge of all.

May the great heart of the church [illegible] the listless, the old, the [illegible] have influence in their proper sphere of action to think of these things until they [illegible] to their duties correctly, and each [illegible] to become willingly [illegible] to fully [illegible] and successful Class-leaders. [illegible] efficacious can be [illegible] class of laborers [illegible] known in many parts [illegible] our day and [illegible] preachers, while, by means of the [illegible] and harmonious efforts of all [illegible] many good reason to hope that better results shall be secured to the church, and greater glory to God.

Louisiana, September [illegible]

JOHN KNOX—HIS CHARACTER AND WORKS.

Of all great men in history [illegible] one who stands out more conspicuously and in bolder relief than does John Knox. A [illegible] but massive understanding, a courage which nothing could shake, a warm, devout heart, and an intense hatred and scorn of sin, these are the qualities which appear in him above and over all the rest. There may have been those [illegible] but the occasion did not require them; they were not called into play. The evil which was to be overcome had no strong intellectual defences; it was a theological tale-school upheld by force, and force of character, rather than reason or subtlety of thought, was needed to cope with it.

He was born at Haddington in the year 1505. His family, though not noble, were solid, substantial land-owners, who traced their gentility and land-holding estates in Renfrewshire, perhaps under the Earls of Boswell, whose banner they followed in the field. Their history, like that of other families of the time, is obscure and not important, and of the father of John nothing is known, except that he fought under the patronage of the famous Lord Bothwell, probably at Flodden, and other of those bloody battles, which answered the high purpose of hardening and steeling the Scotch character. But in all other senses were useless and [illegible]. But it is only by accident that we know so much as this, and even of the first eight and thirty years of the life of his son which he spent in a quiet, peaceable, private person, we are left to gather up what scraps and [illegible] the after recollections of his friends could supply and which, indeed, amount to almost nothing. We find that he was at school at Haddington, that he afterwards went to the University of Glasgow, where, being a boy of weak constitution, and probably his own wishes [illegible] tending in the same direction, it was determined to bring him up to be a priest. He distinguished himself in the ordinary way becoming, among other things, an accomplished logician, lecturer, and at the right age, like most of the other reformers, he was duly ordained. But what further lead him in this capacity is not gather unknown, and his inward history must be conjectured from what he was when at last he was called out into the world. He must have spent many years in study, for, besides his remarkable knowledge of the bible, he knew Greek, Latin and French well, we find in his writings a very sufficient acquaintance with history, Pagan and Christian, he had read Aristotle and Plato, as well as many of the Fathers, in fact, whatever knowledge was to be obtained out of books, concerning men and human things, he had not failed to gather together. But his chief knowledge and that which made him what he was was the knowledge, not of books, but of the world in which he lived, and the condition of which must have gradually unfolded itself to him as he grew to manhood.

Beautiful is old age, beautiful as the slow decay of the mellow autumn of a rich, glorious summer—by the old man, nature has fulfilled her work—she leads him with the fruits of a well spent life, and surrounded by his children and his children's children, she rocks him away softly to the grave, to which he is followed by blessings.

Liverpool, with 400,000 population, is yet without a daily newspaper!

THE WAR IN CHINA.

We bring to the latest intelligence that we have from China the insurgents under Hien Fih still maintain their ground against all opposition, and bid fair to overthrow the Tartar dynasty and to become the future rulers of China. The progress that the rebels have made since they commenced operations in the eventful year 1850 with a mere handful of adventurers, has been a wonderful one, and has arrested the attention of the whole civilized world. They have now a large and well disciplined army with which they have defeated the Imperial troops in several pitched battles, overrun half the country and taken Nankin the second city in the empire. The avowed object of the leader is to change not only the government but the religion of China, and it is probable that if they succeed the whole country will be thrown open to the efforts of the missionaries of the cross. What a vast field will thus be opened for the exertion of the Christian world! Three hundred and seventy millions people suddenly almost unanimously casting their idols to the moles and bats, and stretching out their hands for a purer faith—a holier religion! If ever there was a time when the people of God should abound in every persevering and fervent prayers for China now is the time. In the palace, cottages, the idol circle, and in the heart China should be remembered by all who long for the conversion of the world.

From a variety of conflicting statements on this subject we select the following from the Bombay correspondent of the London Times:

"Meanwhile, the greatest uncertainty con-against [illegible] writer of Canton country. [illegible] at the gates, not [illegible] the process of [illegible] at the [illegible] daily to the ground. The [illegible]

NEW ORLEANS [illegible] DAY [illegible] OCTOBER [illegible], [illegible]

THE REVOLUTIONISTS

[illegible] changes from [illegible] would be the report from the [illegible] of the [illegible] How would ignorance, vice, and suffering vanish in our world. [Episcopal Recorder.

THE SHAKERS.

A correspondent of the Pittsburg Christian Advocate, writing from Jamestown, Kentucky, delightful mountain retreat at the base of Cumberland [illegible] of the Alleghanies, and some twenty [illegible] hours by canal from Pittsburgh, [illegible] on that vicinity.

In their worship they not only beat their heads but their bodies, and in connection with their religious services have a feast somewhat resembling the Jewish passover consisting of a paschal lamb, soup, bread, etc. One part of the church is partitioned off for a kitchen, and along one entire side of the house the tables are arranged for the guests, [illegible] at one end, females at the other. The food is served up in large pewter bowls, and set at about six feet apart, so that half a dozen eat out of the same dish. The [illegible] of wine is strung along the table at convenient distances, and after thanks are returned all eat to their satisfaction.

Before eating however, there is an extensive washing operation, and washing of feet each sex attending to their own department. This is done by two persons, one bearing a pail of water, the other girded with a long towel. The congregation being all arranged for the ceremony, the man bearing the water comes up and kisses the first man, next washes his feet, then kisses him again, and goes on to another. The man with the towel goes through the same operation, only drying instead of washing the feet. Thus every man and woman is kissed not less than four times in this one performance.

After supper the preaching commences; and if there are a dozen ministers present, they must all say something. The following is a synopsis of one of the sermons:

Dear Predren—Ven I look over dish congregashin, and see so few prad-prim hats, long peards, and strait coats, I fear after all der be but a remnant saved. Dear predren, let us keep God's holy commandments, and not let our shildren go and hear dese larned preachers, who splain away all de Goshpel. Let us, dear predren, keep God's commands, in wearing long peards, strait coats, and, in washing of feet. And now, predren, let us give thanks, eat a little soup, and be dishmissed."

After preaching, the Lord's supper is administered. Unleavened bread and wine are the emblems used in this sacrament; but just before partaking of the bread, every man and woman leans over and kisses his or her next neighbor.

In baptizing they dip their candidates three times—once in the name of each person in the Godhead—and with their faces downward, not believing in going backward into heaven. After baptism, the men generally wear long beards, strait coats, and broad-brimmed hats; and the women, a blue calico hood, or sun-bonnet, and small, borderless cap, with a tight-gored dress.

They are an industrious and honest people, non-resistant, and charitable toward their own sect; but not strict observers of the Sabbath, as they regard all days alike.

MONTGOMERY, THE POET.

On the summit of a hill near the town, commanding a splendid prospect of river and green fields, and [illegible] such prospect as a poet to full communion with his fellow-man would love to look on, we found the name of

[illegible] MONTGOMERY

on the door. We had heard that the venerable poet was now so advanced in life, and so feeble in health that he was not willing to see company, and it was with many misgivings that I stood at the door and asked the servant if he was in. I argued that he was at home, I handed her my card and bade her say that three gentlemen from America would be glad to pay their respects to Mr. Montgomery. Before I could finish my message she stepped to my side, came into the hall and received me with a greeting that went to my heart. "You do me too much honor, herself," come in and your friends." Ushered us all into his study, and insisted on our sitting down.

I said to him, "You were known, sir, in America and loved before we were born."

He replied, "I thank you. It is grateful to me to know that any thing I have ever written has been a pleasure to others. Your country has published many beautiful editions of my poems, and I am grateful for their favorable regard.

He spoke with some hesitation, and appeared feeble, though far less than I had expected. A small thin man, about my size, and slightly stooping, with a bright eye and sharp face, he would not have appeared to me, had I met him in the street, as the man to write "The World before the Flood," or the "Wanderer of Switzerland." If there are not in both of these poems beauties of the highest order, and specimens of the power of pathos equal to the poetry of any man who has died within the last twenty-five years, then I confess that I lost a crown in going to Sheffield to see their author. "Few men," I said to him, "have lived as you have, to hear the verdict of posterity."

"Yes," he replied, "I have survived nearly all cotemporaries."

"And you have survived the attacks of the Edinburgh Review which predicted that you would not live at all."

The old man laughed gaily at this reminiscence of a slashing review forty years ago, and said, "The Review was young then, and they thought they must kill some one in every number—and they sought to make a victim of me, but I lived through it. Those were early trials and I had others, but trials are good for us, and they will soon be over."

"May I ask how old you are now, sir?"

"I shall be eighty two years old on the fourth day of November next."

I could not refrain from telling him that the fourth of November is my birth-day, also and, "How old will you be, sir?" he added. I was not unwilling to find another coincidence in the fact, that I should be then just one half of his age. And this led to a religious conversation in which he spoke in that peaceful but trembling hope he had that he should soon enter upon the promised rest; his lips quivered, his voice broke, and big tears dropped from his eyes as he spoke of his unworthiness to be accepted, but of his trust in the Saviour whose grace is sufficient for the chief of sinners. We rose to take leave, and as we shook hands in silence, Edwards repeated one of the poet's own stanzas from "The Grave:"

There's a calm for those who weep
A rest for weary pilgrims found
And they who mourn in solemn deep
Shall weep their mortal woes around and he had strength to say "I hope we shall meet in heaven," and following us to the door, bade us an affectionate farewell."

THE THIRST FOR WEALTH.

How wise is the prayer of Agur! And how few there are who sublime its spirit, and discern the perils of its riches! Insensibly the desire of wealth grows upon us, and while our convictions are all the other way, we find our hearts clinging to the world's possessions as to their best good, and our hands are busily engaged in performing what the heart, wrapped in the love of the world, designs.

The desire for wealth, covetousness, which is idolatry, is one of the most dangerous and deadening influences which can affect our Christian life. It cools our charity, and dampens our zeal. It closes our hearts against the appeals which must constantly be made to us while the world is still unconverted and there are any spots in foreign lands unvisited by the messengers of the cross, or in our own, unprovided with the stated administrations of the gospel. If all that is unwisely hoarded, and all that is worse than foolishly expended, could be turned to the great object of evangelizing the world; if men were more intent upon building up the INCONSIDERATE PEOPLE.

"Time is money," says an old adage, the truth of which every one admits. Yet how few act up to it! An acquaintance enters an editor's room at the busiest hour of the day, and sits in useless gossip, regardless of the time which he is robbing his host. An author is visited by some young aspirant who coolly asks to have his crude composition corrected, as if an author's time was not his income. A merchant is caught in the street by some idle neighbor, and detained in the very crisis of some important transaction. A clerk, sent on a hasty errand, is stopped by an old play-fellow, whom he has not the courage to dismiss. Thus, in scores of cases, time, which is money, is filched from one.

But we do not often commit a like theft ourselves? Are we never guilty of trespassing on the business hours of a friend? More than all, do we never rob ourselves? Often, when we should be at work, do we put off beginning it, defrauding ourselves of precious moments, which, in the aggregate, are enormous? An hour a day, thus lost is one-twelfth of a working day, and amounts in a year to a working month. Yet how many loiter away an hour daily! Two hours daily sacrificed amounts to ten years in the allotted term of threescore and ten. When we consider the subject in this light, we realize that "time is money" indeed. And yet how many throw away precious hours, who would think themselves insane to waste but a dollar!

AUTHORSHIP OF THE BIBLE.—There are, in all, sixty-six books which comprise the volume of Holy Writ, which are attributed to more than fifty different authors, or writers of the whole. Half of the New Testament was composed by St. Paul, and the next largest writer is the gentle and beloved St. John. With the single exception of Paul, neither history or tradition has testified that these powerful thinkers and writers ever enjoyed the benefits of education, or that they were trained to scholarship and learning; yet how ably have they written, what eminent characters have been chronicled by them, and what great events recorded, both for time and eternity!

Moses, with his vast knowledge, and profound intelligence—the reformer, the deliverer—commenced the work; and John, with his depth of feeling and exquisite tenderness and simplicity, completed it.

...yristian Advocate.

...yle the prompt and efficacious sympathy that the epidemic sufferings of this city have called forth. From North, East and West—from the Emporiums of Commerce, and country towns and villages, from Church and Synagogue—hns help been sent—large help. Not less than $160,000 have been received from abroad by the Howard and other benevolent associations for relief. The total and specific receipts and disbursements will in the winding up (and may that soon come) be published, when our readers shall see it. As for the current items, we cannot keep up with them, and have quit trying. The Treasurers are ready to cry, "Hold, enough!"

We style this a chapter—is it not a new chapter of humanity. There is a touch of nature that makes ne all akin. Has not the world been silently but mightily influenced these eighteen hundred years hy some humanising agent? Has it not grown better? The principle of brotherhood that underlies Christianity is working mightily. The good Samaritan is abroad.

In behalf of the destitute and suffering ...ng us, who have enjoyed thie bounty that has accumulated from the generous rills and rivers of benevolence, like the trihntarice of the Mississippi, and flowed down upon us; and for ourselves, who have enjoyed the luxury of dispensing it, and beholding the good done by it, we return to all thanks—a thousand thanks.

AND YET ANOTHER.

Rev. Jacob Slater Hughes, pastor of Franklin street Church, Mobile, died of yellow fever Monday last, 12th instant. We have received no particulars of his death at the time of this writing.

Brother Hughes, originally a member of the Tennessee Conference, had for several years past been connected with the Alabama, and filled responsible posts of duty. As an agent of the American Bible Society, he had become widely and favorably known. This work he gave up in 1848, to enter more directly into the ministry and pastorate. Here he was diligent in his holy business, serving the Lord. Since the prevailing epidemic in Mobile we have received frequent testimony to his arduous, kind and courageous devotion to ...duty. Thus have the Methodist Churches in Mobile lost, within two weeks, both their Pastors in the meridian of their days and usefulness. We condole with them in their bereavement. And not only they, but the whole church is bereaved.

It is high time for the church, the whole church, to awake to searching and supplication. Has the Lord a controversy with the sheep that those appointed to feed them are taken away. Hardy and Childers, and ...s and Powell, and Manning and Nash, ... at once! Let us humble ourselves ...r the mighty hand of God. He will ...smit us in due ... and supply our needs.

A Hint.—A correspondent signing himself "Justice," complains so bitterly that he must needs have a hearing. He gave the following ... or direction. But that seemed to ... We cut it off, and direct it to whom it may concern:

"When you send out your circulars in letter form to your friends, by mail, let me suggest, if you don't pay the postage, leave them unsealed, that those receiving them may get off with paying one or two, instead of five cents. But for your own interest, I would advise, that you always pre-pay the postage. Few, if any, will patronize those who are so poorly educated ... in the common proprieties of business life, as not to know their duty in this particular, or who are so negligent as to forget it, or so penurious as to tax others on matters that pertain solely to their own business. Verbum sat."

☞ Those interested will see a change of time in the Camp-Meeting notice for Abbeville Circuit.

...ns of the Fever.—Health of Mr. ..., etc.—When the Southern Belle passed Mr. ..., planter, the fever very low, and it was doubtful whether he would recover, the chances being against him.

The fever was worse in Vicksburg than it has ever been in New Orleans. On Monday there were 22 deaths, out of a population of about 1000.

At Grand Gulf it was raging terribly, the deaths being equal to 1100 a day here. About 100 persons were sick, destitute of nurses, and require immediate relief. But one physician is there. All who could leave there have done so.

At Port Gibson the fever was equally as bad, and there was no communication between the two last named towns.

At Vidalia, where the fever has raged with great severity, only about thirty persons remain in town. A physician from this city treats the cases with great success.

At Natchez the mortality was declining. No one is now permitted to enter the town—a strict quarantine being kept up, and no one being permitted to enter to die with the plague

At Plaquemine, Bayou Sara and Baton Rouge, the fever was still raging, but the boat did not remain long enough to obtain the particulars.

An Apothecary of this city sent his wife and four grown sisters to Baton Rouge to escape the fever, all of whom fell victims, and were buried on Sunday.

At Bonnet Carre the fever was very bad, and ... had died in one family.

...ty to the prompt and efficacious sympathy that the epidemic sufferings of this city have called forth. From North, East and West—from the Emporiums of Commerce, and country towns and villages, from Church and Synagogue—hns help been sent—large help. Not less than $160,000 have been received from abroad by the Howard and other benevolent associations for relief. The total and specific receipts and disbursements will in the winding up (and may that soon come) be published, when our readers shall see it. As for the current items, we cannot keep up with them, and have quit trying. The Treasurers are ready to cry, "Hold, enough!"

We style this a chapter—is it not a new chapter of humanity. There is a touch of nature that makes ne all akin. Has not the world been silently but mightily influenced these eighteen hundred years hy some humanising agent? Has it not grown better? The principle of brotherhood that underlies Christianity is working mightily. The good Samaritan is abroad.

In behalf of the destitute and suffering ...ng us, who have enjoyed thie bounty that has accumulated from the generous rills and rivers of benevolence, like the trihntarice of the Mississippi, and flowed down upon us; and for ourselves, who have enjoyed the luxury of dispensing it, and beholding the good done by it, we return to all thanks—a thousand thanks.

AND YET ANOTHER.

Rev. Jacob Slater Hughes, pastor of Franklin street Church, Mobile, died of yellow fever Monday last, 12th instant. We have received no particulars of his death at the time of this writing.

Brother Hughes, originally a member of the Tennessee Conference, had for several years past been connected with the Alabama, and filled responsible posts of duty. As an agent of the American Bible Society, he had become widely and favorably known. This work he gave up in 1848, to enter more directly into the ministry and pastorate. Here he was diligent in his holy business, serving the Lord. Since the prevailing epidemic in Mobile we have received frequent testimony to his arduous, kind and courageous devotion to ...duty. Thus have the Methodist Churches in Mobile lost, within two weeks, both their Pastors in the meridian of their days and usefulness. We condole with them in their bereavement. And not only they, but the whole church is bereaved.

It is high time for the church, the whole church, to awake to searching and supplication. Has the Lord a controversy with the sheep that those appointed to feed them are taken away. Hardy and Childers, and ...s and Powell, and Manning and Nash, ... at once! Let us humble ourselves ...r the mighty hand of God. He will ...smit us in due ... and supply our needs.

A Hint.—A correspondent signing himself "Justice," complains so bitterly that he must needs have a hearing. He gave the following ... or direction. But that seemed to ... We cut it off, and direct it to whom it may concern:

"When you send out your circulars in letter form to your friends, by mail, let me suggest, if you don't pay the postage, leave them unsealed, that those receiving them may get off with paying one or two, instead of five cents. But for your own interest, I would advise, that you always pre-pay the postage. Few, if any, will patronize those who are so poorly educated ... in the common proprieties of business life, as not to know their duty in this particular, or who are so negligent as to forget it, or so penurious as to tax others on matters that pertain solely to their own business. Verbum sat."

☞ Those interested will see a change of time in the Camp-Meeting notice for Abbeville Circuit.

...ns of the Fever.—Health of Mr. ..., etc.—When the Southern Belle passed Mr. ..., planter, the fever very low, and it was doubtful whether he would recover, the chances being against him.

The fever was worse in Vicksburg than it has ever been in New Orleans. On Monday there were 22 deaths, out of a population of about 1000.

At Grand Gulf it was raging terribly, the deaths being equal to 1100 a day here. About 100 persons were sick, destitute of nurses, and require immediate relief. But one physician is there. All who could leave there have done so.

At Port Gibson the fever was equally as bad, and there was no communication between the two last named towns.

At Vidalia, where the fever has raged with great severity, only about thirty persons remain in town. A physician from this city treats the cases with great success.

At Natchez the mortality was declining. No one is now permitted to enter the town—a strict quarantine being kept up, and no one being permitted to enter to die with the plague

At Plaquemine, Bayou Sara and Baton Rouge, the fever was still raging, but the boat did not remain long enough to obtain the particulars.

An Apothecary of this city sent his wife and four grown sisters to Baton Rouge to escape the fever, all of whom fell victims, and were buried on Sunday.

At Bonnet Carre the fever was very bad, and ... had died in one family.

...not yet ...think about it—hut "Give ... my letter."

He got it. It was the worst thing he ever got, in the shape of n piece of paper, with a little writing on it. He got it in a pet, and when he came to himself, saw his true position. No longer a member of God's church! Broken off! separated from the fellowship that had been long and sweet to his soul! The house of God afterwards looked like n strange place to him. The people did not look as before. He could not sit in the old sitting-place! feeling so uncomfortable he vows not to go there any more.

The Tempter having gained, is permitted to keep the advantnge over him. His temper becomes soured. The trouhled spirit is ill at ease. He hlames others. Now the restraints of membership are off, he may take some latitude. He is no more responsible to his brethren, and talks rather self-complacently about matters "between him and his God." Gradually his feet slide. The old church letter rusts nad moulds and turns color, and wears outat the corners. It condemne him, yet he looks at it occasionally, and has it in some safe place. Sad memorial. It is his writ of divorcement from the church of the liviag God!

And what consequences follow. The children, though doing well at the Sabhath School are taken away, and grow up without consecrated attachments. The head of the family thinks he stande thie iealation well. Not so well, poor man, as he thinks. But it fares sadly with that household.

